To Our Russian Comrades

By Eugene V. Debs

When the Revolution in Russia occured a year ago and the actual toiling and producing masses came into power under the leadership and inspiration of Lenine and Trotzky, all the ruling class powers on earth, the United States not excepted, instinctively arrayed themselves against the new-born working class Republic and predicted freely that the new regime would not last one week. From that time to this these powers of imperialism and capitalism and their corrupt politicians, their slimy priests and their whole vast brood of mercenaries and sycophants, including their filthy and venomous press, have gone to every extreme of falsehood, calumny and personal vituperation to discredit the leadership of the Russian revolutionaries, the first real attempt at actual democratic administration in the history of the world.

But in spite of all these stupendous reactionary and destructive forces the Soviet has survived and the Russian proletariat, thanks to its heroic and uncompromising leadership and its own inflexible determination, is still in power, defiantly challenging its ruling class of fraternity and good will to the proletariat of the world.

Comrades of the Russian Soviet and the Bolshevik Republic, we salute and honor you on this first anniversary of your great revolutionary triumph, the greatest in point of historic significance and far-reaching influence in the annals of the race. You have set the star of hope for all the world in the eastern skies. You have suffered untold persecution, exile and misery and you have shed your blood freely all these years in the great struggle for emancipation, not only of your own oppressed people, but the oppressed of all the earth. On this historic anniversary we extend our proletarian hand to you from all directions and across the spaces and assure you of our loyalty and our love.

The chief glory of your revolutionary triumph is that you have preserved inviolate the fundamental principles of international socialism and refused to compromise. It will be to your everlasting honor that you would rather have seen the Revolution perish and the Soviet with it than to prostitute either one by betraying the workers to alleged progressive reforms which would mean to them an extension of their servitude under a fresh aggregation of exploiters and parasites.

You, Russian Comrade of the Soviet and of the Bolsheviki you represent, are resolved that for once in history the working-class, which fights the battles, sheds its blood and makes all other sacrifices to achieve a revolution, shall itself receive and enjoy the full fruitage of such a revolution: that it shall not allow itself to be used, as dumb driven cattle, to install some intermediate class into power and perpetuate its own slavery and degredation.

On this anniversary day we pledge you, brave and unflinching comrades of the Soviet Republic, not only to protest against our government meddling with your affairs and interfering with your plans, but to summon to your aid all the progressive forces of our proletariat and render you freely all assistance in our power.

We pledge you, moreover, as we grasp your hands in comradely congratulations on this eventful day, to strive with all our energy to emulate your inspiring example by abolishing our imperialistic capitalism, driving our plutocratic exploiters and oppressors from power and establishing the working-class Republic, the Commonwealth of Comrades.

ALLEGED CAPITALIST FRAME-UP ON PIQUA SOCIALISTS FAILS—FEDERAL GRAND JURY ON ADVICE FROM ATTORNEY-GENERAL GREGORY DROPS CHARGES—LEONARD AND HIS TOOLS DISCREDITED

The Federal grand jury sitting at Cincinnati, Ohio, for the Western Division of the Southern District of Ohio, brought in a report Friday, December 20, stating that the sedition cases against Socialist Mayor Frank B. Hamilton, Safety Director Herman Grunert, Councilman L. H. Neff and Socialist party members J. D. Wagner, Frank Glass and Isaac Schuhcat, all of Piqua, Ohio, had been dropped: that this had been done because Attorney General Gregory, at Washington, D. C., as the result of voluminous correspondence with District Attorney Stuart R. Bolin, had advised him and through him the jurors themselves that the facts in these cases do not warrant further prosecution.

At once a remarkable scene ensued in the court room. District Judge Hollister, a superpatriot during the war, flew into a passion, saying it was not within the province of the attorney general's office or the district attorney to lay down the law to the grand jurors. He was about to order them to reassemble and take up the sedition cases, when District Attorney Bolin explained that the jurors had also had a summary of all the testimony which would have been presented, had the witnesses appeared before them. Thereupon the judge decided to let the report stand.

Thus the effort to imprison the Socialist administration of Piqua and discredit them with the public, has fizzled out.

Frame-Up Broke Down on Cross-Examination.

A short statement of the testimony as developed at the preliminary examination of these cases at Dayton, O., before U. S. Commissioner Howell, at which time they were bound over under $10,000 bail, will make clear why the Attorney General at Washington, after "voluminous correspondence," advised the dropping of the charges.

It should be stated first, that Attorney Joseph W. Sharts, for the accused Socialists, assisted by Attorney Frank W. Krehbiel, had to fight against the impatience and prejudice of the commissioner to conduct his cross-examination along the lines he saw fit. He cross-examined upon the theory that these cases were a "frame-up" for political effect. He connected them with W. K. Leonard, chairman of the finance committee of the Piqua City Council, a manufacturer and member of the Chamber of Commerce. The witnesses attempted for a while to hide Leonard's participation in the matter, but they broke down under cross-examination.

The government's witnesses in each of the six cases were two professional spies. They gave their names as Harry E. Barnes and Fred P. Kohet. An account of these spies may be interesting to Socialists.

Barnes, a short, thickset, commonplace-looking man of 42 years, testified that he came to Piqua about September 8, and represented himself as a phonograph salesman. He gave his present residence as Norwood, Ohio, saying he had been living there about five years, had been in the Norwood police department, and also had been doing business with a partner under the firm name of James & Barnes, and engaging in hotel and real estate matters. He said his office had been in Cincinnati, and he formerly had had charge of the dining room service at the Queen City Club and of the

Liebknecht's Appeal to German Workers

The manifesto circulated in Germany by Karl Liebknecht, Rosa Luxemburg and Frank Mehring of the German revolutionary Socialists, the torch which spread revolt over the German empire that was, has reached here.

The answer of the German people to the appeal to rise and seize the reins of government has been told in dispatches. The manifesto follows:

Dear Comrades—More than four years ago our rulers embarked on their campaign of robbery to subdue our neighbors. During the last ten or twelve years these same rulers of ours have been propagating the evil doctrine of the "Slav peril." They were successful.

They sowed the fear of Slavs in our hearts. But this was only a disguise for their still more imperialistic aggressions. As though the road to St. Petersburg lay across Belgium and the north of France they gave the order and let loose our armies.

In a little more than four years our rulers caused the killing and incapacitating of over 25,000,000 men and women.

Think of it, comrades. Millions of souls, soldiers and civilians; men women and children fell victims to the ideals of our unbridled imperialists!

During these four years the peoples of the world bled until they could bleed no longer. And what did we gain? Did we gain even one hundredth of what we and our rulers had started to win for us? Instead we lost until we could lose no longer.

Humanity's Hatred Only Thing Won.

We won one thing—the hatred of humanity. Disaster, starvation, disease, millions of dead, and the undying hatred of all the free peoples of the world—these are the rewards you have received under the leadership of our pan-German imperialists.

And now we have asked peace at the hands of our enemies through the President of America. Comrades, now comes your greatest opportunity! Unite! Stand together!

It is not you who have occasion to feel humiliated. It never was your war. You were driven to the world butchery by your rulers. You have received your deserts.

Now is your chance to humiliate your masters. The deeper and more thorough is their humiliation the more assured are your liberties.

Do not for another instant permit your leaders to misrepresent the German working men as slavish, supine to their will. Act at once. It is your only chance.

Strike the tyrant with a mighty blow and lay him prostrate at your feet. He is tottering. A well directed blow at this time will win your liberty and partly compensate for all the blood that has been shed during these four dreary years.

Your freedom is dependent upon the complete and unmistakable de-

AMNESTY FREES THOUSANDS IN ITALY

Thousands of syndalists and Socialists have been liberated under a general amnesty declared by the Italian government for persons imprisoned during the war. Release of all political and military offenders and abolition of the censorship are being vigorously demanded.—By a close working agreement between the General Confederation of Labor and the Italian Socialist Party, both agree to give full support to any general strike called by [illegible] international conference of revolutionary labor and Socialist organizations is soon to be held in Rome.—The revolutionary wing of the Socialist Party is in complete control and has condemned the action of the right wing in supporting the government during the war.

Canadian Labor Victory

The organized workers of Canada have just given an exhibition of their power through mass effort to redress a vital wrong. Not many weeks ago the Canadian government issued a sweeping order in council prohibiting strikes during the war and ordering dissolution of the many working class organizations. The progressive organizations of western Canada were the first to challenge this attack, and the agitation swept to the eastern provinces. In four western provinces preparations were being made for an inter-provincial convention, with the view of calling a general strike. In Toronto workers called a meeting to consider the situation, and by the time the members assembled news arrived that the anti-strike order had been rescinded.

The meeting proceeded, however, and during its progress calls for a Socialist government in Canada and the release of political prisoners were repeatedly applauded. Further attacks will be made upon the restrictive Orders in Council, which have destroyed a number of publications, declared a number of organizations illegal, and placed a number of representatives of the workers in prison. The organ of the Great War Veterans also is concentrating its attacks upon the Orders in Council, declaring them "autocratic" and comparing them with the late German and Austrian autocracies.

The fraternizing of veterans of the war with the radical wing of the labor movement on this issue is a symptom of the draft of opinion in Canada. Already these combined forces have won an important victory. Others probably will fall to them as they push their crusade for the complete restoration of civil liberties in Canada.

The movement there is affected by the division that appears in this country, also; only the modern, thinking, progressive elements are much more numerous and powerful in Canada than here. Considering the progress being made by the organized forces of labor in all countries, it is probable that the movement in this country is the least progressive of all. The Amalgamated Clothing Workers have recently conducted a survey of the State Federations of Labor. This has revealed the fact that not one state federation has adopted any comprehensive program to meet the problems that are now rushing upon the organized workers of the country. Less than a half dozen have given the matter some consideration, but no comprehensive report has yet been made by any of them. If the rank and file suffer, as they certainly will, it may bring an awakening that will bring them abreast at least with their brothers across the northern border.—Union Record.

Nickolas Lenine—Soci Premier of Russia

By LOUIS C. FRAINA.

Lenine sent a message to the United States by Albert Rhys Williams as he was leaving for America. Lenine said: "Carry back all the enthusiasm our Russian revolution ha put into your heart. Remember, your country is not Russia. You have different conditions. You cannot transplant from one country to another the same methods and forms. What you have to do is to lay broad and deep the foundation of an intelligent working class consciousness, without which working class action is impossible."

Marx was the master of the Revolution in theory. Lenin is the master of the Revolution in action. But as Marx, the man of theory, had great capacity for action, so Lenin.

In fact, the dominant form of the activity of Marx and Lenin is determined, not by peculiar talent or characteristics, but by the historic milieu conditioning their activity. This is precisely the mark of the great rebel—that he concentrates upon the fundamental revolutionary task of his day.

If I were asked what particular phase of Lenin appears to me as decisive, I would answer: His dynamic capacity to unite theory and practice. This is not as simple a thing as it may appear. Usually, the Socialist is an opportunist, who casts aside every real opportunity for immediate revolutionary action, becoming an adept in bourgeois liberal activity and social-reformism, accepting theory in the facile fashion of an average Christian accepting his religion—repudiating the revolutionary tasks of Socialism; or a "revolutionist" becomes an adept in using formulae, whose action is hampered by the silken cord of obstract theory, absorbed so much in the Revolution that the requirements of the immediate revolutionary struggle are allowed to pass into the years of wasted opportunity—paltering with the revolutionary tasks of Socialism. Each of these two types of Socialists evade all actual problems of the Revolution. Action must be directed by theory, and theory must become action. An uncompromising revolutionist, Lenin has an overwhelming sense of reality. The Revolution to him is not a dress parade of amicable transformation, of the pacific "penetration of Capitalism by Socialism; nor is it the conquest of Capitalism by the formulation of "revolutionary" theory and formulae, much as a bourgeois "idealist" sees in general principles of human action the means for the emancipation of the world. No; Lenin conceives the Revolution as a series of implacable, brutal class struggles; as a process in which theory and action are inseparably united; as a dynamic movement in which every opportunity, every crisis, every strength, weakness and peculiarity of the social alignment

British Workers Gain In House of Commons

British Laborites show growing strength in recent elections. Nearly double former representation. Soldier vote is recorded. Sinn Feiners will establish separate Irish parliament.

First incomplete returns of the British elections to the House of Commons, which occurred Dec. 14, show that the Laborites have made great inroads upon the seats formerly occupied by their opponents.

The returns of the elections have been delayed until the vote of the men in service was recorded.

The new House of Commons will have 707 members. To date the Laborites are credited with having gained 74 seats, the Sinn Feiners with 70. The coalition forces, headed by Premier Lloyd George, winning a majority.

It is conceded that the Laborites will be the second strongest party in the house. The Sinn Feiners refuse to attend at Westminster. They plan to establish a separate Irish parliament.

The Sinn Feiners refusal to sit at Westminster is in protest against the government for its stand on the question of Irish independence.

It is conceded that the Laborites will be the second strongest party in the empire, having about doubled their representation. English labor is not to be left behind in the march of the workers to freedom as these elections indicate. They have caught the spirit of the times.

JAPANESE WORKERS THREATEN CAPITALIST REGIME

Toshio Fujiwara, a "leading business man" of Tokio, complains that agitators are stirring up the Japanese working class, that the latter are acquiring the ideas of their western fellow workers, "unfortunately in a wrong sense," and that, "if the general discontent of the working class is left without a remedy, we may have serious outbursts that may bring about a catastrophe to the empire."

Walsh was the star witness for the five Socialist Party officials on trial before Judge K. M. Landis in the United States District Court here, charged with conspiring against the government's war program. The [illegible] City lawyer and editor answered all questions in a direct and [illegible] manner, and when District [illegible] Clyne began to cross-examine Walsh on his opinions about the [illegible] everybody in the court room sat [illegible] took notice.

“[illegible] do not believe in war at all,” [illegible] Walsh, “but when this country got into the war I felt that it was my duty to do what I could to see that justice was done to our people at home while our soldiers abroad were fighting for freedom and democracy.”

Walsh said he did not believe in the theory or the practice of conscription, and hinted that he hoped the time would come when young men would not have to be dragged from their homes to fight for an ideal. He said he thought the ideal should be so inviting that it would command people to adhere to it without compulsion or intimidation.

“Are you a Socialist?” asked Seymour Stedman, chief of counsel for the Socialists.

“No, sir, I am an anti-Socialist,” replied Walsh.

The labor liberalist told of his chairmanship of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, and of the various fights he has made in recent years for the rights of labor and minority political parties.

Both of the prosecutors fought his testimony, but it all got to the jury. Holding up several copies of the American Socialist, of which J. Louis Engdahl, defendant, was editor before Burleson suppressed it, Clyne asked Walsh if he believed such and such an article would inspire patriotism or encourage enlistment and recruiting. The district attorney then read portions from the Socialist Party war proclamation, and Irwin St. John Tucker's “The Price We Pay.”

Walsh replied that he may not agree with the subject matter of the articles quoted, but he disagreed with the reactionary policy of suppressing papers because they printed what they thought was the truth. He said he thought the true test of strength of a nation was its ability to carry the weight of dissenting opinion. He declared he thought it infinitely more important to uphold the constitutional guarantees of free speech and free press even though those prerogatives might in some instances be abused by individuals.

Walsh told how, on July 16, 1917, he, with Morris Hillquit, Clarence S. Darrow, Fannie Witherspoon, Seymour Stedman, Amos Pinchot, Engdahl and others went to Washington and formed a committee to protest against the suppression of Socialist and radical papers. He said the fight was made before the Department of Justice and the Postoffice Department. He said the committee represented the “American Socialist,” The New York Call, The Four Lights Magazine, the Rebel of Halletsville, Texas, and other publications.

The committee was received by Judge Herron, assistant attorney general in charge of the enforcement of the espionage act.

Walsh brought out the friction between the Department of Justice and the Postoffice Department on the matter of suppressing radical papers. He said that Judge Herron stated that the Department of Justice would be willing to draft a statement on its attitude toward Socialist papers that might guide them in their editorial policy. The statement was never forthcoming despite many requests.

In the afternoon of the same day Walsh said the committee was received by Albert Sidney Burleson, postmaster general, and the whole problem was laid before that official. The committee vigorously protested against Burleson's action of placing the responsibility of suppression in the hands of the solicitor of the Postoffice Department, William H. Lamar. He said that papers with a free political message were being handled in the same manner as though they contained obscene matter. The whole matter was bound up with red tape, he said.

Walsh read a letter which he sent to Burleson on July 24, 1917, a few days after the conference. He told Burleson that he thought the postmaster general had not taken the conference seriously and that he did not seem to understand that the free press of the nation was involved in the controversy.

Burleson replied to this letter resenting Walsh's inference, and said he was sorry he had ever granted the interview with the free press pilgrims.

Engdahl continuing his testimony, told how he had submitted proof sheets of the American Socialist to the superintendent of second-class mail in Chicago for several weeks after the paper was first barred from the mails on June 30, 1917. That official, M. J. O'Malley, read the proof sheets, but gave Engdahl little satisfaction. He told him what he could not print, Engdahl said, but did not say what he could print.

Engdahl submitted one set of proof sheets in which he had left several columns blank. O'Malley objected to the blank spaces as that would give proof that the paper had been censored. He advised Engdahl to fill up the columns with some regular propaganda matter.

At the Washington conference on the date mentioned, Engdahl said that Judge Herron of the Department of Justice, thought that Socialist papers would have the right to discuss International Socialism, while the postoffice violently objected to such discussion.

Telling of the conference with Burleson, Engdahl said that worthy had stated to the committee: “There is the law. If you don't like the law change it.” He did promise a statement from National Thought Controller, Lamar, Burleson's lieutenant, but the statement was never made, and the Socialist and radical press proceeded along the uneven tenor of their ways until most of them foundered in a sea of indictments.

Several witnesses testified in behalf of Congressman-elect Victor L. Berger. One of these was Edmund T. Melms, former Socialist president, Milwaukee common council, and later sheriff. Melms denied that Berger is the political boss of Milwaukee.

“He certainly is not my boss,” said Melms, “and I don't think any Socialist in Milwaukee regards Berger as the ‘boss.’” The congressman enjoyed the banter.

“The people of my ward elected me alderman,” said Melms, “and the people of the city elected me sheriff. I don't think Berger could have held recognition from me if he wanted to.” Berger nodded his head in agreement.

Melms denied that Berger's influence had led Carl Haessler of the Milwaukee Leader editorial staff, into the latter's attitude as a conscientious objector. Haessler is at Leavenworth for his refusal to don a uniform.

State Senator Louis A. Arnold, Socialist of Milwaukee, and Secretary Wisconsin Socialist Party, also denied Berger was “the boss.”

Denial that Berger had attempted to force a pro-German news policy on the Leader was made by Leo Wolfsohn, telegraph editor of the Leader. This testimony was offered as a rebuttal to that of J. E. Harris, formerly managing editor of the Leader.

“Berger told me the policy of the paper was primarily for peace and against kings and kaisers,” said Wolfsohn. “Berger said that since we were fighting the German kaiser we should give him an extra kick.”

The Hook for U. S. Labor

Labor in the United States presented a solid front in favor of every step and method adopted to forward the war from the time Samuel Gompers and the presidents of the international unions issued their famous declaration of support for a war for democracy before war was declared until now. Canadian labor fought valiantly every attempt to limit freedom of speech, freedom of press and all attempts at fastening vicious espionage and sedition laws upon their nation. Labor in the United States sees the delegation to the Peace Conference go without a single representative from its ranks. Labor in Canada has the satisfaction of having the secretary of the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress named as one of that country's peace commissioners. Let history write the answer.

BRITISH LABOR, VICTORS IN FIGHT FOR SHORTER HOURS

At a recent conference in London the Miners Federation of Great Britain, presided over by Robert Smillie, demanded the shortening of the working day to six hours.—The government has been obliged to grant the eight-hour day to railway employes. Half a million workers will benefit, the white-collar clerks being left out in the cold.—Discharged women munition workers recently marched through the streets of London and raised a big rumpus when the Prime Minister said he was “too busy to see them” in regard to re-employment.

BOURGOEIS ATTEMPT THE IMPOSSIBLE

An amnesty has been granted to 10,000 revolutionists.—A middle class government has been formed and is going to attempt the impossible task of “stemming the tide of Bolshevist propaganda from Russia.” This is the latest news from Finland.

ANTI-BOLSHEVIST ACTION HAMPERED

Inquiries in official circles lead to the conclusion that in reality the situation in Russia and eastern Germany is giving the authorities a good deal more anxiety than the public imagines.

Anti-Bolshevist action is hampered by three factors:

First—The difficulty of the allies agreeing among themselves on exactly how and to what extent it is to be carried out.

Second—The reluctance of the troops and the French people generally to engage in a winter campaign in Russia, fraught with the ominus memory of the Crimea and of Napoleon's retreat from Moscow.

Third—The fear that such action, if carried out, might defeat its own object by causing Bolshevist ideas to spread and be disseminated more widely through the advertisement, or appeal to public attention, thus afforded them.

Private advices from a Swiss source, which have been always found reliable indicate that the extremist party in Germany is gaining ground and that capitalist minded people both in Germany and Switzerland are already looking forward with horror to an alliance between Russian and German “reds” against the rest of the world.

And then comes Comrade John A. Rehm of Springfield, with a list of ten. Comrade Rehm has the sub-getting habit. He couldn't stop even if he wanted to.

“Inclosed find my check for ten dollars for which send me ten yearly sub cards. I have no hesitation in recommending your paper to anyone.” Thus writes Comrade Allen Cook, a Canton live sub-hustler. Not only has he no hesitation but he gets the subs.

The Great Work Ahead

By

Marguerite Prevey

A year of tremendous historic upheaval is closing; another of unparalleled opportunity is opening.

The old world of triumphant and unchallenged capitalism is gone forever, and capitalism itself, with all its crimes upon its bloody hands, stands convicted and condemned at the bar of an outraged and aroused civilization.

Now strikes the hour, the long awaited, dreamed of hour of the workers of the world. Now is the time for them to rise to the opportunity of the ages and take possession of the earth and the fullness and fatness thereof in the name of an emancipated race.

It is indeed an inspiring vision, a glorious outlook.

The war of capitalist nations is ended, and now begins the war of the workers of these nations for emancipation. In this war the forces of education and organization will win and every worker with a glimmer of vision and a spark of manhood will have his part.

Everywhere the field is rotten ripe for the proletariat and if they will only unite industrially and politically and act together in a class-conscious body, the day of the social revolution is at hand, and the new world now in the making will be the beautiful free world of the triumphant and emancipated workers.

In Russia, Germany, Austria, Italy, England, France and other nations of Europe the workers are storming the ramparts of capitalism, resolved to overthrow its brutal power and inaugurate industrial and political democracy.

Let us not fail in our support of this international uprising that threatens every citadel of exploitation and oppression and gives promise of establishing real democracy throughout the world.

Comrades, let us to our task with eager hearts and willing hands; let us unite our forces and set to work with an energy and determination that brook no hesitancy and knows no defeat.

Organization is the first and the supreme demand of the present situation. Let us put forth all our energies to get the workers industrially organized and enrolled as members in the Socialist Party.

Let us rally to the support of the Ohio Socialist and roll up a circulation that will give it commanding power in the movement.

We all rejoice to see our comrades, Ruthenberg, Wagenknecht and Baker, liberated from their prison cell. They come back to us with new enthusiasm. With our State Secretary back on the job, reinforced by the work of his heroic wife and comrade, the work should progress as never before.

And now, comrades, to work: each of us is in duty bound to do our share to make the year 1919 spell emancipation for the workers of the world.

The Coming Struggle

By MARY E. MARCY

To my mind the ultimate triumph of Socialism is as inevitable as the coming of the spring. The capitalist financial system is already crumbling. The spirit of revolution is already spreading beyond the boundaries of Russia into Germany, Bulgaria, Austria-Hungary, Italy, and down into Roumania and far into Sweden and Finland.

But nowhere is capitalism going to resign without a life and death struggle. Nowhere is Labor going to triumph without standing united against a rapidly uniting and desperate foe.

Nationalism and national governments are rapidly being swallowed up in the new crisis and everywhere the capitalist class, the junker class, are joining themselves in a real alliance against the workers of all countries.

Marx said that the governments of the various countries were merely committees for administering the affairs, protecting the property interests, of the whole capitalist class of these countries. He said that all social institutions reflect the changes that take place in the economic life of a nation and that these institutions foster, and protect the economic owners of society in their private ownership and control.

But capital today has become so absolutely international that the allied governments are unable to demand large indemnities of what was once the central empires for the simple reason that the payment by them of large sums to the allies would utterly ruin their already collapsing financial system and throw Germany and Austria-Hungary into such utter financial chaos as would render these countries utterly incapable of consuming the surplus products of the allied nations, or of sending their own products to other nations, or of buying raw material from any country.

Capitalism has become so international that the allied powers cannot crush the “central empires” without killing off a future customer and future profits. To expose the financial bankruptcy of the defeated nations would mean the jeopardy of their own shaky banking institutions.

And so the allied governments will need to become generous to their stricken foes; to ally themselves with the capitalist classes of Germany and Austria-Hungary, to assist instead of crushing their old enemies.

And for this, declare the great French bankers, we need an international banking system, an international central bank; we need a world capital, a great coercive power that shall protect the interests of international capital. And so, in one form or another, but undoubtedly as some great world-wide police force, we shall soon see the great international state evolving. It may take the form of a League of Nations.

Then, comrades, be very sure that wherever small working class revolts raise their heads, the international government, the international capitalist police force will rush to endeavor to crush it out.

Opposed to such power as the world has never seen, the gains made by Socialism in small elections will seem very small and very inadequate. What can even a whole nation in the hands of triumphant labor do against the capitalist world state and world power? To be effective Socialism must become more and more international. We must array the labor Internationale against the capitalist international.

Into the coming conflicts that are going to rock every nation we must throw and dissolve ourselves. We must be ever on the field of battle, sounding the class call of Socialism; teaching the workers that Socialism means shop-control by the workers, real, practical, bread-and-butter, industrial democracy!

Socialism is coming but whether it be soon or late depends upon us! The greed of the capitalist class, the collapsing financial system upon which it is built, the enforced rebellion of the workers will be our opportunity. We must organize this rebellious force and we must educate it in the meaning of Socialism.

If we say to the worker striking for higher wages in the face of steadily rising prices that Socialism means voting for the party candidate next year, we will be rightly pushed aside in the midst of real class war.

We must remember that every class conflict is our gfiht; we must use these struggles to explain the purpose of Industrial Socialism, shop-control by the workers—Socialism.

We must have industrial, shop propaganda and we must jump into every conflict and organize the workers for the only kind of Socialism that will free and save the working class.

As Marx said: Socialism proposes not the governing of peoples but the administration of industry by the working class.

On this platform we can gain the working class; on this platform we will soon become invincible!

FREEDOM FOR WAR OBJECTORS DEMANDED

A group of about 20 persons, among whom were Mrs. Henry Villard, Mrs. Brent Allinson of Chicago and Dr. John L. Elliott, left New York for Washington, with a petition signed by more than 15,000 people. This document seeks the release of conscientious objectors, now in the disciplinary barracks at Fort Leavenworth. It will be presented this morning to Secretary of War Baker by the delegation, which will plead for the 3[illegible] men who are serving sentences of from ten to thirty years.

More than half of the delegation are the near relatives of some war objector who is now in what is called the solitary confinement “hole” in the military prison, of whom there are about thirty. These men, until relieved of this torture by the recent War Department order, were forced to stand nine hours each working day, manacled by the wrists to the doors of their cells. They are still on a bread and water diet for periods of 14 days at a time.

A couple of girls engaged to Leavenworth prisoners, will be among this group to plead for them. There will be also several men in uniform.

The remainder of those to visit the Secretary are men and women who feel the time has come, now the war is over, for generous action on the part of the government toward the objectors. Among these is Mrs. Henry Villard of the suffrage movement, the daughter of William Lloyd Garrison.

Comrade E. B. Floding of Lisbon subscribes and sends another for company.

Victory Certain

“Onward to Victory” is the watchword of the Red Hundred, which is the name we give our subscription hustlers, that hard-working, self-sacrificing and invincible group of ‘Jimmy Higginses’ in our great cause. Ever alert for an opportunity to add to the circulation of the Ohio Socialist and the spread of Revolutionary Socialism, their efforts are proving of tremendous benefit to the Socialist movement. We take pleasure in recording here the results of their efforts during the past week.

That Local Canton has its eye firmly fixed upon victory is certain. Just lately the local bought forty dollars worth of subscription cards. To prove that they are not lying idle they sent in 12 yearlies and 22 half-yearlies this week. When a local gets all its members on the sub lists of the O. S. and then sets out to place a copy in the hands of the workers in its city, then we know it is laying the foundation for a greater local and a more efficient one. This seems to be Local Canton's policy.

Warren is another local that has seen the rays of victory piercing the gloom. Seven new subscribers Comrade Swope corrals this week. Local Warren is gathering momentum. Watch it.

Some booster, is our exclamation when we receive nine three-months' and one yearly from Comrade Edwin Blank of Lima. And to think that Comrade Blank has been keeping this pace for weeks ought to make others speed up a bit. What do you think?

Ten half-yearlies and seven yearlies Comrade A. Kutther of Akron mails in. Akron too, has seen the new day adawning and wants to keep in the lead.

Two yearlies from Comrade Allen Cook of Canton shows he's still selling them.

Comrade T. H. Davies of Hubbard takes another step toward victory by sending in seven subscriptions. Comrade Davies is among the live wires in that part of the world.

Local Montpelier heard from again. Four subs from Comrade Fickle means they're still kicking. Comrade Fickle says they will have more to report next week.

A new booster at Columbus is Comrade Georgie Crook. He sends us four subs as a start.

Comrade S. G. Gregory of South Tunnel, Tenn., is continuing his work for the emancipation of the workers in spite of an indictment hanging over his head. Four subscriptions from him this week attests his loyalty to the workers.

Two yearlies and a promise of more soon is what Comrade E. J. Heint of Ashtabula sends in. Good work comrade. Come again.

To keep his weekly pledge Comrade Norman Simons of Sawyerwood mails us one new one.

From Paris, Mo., hails Comrade E. H. Sladek bearing his own sub and two more yearlies. Who said we had no friends outside of Ohio?

Comrade Pinkus of Davenport, Ia., hustles two subs for us.

Comrade Perry Shipman of Rock Island is interested in establishing a national circulation for the O. S. He adds two more to the list which is appreciated. He also orders 100 of this Victory Edition.

Five dollars for a bunch of sub cards, one-fifty for subs and one-fifty for the Victory Edition, together with two dollars for General Fund and two dollars for two two-year subs as Xmas presents to two friends, all from Comrade J. H. Sims of Bethel. Can you beat that?

Three more from Lawndale keeps their record bright.

Comrade P. Blau of Covington, Ky., sends in one more from Kentucky.

Local Barberton is selling press stamps. Three yearlies and four half-yearlies this week.

Local Columbus treads the path to victory by placing the names of ten subscribers on the list. The comrades of Columbus certainly keep their record bright.

As we have said before Mansfield local is on the map. Five subs from there proves it.

Comrade Wilnecker of Toledo mails in two more.

State Executive Committeeman Scott Wilkins is still on the job, as one more from him proves.

Comrade W. F. Werner of Canton is still boosting. One from him and also one from Comrade Markert of Mt. Healthy.

Comrade W. E. Reynolds of Battle Creek, Mich., who is a constant contributor to our columns has found another way to help us. Four half-yearlies and two yearlies he secures.

J. H. Fries of Columbus comes boosting with two. Every one is getting the habit.

Comrade C. B. Zaiser of Atwater is on the job. His own and three others is a worthy contribution.

Comrade Clarence Case of Hamilton greets us with three more yearlies. The comrades are well pleased with the Ohio Socialist he says.

Our weekly visitor, Comrade Wm. Schultz of Napoleon sends in three yearlies and orders a hundred of the victory edition.

Down at Pine Bluff, Ark., is a bunch of live wires whom we are certain to hear from soon. Comrade W. A. Wright, the local secretary sends us his subscription and asks for samples with which to awaken his comrades. He says the comrades there are looking for a real Socialist paper.

[illegible] Ohio Locals

1—Charles Baker is ready to fill all speaking engagements [illegible] may be assigned. Does your local want him for a meeting? Decide at once. Don't delay the routine. Address State Office.

2—Hearing of the Debs appeal by the U. S. Supreme Court has been postponed until Jan. 27. Comrade Debs will gladly fill speaking engagements between now and that date, in northern Ohio. Locals desiring him should apply at once.

FORCES OF BOLSHEVIKI PENETRATE ESTHONIA

Bolshevik forces are advancing into Esthonia at the rate of six miles a day, and the fall of the city of Reval is momentarily expected, according to a Swedish press dispatch to the State Department.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT BACKS UP

“Hon.” F. B. Carvell, a labor “leader,” who went over to the enemy in return for a fat official job, declares that I. W. W. propaganda is disturbing conditions in the labor unions of Canada, except among what he calls “properly conducted unions,” such as the locomotive engineers and, of course, the Typographical Union. The Imperial Munitions Board is advising all workers in munitions plants to hustle for other jobs.—Democracy is re-appearing in Canada. Faced with the threat of a general strike, the government has rescinded its “war emergency” order making the use of enemy languages a crime and outlawing the Socialist Party. The I. W. W. is doubtless still under the ban.—Canadian labor councils are insisting on the withdrawal of Canadian troops from Russia.

[illegible] On Appeal Postponed

The hearing on the appeal of Eugene V. Debs case before the [illegible] Supreme Court, which was scheduled to be heard Jan. 6, has been postponed to Jan. 27. The brief, which [illegible] been filed by Attorney Seymour Stedman of Chicago, declares that Debs' conviction “rests squarely upon [illegible] ‘seditious temper,’” the brief arraigns the courts of the country [illegible] cause of their attitude toward [illegible] espionage act.

“Practically all cases since the adoption of the espionage act, in dealing with the right of free speech,” [illegible] the brief, “while giving some measure of verbal recognition to that right have abruptly swept aside any consideration of such a right in conflict with the general war purposes of the government. We earnestly submit that such interpretation of the right of free speech is a careless sweeping aside of the most vital principle of American freedom.”

Another comrade we are glad to hear from is A. J. Totten of Alliance. He sends in ten dollars worth of subscriptions and says we shall hear from him again. We are sure that we shall.

Four half-yearlies is what Comrade W. P. Williams of Englewood, Colo., secured in spite of the flu. He says there is nothing like giving the workers something to think about. He's right, isn't he?

Comrade Mrs. W. E. Riley renews her subscription and sends in three more. What an example! Just think what that would mean if each comrade would do as well.

Two more lined up for victory as a result of the efforts of Comrade A. [illegible] F. Steckel of Tiffin.

Lenine—An Appreciation

becomes the subject of study and appropriate action.

Let it not appear from this that Lenin is an opportunist wavering with each new shift of the social wind; Lenin has the utmost scorn, and justly, for the miserable opportunist who shifts and wavers, hesitates and compromises, and uses “reality” as a justification. Adapting one's self to temporarily dominant facts, compromising with issues and forces fundamentally contrary to Socialism on the specious plea of “necessary action,” is not to adapt one's self to reality, but to accept forms instead of substance, the appearance of reality for reality itself. Reality is infinitely deceptive. At the moment when the war and Czarism constituted the “reality” in Russia, a new reality appeared and burst forth, the action of the revolutionary proletariat, the reality of revolutionary Socialism. Life is consistent in spite of apparent inconsistency. There must be consistency in theory and in action, based upon adapting each to the fundamental facts of the forces and tendency of Capitalism and the revolutionary proletariat. Consistency that is flexible, and flexibility that is consistent, are instruments of the Revolution. When the moment for “necessary action” comes—revolutionary action—the opportunist will waver and oppose this necessary revolutionary action, as did the majority Socialists in Europe, the “men of action”; while the man who was accused of not being “in action,” who rejected participation in certain action as contrary to Socialism and the class struggle, becomes the director and inspiration of the greatest of all revolutions.

It might make one cynical, if life itself didn't suppress cynicism in the revolutionary Socialist, to consider certain reactions toward Lenin. There are many who consider Lenin a sort of bolt from the blue, a miraculous product of the Russian Revolution; there are others who bitterly attacked Lenin, now singing his praises, while they try to compress Lenin's policy into the small space of their petty purposes and corrupt idelogy; and there are still others who invoke Lenin and the proletarian revolution in Russia while pursuing the petty bourgeois, opportunistic policy of moderate Socialism which they have always pursued, and which Lenin condemned, condems and will continue to condemn. * * * And Lenin serenely, uncompromisingly, adheres to the revolutionary theory and action comprising his fundamental policy for twenty years, disaster and success alike emphasizing his revolutionary energy and initiative. * * *

During the course of years Lenin labored in comparative obscurity, forging the concepts that have become the thunderbolts of the Russian Revolution. Lenin represented the minority, that minority of revolutionary Socialism which in all nations actively represents the Revolution and is the hope of the proletariat. The world of Socialism—that is to say, the world comprised in the petty bourgeois Socialism of the Second International—rendering homage to clay idols, to Karl Kaut-Guesde, all of whom collapsed miserably under the test of the revolutionary crisis produced by the war. The world of petty bourgeois Socialism invoked the German Social-Democracy, the British Labor Party, the French Labor Party, the dominant Socialism in Russia, while it ignored, condemned or knew nothing of the Bolsheviki and other groups of the revolutionary minority, the policy of which conquers in Russia, and will conquer everywhere by means of the New International of the final struggle and victory. But Lenin was not swerved from his course by apparent failure, no more than he has been swerved from his course by success. In these years of preparation for the Revolution, in these bitter years of momentary triumph of a Socialism essentially counter-revolutionary, Lenin developed the fundamentals of his policy, which his revolutionary integrity and mastery of theory convinced him were in accord with the fundamental facts and tendency of Capitalism and the proletariat, and which would necessarily conquer under the impulse of the universal crisis generated by Imperialism, which introduces the new revolutionary epoch of the proletarian class struggle.

The courage and initiative of the man, his integrity and devotion to the fundamental tasks of Socialism, his refusal to temporize with revolutionary consistency, policy and honor for the sake of meretricious popularity, are marvels of character and vision, an inspiration to the Socialist and the rebel.

It is impossible to chronicle here the achievements of Lenin. But there is one achievement, I think, which is characteristic. I was discussing Lenin with a comrade the other day, and he said: “It rather tires me to read so much in which Lenin repeatedly insists, as against Karl Kautsky, that Marx said this or meant that. A man who has accomplished what Lenin has in Russia doesn't have to worry about Marx.” But Marxism is the theoretical instrument of the proletarian revolution; it is upon the basis of Marxism that Lenin builds. And a great achievement of Lenin is the restoration of Marxism to its real character as an instrument of revolutionary action. During the past twenty-five years, Marxism has experienced a transformation, becoming the means of interpreting history and a fetish of controversy, instead of a maker of history and an instrument of revolutionary action. This degrading conception of Marxism was dominant in the old International. The “Marxist,” instead of using Marxism to interpret new revolutionary developments, used their atrophied Marxism as a means of crushing new revolutionary ideas or compressing them into the stultifying limits of the old tactics, and justifying or explaining away every abandonment of revolutionary Socialism by the dominant petty bourgeois Socialism. Lenin used Marx against these pseudo-Marxists, insisted on making Marxism an instrument of revolutionary action, built upon the basis of Marxism and amplified its scope. Marx is again the rebel, and not the slave of the Socialist pedant. Lenin used Marxism to interpret the new social alignments of imperialism, the new forms of the class struggle, and to forge the concepts of theory and action corresponding to the new revolutionary epoch.

Lenin's theoretical activity bulks large. His “Development of Capitalism in Russia” is considered a master work, as is his “Agrarian Problem in Russia;” his “Imperialism: the Final Stage of Capitalism,” is a splendid analysis of the prevailing epoch, a brilliant unity of theory and action of Socialist interpretation. Then there is Lenin's pamphlet, “The State and the Revolution,” a discussion of the determining problem of the proletarian revolution; and his numerous pamphlets and other works issued during the Revolution, and which are classics of the application of fundamental Socialism to the problems of immediate, dynamic action during a revolutionary crisis. This theoretical work of Lenin will yet become a source of inspiration in the coming reconstruction of Socialism, supplemented by the accomplishments of the proletarian revolution in Russia.

It is not in any sense a concession to the Carlylean theory of “the Great Man” to admit that each great epoch of history expresses [illegible] focuses itself, in a great individual. Marat individualized the proletarian tendency of the French Revolution; Marx individualized the theoretical coming-of-age of the revolutionary proletariat; and Lenin individualizes the proletarian revolution in Russia.

Greetings, men and women of the proletarian revolution in Russia! Greetings, Lenin, symbol of the coming revolutionary Socialism that will conquer in spite of all!—The Class Struggle.

Victory of the Working Class at the polls and in industry means a gladder, brighter, better world for every soul in it.

What is Victory Anyway?

No matter how young or how old you are and no matter how old you feel in your youth or how young you feel in your old age—you've still some life to live.

AND HOW ARE YOU GOING TO LIVE IT?

Are you going to waste it? Are you going to give it to some panderer whose lust for sheckles is his predominant passion and give it without reserve or protest? Are you going to carelessly throw it about and around, not caring where it lights nor what it does?

Here then, is a story. And a true story it is.

We learned to know a man last summer whose permanent residence was a county infirmary. This man arose each morning, dressed himself in slimy, greasy clothes, walked as fast as the filth upon him would allow to the garbage can, took a seat close to it and well within reach of its foul smell, spit upon his hand to dampen the filth upon his trousers and waited for the flies to light. The flies did light and as they feasted upon his knee he killed them with a dirty-ragged-edged newspaper.

This he did day after day. This was his life's work.

And you'll say that his brain needed adjusting and right you are.

BUT HOW ABOUT YOU? WHAT DO YOU DO ALL DAY LONG?

What do you really do that's worth mentioning? What do you really do that's worth a second thought? What do you do day after day that is even as beneficial to mankind as the service rendered by the filthy fly killer of the infirmary?

You arise every morning and go to work and you work your life away. When you meet a friend you talk about YOUR JOB. When you open your mouth at home you talk about YOUR JOB. You think about YOUR JOB all day long. Do you ever raise a finger in protest against being jobbed in this manner? Do you ever stop to think that you are being jobbed to death?

You play up the small things in life. You're a very little fellow. You can't see further than over your neighbor's fence and you can't think deeper than to follow a Charlie Chaplin comic.

When your life is done you might discover that life has done you and again you might not. You might not have the brains. But your life will have been so well wasted that you will not even be given the privilege of saying you helped mankind by helping to exterminate flies. Your life will have been good for nothing but to provide a feast for the over-fed.

BUT THERE IS ANOTHER WAY!

You can make your life a block of granite in the monument which today is building for tomorrow. It's the monument of Industrial Democracy, humanity happy, the world free from slavery of any brand.

You can quit thinking small thoughts and acting small acts and you can embrace mankind and consecrate your life to its emancipation. You can quit grumbling about foolish trifles and begin proclaiming freedom for the workers. You can quit feeling lonesome and non-essential and you can begin to feel worthy and mighty. You can quit living alone and begin living with millions who are marching onward to a better world.

You can quit swating flies and begin to hit injustice, inequality, inhumanity sledge hammer blows.

YOU CAN DO THIS RIGHT NOW!

You can be more than you are today; you can be more than the ragged, filthy, fly killer; you can be everything if you will join the hosts of revolutionary labor in the joyous labor of making labor supreme.

AND THAT'S VICTORY!

Victory for you begins when you begin to give your heart and mind to the trampled and the cramped. Victory for you begins when you consecrate your every day to the abolition of wage slavery. For the day you so begin you begin to labor for your own emancipation.

YES—THAT'S VICTORY.

And no matter what the obstacles nor the cost, with it the Socialist is always crowned. He lives in a world he is winning.

JUMP IN! HELP WIN!

GERMAN SOCIALISTS IN WAR-TIME

By ANISE, Union Record.

(Facts taken from Labor Year Book, issued by Rand School; and "German Social Democracy During the War," by Edwin Bevan, published by George Allen and Unwin Co., London).

II. WHEN WAR WAS DECLARED

On the first of August, 1914, when the German empire was already on a war footing, the French parliamentary Socialists were in session in Paris, when into their midst, like a bolt from the blue dropped a German comrade, Herman Muller, accompanied by two Belgians, one of whom, Henri de Man, we have learned to know here in Seattle.

Already both French and German Socialists were discussing the voting of war credits. Muller was sent to make connections in France. He told the French Socialists that there were two lines of opinion among the German Socialists: one group wanted to vote against all war credits, the other wished to withdraw from voting. As for voting for the war credits, that was "out of the question," declared Muller.

The French Socialists said that if France was attacked, there would be two opinions in their party; either to vote for the war credits or not to vote at all; but that they would not consider voting against them. It seemed, then, that to keep from voting at all was the only line of action that offered a chance of common action in both countries, although Muller was of the opinion that most of the German Socialists would prefer voting against all war credits.

Events move fast in war time. Muller explained that he could only speak for the mind of the party when he left, two days before. No binding agreements were made on either side. But the incident shows how, up to the moment of actual war, the Socialists thought as Internationalists; with the declaration of war, the greater number became, in all countries, nationalists.

"To Help Our Own."

What caused the change? Do you remember, you of the labor movement, how the leaders in our group who had been most outspoken against the war and against conscription, began to change their attitude as soon as their own comrades were in the trenches. You heard the argument.—"Our own trades unionists are over there fighting; we must vote the money to give them food and supplies."

The same motive worked in Germany. Socialists on their way to the party meeting tell of seeing their old comrades bound for the front, and hearing them say: "See to it, comrade, that we have all we need. Don't be stingy in voting money, you in the reichstag."

The Russian Menace.

Then, too, the Russian Menace loomed large in the minds of Germans. Chancellor Hollweg called together representatives of all parties. The same day the Social Democrats of the reichstag met to discuss their future action. Austria and Serbia were forgotten. The one fact that eclipsed everything was that the Fatherland was already invaded—by Russia.

Tsardom, according to all Socialist traditions, was the darkest of horrors. Would the Socialists stand still and let German towns and villages be overrun by semi-savage hordes? It was believed universally in Germany that Russia and France had opened hostilities without necessity.

And so, under the stress of the hour, here was the German Social Democratic Party, doing on August 3 what had seemed out of the question two days before—voting for war credits. Seventy-eight were for voting the credits unconditionally; 17 wished to vote against, or make some conditions.

Haase, president of the group, was against voting the credits, yet to him fell the unpleasant task of reading out the affirmative vote on the following day. And it did not yet occur, even to Liebknecht, to break with the party. No sign was shown the public of the sharp discussion that had been held behind closed doors.

In a talk with Eduard Bernstein, Haase deplored the voting of war credits. "What I am most afraid of," he said, "is the after effect it will have on the development of the party." His words were prophetic.

Peace With the Government.

The first result from the action of the Socialists was a great sense of unity and joy throughout the country. All groups were working as one; those who had denounced the Socialists for lack of patriotism ceased their criticism. The boycott of locals by the military ceased; the ban on Socialist literature in the army was withdrawn; permission was given for Vorwaerts to be sold in the stations of the government railways.

All the legal proceedings already started against trades unions were dropped: the government promised to reform the Prussian electoral system. And in return, the trade unions put an end to all the strikes then in progress. In fact, the same sort of getting together and surface solution of all old difficulties occurred in Germany that happened here and in all countries at war.

Victory First, Then Reform.

The German people were in a state of unnatural exaltation, expecting a quick victorious peace. The effect on the minds of the working class is described by Strobel in Die Neue Zeit. "History was taking this course, it was folly to resist the brazen tramp of history. Moreover, the war would create an economic boom, which would hasten the rise of the workers. Also, it was thought, the more 'patriotic' the working class had shown itself during the war the easier it would be to get round the governing classes after the war, the less able they would be to refuse the demands of the working class."

Sound or unsound, we have heard those arguments before. They have been heard, and have been effective, in all the warring countries.

Next Week—The Opposition Begins

THE MOST IMPORTANT THING YOU CAN DO
(See Other Side)

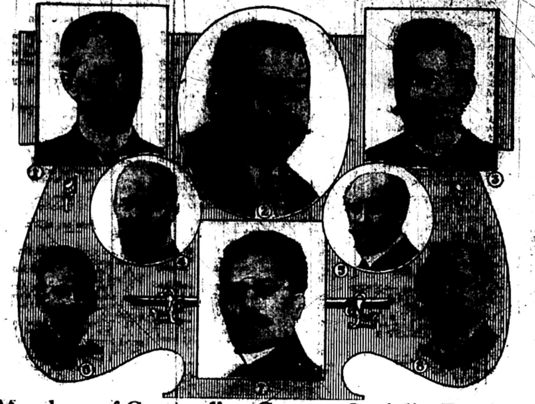
There are three distinct groups of Socialists contesting for supremacy in the land where Wm. Hohenzollern used to get free board. The so-called majority Socialists, the Scheidemann group, who supported the kaiser in the war, at present believe in a policy of co-operating as much as possible with the German business class to stabilize production and distribution. The Independent Socialists who toward the end of the war refused to further vote for war credits assume a more radical stand, wanting to socialize industry as fast as it can be taken over by the government. The [illegible] group of Socialists [illegible] favor the [illegible]. This group demands the working class control, through soldiers and workmen's councils, of all industry, demands that the workers and the workers alone shall rule Germany and seeks to establish an industrial democracy with the capitalist class dispossessed rather than a political democracy with its slow and ineffective program of government ownership of a few principle industries.

If the Liebknecht Socialists are [illegible] in Germany [illegible] with the Bolsheviki of Russia. This will double the [illegible] for [illegible] the red terror. Although [illegible] plute press when he opposed the kaiser and went to jail, we will soon hear him as heartily condemned by these same bought and paid for newspapers. It becomes the duty of every honest thinking worker to reserve judgement upon the German situation until the Socialist press can get and print the truth.



Members of Contending German Socialist Factions

1—GEORGE LEDEBOUR, one of the principal characters in the German Revolution, born March 7, 1850, a Journalist by occupation. M. P. since 1900. Editor of "Vorwaerts" 1895-96. Chief editor of "Saxony Arbeiter-Zeitung." 1896-1900.

2—FREDERICH EBERT, President, Minister of the Interior and Military Affairs, born Feb. 4, 1871, at Heidelberg. A harnessmaker by trade. Since Oct. 1, 1913, Chairman of the Party in Berlin. Chairman of Young Socialist Federation. Editor of "Bremen Buerger-Zeitung." 1892. Party Secretary in Bremen 1900-1905. Secretary of Party Executive 1905-1913. M. P. since 1914.

3—KARL LEGIEN, Labor Official, born December 1, 1861, at Marienberg, West Prussia. Occupation, wood turner. M. P. President of International Federation of Trade Unions. Since 1891, Chairman of General Commission of Labor Unions. Chairman Central Sick Benefit Fund of the Woodworkers' Union. Author of numerous trade union pamphlets and tactics and the right to organize.

4—OTTO LANSBERG, Minister of Propaganda, Art and Literature, born December 4, 1869, in Rybnik. A Lawyer. M. P. Alderman in Magdeburg, 1904-1910.

5—PHILLIP SCHEIDEMANN, Minister of Finance and the Colonies, born July 26, 1865, a printer by occupation. Secretary of the Party Executive Committee since 1911. An editor in Giessen, 1895; in Nurenberg, 1900; later in Offenbach and Kassel.

6—WILLIAM DITTMANN, Minister of Demobilization, Transport, Justice and Health, born November 13, 1874, in Luebeck. Cabinetmaker by trade. Editor, since 1909, of the "Bergischen Arbeiterstimme." Editor, 1899-1902 "Nordischen Volksstimme" in Bremerhaven; editor, 1902-1904, "Bergischen Arbeiterstimme" in Solingen. Party Secretary, 1904-1909 Frankfurt A. M. election district, and elected alderman. Recently freed from prison where he was serving a five-year sentence as punishment for his alleged connection with the naval mutiny at Kiel, 1917.

7—DR. KARL LIEBKNECHT, leader of the so-called Spartacus group of Socialists, born August 13, 1871, in Leipzig, M. P., of the Prussian Legislature, and Berlin City Council, Attorney by profession. Recently freed from prison where he was serving a 40-month sentence for opposition to war and his views on internationalism. Author of numerous books and pamphlets, among them being, "Militarism," (an address to the Young Socialist convention). Also a collaborator on "Die Neue Zeit."

8—HUGO HAASE, Minister of foreign affairs, born June 29, 1863, at Allenstein, Attorney by profession. Chairman of the Party Executive. Member of Parliament. Leader of the Independent group of Socialists.

Restore Our Rights!

Our rights must be restored.

Is it not true that before a just peace can be concluded the Constitutional rights of American citizens, abrogated by the espionage law must be restored? Have we not the right to demand that the freedom to speak our honest convictions on the world problems must be given back to us?

Must we not make sure that the peace that has come shall be a peace that will safeguard human progress and make secure human freedom? Dare we forget that though the war is over now, all of the oppressive laws enacted during the war are still in force?

Is it not our duty to remind President Wilson that ere he stands before the peace council demanding democracy for Europe, we should be assured of real democracy at home; and before he can ask for freedom for the oppressed peoples of other nations, he should remember that here in the United States thousands of men and women are behind prison bars, and many more soon will be, whose only crime was that of expressing their deepest convictions; that before he asks that mercy should temper justice in Germany, he should make sure that justice is done to his own?

We may grant for sake of argument that the espionage law, with all its drastice irresponsible power might have been a grim necessity of war, but can we not ask in all sincerity if under its tyrannical oppression a just peace can be concluded?

Is it not necessary, now, that the armistice has been signed, that the terms of peace be fully and frankly discussed? And can it be honestly discussed while the espionage law absolutely throttles the voice of the common people, and the workers' press is shut out from the mails?

Must we not continually remind President Wilson that the anti-free press, anti-free speech and anti-free assemblage edicts of America's war time dictatorship are still in force, and that those who think, and attempt to voice their thoughts on the world problems of peace and life, still risk the felon's fate and the dungeon cell?

Dare we forget for a moment, that in the United States alone, of all civilized countries, are political prisoners dealt with as ordinary criminals; that those who speak for their concept of democracy and freedom are classed with common harlots, thieves and murderers?

Is it logical for us to send our president across the sea to grace the peace table and battle for world democracy, freedom of nations and justice to all peoples, while democracy, justice and freedom are endangered at home, by wartime's drastic laws?

Will not all real lovers of democracy, freedom and justice ask why it is, that in the United States alone, Socialism's and liberty's most prominent and best loved spokesmen are in prison, and the bastile gates still snarl in a hungry menace for any citizen who expresses on opinion contrary to the opinion of the political party in power? Will not our allies realize that whatever reasons may have been advanced for jailing radicals during the war, that these reasons are now demolished by the coming of peace?

How much harmony of action and co-operation in rebuilding the world can we hope to establish between the United States and the new Socialistic republics that are being born, when they know that four of the fifteen members of the Executive Committee of the Socialist Party are in prison, and three others are in grave danger of going there? What explanation can be offered for the fact that strenuous efforts are made by the administration to send the national secretary of the party, the editor of the party's official publication, the head of the Young People's Socialist League, and the former head of the party literature department to prison?

Can the great, powerful British Labor Party have faith in our nation's declaration of loyalty to the ideals of democracy, freedom and justice, when they know that Kate Richards O'Hare has been sent to prison for five years? The labor party of Great Britain knows Kate O'Hare, she met with them in council, she was honored by its leaders, she lectured under their auspices and spoke from their platform. What must these men decide who know Kate O'Hare, and that by every word she spoke or wrote, while in Great Britain, she proved her love and loyalty to her country.

What must the great statesmen of Europe feel when they know that Eugene V. Debs, four times the presidential candidate and the most prominent and best loved spokesman of American Socialism has been sentenced to ten years in prison because he expressed the sacred convictions of his great, loving heart?

What will be the reaction of the millions of Jews in Europe who have been taught to look to America as their star of hope, when they know that Rose Pastor Stokes, one of the most prominent and best loved Jewish women in America has been sentenced to serve ten years in prison for declaring her allegiance to the cause of the workers as against the war profiteers?

Against these conditions the Socialist Party has protested unceasingly, for we want the United States to go into the peace conference, so secure in her position that no question of doubt can be raised. We know that such security can only be ours when our truly democratic institutions and free government are safeguarded through the unrestricted rights of freedom of speech, press and assemblage.

By the weight and power of American arms and material resources outside of the German empire, and the strength of the Socialist Party organization within, kaiserism has been overthrown and the nations of Europe are struggling to establish themselves on a basis of democracy and peace. Karl Liebknecht and all who waged war on kaiserism in Germany are free, and the voice of the common people is heard throughout Germany commanding those who have been placed in power.

Can America approach the peace table while the American people are less free? Has not the time come for all Americans to unite in demanding that the wartime censorship of free expression be abolished;

That all political prisoners be immediately freed?

That all prosecution of American radicals because of their opinions be stopped?

feat of your rulers. Make that defeat telling.

How? Lay down your arms, you soldiers at the front. Lay down your tools, you workers at home. Do not let your rulers, the fly patriots and munition profiteers, deceive you longer.

So long as you are willing to continue the fighting, so long will these classes let you sacrifice your lives and the lives of your precious ones to save their faces. Lay down your arms and lay down your tools.

Other Nationalities Not Enemies.

Your neighboring nationalities are not your enemies. Your real enemies are at home.

The soldiers whom you face on the battlefields are not your enemies; they are fighting for your liberties.

Arise mightily and seize the reins of the government. Yours is the power. Yours is the right to rule. Respond to the call of liberty and win the war for yourselves.

For more than four years they have used you as pawns in their attempt to fill their purses. For four years they sacrificed your sons, fathers, brothers, and starved the millions to the end that they reap profits out of your blood.

If they had won the war you would have remained helpless slaves. Your liberty lay in their defeat; they are defeated. Victory is yours. It is for you to grasp it, to master it.

Comrades! Soldiers! Sailors! and you, workers! Rise by regiments and rise by shops.

Disarm your officers whose sympathies and ideas are of the ruling classes. Seize your foremen who side with the old order of things. Proclaim the overthrow of your masters and establish yourselves in one accord.

Soldiers, sailors, working men and citizens! do not permit your masters to make peace with the world in your name. Cast off these worthless masters of the fatherland and make peace with the world YOURSELVES!

Have you not suffered enough? Have you not dared death and torture in those four long and tragic years? So why fear anything? If you shed for your own liberty one-thousandth part of the blood you so freely shed on the battlefield for your masters you will win the immediate victory, not only for yourselves and your fellow men but even for the whole world.

More than five millions of Germans fell on the bloody battlefield for our pan-German imperialists. The sacrifice of no more than one thousand Germans can now win lasting freedom for our land. Then, comrades, rise and strike the last blow for freedom and civilization!

Proclaims Against Bloodshed.

And in order that our revolution shall not degenerate to that of the Russian bloodpool, we, the committee of the Revolutionary Socialists of Germany, make these suggestions to all the true Socialists throughout Germany:

Ascertain at once how many true Socialists there are in your company or regiment. Attack the quarters of your officers; disarm them at once. Make sure that your officers are in sympathy with you. If so, permit yourselves to be led by them. Shoot them at once in case they betray you after having professed to be partisans of your cause.

Do not kill your fellow soldiers who only disagree with you if they do not take the side of the government; they may be actuated through fear. After thoroughly disarming them and making sure that they are no longer dangerous to the cause of the revolution organize yourselves at once and report your numbers immediately to the central committee and await instructions meantime seizing all food and munition depots in your neighborhood.

Do not destroy or set fire to depots containing food or other wearing materials. It is permissible to set fire to barracks and other munition depots if they are so situated that the fires starting from these places could not spread to other localities, resulting in damage to materials other than arms and munitions. It should be kept in mind that the setting fire to barracks and munition depots should be resorted to after attempts to capture them for the revolution fails.

The temporary seizure of such buildings does not, however, mean that they will remain in our hands. In [illegible] such soldiers are [illegible] government partisans or [illegible] must be detailed [illegible] and guarded as hostages. [illegible] later by the loyal [illegible] should occasion a firm [illegible] fire to such building [illegible]

Sailors and marines! [illegible] Seize your ships. First [illegible] your officers. Communicate [illegible] with your comrades on shore [illegible] co-operation with [illegible] and harbor authorities and, if necessary open fire on loyal [illegible]

Appeal to Raze Military [illegible]

In extreme cases it is [illegible] to open fire on cities where [illegible] tioned numerous government [illegible] However, such firing must be [illegible] at once when the object is [illegible]

The immediate and [illegible] waste of all unmistakable [illegible] buildings, like forts and [illegible] harbors, is not only permissible but even essential.

Sabotage on fighting ships—if their seizure is not possible—is also essential. When mutiny on board a fighting ship is found a failure the ship's water compartments and valves may be opened.

Working men in munition factories! You are the sole masters of the situation! Stop work at once. From this moment you are only making bullets to be used against yourselves and against your own kind. The bullets you are now making will never reach the firing front. They are being made by your own hands to be aimed at you.

Stop making bayonets that will be thrust into your own bowels by the servants of the government. Rise, organize, and seize the arms and throw them against those who are planning to end the war and in return to enslave you. End the war yourselves and turn the weapons against them yourselves.

Never again will you bow the neck to these rulers.

Down with the kaiser and down with those from whom he derives his power to rule you.

Down with the capitalistic pan-German imperialists!

Down with the government as it is today!

Socialists Meet in International Conference January 6

First International Parleys Since War to be Held in Lausanne, Switzerland.

If the proposed International Socialist Conference in Lausanne, Switzerland, is held on Janu. 6, as [illegible] by Camille Huysman, the [illegible] Socialist leader, and various [illegible] Socialist groups, delegates of the American Socialists would have to leave at once to take part.

Socialist party officials here have not yet received any information that the State Department has seen fit to permit the three delegates chosen by referendum vote of the party membership to leave. Passports for them have been refused twice.

LATEST NEWS FROM GERMANY.

Dispatches dated Dec. [illegible] state that the Scheidemann Socialists are still in control but that the Independent Socialists, more radical than the former, and represented by Haase, Barth and Dittman in the cabinet, have resigned.

The impression now is that the Scheidemann Socialists will form a new government with the assistance of the liberal bourgeoisie. The revolution in Germany [illegible] to travel the Kerensky road toward proletarian control.

UNEMPLOYMENT GROWING.

The supply of labor is [illegible] approaching the point where it will exceed the demand, Department of Labor reports show. [illegible] has issued a warning that, unless remedied at once, the situation may become serious during the winter.

[illegible] Of the Bavarian Republic

By S. ZIMAND, in the Nation.

It is not an accident that the first blows of the revolution in Germany came from Bavaria. The feeling among the masses of the people in Bavaria was very strongly anti-war. According to different press reports repeated mutinies broke during the course of the war in the Bavarian regiments. Even the Royal Guard regiment refused obedience a few months ago. Anti-war feeling was displayed also by the attitude of the Bavarian press, which in the last months carried on a continual propaganda against the kaiser. It should also be mentioned that the working people of Bavaria resigned in great numbers from the Majority Socialist party, on account of its pro-war policy, and the Independent Socialist Party increased considerably. As far back as October, 1917, the constituency of Hof in northern Bavaria, which country had hitherto been solid for the old party, went over to the Independents. The immediate accomplishment of the revolution must be considered as the work of the leaders of the Independent Socialists. But it cannot be said that it was their work alone. The revolution in Bavaria is the work of the war-tired, hungry people of Bavaria, stimulated by the Independent Socialists.

It is very significant that the first dynasty to fall at the beginning of the revolution was that of Bavaria. "The Kingdom of Bavaria was one of the oldest dynasties of Germany, if not of Europe, and it was more deep-rooted in the minds of the people than any other. The fall of the Bavarian dynasty was the beginning of the twilight of the gods, for the Oldsburg, Hohenzollern and Hapsburg dynasties.

It was a monster demonstration at Munich, where 400,000 people were said to have been present, that Kurt Eisner proclaimed the Bavarian republic. On the night of November 8 the representatives of working men, soldiers and peasants gathered in the Assembly Building of Bavaria, organized the Workingmen's, Soldiers' and Peasants' Council and issued the following appeal to the population of Munich and Bavaria:

"The terrible calamity which came to the German people led to this movement of working people and soldiers of Munich. A tentative Council of Working men, Soldiers and Peasants was formed on the night of November 8 in the building of the Bavarian Assembly. A people's government which has the confidence of the masses shall be established very soon. A constituent national assembly for which all men and women may vote will be called as soon as possible. Bavaria wants to prepare Germany for the League of Nations. The democratic and Social republic of Bavaria has the moral power to get for Germany a peace which will save Germany from the worst catastrophe. The present change was necessary in order to make pkossible the development of conditions for the self-government of the people without too much destruction, and before the armies of the enemy should overflow our frontiers, or the demobilized German armies bring about chaotic conditions. The Workingmen's, Soldiers', and Peasants' Council will assure strict order. Personal security and the security of property will be completely guaranteed. The soldiers in the cantonments will govern themselves through soldier's councils and maintain strict discipline. All officials shall remain in their positions. Fundamental social and political reforms will be brought about without delay. The peasants will guarantee the provisioning of the cities with the necessary means of living."

The appeal finished with cheers for the Bavarian Republic and "Long live peace! Long live the productive work of all workers!"

With reference to the freedom of the press, the following statement issued by the people's government of Bavaria is of interest.

"According to our repeated statements issued with reference to freedom of the press, we can state again that the press is completely free, and no censorship should be exercised. The telephone and telegraph service will also function without any kind of censorship. The only official press organ of the government of the People's State of Bavaria is the South German Correspondence Bureau (Suddeutsche Korrespondens Bureau). The government of the People's State of Bavaria; Kurt Eisner."

Kurt Eisner, who presided at this meeting of the Council, was born in 1867. He became known first for his esthetic critical writings. From 1890 to 1895 he was contributing editor to the Frankfurter Zeitung. On account of one article written against the kaiser he was sentenced to nine months in prison. He left the radical press and become a contributor to Socialist papers. After the death of William Liebknecht, the father of Karl Liebknecht, he became editor-in-chief of the Vorwaerts, the central organ of the Socialist Party in Germany. As editor-in-chief of Vorwaerts, he inclined more to the tendencies of the so-called "Revolutionist" of the Socialist Party. On account of those—tendencies he was forced by the Socialist organization of Berlin, which was Marxian, to resign from the paper with five other editors. But in the field of international politics he was always very radical. Witness for that is his book, "Der Sultan des Weltkrieges," written twelve years ago, which gives a good picture of German diplomacy. The ethical, esthetic Eisner transformed himself in this book into a sharp critic of the Oriental policy of William the Second. Very interesting is his "Das Ende Des Reiches," which tells the story of the fall of the old German empire. From Berlin Kurt Eisner went to Nuremberg, where he became, in 1907, the editor-in-chief of the Frankische Tagepost. Again he became involved in a controversy and left this paper in 1910. A few years before the war he was active as a freelance writer for various southern Socialist papers.

The war has changed him, just as the war has changed many other German Socialists; but Kurt Eisner changed in the sense that he adopted a very strong anti-war attitude. This was the reason why he published very little during the war. But the less he wrote, the more active he was in the field of anti-war propaganda. He wrote a few pamphlets disclosing German people about the instigators of this war. Very soon he went even farther than the Independent Socialists in their anti-war propaganda, sympathizing more largely with the Liebknecht group. When the majority Socialist leader, Von Vollmar, resigned from the Reichstag on account of ill health, Eisner was put up as a candidate by the Independent Socialists.

The revolution brought Eisner to the foremost position of leadership in the Bavarian republic. The future will show his capacity for that constructive statesmanship so much needed in Germany now.

[illegible] Thank You

By ANISE, in Seattle Union Record.

I notice that
The GENTLEMEN'S Home Journal (Alias, the Saturday Evening Post)
Tells us
How VERY BADLY
The Bolsheviki are doing
In Russia
And quotes some figures
From the Department of Labor
In Washington.
It seems that
Carpenter's WAGES
ROSE in Moscow
From ONE dollar a day
To more than FOUR dollars,
Between the beginning of war
And now.
BUT
The COST OF LIVING
KEPT RISING FASTER.
And so,
On an AVERAGE,
In a long list of occupations,
WAGES went up
Five hundred and fifteen
Per cent;
While the cost of FOOD
Went up five hundred
And SIXTY-SIX per cent.
And THEREFORE The Gentlemen's Journal
Concludes
The GOVERNMENT of Russia
Is a FAILURE!
Of course, we know
That in OTHER countries
Like OURS
The cost of living
STAYS DOWN
In war-time
And if we should find
By ANY CHANCE
That FOOD had gone up MORE
Than the rise in WAGES
The Post would call
OUR GOVERNMENT a failure,
And then Clarence Reames
Would have to ARREST it
For SEDITION.
But it seems to me
If we had been at war
FOUR YEARS And LOST
Seven million men.
And had our RAILROADS
Worn out,
And been BETRAYED by A CZAR
And a WHOLE BUNCH
Of nobles.
And THEN
If we were in the midst
Of CIVIL WAR,
With all our BUSINESS INTERESTS
STRIKING
And STILL
The price of FOOD
Had gone up
ONLY A LITTLE MORE
Than the rise in WAGES,
I should consider
Our government was doing
PRETTY WELL,
Thank you!

The Woman's Cause

A DEPARTMENT FOR WOMEN WHO THINK.

The Mother of Humanity

By LAURA JIM REYNOLDS
(Written for The Ohio Socialist)
PART II.

Among the assemblage of women, awaiting the verdict of the Law Givers to their demand, "Vote for Women," there came among them an Unseen One, who acted as one accustomed to being in the Hall of the Law Givers. It was none other than the original bachelor-girl, the beautiful and charming Mistress Margaret Brent.

When Lord Baltimore was given the grant of land known as Maryland he sent his brother, Leonard Calvert, to govern the colony and act as his attorney.

A few years later Mistress Margaret arrived with brothers and sisters to the cheerful shores of the colony and built themselves elaborate homes and engaged in business. Margaret's skillful handling of her own and her brother's lands, her keen knowledge of the laws regarding estates, besides her activity in the colony's affairs made her famous.

History does not tell us whether Margaret was Leonard Calvert's kinswoman, friend or sweetheart. All we know is that he held her in high esteem and as he was dying he pointed to her and said, "Take all and pay all."

To the astonishment of the colonists she, who was never so happy as when directing her own and other's affairs, occupied the governor's manor and took charge of all his and Lord Baltimore's estates.

Some said this was irregular. Margaret, knowing that possession is nine-tenths of the law, persuaded the Provincial Court to give her the other tenth.

As Lord Baltimore's attorney and the hostess of the governor's mansion she was the most powerful person in the colony.

But the energetic Margaret was [illegible] satisfied. In those days, men fig[illegible] votes on property qualifications [illegible] conceived the brilliant idea [illegible] his lordship's attorney she [illegible]led to a vote and a seat in [illegible]ture. She further reasoned [illegible]utrix of Calvert's estate [illegible] have another vote. [illegible] startling in demand[illegible] for a man who did not know she was his attorney and for another who was dead, Mistress Margaret asked the General Assembly for a seat and two votes!

When those worthy gentlemen had recovered from the shock, and with the eloquence of her logic still ringing in their ears, they were about to acquiesce when Governor Green hurriedly brought them to order and ruled against women voting. Mistress Margaret fought hard for those two cherished votes, but Governor Green, fearing that if she were in the assembly, her forceful and pleasing personality would inveigle the susceptible assembly to declare her ruler of Maryland, remained obdurate.

She continued, when a crisis arose, to help the assemblymen and several times quieted the mutinous army.

When Lord Baltimore heard of Margaret, he wrote demanding to know what kind of an assembly they were to permit a woman to meddle with his affairs. Though they refused this first suffragist two votes, they promptly informed his lordship that they would not allow anyone to show disrespect to Mistress Margaret and to be thankful that he had so capable an agent.

If America's first business woman could ask for two votes based on property qualifications, surely women now may demand one vote based on human qualifications.

A few paces behind the stately Margaret, came the dainty figure of one whose rogish eyes disclosed their owner's identity as that of the pioneer champion of women and children, Abigail Smith Adams.

When Abigail Smith, of a family of noted divines, married the poor farmer's son, John Adams, she could not forsee in the days to come the active part her husband would take in the forming of a new republic, nor that she would some day plead for women and children.

In her father's home she had heard many learned discussions by the eminent people who came to Harvard college and her letters show that she studied the literature in her father's large library. Though better informed than the women of her day, she keenly felt the lack of education when teaching her children.

While her husband was attending the Continental Congress, in Philadelphia, she wrote to him that some action should be taken to open the schools to all girls. She argued that if the daughters were not well educated the new republic could not have the kind of mothers that are the strong bulwark of a nation. In her day of masculine rule, she cleverly wrote, "If we mean to have heroes, statesmen and philosophers we should have learned women." Mrs. Adams was firmly convinced that an ignorant motherhood would rear a stupid citizenry.

During her husband's absence she took care of the farm and taught their children. It was during the rounds of the manifold tasks of weaving, soap-making and dairying, that she pondered, what would be the fate of woman under the new laws. When the Declaration of Independence was being written, she wrote to her husband regarding this in the following manner:

"I long to hear you have declared an independency, and, by the way, in the new code of laws which I suppose it will be necessary for you to make, I desire you would remember the ladies and be more generous and favorable to them than your ancestors. Do not put such unlimited power into the hands of husbands. Remember, all men would be tyrants if they could. If particular care and attention are not paid to the ladies, we are determined to foment a rebellion and will not hold ourselves bound to obey any laws in which we have no voice nor representation."

The progressive views of Mrs. Adams were ahead of those of the average colonial woman, so she failed to gather a host large enough to, as she playfully put it, "foment a rebellion."

If the ideas of the men of this era continue to be those of their ancestors regarding citizenship of women, they need not be surprised if the modern women, a whole host of Abigals, shall seriously "foment a rebellion."

MANY BRITISH SOLDIERS REFUSE TO VOTE

Epigrams written by the British citizen soldiery in foreign service on ballots returned without casting votes for anyone, include:

"Demobilization first, election afterward. No voice, no vote. The candidates' views are unknown. Hurry up with demobilization; then we will vote. What parties do the candidates represent? What about getting the boys back? We have no information. With present conditions we prefer to abstain from voting. Demobilize and give us a chance to understand the game you're playing. No news of the candidates and their principles—therefore no vote."

SOCIALISM, THE VICTOR.

Editor Villard of the Nation, in an address to the City Club of Cleveland, said:

"Socialism has gained more by the war than anything else. We in the United States do not understand the strength of the Socialists in Europe. I am not a Socialist, I am simply telling you facts."

And now we hear that Ignace Jan Paderewski is scheduled for president of the Polish people. His main duty as mapped out is to stay the tide of Bolshevism. It might be well for this great piano player to keep hands off. He's very liable to get his fingers burned playing with the "red terror." And then he'd have to quit playing the keys.

Piqua Socialists Victorious

grill room at the Hotel Havlin. Before that he had worked in the Shinley Hotel at Pittsburg.

Fred P. Kohet, the other of these precious birds, a Bohemian Jew, short, dark and thin, with a decided foreign brogue, said he had lived at Akron and Cleveland before going to Piqua, and had been in secret service work at both places, 16 months at Akron, a year and a half at Cleveland. Before that he had lived in New York City 24 years as a music teacher, at 1536 Second Ave.

Kohet had joined the Socialist Local at Akron. He transferred to the Piqua Local about two weeks after arriving there. He introduced Barnes and Barnes was admitted to membership. They at once became active in Socialist work.

The Spies Were the Only Witnesses.

Their testimony implicated Mayor Hamilton as having remarked to them in conversation, while walking home from the local, the seditious statements charged against him. Nobody else was around.

In the same way they got seditious utterances out of each of the others, and in each instance there happened to be nobody else around, except in the case of Councilman Neff, who was accused of violating the espionage act in a short speech at Socialist headquarters.

SOCIALIST MAYOR HAMILTON

The cross-examination by Attorney Sharts brought out the "nigger in the woodpile" as follows:

(In the Wagner case):

Cross-Examination of Barnes

Q. Were you and Kohet receiving your money from the same source?

A. As to that, I don't know anything where Mr. Kohet received his money.

Q. Who signed your checks?

A. It was signed by W. K. Leonard.

Q. Mr. Leonard?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew he was the member of the City Council who was fighting the Socialist administration, didn't you?

A. I have had that remarked to me.

Q. You knew that?

A. I had it remarked to me!

Q. You had that knowledge?

A. From what I heard—hearsay.

Q. Did you ever investigate Mr. Leonard?

A. Never had any occasion to investigate Mr. Leonard.

Q. Did you go after anybody in the city of Piqua except the city officials and members of the local?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You couldn't find anything wrong with any of them?

A. You will probably hear about it later on.

Q. After election?

A. Possibly so, yes."

Again, at another stage of the cross-examination:

Q. Was Mr. Leonard with you?

A. Mr. —Who?

Q. Mr. Leonard.

A. Never in the man's company on the street.

Q. Ever meet him at any place?

A. Seen him—knew him to see him on the street.

Q. Is that the only time you have ever encountered Mr. Leonard?

A. To the best of my knowledge, yes.

Q. You have no recollection of ever meeting and talking with Mr. Leonard?

A. I believe I have stopped him in the postoffice one evening and said, "How to do."

Q. And that was all? You knew each other by sight?

A. We knew each other by sight.

Q. Had you met up at Columbus?

A. No; never seen him at Columbus.

Q. How did you know him by sight?

A. Through my instructions from Columbus.

Objected to by counsel for government.

The Commissioner: Just go on; drift along.

By Mr. Sharts:

Q. You had been told from Columbus that Mr. Leonard was the one that you were to get in contact with?

A. Yes; Mr. Pfeiffer instructed me—Mr. Smith—the District Attorney's office in general."

In the cross-examination of Kohet, in the Hamilton case, the following occurred:

Spied at Akron and Cleveland.

Q. You say that after you came to Piqua you joined the local?

A. No, I was a member of the party before.

Q. Where did you join?

A. In Akron, Ohio.

Q. For the same purpose as at Piqua?

A. Oh, no: not for the same purpose. Well, it was for the same purpose; of course, I was led to believe I could gain more information in this way.

Q. About the people you were looking up?

A. Yes.

Q. And when you came to Piqua, you produced your card?

A. Not right away.

Q. What?

A. Not immediately.

Q. When you went to join the Piqua local you produced your card?

A. No, I showed my card to Mayor Hamilton and he invited me to come to the local.

Q. And you attended the local then as a bona fide Socialist?

A. Yes.

Q. And you are still a member of the party?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you believe in the principles of the party?

A. Not after what I have seen. I believed at Akron.

Q. You did believe in Akron?

A. Oh, yes. But the Akron Socialists were not as disloyal as the Piqua Socialists.

Q. Whom did you meet in Akron?

A. Mr. Holloway and Mrs. Margaret Prevey. They are all good Socialists, but not disloyal.

Q. I believe Margaret Prevey has spoken at Piqua too, hasn't she?

A. That I don't know.

Q. You don't know about that?

A. No.

Q. You didn't show yourself to her when she was there?

A. I wasn't in Piqua when she was there.

Q. Now, Mr. Kohet, you were a member of the Piqua local for about four or five weeks, weren't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before this occurred?

A. Yes.

Q. And in joining the local you had in mind particularly observing the Socialist officials, didn't you?

A. Oh, no; oh, no.

Q. You did not?

A. Oh, no.

Q. What was your object in joining the local?

A. Looking into the situation in general.

Q. Did you join everything? Did you join the Chamber of Commerce up there?

A. No; but if I found something in the Chamber of Commerce, I would report it the same as anything else.

Q. You found something about the local before you joined it?

A. Oh, no.

Q. What caused you to come to the local and join it?

A. Just investigating conditions there.

Q. Yes, but had something occurred that caused you to believe that there was disloyalty in the local?

A. Oh, no; I didn't know anything then.

Q. Why didn't you go and join the Chamber of Commerce for the same reason?

A. I had no reasons to join the chamber.

Q. You had your mind set on getting the Socialists, hadn't you?

A. Oh, no; not at all.

Q. You had come to the city of Piqua for that purpose, hadn't you?

A. Oh, no; oh, no.

Q. What political organization did you belong to before you joined the Socialist Party?

A. The Republican.

Q. You are sure you were not a democrat?

A. No.

Q. And so two weeks after you got to Piqua you joined this local?

A. Yes.

Q. Entirely in pursuit of information in general?

A. Yes.

Q. But you didn't go near the Chamber of Commerce. Did you ever meet Councilman Leonard?

A. Councilman Leonard. Yes.

Q. Have a conversation with him?

A. Yes.

Q. On what occasion?

A. Only when he gave me the money.

After some further examination along the same lines:

Q. Didn't you meet Mr. Leonard before you joined the local?

A. No, oh, no.

Q. Didn't you get your money before you joined the local?

A. No, I was two weeks in Piqua before I got my first money.

Q. Well, two weeks was the time you gave as to joining the local. Immediately after you got your money did you join the local or immediately before?

A. I always had money with me.

Q. Which did you do first?

A. I believe I joined the local first.

Q. On what day?

A. I can't tell you.

O. On what day did you get your money?

A. On Saturday.

The Commissioner: I don't propose to tolerate this one minute more.

Mr. Sharts: We have some rights. We have found the political motive. If your honor wants to stop me here now, well and good."

Night Prowler Leaves Trade Mark.

An interesting incident of these cases occurred after the Socialists had been released on bonds furnished by Dayton comrades and sympathizers and had returned to Piqua. Theatening messages were sent to the mayor that he and the others had better stay away from town, as the "patriots" would not tolerate their presence. As a precautionary measure a number of Socialists slept that night at the mayor's home. During the evening Mrs. Hamilton said she heard a stealthy noise outside in the rear yard. The Socialists opened the door and there was a scurrying as some night prowler scrambled over the back fence. The next morning there was a watch with a peculiar watch-charm attached hanging on the fence, caught on a nail. The watch-charm was recognized as having adorned the abdomen of one of the personages prominent in the cases. It was turned over to Attorney Sharts, and can be obtained by the owner if he will call and claim it, at Room 7, Lowe Building, Dayton, Ohio.

The freeing of the Piqua Socialist administration and members of the Piqua local of the Socialist Party marks a signal victory for the workers in general. The attempt to oust Mayor Hamilton and his co-workers has fallen flat. The tide has turned in Piqua and the 1919 municipal elections will return the Socialists to power, will, in fact, oust the remnant of capitalist class hangers-on [illegible] still adorns some of the councilmanic chairs and other minor offices. [illegible] would-be ousters will be dumped [illegible] righteous and indignant electorate[illegible]

(Translated by Charles H. Kerr)

Arise, ye prisoners of starvation!
Arise, ye wretched of the earth,
For justice thunders condemnation,
A better world's in birth.
No more tradition's chains shall bind us,
Arise, ye slaves; no more in thrall!
The earth shall rise on new foundations,
We have been naught, we shall be all.

REFRAIN.

'Tis the final conflict,
Let each stand in his place,
The Industrial Union
Shall be the human race.

We want no condescending saviors,
To rule us from a judgement hall;
We workers ask not for their favors;
Let us consult for all.
To make the thief disgorge his booty
To free the spirit from its cell,
We must ourselves decide our duty,
We must decide and do it well.

The law oppresses us and tricks us,
Wage systems drain our blood;
The rich are free from obligations,
The laws the poor delude.
Too long we've languished in subjection,
Equality has other laws;
"No rights," says she, "without their duties,
No claims on equals without cause."

Behind them seated in their glory,
The kings of mine and rail and soil!
What have you read in all their story,
But how they plundered toil?
Fruits of the workers' toil are buried
In the strong coffers of a few;
In working for their restitution
The men will only ask their due.

Toilers from shops and fields united,
The union we of all who work;
The earth belongs to us, the workers,
No room here for the shirk.
How many on our flesh have fattened!
But if the noisome birds of prey
Shall vanish from the sky some morning,
The blessed sunlight still will stay.

The Working Class and its Press

Thousands of working men unfamiliar with the workers' press, are with this issue, reading this paper for the first time. Every worker's life, whether he realizes it or not, is bound up in a common cause with the great working class. The interests of his class are his interests. Its failings and failures are his concern, its successes and victories are his happiness and well being. He is inseparable from his class. They are one. Bound to a common cause by the simple fact of the same means of earning a livelihood—his power to labor, the advancement of labor's cause becomes his cause.

The advance of labor as a class means the advancement of the individual worker, in fact, of the entire race. The advance of the workers' cause to victory is in great part dependent upon the establishment of a strong and well supported workers' press. Without a press to voice the hopes, plans and ambitions of labor, to reveal the truth of its economic conditions the workers' advance can be but a slow and heartbreaking one at best.

No labor movement can hope to succeed until it first establishes a strong and truthful daily and weekly press. The workers' press is the Royal Road to Power. There is no other. Slavery's chains shall bind us until we ourselves strike them from our minds through intelligent thinking and discussion. We must educate the workers to consciousness of their class interests before we can hope to build a workers organization with the knowledge and power to act in harmony with the dictates of its own interests.

The workers are as strong as their press. Its size and strength is a fitting gauge with which to measure the intelligence and militancy of the workers. We appeal to every reader of this Victory Edition of the Ohio Socialist to support with their efforts and finances the revolutionary press of the workers.

And here we wish to say a word about the Ohio Socialist. Being the official organ of the Socialist Party of Ohio it is not owned by private individuals nor run for profit. Every dollar that comes to the paper goes to make it a better one. Its policy is not determined by wishy-washy individuals whose sails are set with each varying political or economic breeze. Its purpose and reason for publication is to enlighten the workers and to organize them into a class conscious body for the purpose of making the world safe for the working class through the establishment of industrial democracy. That's the foundation upon which we stand and upon which we intend to continue to stand until the last worker has passed through the gates of victory into the land of United Labor.

Nothing shall swerve us from this determination to stand by the hosts of labor through all that the future holds, and that we may hasten the day of victory, we ask that every reader give us his support. We need you and you need us. If you are not a subscriber, become one. If you are already a reader get another to subscribe. Distribute the Ohio Socialist among your shopmates and associates. Add the strength of your efforts and dollars to the upbuilding of a press owned and controlled by the workers. Use the subscription blank below.

Ohio State Executive Committee Meets in Quarterly Session

DEMANDS REPEAL OF ESPIONAGE LAW, AMNESTY FOR POLITICAL PRISONERS, WITHDRAWAL OF AMERICAN TROOPS FROM RUSSIA AND PARDON FOR MOONEY IN STRONG RESOLUTIONS

Ringing resolutions, which are to be placed before the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party and the Mooney National Defense conference at Chicago for adoption, and which will be sent to the administration at Washington, were passed by the State Executive Committee of the Socialist Party of Ohio at its quarterly meeting, held December 28 and 29 at the headquarters of Local Cuyahoga County.

The four resolutions passed places the Socialist Party of Ohio as officially opposed to further intervention in Russia and demand the immediate withdrawal of U. S. troops from Siberia. Demand amnesty for all political prisoners. Demand freedom for Mooney and demand the restoration of the rights of free speech, free press and free assemblage. The resolutions follow:

RESOLUTIONS.

RESOLVED—By the State Executive Committee of the Socialist Party of Ohio, in session, Dec. 29, 1918:

FIRST: That the foundation of all liberty is in the freedom of speech, freedom of the press and freedom of assemblage; that to safeguard the liberty of the people, so hardly won against a king and a privileged class, our fathers placed the first amendment in the constitution of the United States so that the people of this government would not need to fear uttering their honest convictions freely; that the first open encroachment by tyranny and autocracy, ruling without the people's consent and by force and fear, is denoted by the effort to shackle the tongue of criticism; that we view the espionage act and all governmental activities thereunder as the annullment of the constitution, and an intolerable insult and injury to the people by their public servants. Our fathers rose in fury when the king touched their pockets. What shall we do when our public servants place their gag upon our lips? We demand the immediate repeal of this infamous statute.

SECOND: That the filling of the jails and prisons of the land with thousands of political prisoners, for the crime of expressing their thought upon public affairs which concern all the people—because their thought has not coincided with that of the political majority at Washington—is a betrayal of the inmost spirit of American institutions, a reverting to the dark ages, a renewal of the Spanish inquisition, a renunciation of democracy; that we demand the immediate release of all such prisoners and the quashing of all further criminal process.

THIRD: That armed intervention was begun in Russia upon the excuse that it was necessary to re-establish an eastern front in the war against the German Imperial Government; that it was begun with the express promise there would be no interference with internal affairs of the Russian people or their right of self-determination; that despite the fact that the German Imperial government has vanished and that war has been ended for many weeks, the armed intervention of the allies and the United States continues in Russia, and active aid and encouragement is being given to the disgruntled aristocracy and bourgeoisie who have fled from Russia rather than obey the Socialist Soviet government's order to go to work and who are constantly organizing fillibustering expeditions and trying to kindle counter-revolutions; that we recognize in the Bolshevist administration of Russia an expression of the political will of the overwhelming majority of the United States; and we demand its immediate recognition, the withdrawal of armed forces from Russian territory and the stopping of the present lending of aid and encouragement to the Russian traitors and conspirators who plot murder, assassination and other outlawry on our shores and in the so-called Russian embassy.

FOURTH: That we express our profound indignation at the spectacle presented by the Mooney case on the Pacific coast, where a political prostitute of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, elected district attorney for the purpose of annulling the indictments against the United Railway officials, which had been procured by such men as Francis J. Heney, has been able by use of perjured testimony to convict labor leaders, such as Mooney and Billings; and even after the perjuries have been exposed, even after the district attorney's own corrupt connections have been exposed by the Densmore report and even after the stink of this corrupt misuse of the machinery of justice has pervaded the whole world and protests and appeals have come from all corners of the earth, the utmost that could be obtained was a commutation of Mooney's sentence from death to life imprisonment; therefore we demand for Tom Mooney either a new trial or his immediate pardon; and for District Attorney Fickert his immediate dismissal from office and his indictment.

Official Minutes of the Meeting.

Morning session of Dec. 28. Present, Lotta Burke, Tom Clifford, Jos W. Sharts, Wm. Patterson and J. P Baker.

Wm. Patterson elected chairman.

Tom Clifford elected State Chairman of the party.

Reading of the minutes of the meeting dispensed with.

By agreement the report of the State Secretary was laid over for the afternoon meeting.

Charters for a Hungarian local at Rhodesdale and for a South Slavic local at Canton were granted. The following applicants were admitted as members-at-large; J. M. Swinehart, Floyd E. Rusk, H. H. Fishbaum, Hyacinth Blawat, K. Tamkus.

Communications: From the director of the Socialist Party Defense Fund requesting further donations and a division of funds more favorable to the National Office.

Motion carried that all locals in the state be requested to take collections at their meetings for the defense fund and that 60 per cent of such collections be sent the National Office and 40 per cent retained by the State office.

Motion carried that a certificate be issued, same to be sold at $1 each that these certificates be sold to all party members and the proceeds used to sustain families of imprisoned comrades, provide comforts for prisoners, agitate for amnesty for political prisoners and for the re-establishment of free speech, free press and free assemblage.

From Local Hamilton, communication in form of resolution.

Motion carried that resolution be referred to a sub-committee composed of Jos. W. Sharts and Tom Clifford for revision and that this committee draft resolutions covering the stand of the party upon free speech, press and assemblage, amnesty for political prisoners, withdrawal of U. S. troops from Russia and freedom for Mooney.

From Kentucky, requesting the State Office of Ohio to take charge of dues stamp sales and organization work in that state.

Motion carried that definite action be postponed until after the meeting of the National Executive Committee.

From the State Secretary of Virginia, stating his willingness to use bulletin and informing the Ohio State Office that question is now before the Virginia state committee. Filed awaiting action of Virginia state committee.

Motion carried to adjourn until 1:30 p. m.

RAILROAD EMPLOYES FOR RETENTION OF RAILROADS BY THE GOVERNMENT

The Pennsylvania railroad employes at Mt. Vernon are circulating the following petition:

"We, the undersigned employes of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company [illegible] do hereby petition [illegible] trict and the senators of Ohio to put forth their greatest effort and influence of their office for the governmental or collective ownership and democratic control of all railroads, express and subsidiary companies."

Attempt Coercion in Socialists' Trial

Chicago.—Coercion and attempted bribery of witnesses by the government in the prosecution of Socialist officials was indicated when Richard O. Handwerk, former organizer for the Twenty-Seventh Ward Branch, Socialist Party, testified Thursday afternoon that Milroy, one of the "investigators" employed by Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Joseph B. Fleming, had offered to "fix up" Handwerks debts if he would swear to whatever Milroy and Fleming told him.

This bombshell dropped into the camp of the federal prosecution at a few minutes before six Thursday afternoon. Fleming tried wildly to break down Handwerk's testimony but only brought fresh disaster upon his own head. He insisted on trying to tell what Mr. Clyne had said to Handwerk.

"Perhaps you had better put Mr. Clyne on the stand," suggested Stedman mildly.

"Mr. Clyne will take the stand and I will take the stand," replied Fleming heatedly.

And then Attorney William A. Cunnea stood up, with a quizzical grin. "Might I suggest," he offered, with Irish suavity, "that all three of you take the stand, and call in counsel from somewhere to conduct the case?"

It was the hardest blow Fleming has yet sustained. Adjournment came in a few moments later as a welcome relief.

Arnold Schiller Is Discredited.

Earlier in the day a disastrous raid on the government's case had been led by William Bross Lloyd, who testified that Arnold Schiller, the chief witness for the government, had told him in his own office, "I'll get Kruse. A fellow has to save his own hide, and I'll get Kruse to save mine. He left a lot of my letters lying around on his desk, and the government's got it on me several ways." Three other witnesses, one of them a girl, testified that Schiller on several occasions loudly proclaimed that he would "do anything to send Kruse to jail," that Kruse was a "dirty dog," and that he had the opportunity to send Kruse to jail and he would do it to get even.

Bottom Drops Out of Case.

On this, the fifteenth day of the trial, it looks as though the bottom had dropped out of the government's case. Clarence Darrow testified that as a representative for the Socialist Party he had gone all the way up to the president and had asked him to give some indication as to where the line of free speech should be drawn, and that the president said: "I do not know where the line should be drawn."

Emanuel Deutsch repeated his testimony in regard to the attempt of the government persecutors to chase him out of town because he refused to testify as they wanted him to do, in disregard of the facts in the case.

District Attorney Clyne seems to have retired from active participation leaving the whole weight of the case on the shoulders of Fleming, who acts like a school girl, blushing to the roots of his hair when a reference is made to him.

Darrow was asked by Stedman if he believed that Socialists should have the right to express their views about the war. Darrow said he certainly was strong for that idea.

His testimony related chiefly to the formation of a committee of prominent liberals who journeyed to Washington in the summer of 1917 to inquire about the rights of the press after many Socialist and radical publications had been barred from the mails by Postmaster General Burleson. This phase of the case was reported in more or less detail a few days ago through the testimony of Frank P. Walsh and Louis Engdahl, defendant in the trial with Victor L. Berger, William F. Kruse, Irwin St. John Tucker and Adolph Germer.

The court room was crowded today. Scores of persons were turned away by deputy marshals. The appearance of Darrow on the witness stand created a mild sensation.

The battle scarred barrister spoke very slowly, and clasped and unclasped his hands as he spoke. Once, when handed a copy of the American Socialist by Fleming, he arose from his chair and stood under Judge Landis' student lamp reading from the paper.

"I disagreed with the opinions of most of those persons who were agitated because their papers had been barred from the mails," said Darrow, "but in spite of my personal disagreement with them I felt that America was big and strong enough to abide by the constitutional guarantee of free speech and free press."

Lloyd is a Star Witness.

William Bross Lloyd, son of the late Henry Demarest Lloyd, author of "Wealth and Commonwealth," took the stand after Darrow's testimony. Lloyd was Socialist candidate for United States senator at the fall election. He wore a Bolsheviki button on the side toward the jury as he took the stand.

His testimony concerned chiefly in rebutting the testimony of Arnold Schiller, former Yipsel, and office boy at the National Office. Lloyd gave his occupation as "lawyer and trustee," and said that he and his three brothers owned 25 per cent. of the stock of the Chicago Tribune, a corporation which is said to earn a million and a half dollars a year.

Press Distorts News of Trial of Five Socialists at Chicago

By DAVID KARSHNER.

There is absolutely no such thing as a free and untrammeled press in America at the present time.

Whatever there was of it prior to and during the war has disappeared since the signing of the armistice on November 11 last. American newspapers now are openly and brazenly hostile to the slightest hint and suggestion of any radical tendencies in the United States.

I do not claim to have made any discovery in this connection, except in so far as the attitude of the American press is reflected by the manner and the treatment given the Socialist party officials' trial before Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis.

Press Prejudiced at Socialists.

The six daily papers in Chicago are printing long stories daily about this trial, and to say that every line contained in these stories is colored in a manner calculated to prejudice the reader against the five defendants in particular, and Socialism in general, is to make but a mild observation.

The testimony offered by prosecution witnesses is played up and distorted and twisted beyond all proportion to its actual significance to the case itself.

Statements such as those of Arnold Schiller, the young soldier witness and former Yipsel, that the Y. P. S. L. seriously considered building an underground railroad into Mexico for the benefit of draft evaders and conscientious objectors have been set forth by the Chicago papers as gospel truths.

Alleged "German Code" Played Up.

The constitution of the prosecution that a so-called "German secret code" was used by William F. Kruse, secretary of the Y. P. S. L. and other Yipsels in connection with the underground railroad to Mexico, is accepted by the press as a solemn fact. The defendants, themselves, are pictured as wild men from Borneo, deep in crime, and guilty of every effense in the criminal calendar.

The old American tradition, that defendants are supposed to be innocent until proven guilty "beyond all reasonable doubt," has been completely swept off the boards.

A Socialist or any radical going on trial these days is supposed to be guilty by the press and a gullible public until proven innocent. A man accused of murder or burglary has more chance today of "a fair and impartial trial," as far as the press is concerned than a Socialist, accused of having an idea and conveying it to somebody else. The latter is the great and heinous crime, according to the press.

Death Tale Invented.

After exhausting every possible means to prejudice the public against the Socialists on trial here, the malicious manikins who work for a pauper's pay from a prostituted press, deliberately invented the fiction that Judge Landis, District Attorney Clyne [illegible] assistant, John F. Fleming, had received death treats "from Socialist sympathizers."

This malicious fiction was carried by all the evening newspapers and the morning papers. However, the stuff was too raw for Judge Landis. He called up the local reporters and asked each separately where he got his "information."

They all hung their heads like poodle dogs chastised by their masters. The judge then proceeded to bawl the reporters out, individually and collectively, but the fiction was not retracted, except in one paper, which merely stated that Judge Landis had said he did not receive a letter threatening him with death.

Artist Sees "Red."

Young woman artist employed by Arthur Brisbane's paper, Herold-Examiner, came to draw sketches of Congressman-elect Victor L. Berger. She asked me if I would point out the "celebrities" in the court room. Then she espied a woman wearing red headgear.

"Do you suppose all these red hats and red ties are a deliberate attempt of the Socialists to show their colors?" she asked me.

Of course, I smiled. I looked about the rows of spectators. There was one consecutive red hat worn by a young girl, a garnet cape thrown about the shoulders of another, and not a red tie in sight. Yet, the paper played up the "fact" that red was the predominant color in the court room.

There is absolutely no other way by which this manufactured prejudice can be met, except by the workers themselves throwing their full weight behind the few papers that actually print the truth, or that part of the truth that Burleson will allow to be printed, and which truly represents the interests of the workers.

Press Bitter at Socialists.

The animus of the press against the Socialists in this trial is even bitterer than it was toward the I. W. W. case here last summer. Their practice and policy in the latter trial was to ignore it. The combined forces of reaction see in the Socialist Party of America, a formidable foe, having a constructive program capable of immediate usage, and they are fearful lest a larger number of people turn to Socialism as a means of escape from the present social, political and industrial quagmires.

The Socialists in this trial contend the issue is over a free press. They say they have a right, written in the constitution, to disagree with actions of the government. The prosecution contends the Espionage law modified, if it did not entirely set aside, that right during war time.

But Socialists contend that back of this there are deeper inferences to be drawn from this trial. They say it is the clash of two [illegible]

Over-Flow Meetings Greet Debs in Three Cities

SPEAKER SCORES INTERVENTION IN RUSSIA & CALLS UPON WORKERS TO SHOW SOLID FRONT IN DEMANDING WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS

Eugene V. Debs said at Cleveland last Sunday that the time used to be when the smallest halls were too large for Socialist meetings but that now the largest halls were too small. And, well, the Debs meetings of Jan. 3, 4 and 5 bear out this fact.

Wm. H. Fox, secretary of the Socialist Party of Ashtabula reports that the Debs' meeting held in Finnish Socialist hall on Jan. 4, was the largest meeting of its kind ever held in Ashtabula. Every piece of literature on hand was sold, the demand far exceeding the supply.

At Youngstown the Socialists offered $250 cash for the largest hall in town. They met with refusal. The largest hall that could be secured was obtained and hundreds of people had to be turned away. Frank R. Field, Youngstown Socialist, says of this meeting:

"Diamond hall was crowded to its capacity. The people, instead of taking their seats, stood up, tossing the chairs to one side so that more people could get into the hall to hear the "tiger" of the revolution, Eugene V. Debs. A hall that normally holds 400 seats packed, was in this way crowded with an enthusiastic throng of 1,000—and all this in a city that has prohibited the display of the red flag!

"Debs was at his best, vitrolic and tense. With thunderbolts of condemnation he lashed the capitalist class. No velvet incased hands were his as he "skated on the edge" of his parole, as he termed it, tearing the cloak of hypocrisy from the profiteers. Not his to recant in the face of a prison sentence.

"Methings, comrades, more of us should be threatened with prison sentences if that is what it takes to make us as fearless as Debs.

"At the conclusion of the speech Debs was presented with a large bouquet of red roses, to which he responded as only Debs can, and then we all went home feeling sure that "Socialism was almost ours, to reach out and grasp."

Cleveland Holds Two Meetings.

People streamed into Moose hall last Sunday until the police had to interfere in behalf of safety in case of fire. Every available seat was occupied and several hundred stood at the rear of the hall, long before the meeting was opened. And then fully 500 tardy, but hopeful, men and women, crowded the sidewalk at the hall door, begging for admission, but the police were obdurate. Eventually Walter Bronstrup, who had charge of the meeting for the Cleveland Socialists, ordered the headquarters of the Socialists, at 1222 Prospect Ave., thrown open and announced that an overflow meeting would be held there, addressed by both Charles Baker and Debs as soon as they finished speaking in Moose hall.

Charles Baker, who spoke first, was given an ovation by both audiences. This was his first appearance before Cleveland Socialists since his release from the Canton workhouse. He said in part that if any one thought that jail sentences for Socialists made them cowards, subdued their ardor and enthusiasm, then they who so thought still had much to learn. The exact opposite was the case. Debs bore out this statement by Baker later when he said that the jails and prisons are the Socialists' college, that he went to jail blind and came forth with his eyes wide open.

Baker made a plea for constant activity on the part of all workers to secure amnesty for all political prisoners, whether they be Socialists, Christian pacifists, anarchists or Inddstrial Workers. "The sun will not shine for me, flowers will not bloom nor birds sing until every prison door opens to freedom for every man and woman incarcerated because of his or her conscientious beliefs," he said.

Debs As Young As Ever.

It was not a Debs of 63 that walked upon the stage amid shouts and cheers. His light springy step, and his every gesture and attitude as well as his forcefulness in speech, made him, last Sunday appear the youngest of all. He secured the sympathy of the audience from the very beginning. It was four or five minutes before he could utter a word, so prolonged was the enthusiasm of those gathered to hear him.

Mention of the Russian Socialist Soviet republic elicited the most applause on the part of his hearers. The building shook with the stamping of feet, hand clapps and cheers when he said, "Some people are against the Bolsheviki. They don't know what it is. That's the reason they are against it. Every worker who is against the Bolsheviki, stands in his own light, spits in his own face. There are other people against the Bolsheviki. And if they were for the Bolsheviki I would be against them. It is because they are against them that I am for them. Every drop of blood in my veins is Bolshevik."

"There is not a plutocrat in America who is not for 'democracy,' the kind that keeps him a plute and you a slave. There is not a plutocrat in America who is not against the kind of demdcracy which abolishes slavery and makes all men free. That's the Russian kind."

He referred to his boyhood days, saying that "at 14 I had to go to work. I had no chance for an education. It seems thoough, that in later years the capitalist class took pity on me. It sent me to jail. There I received my education. The jail is the Socialists' college . I went in blind and came out with my eyes open."

Debs told his audience that he had received a letter from one of the stenographers, employed by the government to take his speeches. In this letter the writer stated that although he took the speech, the speech had now "taken him." "And so, even those who are employed to help jail us are converted by our message," said Debs.

"I feel very sorry for Rockefeller. We Socialists hate no one, not even those who persecute and prosecute us. But I do feel sorry for Rockefeller. He lives in a poor house. He has a life sentence. And there are no pardoning powers either. He is all alone, a lost soul. A billion dollars and not a comrade!"

Literature and subscription cards were sold at the meeting, nearly a thousand ten-cent pamphlets being disposed of. A large collection was taken to defray the expenses of making public the details of the conviction and unjust imprisonment of A. L. Hitchcock, former Socialist member of the Cleveland school board. Resolutions were adopted by the audience demanding amnesty for all political prisoners with special reference to the Hitchcock case.

DEBS AVAILABLE FOR MEETINGS.

Owing to the postponement of the hearing of his case by the U. S. Supreme Court until January 27th, Debs will be available for a few more speaking engagements between now and that date. Debs is allowed to speak only within jurisdiction of the Cleveland Federal Court. Locals in Ashland, Ashtabula, Carroll, Columbiana, Crawford, Cuyahoga, Geauga, Holmes, Lake, Lorain, Mahoning, Medina, Portage, Richland, Summit, Stark, Tuscarawas, Trumbull, Wayne, Allen, Auglaize, Defiance, Erie, Fulton, Hancock, Hardin, Henry, Huron, Lucas, Marion, Mercer, Ottawa, Paulding, Putnam, Sandusky, Seneca, Van Wert, Williams, Wood and Wyandot counties are asked to wire the state office of the Socialist Party AT ONCE if they desire to secure Eugene V. Debs for a meeting.

DEMAND WITHDRAWAL FROM RUSSIA.

Local Bay City, Michigan, has passed the following resolutions demanding the withdrawal of troops from Russia. The resolutions have been circulated by that local for signatures and the signed petitions will be presented to the Mooney Defense conference, which is to meet in Chicago, Jan. 14.

Resolved, That we, the undersigned workers of America, demand that the Mooney Defense conference go on record as demanding the withdrawal of American and allied troops from Russia, and make it clear that the working class of America will use every means in its power to enforce such withdrawal.

INTERNATIONAL DELEGATES ELECTED.

The National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party, by preferential voting, has elected Algernon Lee, John Work and James Oneal as delegates to the International Socialist Conference to be held at Luzerne, Switzerland. The vote stood as follows:

J. Mahlon Barnes	55
Bernard Berlyn	77
Algernon Lee	36
James H. Maurer	41
Scott Nearing	54
James Oneal	42
C. E. Ruthenberg	60
Seymour Stedman	43
John M. Work	42

The three receiving the lowest vote were elected. James Maurer telegraphed the National Office that he would be unable to serve. This settled the tie vote between Work and Oneal and elected both together with Lee.

Those who are expecting the stand-pat congressmen to help the soldiers and common people in the coming reconstruction, might also watch the [illegible]

CANTON SOCIALIST PARTY STIRS UP PROFITEERS

First page, first column space was accorded the Socialist Party of Canton in the Canton capitalist dailies last week. Screaming headlines that "Socialists Demand U. S. Prisoners be Freed" and "Espionage Act Denounced," decorated the front page of the Canton Daily News and through its columns we are informed that "the United States Department of Justice will give consideration to the manifesto made public Saturday night by Canton Socialists."

If the Department of Justice were to stand attention every time a daily paper screamed, it would have been worked to death long ago. As matters stand, the Canton Socialists feel that they still have the right, under that kind of democracy for which we are making the world safe, to pass resolutions demanding freedom for political prisoners and to ask that the espionage law be rescinded, now that the war is over.

Britain to Inform Wilson.

London.—The British government will lay before President Wilson all information it has gathered respecting the Russian situation, which is the cause of considerable [illegible], in some circles here.

Dispatches from Archangel point out that the Bolshevik forces there are well supplied and that they include good fighting material.

Any serious reverse to the allies in northern Russia, who have an enormous front to guard, would result, it is said, in the territory being overrun by the Bolsheviki and probably the massacre of those Russians, who have been friendly to the allies.

It has been suggested that more seasoned troops should be sent to Russia. Sections of public opinion here and in France, however, are opposed to entering into a further [illegible]

Russia and the American Press

Russia has always been a land of mystery, a terra incognita, to us. During the reign of the czars our knowledge of that country was limited to stories of bureaucratic corruption, brutal oppression and Jewish massacres. Occasionally Stephen Grah[illegible] of British fame, treated us to a [illegible]logy of the autocratic regime whi[illegible] he maintained, was best calculated to keep in proper place the m[illegible] "millions of ignorant and vodka drinking peasants who worshiped their "Little Father," the God-appointed head of state and church

When the Russian Revolution broke out, and the selfsame peasants, garbed in soldiers' and sailors' uniforms, raised a heavy hand against their "beloved" czar and with one mighty stroke swept out all vestige of his malevolent rule, we were told tales of anarchy and chaos, of the mistreatment of "innocent" army officers in the prisons of Kronstadt, of the burning of manor houses by infuriated peasants, and were constantly impressed with the belief that the Russian people were not ripe for self-government. The Bolshevik propaganda among the army, which met with great success because of the blunders of allied diplomacy, the weakness of the provisional government, the general disorganization in the country, and the war-weariness of the masses (who are not interested in the acquisition of the Dardanelles or the freedo[illegible] of the seas), was conveniently a[illegible] thoughtlessly branded as German; and this prevented any true understanding of the whole movement. The very word "Bolshevik" sounded mysterious and threatening, but no one saw fit to explain its meaning. And when these same Bolsheviks came into power, and in spite of the frequent prophesies about their imminent downfall continued in power—much to the disappointment and chagrin of the false prophets—our newspapers became a sort of clearing-house for abuse, calumny, falsehood and other attributes of impotent rage, lavishl[illegible] heaped upon them by their consciou[illegible] and unconscious enemies.

For, really, what do we know ab[illegible] present-day Russia, her form of g[illegible]ernment, and the purposes of her ru[illegible]ers? Barring advance informatio[illegible] about massacres of the bourgeoisie, which somehow do not come off, and repeated predictions that millions are going to die for lack of food and fuel, which prediction the millions stubbornly refuse to bear out, what news do we get from that country? Practically none. Our correspondents in Russia, with one or two exceptions, do not speak the language of the people, either in the literal or in the figurative sense, do not understand their psychology, do not know their history and their heroic struggle for freedom. They come there with a mental equipment sufficient perhaps for a breezy account of a divorce trial or an enthusiastic report about a smashing home-run, but utterly and sadly inadequate for the comprehension of so tremendous an upheaval. Unable to grasp the significance of the great social phenomenon, they dwell of necessity upon the minor details, the discordant and petty elements, which they pick up on the fringes of the revolution. Thus it happens that a murder or a plain hold-up is magnified to the proportions of anarchy and terror, and the tearful recital of a dispossessed aristocrat is taken as a proof of the country's lawless state. To the total lack of intelligent understanding on the part of some is added the prejudice and bigotry of others who strenuously oppose any and all radical innovations which tend to undermine the citadel of conservatism. These are constitutionally unable to see any good in the Russian Revolution which does not work out in accord with the editorial views of their respective papers. Some of them hav[illegible] spent years in Russia, hobnobbin[illegible] with the czar's officials and receivin[illegible] their Russian news while sipping champagne in the cozy atmosphere of a well-appointed room, and they were shocked beyond the hope of recovery when the unshaven and noisy Petrograd Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies demanded a public statement of allied war aims and declared for "peace without annexations or indemnities, and self-definition of peoples." The advent of the Bolsheviks completed their mental derangement, so that since November, 1917 they have been able to see nothing bu[illegible] red. Their optic sense has been [illegible] perverted that a political amnesty they view as a general massacre; [illegible] their loss of reasoning capacity is [illegible]denced by their readiness to c[illegible] any rumor, no matter how wild [illegible] improbable, if only it is in line [illegible] their sad delusion.

There are also those, of the [illegible] kind, who in order to please the [illegible]tor or to satisfy their own cra[illegible] for the sensational send grossly [illegible]aggerated or deliberately lying [illegible]ies. As an illustration the fo[illegible] may serve. Some time ago [illegible] York daily published a story [illegible] Russian correspondent about a ce[illegible] Peters, the president of the Mosc[illegible] Commission for the Suppression of Counter-Revolution, who, as the story ran, "signed death warrants day and night until he dropped from sheer physical exhaustion." The story was embellished with a few personal characteristics which portrayed the unfortunate victim of the correspondent as a most blood-thirsty monster in human form. Diligent inquiry has disclosed that the Bolsheviks have a grim habit of publishing the lists of people executed for state and other offenses, and that at the time the correspondent above referred to was in Russia the greatest number of persons executed in a single day in Moscow was twenty-three. While this number may be large enough to [illegible] press anyone with the seriousness [illegible] the anti-Bolshevik [illegible]

LETTERS

From the Land of Devil-May-Care

Written for the Ohio Socialist by W. E. Reynolds.

DELAYED IN TRANSIT.

Mammonville, Awrwan,
Devil-May-Care-Land, Dec. 22, 1918.
Editor Ohio Socialist:

Dear Sir: Mammonville is the capital city of Devil-May-Care-Land. It is one huge mass of cliffs and canyons. The buildings scrape the sky and the place where the people walk between them is just like a canyon in a mountain country.

The cliffs are buildings used for purposes of trade and barter and chicanry and fraud. Great man-made caves 40 and 50 stories high and five to 15 stories deep. The people who dwell therein are modern cliff dwellers.

Running between these cliffs in the canyons are two parallel lines of tracks with cages upon them for the conveyance of those who wish to ride. A fee is charged for each ride and the guard who goes with each car to see that the driver brings it back has a little box where the passenger deposits his rattlemonies. The guard then pulls a lever or string and another little box sings out, "See, the guard is honest and your rattlemonies shall go to the Ketchum, Holdum, Packum and Skinem Transportation Company and not be kept by the common Gog in uniform." The guards do not have any names but like all the rest of the tribe of Gog simply has a number like a criminal. This number is worn in plain sight so that all may see he is just a common working Gog and not a Magog on dress parade.

There are parallel tracks running up inside the great cliffs and these too have a cage to carry passengers up and down, but here no fee of rattlemoney is charged. It must be harder to pull a cage up and down than it would be to run it on the level but these phunny Allfools charge for a level ride and give you a free ride up and down.

If you should visit this burg you would think land was very scarce or they wouldn't build their buildings so high—but you would be mistaken—there is plenty of land but it is mostly in the hands of Devilment Sharks who keep it away from the people. There is plenty of land but most of it grows nothing but a crop of ashes, tin cans, billboards and keep off the grass signs.

These Mammonites in Mammonville claim to be Christians—in fact all the Land-of-Devil-May-Care is said to be a Christian nation. They even cut each other's throats in the name of their Christ, who according to the legends firmly believed by most Allfools, was of doubtful parentage. His father was reported to be a hovering ghost and his mother a virgin and very beautiful.

Hovering Ghosts must still be very plentiful in Allfools land as there are yearly many beautiful virgins giving birth to fatherless babies, but they no longer call the babies Christ, but speak of them as though they were undesirable intruders and the great books of the law givers speak disapprovingly of them and call them foul names and disinherit them and make outcasts of them and their mothers.

This week the Allfools, who so roundly berate the modern virgin, who gives birth to a holyghostling are celebrating the birth of the baby born of a union of a ghost and virgin two thousand years ago. The patron saint of this week is a mythical character called Saint Nick, and this week in all the great cities of the Land of Devil-May-Care one can see people made up to look like the patron saint, who, according to legend drives a team of reindeer across the skies and comes down the chimney places and leaves gorgeous toys to the Magog children and cheap toys to the children of the Gogs.

It is quite amusing to see the Christian women teach their children not to lie and then set them an example by lying to them about Saint Nick. It is all a part of their national trait, the love of lying, deceit and humbuggery.

These people lie to their children about Gods and about the beginning and age of the earth. They lie about their families and the origin of life. They lie about death and use the dead to frighten the living. They lie about the making of wealth and the taking of wealth. They lie about their financial condition. They lie about each other and to each other. They lie about the state and the state in turn lies to them. In short the lives of the dwellers of Devil-May-Care-Land may be summed up in the words, lies, deceit and hypocrisy.

All the Gogs are pauperized. They have to be because their wages only cover the cost of their living, yet the newssuppressors lie to them and try to make them believe they are the most prosperous of nations. It is a prosperous nation because the nation belongs to the Magogs who are prosperous out of the values created by the Gogs and seized by the Magogs, but the majority of people in the nation are Gogs and they couldn't live till the new year without a job serving the Magogs.

The bogus Saint Nick's on the canyon corners are there begging dinero from the passersby to feed the hungry Gog children so when they grow up they will not be discontented agitators but contented wage slaves to the Magogs.

The Allfools do not allow beggags to beg openly on the streets unless they do it in the name of God. There is an organization here by the name of Starvation Army and as they beg in the name of God they are not molested, but place their begging outfits on the streets, obstructing the free passage thereof without molestation. This week they have kettles out, guarded by these bogus Nicks and signs telling the populace to give to the Starvation Army because it gives a part of it back to hungry Gog kids. They also claim to help fallen women.

I nearly got in trouble here because I wanted to put up a sign telling these Allfools not to support the Starvation Army because it supports the lie which makes fallen women and hungry children. These Allfools never look for causes, but waste all their lives chasing effects.

The streets at night are row upon row of bright lights and the show windows of the market places are full of cheap toys such as wooden cannon, tin swords and revolvers, tin soldiers [illegible] like trucks which the parents are [illegible] to put in [illegible] for their [illegible] to their children in the name of the peaceful Jesus' birthday and their lovable Saint Nick.

The Gogs do not make many purchases. They haven't the dinero but they walk and walk and look and look at the pretty windows and wish and wish for the pretty things—but alas—most Gogs have a wishbone where their backbone ought to be. When they come home they say they have been shopping, but everybody knows they were only window shopping. In a land where everybody lies, nobody is expected to tell the truth.

This business of lying is reduced here to a science and a fine art. It is said here that one could not tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, for twenty-four hours and live. The clerks in the market place lie to the patrons about the quality and quantity of the merchandise. The teachers knowingly lie to the school children or what is worse, knowingly hold back the truth to hold their jobs.

In the court rooms, which are called the Halls of Justice, the judges, who are men dressed in gowns like womenfolk, make the witnesses swear to tell the truth and then listens to both sides lie about their case and then instead of punishing them for lying, passes the case on to a jury, which awards the verdict to the side which had the most accomplished liars.

They have two great political parties here, the Repubocrats and the Demogogs. The control of both parties is kept by the Magogs and both parties hire the most accomplished liars they can get. The Magogs allow the male Gogs to go to the polling places and cast a vote for whichever Magog candidate succeeded in telling the most convincing lies—all they decide by their vote is which set of Magog politicians were the smoothest liars.

I have heard rumors that there is a far country where the Gogs have risen in revolt and taken the land and the machines away from the Magogs and made the Magogs go to work, whereupon a great howl arises from the Magogs at having to work like the Gogs do. In that far off land they say the lying politician whangeth his delusive harp no more, but nobody here seems to know much about it.

I have also heard rumors that in places here in Devil-May-Care-Land there is a strange set of people called Soak-the-Magogists, who believe in telling the truth instead of the customary conventional lies. They are rumored to believe in dividing up the work of the world. I haven't found any of them so far in my travels. Those who told me about them called them Wobblies and Leftwings and warned me against them, saying they were of the rabble and not respectable.

Judging from what I have seen of the Gogs and Magogs here who call themselves respectable, if ever I do find any members of this strange tribe I know I shall take to them like a kitten to a warm brick.

Hoping you are the same, I am,
ICHABOD SKYGAC JONES.

Socialists Must Lead The Revolution

By JESSIE JASON RUFNER.

"Every dog has his day," and the militarists and profiteers are just now enjoying theirs. The world is seething with hatred and unrest. The common people by the millions are mourning their dead. The profit mongering interests are still controlling those avenues to public opinion, the daily newspapers, and verily the end is not yet.

All over the country we have watched the destruction of the kaiser in effigy. We have seen him shot, burned alive and buried—in effigy—which is a fitting crisis to other fits of imaginative effigies which of late have held us in helpless thralldom.

We Socialists have been silent spectators at all the mad orgies inspired by class hatred and a morbid public, but we, relentless students of cause and effect, know that the kaiser spirit still lives and is rampant among us. The controlling factors in the kaiser's character were greed and power, and when we destroyed the kaiser in effigy we did not destroy or pretend to destroy those factors which made him.

Yea, we have the fair beginnings of several kaisers right here in America. In fact we are slaves held in a more ignoble bondage than were the black men of the south, for their slavery was of the body alone and was compulsory, while ours is a slavery of intellect bound by chains which are forged in Wall Street and are sent out in installments in the interest-controlled press, and we ourselves wrap those chains around our better judgment and bind down our inalienable right to think for ourselves.

We, the working class, what there is left of us, will again settle down to factory routine or endless job hunting. Once more, as always will we cringe before the masters and kiss the hand that smites us. Men will again line up at the factory doors elbowing, pushing and fighting for jobs. Of course not so many, for the war relieved us of a few million who were not needed in modern production, and still we will go on endeavoring to buy back with our one-fifth the five-fifths that must be disposed of before we can hope to keep to work. Making things as cheaply and fraudulently as possible so they will sooner need to be replaced, thus giving us work and the profit to the capitalists, and in spite of all, filling storehouses to overflowing and forcing our country to vie with other nations for markets, and ports and rights. Oh, yes, we will all get in on the game and produce, produce, produce until we are ready for the next world clash which will be inevitable, for there will be wars until we get collective ownership of the means of production and distribution, and the cause of war is forever removed.

Over in Europe, the real people, the working people, are counting the cost of this terrible capitalist system. They are tearing down the bulwarks of capitalism and greed and re-organizing under the red flag of human brotherhood.

The interest controlled press is howling like wolves all over this country. We have great head lines concerning the "Red Terror" and well may they sit on their haunches and howl, for the "Red Terror" is the only real enemy that ever fought the kaiser spirit to the bitter end. The only thing on earth that can't be bought off, for it is the spirit incarnate of outraged humanity; the spirit of ages of human oppression; an awful spirit born of exile, dungeons and tears. A spirit of sorrow as profound as life. A spirit of travail of the birth of a new order. The spirit of the dumb victim of imperialism and capitalism, the united spirits of the oppressed of every age and country.

That spirit once abject, is now all powerful. The Liebknechts are coming into their own and the people's day is at hand.

The revolution is on. When it strikes America as it inevitably will, will it come in Socialist order, with the proper respect for life and property, or will it come with the mad riot of mobs and wholesale destruction of the remaining resources which rightfully belong to the whole people? Will the people, the producers, take what is rightfully theirs, quietly and peaceably, or will capitalism continue its short-sightedness until we have the Armageddon foretold by the ancient prophets? Looking through the Bible I run on to these passages, which after all, are singularly appropriate:

"Woe unto ye Pharisees, hypocrites, full of extortion and of excess, ye devour widow's houses, make a prey of the fatherless, crush my people, grind the faces of the poor; ye have eaten up their vineyards, filled your own houses with the spoil of the poor by fraudulently keeping back their wages, joining house unto house, laying field unto field, binding on men's shoulders, burdens heavy and grievous to be borne, therefore they have become great and waxen rich. Oh, ye generation of vipers, ye serpents, ye that call evil, good and good, evil, ye makers of unrighteous decrees, ye writers of perverseness, ye takers of brides, ye forgetters of the hungry, the thirsty, the strangers, naked, sick and in prison; ye makers of long prayers for a pretence, straining out gnats and swallowing camels, how shall ye escape the damnation of hell?"

Indeed it would not take such a wide stretch of the imagination for a Christian to believe that the capitalists and profi[illegible] were about to get their hell ri[illegible] ere on earth and at the hands [illegible] the "Red Terror" who might be God's own avenging angels. As for the Socialists we know that the ruling classes have produced the causes and must abide by the effect.

The Brotherhood of Man is marching on with the red flag of brotherhood at the fore and the "Red Terror" which has pledged itself to give back the earth to the race, flanking him on all sides. Verily, after all the years of misery, crime and oppression, evolution is marching on, and we shall be obliged to follow, willingly or no, the red specter born of ages of human misery and oppression.

Socialists must point the way and be ready to step in at the proper time and restore order out of chaos; bind together the cords of existence and peacefully steer the world out of the terrible hell the capitalists and imperialists have wrought.

The true Socialist, long suffering and patient, he who has stood firmly by what he knows is right, through all this terrible nightmare shall step like Liebknecht into a greater freedom than he had ever dreamed.

Let us by all means circulate our literature, get subscriptions to our papers and get into the fight in earnest, the fight of intellect versus greed which is convulsing the world.

Be proud that you are Socialists. Oh, my comrades, for to you will be delegated the task of leading labor's hosts to the land of promise. For verily you are a collective Moses. The War God has parted the waters of the modern Red Sea of private monopoly and you shall march unhindered into the promised land forever free from the modern Pharoah's capitalistic hordes. There "every man shall sit under his own vine and his own fig tree and none shall make them afraid."

The Situation in Ohio

By EUGENE V. DEBS.

To be under the parole of a Federal Court and to be enjoined from speaking outside of its jurisdiction and inside of it only on condition of saying nothing "unlawful" i. e., nothing that grates on the ears of the ruling class, is not entirely an unmixed evil as I have found since my activities as an agitator have been confined to Judge Westenhaver's district. The order of the court has certainly had a great advertising effect for the meetings in northeastern Ohio have been largely attended by sympathetic and enthusiastice audiences, notwithstanding all the cheap political trickery resorted to by the minions of capitalism to render futile the results of these meetings.

It is quite evident that the industrial captains of capitalism, blind and stupid as they are to all things other than chicane, fraud and exploitation, gauge accurately the temper of the thousands who attend these meetings and fear the effect thereof on the working class and the general public. For they have attempted in every way their malignity could conceive to thwart the purpose of these meetings. The petty court officials have been especially active along this line, aided or abetted by the newspapers in hinting at possible trouble and spreading false and malicious reports. At each point the speech has been "taken down" for the local court or to be forwarded to Washington, as if the repeated announcement to the effect could deter any other than a coward from filling his engagements.

At Cleveland for the second time the house was packed to overflowing, the same was true at Toledo, where the whole police force surrounded the building and every entrance and exit was guarded to prevent the possible catastrophe the evil conscience of the craven bourgeoisie bosses had conjured up out of their fetid imagination. It must have been a great surprise to them that Comrade Prevey and myself appeared upon the stage unormed and that no attempt was made to blow up the city.

Oh, what cowards and poltroons the capitalist exploiters are; the faintest whisper of revolt upon the part of their slaves falls like a roar of doom upon their startled ears and strikes terror to their cowardly hearts. It is not only the head that wears the crown that lies uneasy in the still watches of the night but the head of every robber of honest toil and every drinker of the blood of innocent children.

But whatever the pirates of capitalism may do and whatever their mercenaries and hangers on may threaten, we shall hold our colors defiantly aloft and go forward with our work without apology and without fear, knowing as we do that capitalism is criminal, corrupt and festering with every evil, and that Socialism and Socialism alone, can avert the upheaval which threatens, and restore peace and sanity to the world.

The situation in Ohio as I view it and as intimate contact and personal observation confirms it, is extremely favorable at the close of the old and the beginning of the new year. The comrades at the various points I have visited are uniformly enthusiastic over the outlook for 1919. They sense the possibilities within the grasp of the workers and have set about to prepare for organized action throughout the state, and this is as it should be. The Buckeye State has a central and commanding position in the class struggle in America. It is highly industrialized and ought to be a very stronghold of the forces of industrial liberation.

The call goes out to every local in the state to get into action, thousands are now ready to join the party and each local should strive to secure it full share of the fresh enrollment.

There was never a time when the state was so ripe for Socialist agitation and organization. Let me be a temporary sojourner among you Ohio comrades, bid you take advantage of the present favorable situation and combine all your energies to organize thoroughly the class-conscious forces of labor for the mighty task which now confronts it.

With all my heart I rejoice at seeing the prison doors swing open and Comrades Ruthenberg, Wagenknecht and Baker walk forth, once more into the sunlight. These comrades have been consecrated behind prison bars and will now rise to their full stature in the service of the revolutionary movement.

The comrades of Ohio are entitled to my lasting gratitude for their fidelity and devotion during the past few months and I shall gladly avail myself of every opportunity to work hand in hand with them to build up the party, to organize the workers with revolutionary efficiency, fire them with the lofty ideals of their great cause, and speed the glorious day of their industrial emancipation.

A Word of Protest

We have noticed in several of our Socialist papers, our state paper not excepted, somewhat of a tendency to discredit anything and everything pertaining to the Bible and the churches. Now our own church affiliation will clear us of any charge of being anything but very liberal. However, we believe we should remember that, though the Bible does contain some things we can't quite swallow, it also contains the story of the life, teachings, and persecution to death of a master radical—the Christ. And though the churches about invariably have been the most conservative of organizations, still it must be said to their credit that recent developments are hopeful. Though the "powers that be" in the various churches for the most part still stick to the old order of things, many members and some few leaders are beginning to see conditions as they actually exist. Harry F. Ward, for instance, whom we have met personally, is a big man in his church, and in inter-church affairs. At the same time he is widely known and supported by the laboring class. To be sure, we are prone to divide people into just two classes: Those that are for us and those that are against us. But, really, attitudes and ideals are not always changed suddenly; many of us were not always Socialists, and it is no doubt true that the most of us did not become Socialists "all of a sudden." It certainly is the part of wisdom, then, not to antagonize those who are beginning to see things clearly—by knocking them because they do not altogether agree with us—but rather to encourage them in their new way of thinking and even to take some precaution not to antagonize them. We do not care to have this bit of protest answered nor to carry the discussion further. We believe only that it is up to us to give all the "square deal" which we are demanding for ourselves.

Very Important Announcement

Beginning with next issue of the Ohio Socialist we will publish weekly the foreign and domestic labor and Socialist news as compiled by the able staff of the International Labor News Service. This news service will be edited by Louis P. Lochner, Scott Nearing, Santeri Nuorteva and Alexander Trachtenberg. The editorial committee consists of Crystal Eastman, Ludwig Lore, Judah L. Magnes, James Oneal, Joseph Schlossberg, Norman Thomas, B. Charney Vlodek and the service will have correspondents at The Hague, Holland; London, England; Montreal, Canada; Paris, France; Sydney, Australia, and Toronto, Canada.

The International News Service will provide each week a concise summary of the most important labor and Socialist news of the world. Besides items sent the service direct by correspondents the editors will cover metropolitan daily papers, the Christian Science Monitor, which paper is said to have the best foreign service in America, and such papers as can be secured from Mexico, South America, Japan, China, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, England, Russia, Holland, Spain and the Scandinavian countries. Special state and government reports will also be covered.

This will give readers of the Ohio Socialist world-wide news of the labor movement. It will give Socialist Party members an opportunity to become more thorough internationalists. It is not sufficient that Socialists merely pay attention to local affairs. What happens any place on earth to the working class, happens to us no matter what city we live in. We, therefore, recommend a persistent weekly reading of the news notes provided by the International Labor News Service.

Afternoon session of Dec. 28.

Scott Wilkins arrived for the meeting.

From Wm. M. Brown, requesting designations of various units of the Socialist Party. Report by the State Secretary upon visit to home of Comrades Mr. and Mrs. Brown at Galion together with Debs.

Motion carried that Joseph W. Sharts and the State Secretary comply with the request of Wm. M. Brown to visit him.

New Business.

Motion carried that as an election for an additional member of the State Executive Committee, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Geo. Bundy, could not be held much before the issuance of the call for the election of an entirely new committee and as it is desirous to save the expense such a referendum will cost that therefore we ask all locals making nominations for an additional member of the State Executive Committee to withdraw their naminations and that M. J. Beery, the next highest upon the last ballot, act as additional committeeman until the next election.

Motion carried that State Secretary be instructed to work out arrangement with locals in regard to press stamps as best he can until such time as a revision of the constitutional amendment concerning press stamps can be made.

Motion carried that the State Office, for the time being, be granted the use of the automobile owned by the party.

Motion carried that beginning next month the State Office pay a total of $20 per month for rent, heat and light.

Motion carried that the State Secretary be reimbursed in the sum of $200 for extra labor incidental to conducting the State Office while he was imprisoned.

Motion carried that the report be considered seriatim.

Motion carried that we do not tour W. E. Reynolds at this time.

Motion carried that the State Executive Committee ratify action taken by the State Office in assisting state organizer Chas. Baker and that such disbursements as may be necessary preparatory to his being routed be made in return for employment as assistant in the State Office.

Motion carried that the routing of W. R. Snow and Tom Lewis be left to the discretion of the State Office.

Motion carried that all locals be informed that when speakers are engaged through the State Office that all financial obligations must be met.

Motion carried that State Secretary write inactive locals requesting that they hold a meeting by engaging their nearest district organizer and that in event the local does not reply that the State Secretary request the district organizer to visit the local upon his own initiative and report back to the State Office.

Motion carried that all funds excepting the organization and mileage funds be merged into the general fund beginning with the first of the year.

Motion carried that J. P. Baker, Lotta Burke and Scott Wilkins be elected to audit the books of the State Office for the last quarter.

Motion that adjournment be had until 9 a. m.

Sunday, Dec. 29, morning session.

Motion carried that Tom Clifford act as chairman.

Auditing committee's report heard, received and filed.

Motion carried that a professional audit of the State Office books be made for 1918 and that Fred Neubauer take charge of same.

Resolutions committee reported resolutions as printed above.

Motion carried that the four resolutions be adopted and that copies be sent to the Mooney Defense conference at Chicago, to the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party, to congress and to the national administration heads.

Communication which arrived in last mail from the director of the Socialist Party Defense Fund was read. It requested that the state make use of such literature as is being issued by the National Office for additional defense fund collections.

Motion carried that a new call for defense funds be issued, that National Office literature and letters be used for this purpose, but that all literature and letters bear the address of the State Office and that all money collected in this state be remitted to the State Office to be divided upon the basis of 60 per cent to the National Office and 40 per cent to the State Office.

Motion carried that previous motion requesting locals to take up collections at their meetings for the defense fund be rescinded.

Motion carried that a letter be addressed to Local Warren informing that local that Edward Smith had appeared before members of the State Executive Committee, had admitted that he was in error in joining the Social Democratic League and in supporting the national administration, that he desired to again become a member of the Socialist Party and not knowing how to approach the local in the matter had asked the State Executive Committee to write Local Warren informing it of his desire; that the State Executive Committee hopes the local will give due and earnest consideration of his application to rejoin the party.

Motion carried that the wages of E. T. Allisen, editor of Ohio Socialist be increased to $30 per week.

After a lengthy discussion upon methods of organization for the state a motion was passed that the State Secretary get in touch with an organizer whose duty shall be to inspect books and activity of locals, assist locals in getting new members and in collecting dues from those in arrears, assist officers of the locals in their duties and in other ways help in the organization work, and that as soon as such an organizer is located the State Secretary propose his employment to the State Executive Committee.

Motion carried to adjourn.

A. WAGENKNECHT,
State Secretary.

The following report was made by the State Secretary:

Report of the State Secretary.

To the State Executive Committee and Members, Socialist Party of Ohio:

Comrades:

The general routine duties of the State Office have kept me so constantly employed since my return from prison that it has not been possible for me to investigate the records for the purpose of making a complete report for the year now ended. The daily mail of the office is exceedingly heavy and requires the greater part of the day in answering. The time is at hand when an office clerk or two could be of immense service, but the office income does not permit of the employment of additional help, and probably never will so long as dues to the membership are as low as at present. A membership of 6,000, half of which are foreign speaking members, gives us a dues stamp profit of $240 a month. This just about pays the wages bill and leaves nothing for the many other incidental expenses. My first recommendation would, therefore, be that the dues as well as the initiation fee be increased at the first opportunity so that the time may come when new work may be undertaken for the party without first requesting contributions for such work from the members.

Membership for 1918 Shows Increase.

It may surprise you as it did the office force to learn that the state membership for 1918 shows an increase of 81 over that of 1917. Dues stamp sales for 1917 and for the first eleven months of 1918 follow:

	1917	1918
January	4428	7341
February	3974	7281
March	4731	7219
April	4441	6971
May	4698	519
June	6227	5095
July	6273	4408
August	6414	6206
September	6057	2690
October	7661	5328
November	7665	4720
December	5698

The total dues stamp sales for 1917 was 68,267 and for the first eleven months of 1918, 63,451. The average dues stamp sales per month, which also denotes the average monthly membership, was 5,689 for 1917 and 5,770 for 1918. The Socialist Party of this state has then weathered the war with colors flying. We feel safe in saying that had the epidemic of influenza not closed local meetings all over the state, our increase for 1918 over that of 1917 would have been far greater. However, every party member will, we are sure, feel gratified to learn that an increase in membership has taken place despite the intense opposition the organization has had to suffer.

Interesting to the member who makes a study of organization work will be the figures which tell of the number of new members admitted for the two years past. It seems unbelievable, but the State Office sold 6,154 initiation stamps in 1917. And this is approximately the number of new members admitted into the party during that year. The question arises—where are they all? And further—what can be done to retain the many members admitted to party membership in the course of every year? Here is a problem that must be solved, for had we been in a position to retain all the new members admitted, our membership today would be nearer 12,000 than 6,000. The initiation stamps sold for the first eleven months of 1918 amounted to 2,096.

The Ohio Socialist.

The Ohio Socialist is meeting with national favor. About ten of the most active state secretaries are co-operating with us in securing subscribers for our state organ and the readers of the paper are supporting it so generously and working for its success so diligently that right now half the work of the State Office consists in attending to the vast amount of business incidental to the receipt of subscriptions. The paper has at present a circulation of about 5,000 including the bundle subscription.

Since we began publishing weekly and to Dec. 1, the total receipts of the Ohio Socialist have been $1,28[illegible].08. The total expenses have been $1,862.54. This shows a deficit of about $100 for the six months. This deficit accrued mainly during the first three months of publication; the receipts for the last three months have equalled and exceeded the expenses. If the paper is as liberally supported from now on as it has been this last month, then deficits will be no more and we may soon begin to earnestly agitate for a bi-weekly paper.

The last meeting of your committee agreed to give part to the other neighboring states for state Socialist Party news. Since then both Kentucky, West Virginia and New Mexico have taken space in the paper, and although New Mexico is by no means a neighboring state, Comrade Dillon, the State Secretary, insists that ours is the paper through which his official bulletin should reach the New Mexico membership. Besides the three states named, Virginia is also contemplating using the columns of our paper for its official party news.

The weekly contents of our paper has met with general favor. Letters of praise are very numerous and although we admit that there is much room for improvement, we at the same time believe that the paper is doing a very good work. Comrade E. T. Allison, who is in general charge of both the editorial and circulation departments, has been untiring in his efforts for the success of the Ohio Socialist, and the press stamp also as well as the co-operation we are getting from other states are due in the main to his good work.

Organization and Propaganda.

The State Office intended to tour Comrade Tom Lewis steadily for the entire winter season, but the influenza epidemic interfered. The epidemic is still prevalent in many of the smaller towns and the ban against meetings is still on. The entire tour, which the State Office had mapped out for Comrade E. V. Debs and which was to take place the month before election, had to be abandoned on account of the epidemic, and a whole week's dates secured for the same speaker this month had to be cancelled for the same cause, together with the denial of halls to Socialist locals for speakers. Just when consecutive routing of speakers can be undertaken we can not tell. Many locals, some of the most active, have written us that all halls have been denied them and that no speakers can be engaged because of this. And yet, the calls for speakers are as numerous as before the war. The dates are mostly Sunday dates, however, more and more locals having seen the advisability of establishing regular Sunday forum meetings.

Comrade Tom Lewis is at present engaged by Local Cuyahoga County to address its branches. Besides this comrade there are three others who are ready for routings in Ohio. They are Charles Baker, our state organizer, W. E. Reynolds and W. R. Snow. Comrade Reynolds has been employed [illegible] in Illinois and has established a [illegible] ord for real organization work [illegible] securing of new members and the collecting of dues from those in good standing. He is [illegible] agandist. It would be well for the committee to canvass the [illegible] the state at this meeting so that they may arrive at some conclusion [illegible] the field work. Comrade Baker reported himself ready for work [illegible] it is his application and the necessity of employing him which should receive your first consideration.

The Sustaining Fund.

We are still paying out of the state treasury five dollars per week for the support of several families of our imprisoned Socialists. Besides, we are remitting certain amounts each week for comforts for all Socialist Party members still serving prison sentences. These payments cause quite a drain on party finances and we would like to have the committee decide whether it would be wise for at this time petition the membership to again purchase sustaining fund stamps. About a thousand dollars was received from the first sustaining fund stamp sale. There is still in the sustaining fund a total of $252.28. More than this will be needed if we are to meet our obligations to the families of our imprisoned comrades.

Finances.

As will be seen by the November financial report, the general fund deficit within the year amounts to $2,971.54. This means that money had to be supplied from other funds to meet the general running expenses of the State Office in the amount named. Were it not for the liberal donations made by members and sympathizers to other party funds, we would have been faced with financial embarrassment many times during the year. In order that the general fund deficit may be eliminated we would suggest that all other funds except the mileage fund be merged into the general fund beginning with the first of the year.

We also desire to direct attention to the fact that our balance appears larger than it is, due to the fact that we owe the national office several remittances upon the Debs Defense Fund. December will show a gain in receipts over November and we feel assured that now that the war is over, the financial condition of the party will better itself from month to month.

The Outlook.

The outlook for 1919 is exceptionally bright. If the mail which reaches the State Office is an indication, we feel safe in saying that the locals in the state will be better equipped in entering the municipal elections this coming fall than ever in their history. War time has seasoned the membership, has tempered it and from this day on it will cut into capitalism like a keen-edged tool. Many letters are being received which tell of the renewed activity and increased enthusiasm of the members. Many locals have instituted a membership campaign and others have organized their good standing members into detachments whose duty it is to collect dues from members in bad standing. Comrades have learned to brave the arrogant opposition of those who assumed authority in matters that had to do with the activities of our party and the result has been that we now have a membership better developed to undertake the mission to emancipate the workers, a membership made of finer steel and more capable to perform the work that lies before us.

With the inspiration gained from the successes of our European comrades, we shall march forward and battle as never before to win this state and the nation for industrial democracy.

Fraternally submitted,
A. WAGENKNECHT,
State Secretary.

In choosing the flags for their new countries, the people across the water seem to act on the old principle, "Any color, so it's red."

NEVER DO THIS

Never write the names of subscribers you get for this paper into a letter or mix them in any way with other business you may have to transact with the State Office.

ALWAYS write the names of subscribers upon a separate sheet of paper or better yet, upon one of our subscription blanks, any number of which will be mailed you upon request.

We will thank you for complying with this request. You will save us much work if you will always do as we here ask you to do.

TAKE NOTE OF THIS

Subscription cards for the Ohio Socialist are sold for cash only. The possession of a subscription card represents a paid subscription for the card reads that it is "good for one year's subscription or one-half year's subscription to the Ohio Socialist" as the case may be.

Then, also, the State Office does not desire to begin a credit business. We are making an effort to keep State Office running expenses at a minimum and starting credit accounts with consequent billing and added bookkeeping would mean the employing of more help.

We ask all locals and members therefore to remit cash with all orders for dues stamps, supplies or subscription cards.

SPRINGFIELD ATTENTION!

In sending in $6.50 for nine new subs, John Rehm, says: "Here's something to start the new year with a good push. Let's keep right on pushing for 52 weeks in 1919 and then see what results will show.

"To the comrades of Springfield I want to say that if you know of anyone you want landed as an Ohio Socialist subscriber, and if you cannot do the landing yourself, just phone 2563-B, Home phone, and I will try my hand at it."

And by the way John Rehm is landing them, trying his [illegible] at it does not spell failure.

PEGGY HULL REPORTS ON THE TERROR

Peggy Hull is the truly, true representative of the Cleveland Press in Russia. Peggy's first report of The Terror is illuminating in its sharply drawn contrasts of real American civilization and the "savagery" of the Russians.

"Vladivostok, Siberia, the gateway to The Terror," are the opening words of this first enlightening report. And then Peggy tells us of the terrors she finds just within the gateway. "I came to penetrate the blackness which surrounds Russia," she says. "Surrounds" is good, Peggy. We are trying to penetrate that same blackness here and we assure you that it is fully as hard a job as any you shall find in far away Siberlia. "Savagery and civilization rub elbows here," she goes on to say. "Fifth reeks amid wealth." That's just terrible. So different from America where we have reached the appex of civilization. Walk a dozen blocks in any direction in any American city and you will meet with the identical conditions which seem so horrible in Russia.

The next indictment of Russian conditions is a hummer. "Human wrecks huddle on stone floors among vermin infested rags—others drowsy, stare with vacant eyes—beings, hardly a step removed from extreme savagery drag their way thru the crowds." We don't doubt your word for a moment, Peggy. Having seen the same thing hundreds of times in many American cities we have learned to believe that such conditions are prevalent throughout the world. We'd certainly hate to believe America had a monopoly on derelicts. "We could see from the boat that abject misery gripped many in Vladivostok." Yes, Peggy, and the same can be seen from the rail of every ship that lands in any American port.

Peggy's next experience with The Terror taps the font of our sympathies. If possible we would reach out a detaining hand to draw Peggy back from a horrible fate. An AWFUL SMELL greets her nostrils. It sends her reeling for fresh air. We are not informed what this evidence of The Terror is so we must conclude from our experience of bad odors that a slaughter house is in the vicinity of that wharf in Vladivostok. We are led to this conclusion because we have experienced with thousands of Cleveland citizens that same slaughter house smell. All because our CIVILIZATION allows a meat packing corporation to set aside the wishes and legal procedure instigated by the citizenry of the free city of Cleveland.

"Autos speed thru the streets at 30 miles an hour," presumably driven by these same savages. This fact alone undoubtedly proves intervention necessary. She finds the people very rude. They jostle each other off the walks without apology and 'glare' at one another. This is indeed horrible. We have observed that in America, and especially in Peggy's home town, Cleveland, that pedestrians are more than polite in this regard, especially during the rush hours.

Our conclusion after reading this report is that we've got some "Terror" to combat right here at home and that if Peggy and the Press desire to serve American civilization they will get busy right here unearthing some of the sources of the violent smells from the decaying social evils that infest this land instead of searching for the moat in the eye of a sister Republic.

But while you are over there Peggy, we hope you will find out what American soldiers are doing in Russia. No one ever here seems to be able to find out and there are many thousands over here who are asking. In fact, the question: What are we doing in Russia, is being supplanted with: Are American soldiers in Russia because Russia has instituted a government by, of and for the working class? Please find out, Peggy, we want to know.

A Little Talk on Circulation

"A rolling stone gathers no moss" is an old and well-worn adage containing some truth. But here is a bigger truth, a Socialist paper that stops rolling will gather nothing but moss and moss means death. Since our business is to publish a LIVE Socialist paper we are not very strong for moss though it may be all right for a stone. Moss for us means death. Therefore, let's keep rolling so that our days may be long and free of moss.

Circulation! Circulation is the highroad to success. Without it a Socialist paper is a failure and gets nowhere. To become well known, to be talked about wherever workingmen congregate, to be distributed far and wide, to make new and many acquaintances daily is the coveted goal.

A Socialist paper's influence is in proportion to its circulation. Without circulation it can have no influence. It's light is hidden, it's purpose remains unaccomplished. Therefore, comrades, the problem of circulation as a means of achieving our goal, must always receive our earnest consideration.

Circulation is what the Ohio Socialist has lacked. Happily, that situation is rapidly passing. We are beginning to spread into many states and that means growth. The wider we are distributed, the bigger we grow for we create new friends at every step.

There are many individual comrades who have accomplished wonders in adding to our circulation. Their untiring efforts have ever been a spur to us and their work and words a constant source of inspiration.

There is one phase of the work of widening our circulation, however, that has been neglected. It is a work which really belongs to the locals. It is a work which should be made a part of the local's regular propaganda work. We mean the regular, systematic distribution of the Ohio Socialist. It appears that many comrades have been able to see but one side of this problem, the expense side. Let us take a look at the other side and see which is the brighter.

A house to house distribution of a few hundred copies of the Ohio Socialist will stir up more interest and discussions of Socialism for a week than half a dozen meetings. Why? Because the people sit down and rest and read on Sunday. The other six days they are too busy to think, but on Sunday they do a little contemplating. The fact that several hundred people find an Ohio Socialist on their front porch on Sunday morning proves to them that there is a LIVE local in that town. An interest is created that keeps alive and if repeated often soon gets its reward. The readers begin to want the Ohio Socialist, they subscribe and that means that very soon they will be hunting up your local headquarters. A new comrade joins his enthusiasm with yours. He enters the fight and thus the good work continues. Every dollar your local invests in the Ohio Socialist comes back to you in dues.

Another thing, comrades. Every local in an industrial city should have the Ohio Socialist on sale at the factory gates. Some one of your comrades (no one can excell women comrades in factory gate sales) should undertake this work. Order a bundle. Go to the same place on the same day at the same hour every week. The workers will soon look for you. Soon you will have a good sales established of both papers and subscription cards. Try this method. Your local will profit by it. It is a success elsewhere. It can be made so in your town.

In every city where the comrades are on the job distributing the Ohio Socialist the local is growing and the Ohio Socialist is gaining in subscribers. Local Youngstown is the latest local to take up this work in a thoroughgoing manner. Two hundred to five hundred a week is its order. Results are beginning to show, too. Watch Youngstown! If Local Youngstown can do so well so can your local. Our strength is in our press. Let's add to it. Get busy. Order a bundle.

Another Answer to Dr. Clark

By M. B. DUTTON,

State Secretary of Virginia

I have read Dr. Clarks onslaught with a deal of interest and no little amusement. He falls easily into that class of scientists who would dogmatize science and then prostitute it to serve the ends of the master class as was religion. The arguments he adduces are utterly fallacious, and from the standpoint of true science, are absolutely worthless.

In the first place nature never "experiments." Her works are infinite in variety and each follows channels of development immutably conditioned by the laws of its environment. The possibility of each is limited strictly by its innate potentiality. Man has one potentiality and the ant another. In the very nature of things an ant could never have paralleled man in his achievements any more than man could have rivaled the ant in his.

Then again, taking each in its peculiar sphere, comparison is just as impossible as it is unscientific and egotistical. We know no generic standards by which to judge the ant, and any standards that we might set up would be hopelessly anthropomorphic and egotistic. Possibly the ant in his sphere is jsut as highly developed as is man. There is only one common standard that could possibly serve as a legitimate test of highness even if we could apply it, that is which has [illegible]ined a system that secures the greatest happiness to the greatest number? There is positively no other legitimate end in sentient life, be it man or spider. Taking this as a test, most likely proud man would fall very low.

Again, Dr. Clark commits a grievous sin against true science when he sets up a premise as a generalization with no attempt to prove its generality. In this case any such attempt would have put him in the ridiculous attitude of refuting his own argument, since if communism has kept the ant an ant, why has not individualism made the cannibal spider a man?

We will forgive Dr. Clark for jumbling Socialism and communism, he may have done this through lack of knowledge, but we cannot overlook his garbling the accepted facts of evolution, since he is posing as an expert expounder of its workings. Mans superiority, from a purely anthropomorphic viewpoint, arises purely from the fact that he is a tool-using animal. His use of tools and his consequent mastery of nature alone give him his

ADVERTISE YOUR LOCAL MEETINGS

Conduct your local in a businesslike manner. First, see to it that every local member is a subscriber to THE OHIO SOCIALIST. Every member MUST be to be in good standing in the party.

Then advertise the date and place of your local meetings in the OHIO SOCIALIST. We will insert this single column advertisement for $1.25 a quarter year; $2.50 for the first half of 1919. This is a very moderate charge, and will be subject to change after July 1, 1919.

Placing notice of your local meeting place and date in the OHIO SOCIALIST will be a constant reminder to your local membership to attend meetings. Look for the meeting notice of Local Akron in this issue. This local is the first to respond. Will your local be next?

A WEEKS WORK OF THE RED 100

The Red Hundred has grown into a "Red Army," they have become so numerous. Recruits are joining the ranks daily and doing heroic service from the first jump. This past week's work shows the greatest results of any yet in the history of the Ohio Socialist. Over three hundred subscriptions were entered upon the mailing list. Two weeks ago all former records were broken with a total of two hundred and sixty subscriptions, and now that high mark has been exceeded. Can we establish a new record every two weeks comrades? I think I can hear a chorus of "we can" from many loyal comrades. There was never a time like the present for getting subscriptions for a good Socialist paper such as the Ohio Socialist. Keep them coming comrades. The faster they come the bigger we shall grow and the quicker we shall accomplish our task.

With wishes for a happy New Year Comrade Max Boehm of Conneaut sends in three subscriptions. We know that Comrade Boehm's wishes are sincere when he proves it this way. Thanks for both Comrade Boehm.

Press stamp sales in Dayton are looking up. Eight from Secretary Rogers is an indication of activity.

Two renewels and two new ones from Comrade A. B. Hollenbaugh of Fostoria is a welcome list.

Comrade A. M. Meads of Convoy makes a real New Year resolution and then goes right out and puts it into execution by gathering in four subscriptions, all yearlies but one. It takes a real Red to keep a resolution these days.

Comrade B. L. Kisor of Montpelier sends in three new ones.

Local Massillon sends in through Secretary Weltlich four dollars representing press stamp sales and six dollars for subscriptions for non-members. When we learn a better way to make the locals grow than to push the Ohio Socialist among non-members we shall let everybody know it at once. It will be worth knowing.

Four dollars for subscriptions and six dollars for sub cards is an order from Comrade B. T. Smith of Toledo. Orders for sub cards are increasing. We hope that more comrades will see the advisability of ordering cards to aid them in securing subscriptions.

Three renewals from Comrade Rodgers of Lawndale testifies to the popularity of the Ohio Socialist among the comrades there.

Comrade T. H. Davies of Hubbard has become a weekly booster. Five is his contribution this week.

Seventy-one new subscriptions from Local Cuyahoga County proves that local is gaining in membership.

Local Portage County is still gaining in membership too. They have the growing habit and like it. Eight subscribers from Comrade McVay keeps eight members in good standing.

Comrade Mrs. A. Jones of Youngstown adds two more to her record this week.

Comrade Allen Cook of Canton continues the good work. Two yearlies attest his activity.

The list of Martins Ferry is growing through the efforts of Comrade F. A. Habig. Three yearlies he adds to his record.

Comrade R. Calkins of Lima sends us a letter of good suggestions and two subscriptions. We are very fond of both and use them constantly in our business and are always glad when a comrade takes the time to send them in.

• • •

Comrade George W. Markert of Mt. Healthy starts the new year exactly right by mailing in two more yearlies.

LOCAL AKRON
Socialist Party of Ohio
Meets Every Friday Evening at 50 South Howard St.

Comrade R. A. Huebner of Springfield doesn't like to see the comrades' subscriptions expire. He sends in two renewals this week.

Three more yearlies from Comrade Soukup of Neffs shows he is keeping his gait.

Local Marion is keeping its members in good standing as three subscriptions from them show. Don't let your members get in arrears. Keep them paid up for both dues and press stamps. The nearest thing to no members are members in arrears.

Comrade Eubanks of Columbus sends in eight more.

Local Portsmouth sets an example that is worthy the consideration of every comrade and local in the state. All subscriptions received from this local are for one year. Fourteen were sent in this week—all yearlies. We would be more than glad if more comrades and locals would do likewise. The expense of placing a name on the mailing list is about five cents. To place a name on list four times a year means a direct loss of fifteen cents on that subscription. Multiply 15 cents by several thousand and you will see what a large loss it is to sell three months' subscriptions.

Many comrades say it is just as easy to get a yearly subscription as to get one for three months. However, that may be, we hope that as many comrades as possible will subscribe for a year at a time. It means much less work in the State Office and less expense too. What we save belongs to the party members.

Comrade Frank Bender of Pleasant City mails in two yearlies.

Two yearlies from Camrade W. Lowery of Canton testifies to the fact that Local Canton is fortunate in having so many live wires among its members.

Comrade Blank of Lima mails us four more. Comrade Blank gets a few every week.

Two each were sent in by Comrades J. H. Sims of Bethel and Comrade A. J. Totten of Alliance.

• • •

The following comrades secure one sub each week. W. A. Jenkins, Ernest Gerlach, Geo. Althouser, J. Robinson, Wm. G. Schultz, R. W. Jenny, Thos. Zeelo, Scott Wilkin, G. F. Schnaufer, Edwin Peterson, Roy Searlott, R. J. Dixon, F. C. Priller, E. D. Orr, Frank B. Hamilton, Frank Baker, John E. Steiger, Hattie W. Meyers, Jesse Pettit, J. M. Swinehart, J. J. Anderson, C. H. Werner, E. E. McClain, two.

Our boosters from other states were very active of late. Their activities indicate the growing popularity of the Ohio Socialist among the comrades of other states.

Here's a letter from Comrade G. M. Crocker of Sheridan, Ind. "Last week I visited the Indiana State Office and saw for the first time a copy of your paper, so here's my dollar and for God's sake start the paper quick. I am starving for real news."

Three subscriptions from Louisville, Ky., this week means the Kentucky comrades are with us.

Another letter from Comrade J. D. Reedy of Bickmore, W. Va. "I am enclosing one dollar for subscription, would be glad to help your valuable paper. I was one of the Appeal army until that paper went wrong." Which shows that an appeal to reactionism doesn't appeal to this comrade no more than to many others.

Ben Bloomenburg, State Secretary of Michigan, sends in two yearlies.

Comrade D. H. Bevis of Lutts, Tenn., sends in three yearlies. This is not Comrade Bevis' first boost. We hope to receive more from him.

• • •

Dr. E. L. Smith, secretary of Local Martinsburg, W. Va., mails us three yearlies and an order for party buttons and also fifty copies of the Ohio Socialist.

The Ohio Socialist is now meeting the workers at the Workers Reading Room, at Sistersville, W. Va. This is through the efforts of Comrade G. W. Kirkendall, who sends in one-fifty for subs.

A big boost came in this week from Comrade L. K. England of Moline, Ill. He sends in eighteen three-month subscriptions. Comrade England says that when the readers once read the paper they will subscribe for a longer time.

From Wendell, W. Va., comes four yearlies. Comrade M. Mesich is responsible.

Five dollars for eight, received this week from Comrade Perry Shipman of Rock Island, Ill. He sends us the name of another comrade who will, he says, help put the Ohio Socialist on the map to stay. We are willing.

Three half yearlies are received from Comrade G. F. Willis of Adairsville, Ga.

One subscription each was received by these comrades: W. T. Talley, Bristol, Va.; A. Labash, Kansas City, Kans.; W. G. Dillon, Albuquerque, N. Mex.

BAKER TO SPEAK IN NILES.

Chas. Baker, state organizer of the Socialist Party and one of the three state Socialist officials just released from the Stark County Workhouse, will speak at Masonic hall, 164 Chestnut St., Niles, Ohio, in the evening of Jan. 15. All readers of the Ohio Socialist are invited to attend.

Victory Letters

We publish below a few extracts from the many "victory" letters, which have reached the State Office of the Socialist Party within the last few days. These letters are fairly alive with the spirit of comradeship and the will to proceed immediately with the many tasks at hand to improve our organization and to increase our educational propaganda.

If the stacks of mail which have been received at the State Office lately are any indication, the locals and comrades all over the state, yes, and the nation—are awakening to the immediate need of intensifying Socialist activity. We print these letters in the hope that they will appeal to those locals and comrades who as yet seem to be peacefully slumbering, unaware of what these times portend.

TO MAKE 1919 A HUMMER.

"We had a VERY GOOD meeting last Friday. Took in two new members and everybody present seemed to have the "get-together" spirit. All seemed full of pep. The comrades of Kenmore are ready to make a harder fight than ever before and you can look for very good returns from now on from here. We are all determined to make 1919 a hummer."

FRED W. SEIBERT,
Ohio Socialist Correspondent for Local Kenmore.

HAIL THE NEW ERA.

"We are in need of application cards. Send us 200 at once. Our members are recovering from the war anasthesia. We had a rousing meeting at our local yesterday. Three new members and three new applications. All hail to the New Era which is now rapidly approaching. We are glad some of our fearless comrades are again free to help direct affairs."

EDWIN BLANK, Lima.

HOLDS BIG MEETING.

"Have just been elected literature agent for Local Hamilton. Want 300 copies of Victory Edition. Also send me a list of literature you have on sale.

"Comrade Baker attended our last meeting and was received with a hearty welcome. He gave us a very good talk. We had the largest local meeting we have had in the last two years or more. We are going to hold our city convention, Jan. 5. This is earlier than usual, but things in the world are moving faster than usual, too, so we are for an early start."

JOHN M. CAHALANE, Hamilton.

GOING TO BREAK ALL RECORDS.

"We are glad you are back on the job. We here in Mansfield intend getting back on the job, too. Both the party and the Y. P. S. L. We are organizing into a county local to be known as Local Richmond County. We hape your office passes upon our county constitution favorably. We are anxious to begin the new year right and intend breaking all records for organization and educational work in Mansfield and the county."

E. C. SHOWERS.

IT'S COMING.

"I wish on behalf of Local Hubbard to congratulate you on your being allowed again by the powers that be to assume your duties as State Secretary and I would like to encourage you and all the comrades of Ohio and America with this thought—the world is being made safe for democracy, not by the bourgeois statesmen and politicians, but by the forces of evolution, working through the proletarian masses the world over, and while I am not a prophet, or the son of a prophet, I can see in the near future these forces confounding the efforts, and upsetting the plans of the ruling classes, and ushering in the co-operative commonwealth.

"For a' that, for a' that,
It's coming yet, for a' that,
That man to man, the world o'er Shall brothers be for a' that."

T. H. DAVIES.

WARREN AWAKENS.

Enclosed find list of new subs and money order for $9.60 for which to pay for the seven new subs and 60 dues stamps.

"We had our first meeting last Sunday since the flu ban was lifted, last meeting before the flu ban was on, was in September.

"Since Comrade Bundy left Warren I was made Financial Secretary and will make a report the first of each month. We are going to do a little missionary work and see if we can't get a few ex-Socialists back in the harness. If everything goes as I expect, will send for more stamps in about two weeks, as I am going to try the year in advance stunt."

C. R. SWOPE, Warren.

"Although I have always voted the Socialist ticket and am subscriber to your paper, I have never been a member of the Socialist Party. I am now writing for information as to how to join. I sure have missed a lot in not knowing of your paper before it was called to my attention by my brother."

CHARLES D. HIRST.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH., LEADS THE WAY.

Local Battle Creek, Mich., is conducting a course of lectures. It's a "proletarian course and the subjects are: "Truth About Bolshevism," "Autocracy, Democracy, Mob Rule?" "Shall Brains or Muscle Rule?" The price of each ticket is 50 cents and with each ticket goes a three months' subscription to the Ohio Socialist.

This means that the lectures will not stop when the course ends. All who attend the course will be lectured for three months by the Ohio Socialist. The first remittance for three months' subs from this source was sent in by Laura Reynolds the other day.

Is there a local in Ohio that will follow Battle Creek in its laudable undertaking?

PORTSMOUTH STRIKES HARD.

A fifty dollar remittance from Local Portsmouth only proves that we have said of that local before, namely, that it does everything in a BIG way. "We want to get the comrades to pay up for 1919," writes Wm. L. Mauntel.

BACK AGAIN.

Local Opperman is back in the ranks. Frank Bender, its secretary, who is also secretary of Local 2449 of the United Mine Workers, writes: "Shortly after we organized most all of our comrades were taken into service. Now that the war is over and the flu crisis past, we are going to put Local Opperman on the map again. When you route Charles Baker remember we want an opportunity to hear him. Send dues stamps. Am sending you some Ohio Socialist subs. Will send more in a few days."

Here is advice for all locals. A comrade from Akron who signs himself, "A Coen Truth" for reasons, claims that locals do not get all the good out of their public meetings that they should. Besides the speaking and the sale of literature, every public meeting should be solicited for Ohio Socialist subscriptions, for applications for membership, and the meeting should also provide an opportunity for members to pay their dues, he writes in effect.

DO AS THIS LOCAL DOES

Word comes from F. J. Catlin of Local Youngstown that the local, realizing that the Ohio Socialist subscription list for the city was far too small for credit, elected an Ohio Socialist booster in the person of Comrade H. P. Thumm. His duty will be to solicit all meetings for Ohio Socialist subs. The local also elected a "delinquent committee" composed of Comrades Mrs. Jones, Wm. Richards, Sam Frank, F. J. Catlin, Daniel Dull. Financial Secretary Frow will superintend the work of this committee.

COLUMBUS NEWS NOTES.

On Dec. 26, Local Columbus passed a motion to place at least two names of non-Socialists upon the Ohio Socialist mailing list every week, and that cost of same be paid out of the local treasury.

The committee on Sunday afternoon meeting reported its inability to secure C. E. Ruthenberg for a meeting on Jan. 5. Local talent was substituted in the person of J. L. Backman. The meeting was one of the best ever had. Three applications for membership were secured and eight subscriptions for the Ohio Socialist. Quite a number of members paid their back dues, too.

Propaganda meeting, every second and fourth Sunday of the month, will continue during the winter months.

"I think the events across the sea are having their effect upon the comrades here. Some had faint hearts and had concluded that ours was a lost cause. In shop and on street corners I have worked hard to make the idea prevail that we would come out of it all victorious. Have now called a meeting for Jan. 10. And here is our monthly report."

The letter was a short one. All it contained was "Find enclosed money order for $8.80 for dues stamps. ALL MEMBERS PAID UP FOR THE YEAR 1919." Local North Star is the local and A. G. Deeren is the secretary.

NEW PHILADELPHIA IN A "COME BACK."

"We have been closed up in this city on account of the flu but the ban is off now and I will try to call a meeting and get the members back into good standing." E. C. Glatfelter. And the question arises, are you as good a secretary as Comrade Glatfelter? Are you attending to your business, calling a meeting of your local, collecting back dues?

FROM OUR KNOX COUNTY REPORTER.

P. B. Stroble, our Mt. Vernon and Knox county reporter, sends the State Office the compliments of the season, congratulates the office force upon the great work that has been accomplished in the last year and commends the Ohio Socialist as "the most excellent paper."

"It is the duty of every laboring man, be he factory employe or farmer, to get into the Socialist movement to help overthrow this exploiting system that creates hundreds of millionaires most every year. Why don't millionaires vote the Socialist ticket? Why do workers vote the millionaires ticket?" So writes Comrade Stroble. And the questions he asks are most pertinent.

He also gives his promise to co-operate with the State Office to help in the organization work, not only in Knox county, but also in the adjoining counties.

"An Ohio Socialist daily paper is an imperative necessity. This necessity grows day by day. A little systematic work by the comrades and it can be accomplished. Here is my plan. I will be one of 200 to give $5 each. This thousand dollars will constitute a "nest egg" and will hasten the hatching of a daily." This from Charles Bonsall of Salem. What do you think about it?

The times have been [illegible] for this local and for a [illegible] I almost feared we had [illegible] bottom. Now that the Red Hundred has completed their work according to their pledge, let every one of the members step forward, renew his [illegible] and be ready and willing to continue their duties in the new year.

Let the Red Hundred not think that the work is done, but rather that the members have just prepared for a great year ahead. Why should we falter when the comrades of Kentucky, Virginia and West Virginia and many other states work so earnestly for the Ohio Socialist?

It is inspiring to know that we are at last GETTING TOGETHER. Comrades, one and all—down from the north, up from the south, in from the east and west—in one great army—Workers of the World, Unite!

JUST COMMENTS—BUT

The letter is from L. L. Anliker of Mansfield. He just comments, but his praises are so vociferous that we must pass them on. Says he: "The Ohio Socialist certainly is the best Socialist paper on the market. No other paper has stuck to its principles through the storm as it has. The "Gleanings" and "Letters from the Land of Devil-May-Care," by Reynolds are GREAT. The rapid growth in circulation and pledged support from other states of the Union show the opinion of all thinking Socialists.

"The O. S. surely deserves the support it is receiving. More comrades should awaken to the opportunity before our state paper and give it all their support.

Stand SOLID. Solidarity counts. Look at Russia, Germany, Austria, Hungary and other counties. How did they win out? Only through organization, education and solidarity.

THE CALL

Fellow Workers, for your gain,
Stand united, comrades all.
With red banners high a-floating
Listen to your comrades call.

They are calling you to battle,
Come! In solid ranks array!
And with mighty hosts advancing
Drive plutocracy away.

The Woman's Cause

A DEPARTMENT FOR WOMEN WHO THINK.

The Mother of Humanity

By LAURA JIM REYNOLDS
(Written for The Ohio Socialist)
PART III.

The spectators, who had marched into the Hall of the Law Givers awaited the decision of one satisfied sex toward a dissatisfied sex, on the question, "Votes for Women." They were animatedly conversing in low tones, when the strange figure who seemed all in herself, yet a part of each spectator, stirred like one awakening from a dream. There clung to her the air of one with a vague far-off ancestry and of an ever onward flow of life.

As she drew her hands across her ofttimes sad and sometimes glad eyes her gaze wandered from the living to the Unseen Ones, resting on a serious face framed in dark curls. Her eyes brightened with fond recollection. It was the firm face of the intrepid Frances Wright, who, when a maid of sixteen, heard in her Scottish home, of a land across the ocean where political justice and equality reigned.

She felt a longing to go to that glorious country.

Six years later her longing was gratified, when, in 1820, she set out to see the land of the free.

Alas! that distance lends enchantment to the view. She found one race murdered and driven from its native heath, another race in chattle slavery, and, a third whose men were "people" but whose women were something inferior.

The young visitor was puzzled that "the laws of nature and nature's god did not entitle a decent respect to the opinions" of Eve's daughters, whereas, "nature's god" was on the side of Adam's sons, who held "these truths to be self-evident." Her feminine brain was greatly perplexed that while "all men are created equal." the mothers of men, like Topsy, "just growed."

Of the three races, that Frances Wright found in the land of the free, the men of one race were "endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights," which positively "their creator" did not give to the mothers who gave their vitality and many times their lives that those "endowed by their creator," might be born.

Among these "certain and inalienable rights," were "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," for that race of men "endowed by their creator."

The women had the right to a life of weaving, candle making, giving birth to baby people and others, sewing, mending, staying on a pedestal, washing, soapmaking, cooking and similar rounds of gay life.

They also had the liberty of obeying their husbands, "the people."

In pursuit of happiness the progressive women banded together in a "woman's rights" movement.

Not daunted by the disillusioning facts forced on her, Frances Wright bravely remained to help make real the righ sounding phrases of equality.

Through a forest of prejudice, she broke the path for the woman lecturer on political questions. Hers was not an easy task. Custom and the church beset her path with many hardships and perils. Though women before her had insisted on public utterances regarding religious beliefs, she was the first woman to travel from state to state denouncing black slavery and the social status of the white women.

The lack of schooling for girls and the stay-at-home work of the women deprived that part of the race, who were not people, from the opportunity of learning how to think and shut them off from new ideas. This uneducated womanhood, giving the clergy unquestioned obedience, was an easy victim to the superstitions and false beliefs exhorted from the pulpits.

Had it not been for the vigilance of free thinkers, like the maid from Scotland, this republic would have paid dearly for not heeding Abigail Adam's cry, "Send the girls to school."

The keenness of Frances Wright's perception was shown in 1828, when the churchmen to make secure the already failing power of the church by uniting it with the state, flaunted "The Christian Party in Politics."

Though her life was continually endangered by the church fanatics she resolutely fought this great menace. Never did her voice ring so clear and loud as when traveling through the middle and western states, she pointed out the rock upon which the ship of state might be wrecked.

She explained how the church was using the uneducated and therefore pliable woman. The enraged clergy hurled their time-worn invectives of "infidel," "unbeliever," and she, ninety years ago, in words that ring true today, replied:

"The injury and inconvenience of every kind and every hour to which, in these days, a really consistent reformer stands exposed, none can conceive but those who experience them. Such become, as it were, excommunicated after the fashion of the old Catholic Mother Church, removed even from the protection of law, such as it is, and from the sympathy of Society, for whose sake they consent to be crucified."

In the gladness of her heart she beheld the many educated women who were not only lecturers on the public platform but pioneers of the "silent forum" from which they held aloft their purple and white banners, inscribed, "Votes for Women."

BRAIN TEASERS

By State Organizer Tom J. Lewis.

Be careful and don't agitate or predict the possibilities of unemployment or hard times, when the soldiers and sailors are demobilized. Because, should it happen that many may suffer hunger and unlooked for hardships they won't know it if some agitator or busybody doesn't tell them.

"Let well enough alone," is a suggestion oft heard, when a person makes a kick or a complaint, but it is those who are well enough fixed, that generally say it. At times a cheap, ignorant and satisfied slave parrots the saying, little realizing the kick is made because conditions are such for the workers. Well enough is impossible.

It is a common suggestion in daily papers now a days that when the soldiers get back to go back to the land. They must be taken care of, so they can take care of themselves. They fought to save the country, it belongs to them; consequently they should take what they want and not allow politicians, profiteers and business interests to dictate, having neglected to prepare a proper reconstruction while the boys were fighting to make the world safe for democracy.

Common news, robbery, thefts and holdups, and not one Socialist among all the captured criminals; yet the A. P. L.'s are continually watching us. Why not help the police department and do some good for the country?

Don't wear a red necktie or red underwear, and for goodness sake don't blush out loud, or somebody may charge you with being a Bolshevist.

Laws are being passed against displaying the red flag. We hope they won't forget to remove them from behind wagons and trucks, also where ditches are being dug, further, stop it being waved at wailroad crossings, and at blasting places. Autos should not be allowed to display red lights and all the red light districts should be closed. In fact, red should be eliminated as a color. You know red is an accepted color to denote there's danger near. That's the reason some don't want to see it, until something hoppens, then they'll have the same excuse as the ostrict, which sticks his head in the sand. Prohibiting the red flag will not make the workers contented, flags don't make or unmake conditions; they are but symbolic.

A "Thank You" from Hitchcock

A. L. Hitchcock sends a "thank you" to the many comrades who remembered him Christmas day. Wahlstedts, L., Strombergs, Linker, S. and E., Jensens, C. A. Hoocker, Ruthenbergs, J. M. Cahalane of Hamilton, Jessie J. Rufner, John A. Rehm of Springfield, Beatrict Sedgewick of Delaware are all included. He writes that he received three boxes of cigars, and that he only knows the sender of one, and that is Stromberg. We have a suspicion that as soon as Hitchcock learns that John Rehm is a cigar maker he will know who sent another box, and as for the third box—who is guilty?

"[illegible] will have to send or bring the [illegible]s home as silk socks are not [illegible] thing to wear in the shoes [illegible]ere. These shoes are made to [illegible]body's feet, and I am fortunate [illegible] to have feet that fit anybody's [illegible], so it is 50-50, but silk socks—[illegible]y will not fit. Had many beautiful cards from the comrades.

"We bought extra stuff and my cell mate received a box with oranges, apples and nuts, also a big nut cake and we have had a time to dispose of all of it. I stick out so far in front that I cannot close my belt any more. I shall have to get a long rope to reach around me. Sent my Christmas letter to Scott Nearing, so he will hear direct. He has been very faithful in writing. We had a very good dinner Christmas. Since Georgia is a great oyster shipping state we had Chicago turkey. You know the birds that made Chicago famous. But these were raised here on the farm. So pork sausage, mashed potatoes with gravy, apple sauce, banana, apple and stewed corn, lots of good bread and [illegible] and a big piece of cake with [illegible] on it. You know when I say a big piece of cake it was big. The bread is always good. The best I ever had away from home. We have had ice here in the mornings since Christmas, but it warms up during the day. Fine sap weather and one morning a suspicion of snow. The first Tom had seen in fifteen years, but the least I had seen in more than that long. However, I never have to go down cellar to look after the furnace either at night or in the morning, so there are some compensations here. Also no stove pipes to put up or take down. I went shopping the other day for shoes. No asking the price or looking for an hour over his stock, just got the nearest fit and best he had, and go out. No window shopping here, so it would not be popular with the ladies. At present I am at work on a new addition to the altar in the chapel. I find cabinetwork in demand here, and though I am not an A-1 cabinet maker I get along very well and like it. It is nearly all bench work.

Again I am not elated with the elections in England. I had hoped for something big, and perhaps it is bigger than I think, but it don't look big to a man up a tree or in —— However, I am glad to know that people are awakening all over the world. The reports from all over seem to be that work is very slack. Detroit is warning even soldiers away. Quite a change of front is it not? And very significant, too. I guess this will be a good place for a while, at least I have a job and eats, clean bed, clothes, etc. If it was not for you I would not have a care in the world.

Again many thanks for all the lovely remembrances and letters from the many friends.

A. L. HITCHCOCK.

How will the preachers square themselves with their congregation now that the war is over and Christmas so near? "Peace on earth, good will toward men." What about the women, are not they counted in the deal?

LYING ABOUT THE BOLSHEVIKI

The Cleveland Press is smoother and shrewder in its service to the exploiting class than most of the kept newspapers of the country. Such papers as the Plain Dealer, which boldly lie about and denounce working class measures and movements are not a serious danger to the workers' cause. The reason for their spleen is apparent.

The "Press," however, poses as a radical newspaper and at times publishes harmless radical news articles and editorials. It adopts an attitude of seeming fairness toward the working class movement. All this, in order to more efficiently serve the exploiting class, through deluding the workers.

A fine example of these tactics was presented in the "Press" article, published last week, making a survey of the meaning of Bolshevism. While pretending fairness and candor in dealing with the subject, this article subtly injected the poison of misrepresentation in the minds of the readers of the "Press."

The following questions and answers from the article mentioned will serve to illustrate its tactics:

What is their program (the Bolsheviki)?

They propose to abolish private property and private profits. They would not only seize the railroads, telegraph and mines, etc., but also the farms, homes and personal property of all the people—in the name of the state.

The answer contains some truth, and poison, too. In stating that Bolsheviki have seized "the farms, homes and personal property" the "Press" endeavors to arouse the prejudice of the farmer and home owner against the Bolsheviki. It doesn't say that the "farms" that have been seized are the great estates of the land owners and that the purpose of such seizure is to apportion the land among the peasants of Russia. It doesn't say, that while land cannot be bought, sold or mortgaged in Russia, the Soviet government has guaranteed every person who wishes to till the soil the opportunity to do so, and that each person who produces wealth upon the soil by his own labor is given secure possession of the land which he tills.

Are the Soviets democratic?

In theory, yes; but not in practice. Only those who favor the Soviet form of government can vote. Opponents to the Soviets have no say in the government. The men in control of the Soviets wants everything owned by the government. The Soviets have voted to abolish private property. Even a workman who owns his home or small farm can be dispossessed.

"Only those who favor the Soviet form of government can vote," we are told, and this is supposed to be an argument against the Soviet government. That is equivalent to saying about the United States that only those who favor the republican form of government can vote. The republican form of government is established in this country. Those who want to vote must vote in accordance with the rules of the republican government. If a person doesn't like the republican form of government and therefore refuses to conform to the conditions it prescribes and thus secure the right to participate in it, that is his lookout. In Russia the Soviet form of government is established and those who won't conform to its rules because they don't like it, can't vote.

"The Soviets have voted to abolish all private property" is an out and out lie. For instance, the decree of the Soviet government repudiating internal and foreign debts of the old regime particularly specifies that provision shall be made to safeguard against loss those persons who hold 10,000 rubles, (about $5,000 before the war), or less of the bonds of Russia, provided that the sum invested in these bonds was earned through their own labor, and the decree in regard to the nationalization of banks is emphatic in specifying that saving bank deposits shall remain inviolate.

Are the Bolsheviki in majority?

No. They are merely a majority faction of one party, and in Russia, there are half a dozen parties. The Social Democrats were not even the largest party; but the extremists in this party and in the Social-Revolutionary party, together swung the votes to overthrow the old style congress and put the Soviets in power.

They are not in the majority but they swung enough votes (which means a majority of the voters) to put themselves in power! What sort of reasoning is that? According to that kind of reasoning the followers of Lloyd George, who swung enough votes to elect a majority of the English parliament are not in a majority in England. And the followers of Harry L. Davis, who secured the support of a majority of the voters of Cleveland, are not in the majority in Cleveland. That is mud, pure and simple.

What gives the Soviets strength?

Terrorism. The Bolsheviki have invoked the "red terror" against those who plot to overthrow the Soviet government. The Bolsheviki machine rules with an iron hand over great masses of unorganized workers and peasants.

A lie, disproven by the "Press's" own acknowledgment that the Bolsheviki swung a majority of the voters. The power of the Soviet government rests upon the support of the great masses of Russian workers and peasants, who see in it the only hope of better things for them. The so-called "red terror" did not begin until the Allies began their invasion of Russia, and is nothing more than the legal execution of plotters against the Soviet government, such as England carried out in Ireland, for instance, after the Easter Rebellion, and such as every government in the world has resorted to under similar circumstances.

Are the Bolsheviki pro-German?

There is no doubt that the Bolsheviki, whether purposely or not, played into the hands of German imperialism when they signed the separate peace of Brest-Litovsk.

The "Press" knows as well as we know that the Soviet government signed the peace of Brest Litovsk only because it had no alternate course. The Russian army had broken down and was in the process of disintegration because of the betrayal of the officials of the czar and the work of the Kerensky government. The Soviet government, according to a responsible authority (the statement has not been denied by the government of the United States, although the State Department has been asked directly whether it was true), offered to continue the war against Germany before signing the Brest Litovsk treaty, if the United States would furnish supplies and technical help. It asked that the transportation system of Russia be taken over by American engineers, so that Russian artillery might be saved from falling in the hands of Germany. But to these offers it did not even receive a reply. It offered to turn the Black Sea fleet over to British officers, because it could not trust the officers of the old regime in command and did not want the fleet to fall in the hands of the Germans, but England took no action in regard to this offer. Lenine and other officials of the Soviet government have consistently denounced the Brest Litovsk treaty as a "robber's peace." The statement that the Bolsheviki were at any time pro-German in their leaning is a bald-faced falsehood circulated by the kept press in order to prejudice the people of this country against them.

Thus does the apparent fairness of the "Press" appear when analyzed.

unique position in the animal kingdom. Neither his individualism nor his communism fitted him as a tool manipulating animal. Mans erect position and the mechanical adaptation of his hands fitted him peculiarly as a toolusing animal. How he came by his erect posture, and the perfection of his hands, or rather forefeet, is most likely due to the fortuity of his environment.

Had he not been chased up the trees by his more powerful neighbors, and thus compelled to develop his fore limbs in grappling and had it not been for the fact that his stature among the limbs of the trees peculiarly suited him to assume an erect posture, from which the erect posture in time became a natural one, the race might have yet been in the monkey stage, notwithstanding man, to start with, had within him the peculiar generic possibility of reaching his present plane of development, a potentiality which most probably even his cousin monkies do not possess. When man learned, and was by development fitted to wield a club, he came down from the trees and batted the very devil out of his old enemies.

He now became a cave dweller, but was not yet much of a man. He had the physique but he lacked brain development. He had the muscle but his mind had been kept starved to attain it. He had conquered his large enemies, but the little enemies who inhabited his hair and the microbes that fed on his vitals he could not get at with his club. It was only after man had discovered the use of fire, which discovery was most probably purely accidental, that man could conserve the necessary energy to devote to mental development. Nature preserves the organism at all cost, and in an environment in which there is a dearth of nutriment to feed all faculties, those faculties are first starved that contribute least to the preservation of life.

Later on, when many of the race had rid themselves of their body parasites (some jailors have not learned this yet), man started on his conquering career in full swing. During savagery his communal instincts were ascendent, and he lived happy. Later on when the cunning and unscrupulous of the race had evolved barbarism, and slavery, prostitution and war for spoils were introduced, individualism as we know it had its rise. Its despotism, and its wanton and unfeeling disregard for the subject classes no doubt has driven the race forward along the lines of purely material achievement, but it has starved and thwarted man's ethical and moral sensibilities.

And now that the mechanical problems of life have been solved, by whatsoever means, and man, after long ages of despotism and oppression at the hands of the cunning and unscrupulous of his kind is beginning to see the dawn, he is rising in his might and rending his fetters, which after all were only fetters of the mind, and now he proposes to regain his lost heritage, enriched by the fruits of his age long pain and re-establish the dominion of peace on earth and industrial equity and democracy by a scientific blending of the communal and individual principals, summed up as "Socialism."

And Dr. Clark and his kind would stop this epochal consummation and turn back the clock of progress with his little moonbeam labeled "science." He had as well try to stop a freight train with a horse-hair!

Russia and the American Press

class), it can readily be seen that Peters scarcely dropped from "physican exhaustion" after affixing his signature twenty-three times. On other days he was required to sign twelve, or eight, or five death warrants, which to a revolutionist who has experienced the "discomforts" of the czar's prison regime and who is fighting against its restoration is a mere bagatelle. He has risked his life in the battle against autocratic tyranny and he rightly considers that its champions must either win or perish. The following, which is reprinted from the official Moscow Izvestia of July 13, is a typical announcement of the sort that one occasionally reads in the Russian press:

"During the night of July 12, by order of the Extraordinary Commission for the Suppression of the Counter-Revolution, ten leaders of the counter-revolutionary organization, the Union for the Salvation of the Fatherland and the Revolution, were shot. The reasons for this execution is that recent reports from the provinces state that agents to the abovenamed organization instigated partial armed outbreaks against the Soviet government. These reports, combined with the fact, recently established, that the chief staff of this organization was working out a plan for a general armed uprising, have extremely aggravated the situation, especially in view of the latest events.

"Experience has shown that the imprisonment of members of this criminal society does not attain the purpose, as, possessing an enormous amount of money, this society organizes their escape from the prisons, and they continue their criminal activity. The armed mutiny which was in the process of preparation threatened also the lives of many people among the peaceful population, and, therefore, the Extraordinary Commission for the Suppression of the Counter-Revolution decided to exterminate the counter-revolutionary organization at the very root and treat the leaders as open enemies caught with arms in their hands. The following persons, all former officers, have been executed: 1, General Popoff; 2, B. Pokrovsky; 3, Sidoroff (alias Aveyeff); 4, Dushak; 5, Kolenko; 6, Rosenfeld (alias Rosanoff); 7, Algin (alias Gertzik); 8, Ilvovsky; 9, Belooussoff; 10, Floroff."

In justice to the Bolsheviks it must be said that they do not show partiality in the matter of executions, and accord similar treatment to their own comrades when the latter commit crimes which, according to the Bolshevik legal code, are just as heinous as treason. Hans Vorst, the Moscow correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt, whose description of the activity of the Extraordinary Commission was reprinted in the New York Times of Dec. 1, says:

"It should be mentioned that the Extraordinary Commissions proceed with the same severity as against the bourgeoisie against the abuses and dishonesty among the Soviet officials themselves. Among the lists of those shot one occasionally runs across reports like this: 'Commissary X. Y. Z., for drunkenness and misconduct," or "Y. Z., member of such and such Soviet, for drunkenness and other crimes.' This list is already lengthy of the Soviet officials who have been shot for bribery and extortion."

Our total ignorance of conditions in Russia and our hunger for news from that country explain the aviditw with which we swallow all interviews with former generals, erstphile princes, and British merchants who "escape" from Petrograd or Moscow in a first-class compartment of the wagons-lits and vie with one another in their recitals of the blood-curdling deeds of the murderous Bolsheviks. One of these fortunate individuals was asked in the midst of his narrative for a definition of Bolshevik, and he replied that the root of the word meant "chaos." The reporter was much satisfied with this learned definition and recorded it for the public's information.

May one suggest that in this era of reconstruction, when various policies are put forward—from the radical program of the British Labor Party to the very conservative proposal of the American Manufacturers' Association to lower wages and extend working hours—the American press would be greatly benefited by the abilition of yellow journalism and a slight change in the personnel of its foreign correspondents? Europe is shaken by a succession of revolutions. Empires and dynasties are crumbling to the dust. In place of autocracy and feudalism democracies are set up. Great mass movements are shaking the very foundations of the modern political and economic order. Intelligent observation and fair discrimination are essential to a proper understanding of the developments in the Old World, so that the New World may learn the lesson of history and not repeat the mistakes of the past. And the raising of the intellectual level of our correspondents in Europe, particularly in Russia, would be an important step in the educational reconstruction of this country.

THE STATISTICIAN.

Youngstown, O., Dec. 23, '18

To the Local Secretaries and the "class-conscious" members of the Socialist Party of Ohio:

The world awakening of the proletaire is now going on all about us. Let us hope that this awakening will permeate our own locals to an increased activity throughout the next year—1919—the year that will eclipse that of 1918 for "surprises" and "proletarian advances."

Propaganda and a lot of it, will increase membership and Socialistic education of the working class. Certain locals must again increase their activities to hold an equal share in the class struggle now going on. Locals reveal their class-conscious nature by the amount of propaganda distribution.

The Socialist Party locals are primarily organized for this purpose and those locals that do not distribute literature, hold lecture meetings, etc., have no excuse for existence. A local is guaged by the "new spirit" it instills into the workers of its own city. A member of the Socialist Party, that helps finance the movement, takes an active part in each and every question of the day, in his local, is worth five Socialist Party ticket voters, unquestionably.

The Ohio Local Secretaries please call the attention of your various locals to the following figures:

Local New Bremen has one duespaying member to every 42 inhabitants in its city. WHAT DOES IT MEAN? Other locals line up as follows, and it tells its own story:

Hubbard has one to every 50 population; Niles has one to every 112 population; Continental has one to every 180 population; Hamilton has one to every 120 population; Mt. Healthy has one to every 140 population; Wadsworth has one to every 220 population; Mansfield has one to every 280 population; Conneaut has one to every 260 population; Youngstown has one to every 2[illegible] population; Cleveland has one to every 2[illegible] population; Akron has one to every 310 population; Toledo has one to every 420 population; Sandusky has one to every 500 population; Mt. Vernon has one to every 505 population; East Liverpool has one to every 670 population; Zanesville has one to every 700 population; Barberton has one to every 910 population; Columbus has one to every 1,210 population.

Those locals at the bottom of this list should take heed and increase their work according to the demands of their vicinity.

Increase number of lecture meetings, distribute your quota of the Ohio Socialist and take your place in the World Revolution.

There is one censor the party should believe in and that is to discourage the "riff-raff" journals that are asking financial aid and distribution throughout our locals. The Literature of the Social Revolution must of necessity measure up to the standard or be disregarded by every Revolutionary Socialist.

Financiers of the Socialist Party.

How many has your local? The reports for November gives 1,509 good standing members of a roll of 2,594. Only 27 locals reported.

An efficiency of .582.

Is your local numerated among them? If not, inquire the reason why, from your financial secretary at the next meeting!

Good Standing Membership.

Local Portage County is the month's model local. It has attained a 1.000 in paid-up membership and .333 in increase of membership. The monthly test is only 5 per cent., or one new member to every 20 in good standing. Can your local equal Portage County's record?

Free Speech Hit by "Guilty" Verdict Against Socialists

By DAVID KARSNER.

Free speech, free press and free assemblage received the worst blow they have ever suffered in America, Wednesday afternoon, when a jury before Judge Londis, in the federal court, returned a "guilty" verdict against the five national Socialist officials, Victor L. Berger, Adolph Germer, J. Louis Engdahl, Irwin St. John Tucker and William F. Kruse.

"Guilty!" of carrying on the work of the American Socialist movement, through speeches and written articles, that is the verdict of the jury in the trial of the five national officials of the Socialist Party of the United States, who had placed faith in the first article of the bill of rights of the American constitution.

The jury deliberated the case four hours and fifty minutes, after listening to testimony and argument for nearly five weeks.

Shortly before 5 o'clock, with the corridors packed with hundreds of persons, the bailiff moved from his chair. He called for the defendants and their attorneys. There was a rustle among the crowd as the five Socialists and their lawyers pushed their way through the throng.

These men stand today convicted in the United States district court of struggling to bring Socialism to America, the technical charge being that they conspired to thwart energies of the government in its war with the Imperial German government.

Make Motion for New Trial.

The penalty for violation of the Espionage Law is from one to twenty years' imprisonment at the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas, and a fine not to exceed ten thousand dollars.

Immediately after the verdict was read by Joseph O'Sullivan, clerk to Judge Kenesaw M. Landis, a motion for a new trial was made by Seymour Stedman, chief counsel for the convicted Socialists.

Judge Landis set January 23 as the date for hearing motions, and continued the bail of the five convicted men.

The Verdict is Given.

When the bailiff indicated that the jury was ready to report the throng pushed forward. Reporters were admitted after the attorneys and defendants had taken their seats.

The bailiff walked briskly to the door of the jury room. The talesmen strolled in. Several walked with heads bent, eyes looking toward the ground, and their hands clasped behind them. There was no mistake what their decision was. It was written upon the face of each man. They did not look at either the defendants or their lawyers.

Judge Landis was called from the chambers. He mounted the bench. His voice was husky as he asked the jury if they had agreed upon a verdict. There was a unanimous "we have."

Hendee is Foreman.

"Read the verdict, Mr. Clerk," snapped Judge Landis.

H. L. Hendee, 70 years old, retired fruit dealer of Waukegan, Ill., handed a slip of paper to the clerk.

"We the jury find Victor L. Berger, Adolph Germer, J. Louis Engdahl, William F. Kruse and Irwin St. John Tucker guilty as charged in the indictment," read O'Sullivan.

Reporters dashed for the door, but were halted by the marshal. The judge was speaking. Attorney Stedman asked that the jury be polled. Each rose in his seat and declared that the verdict just read was his.

Landis Thanks Jurors.

Judge Landis then offered the usual thanks to the jurors for the service which they had rendered.

The jury then filed out of the room. As they marched down the aisle they must have heard the sobbing of a few women who could not restrain their tears.

Berger, Germen, Engdahl, Kruse and Tucker took the verdict calmly and with dignity. Not a word escaped their lips when their fate was sealed by the reading of a scrap of paper.,

Yet, I know that several of them were dealt a shocking blow. They had not expected a conviction. A few moments before the jury came in Berger said to me, "The jury cannot convict me of this charge." Kruse thought there would be a disagreement.

I did not hear the personal opinions of either Germer or Tucker, but Engdahl was not greatly surprised.

A few moments after the motions were made, the convicted men left the courtroom accompanied by their wives. The great marbled court room once more became the tomb that contained the ghost of the spirits that had held common counsel and fellowship therein for five weeks.

It was the same court room that seemed to be haunted by the memory of the great trial of the Industrial Workers of the World whose conviction was secured only a few short months ago.

The doors slammed, a key turned in the lock, and it seemed that something intangible, something big and brave had been locked in that judicial sepulchre.

Flying the Red Flag

Editorial from the Australian Worker

There are more ways than one of flying the Red Flag.

Over in Europe it is streaming on every breeze, and the sun and the moon shine upon it, and it is wet with the rain and the dew.

It floats above palaces that once housed the pride of kings, and from the masts of battleships that were the instruments or despotism.

In those lands the Red Flag is the symbol of DEMOCRACY'S TRIUMPH and the multitudes salute it with glad hearts, for it means that the TYRANNY OF THE CAPITALIST SYSTEM DRAWS TO A CLOSE, and that the hour of the Fraternal Commonwealth has arrived.

It is easy to fly the Red Flag in that part of the world for two hundred millions acclaim it as their own, and it is surrounded with the sanction of the only law that matters—the consent of the common people.

But even in Australia the Red Flag can be flown. Willy Watt (Acting Prime Minister) has said it shall not be done. He has made it an offence to raise it over any building or display it in any public place.

I am not sure whether you can be hanged or shot for it; but anyhow, to fly the Red Flag is a crime by the will of Watt, and should you dare to do it, look out for the dire consequences of his displeasure.

All the same, THE RED FLAG FLIES IN AUSTRALIA AT THE PRESENT MOMENT!

And what is more, if there were ten thousand Willy Watts, armed with ten thousand War Precautions Acts, they could not tear it down or punish those who fly it!

It is in the HEARTS and MINDS OF THE WORKERS that the Red Flag is flying. It is safe there. The jingoes may put up their noses and howl, but they cannot touch it; it is out of reach of their defiling paws.

Serene and splendid it is unfurled in the thoughts and aspirations of the working class; and when the dust blows over the political graves of the little tyrants who now misgovern Australia, the Red Flag will still be fyling, for it symbolizes two great and indestructable forces—Labor and Liberty.

Socialism Invades Brittany

For the first time in French history big Socialist meetings are being held in Brittany, the stronghold of the monarchists, according to a special correspondent of the New York Call.

This correspondent adds that "the signing of the armistice was the signal for huge demonstrations in the labor centers of Perigueux, Saint Etienne and Clermont-Ferrand."

Paul Wallace Hanna, sent to Europe by the New York Call to report the peace conference at Versailles, writes under date of December 15, regarding the program of the French Socialist movement:

"Jean Lonquet is today the principal speaker at a great mass meeting held at Clermont-Ferrand to demand the release of the May strikers and of all political prisoners in the republic. This demand, coupled with that for immediate demobilization, withdrawal of French troops from Russia, open diplomacy and no economic war after the war, constitute the immediate activities of the French Socialist movement.

Swedish Labor Divides on Bolshevism

"Common Sense," a radical London organ, contains the following news item regarding Sweden in an issue just received:

In Sweden, though wages are fairly high, the food shortage has been and still is severe; and it has been much more continuously "exposed" to Bolshevik propaganda than any other Scandinavian country. The extreme left of the Labor party is now more or less openly republican and revolutionary; but the program of the majority Socialists and Labor Unions, led by Hjalmar Branting, is strictly reformist. Apparently the real division is between the town workers who are republican, and the agricultural voters, who are not.

Unemployment Crisis Growing

Reports from 115 industrial communities received by the Department of Labor by telegraph on December 24 show unemployment in 36 large cities, equality of supply and demand in 58, and employers seeking help in only 21. A month ago similar telegrams from 106 of these cities showed unemployment in only 11 cases, supply and demand approximately equal in 68, and marked labor shortage in 27.

Two months ago the Department of Labor estimated the labor shortage of the nation at the stupendous figure of 1,000,000 workers. In eight weeks time this shortage has disappeared entirely. Conservative estimates give the number of wage earners in war occupations who are yet to be "cast loose on the labor market" at 3,000,000.

U. S. Labor Says —Keep Roads

Every indication points to the labor unions as the leaders in the movement for having the government retain the railroads. Members of the House Interstate Commerce Committee at Washington are receiving government ownership petitions daily from unions throughout the country.

North Dakota to Establish State Market

By majorities ranging from 15,000 to 30,000, ten amendments, voted up on in connection with the recent gubernatorial elections, have just been declared carried by the State Canvassing Board. The Legislature is now empowered to issue bonds guaranteed by the state for the erection of public-owned terminal elevators and warehouses and other facilities calculated to give North Dakota a public market for farm products controlled by the people. The state can also now establish a state rural credit bank and state hail insurance. Liberal provision is made for the initiative and referendum in connection with these measures, so that North Dakota can in effect not carry out any program of state owned and operated marketing facilities and utilities without each step being approved by a majority of the people.

New Child Labor Bill Proposed

Senate opponents of Child Labor, whose efforts were temporarily frustrated by the act of the Supreme Court in declaring the Federal Anti-Child Labor Law of 1916 unconstitutional, have secured the approval of the Senate for an amendment to the Revenue bill which places an extra tax of 10 per cent. on profits made from child labor. The vote stood 50 to 12, the opposition coming almost entirely from representatives of the Southern cotton milling states. This fact is interesting when taken in connection with a recent assertion of the National Child Labor Committee, to the effect that child labor has increased considerably in the south since the law of 1916 was declared unconstitutional. That the increase of child labor is not confined, however, to the southern state, appears from figures compiled by the Pennsylvania Child Labor Association, according to which the number of children in industry in Pennsylvania [illegible]

ONE BIG UNION FOR AUSTRALIA

A gigantic project for uniting the 600 unions of Australia in one big union has recently been carried as a result of labor congresses in New South Wales, South Australia and Victoria. The new combination will bear the name "Workers' Industrial Union of Australia." There will be six departments: Manufacture and General Production, Building and Construction, Mining, Transportation and Communication, Civil Service and Public Utilities and Agricultural, Land and Fisheries. According to the Christian Science Monitor, "each department is to consist of as many divisions as may be necessary to meet industrial requirements. There will also be subdivisions consisting of those engaged in kindred or closely allied occupations. Continuing the classification, the scheme provides that there shall be sections and mixed sections, the former for persons following the same industry, and the latter for persons engaged in various industries or occupations of the same locality where there are not sufficient of any one calling to form a subdivision or section."

Under the new scheme the highest governing body consists of two delegates from each of the six departments and a president and general secretary, who together constitute the grand council. Similarly there is a provincial council for each state. Then there are further divisional councils and trade sectional committees. Each of the six departments is again subdivided under a thoroughly worked out grouping system. Provision is made for practically every grade of workers in the community, whether he be a worker with his hand or brain.

The initial proposal for the One-Big-Union plan came from the Labor Council of Sydney, N. S. W., which set forth that under the existing craft system there were 237,714 organized workers in the state and 472,198 unorganized workers.

The Sydney laborites scored their first victory in August last, when the Trades Union Congress of New South Wales adopted the scheme for the One-Big-Union.

Considerable doubt was expressed as to whether the Congress of Victoria Unions would follow in the lead of New South Wales. But here, too, the proponents of the One-Big-Union idea scored an overwhelming victory, the resolution being agreed to by a vote of 111 to 24. The oldest craft unions were opposed to the idea, but they were completely swept aside by such large aggregations as the building trades, the railway workers and the Australian Workers Union.

CANADA

Labor Demands Withdrawal From Russia.

As a result of an appeal to the labor movement of Canada, initiated by the Trades and Labor Council of Vancouver, B. C., a resolution against intervention by Canada in Russia's internal affairs has been passed by Canada's three largest central labor bodies of unions affiliated with the A. F. of L., viz., the Winnipeg Trades and Labor Council, the Toronto District Labor Council, and the Vancouver Trades and Labor Council. A demand for a withdrawal of troops was made at a largely attended convention of the Quebec section of the Labor Party of Canada, in Montreal.

BRAZIL

Cotton Workers Gain Right to Unite.

The labor movement of Brazil has gone beyond the propaganda stage. The textile industry, the basis of the garment industry, centers in and around Rio Janeiro, some of the largest textile mills in the world being located there. The workers, who are banded together in the "Union of Operatives," sent their demands to the manufacturers organized in the Centro Industrial de Brazil. The terms were accepted after some parleying, and the industry became organized. While wages are not mentioned, the principle of union recognition is definitely established, and thus an entering wedge secured. A weekly schedule of 56 hours is agreed to.

URUGUAY

General Strike Threatened.

As a part of the epidemic of labor disturbances now sweeping over Central and South America, news comes from Montevideo that a general strike is threatening. This fact has resulted in the government's calling upon the military forces under date of December 27 to be prepared for mobilization at any time against the strikers.

ARGENTINA

Socialist Conferees Chosen.

Juan Justo, Socialist leader in the Argentine Chamber of Deputies, and his colleague, Detomasso, have been appointed by the Socialist Party to attend the coming International Socialist Congress in Europe.

CUBA

Workers on Political General Strike.

A general strike is on in Cuba. It was precipitated as a sympathetic walkout to aid the railroad workers on the Cuba railroad. Although the railroad workers won, the general strike continues, the demands being largely of a political and not of an economic nature. The abolition of compulsory military service, and the abrogation of laws permitting the deportation of "foreigners" who are "agitators" are demanded. The employers now threaten American intervention.

French Socialists and the International Situation

The central organ of the French Socialists, l'Humaniste, writes as follows on the threatened allied military campaign against Russia:

"All those who contributed to provoke and prolong the war are alarmed at the awakening of the masses * * * and demand that the centers of the people's revolution should be promptly suppressed. Their anxiety is no longer to conquer the enemy, but to preserve from the revolutionary peril the capitalist bourgeoisies of all countries. They know that the Russian Bolsheviks have destroyed monarchic and capitalist privileges, have placed their hands upon the property of social parasites. Anything sooner than that! Their hatred of the enemy is giving place to the desire of coming to an understanding with him, so as to bar the advance of this scourge, which is worse, in their eyes, than war or pestilence. * * * That a new war * * * should be undertaken tomorrow—a war waged by the international counter-revolution, a crusade against the peoples who are progressing toward political and economic enfranchisement—this is possible; but surprises await the initiators of such an adventure. They will no longer be able to plead the necessities of national defense, and the necessities of capitalist defense are not of a nature to rouse the enthusiasm of the masses. On the contrary, the workers will perceive clearly that they are being thrown against one another only in order that their chains may be riveted, and the domination of their masters consolidated."

Le Populaire, the organ of the majority Socialists, reflects as follows on the prevalent policy toward Germany:

"The French press is divided between its hatred of Kaiserism and its animosity to Socialism. Between a Kaiserism which would destroy all liberties and a Socialism which would ruin all privileges, their choice is made in advance. They are discovering latent sympathies with the deposed monarchs who, after all, maintained a certain social order—or disorder—and there are too many points of resemblance between German absolutism and the Czarism which our greater journals have—not without credit—extolled, for them to deny to the former all the respect they gave to the latter. How keep the Austrian and German revolutions within the boundary which divides a [illegible]

Lima Socialsts Win Legal Battle

Judge Upholds Freedom of Speech

Because the Socialists Party of Lima, was twice refused the use of Memorial Hall (which was built for public use by public funds) for meetings for Eugene V. Debs, because they were Socialist meetings, the local, through Attorney Edwin Blank, carried the case into court.

The case was tried in the Court of Common Pleas of Allen County before Judge J. Klinger, who in his decision upheld the rights of the Socialists to the use of the hall upon the same conditions as others. His remarks from the bench upholding the rights of Free Speech and Free Press are especially significant at this time, because halls have been denied Socialists at so many other points. The Socialist Party of Lima is justified in feeling elated at its victory over the politicians and liberty killers of Allen County.

We quote excerpts from the decision of Judge Klinger as follows:

* * * Our country, our government, is based upon broad philosophy of Free Speech and Free Press; and, regardless of the individual harm they may do, to general welfare, the public welfare, is best served by permitting and indulging in Free Speech and Free Press. * * *

There are innumerable institutions that are honestly and faithfully preaching their gospel or their faith and are diligently engaged in the practices of spreading it abroad and increasing their following, believing that it is essential for the welfare of humanity, for the betterment of humanity, for the perpetuity of the liberties that all now enjoy,—even though they may be the very destruction of them,—but they honestly believe that they are necessary for their perpetuity.

Now, you can see how impossible it is to say to one, you may carry on your idea, and suppress the other. It is impossible. Hence, the only safe course to pursue is to permit Free Speech, a Free Press, and rest assured that the remedy is always in the utterance itself.

Whenever the Socialists indulge in language that is in fact harmful to our country, it does not hurt our country, but it hurts the Socialist and his cause.

I do not think that anything has ever happened to Socialism—as harmful to it, I mean,—as the reckless utterance of some of its members.

I have no doubt the fundamental philosophy of Socialism is that justice, in the universal acceptance of that term, be universally administered. I think that is the real philosophy of Socialism. That is what they aim to. They want to overcome this practice that we all recognize is in existence the world over, THAT MANY LABOR BUT FEW, ONLY, HARVEST.

Now, I realize in the preachings of Socialism that is the real grievance; that is the real thing they are fighting. * * *

Hence I come back to my original premise, that we must indulge in Free Speech, the right of the press to say

Albert Hall Affair Still Agitates

The Albert Hall incident of the early days of December still continues to agitate the conservative journals of England. Albert Hall, it will be remembered, is the Madison Square Garden of England—an enormous edifice in which mass meeting of first importance are held. The owners of Albert Hall had tried to prevent a meeting of British laborites in connection with the campaign preceding the general elections, on the ground that incendiary and revolutionary disturbances might result. The Electrical Trades Union forced the issue by cutting off the lights of Albert Hall for other events scheduled, and by threatening to cut off the electric current in entire Kensington. Thereupon the managers of Albert Hall permitted the meeting to be held.

The conservative Saturday Review, in commenting upon the incident asks hysterically, "Have we escaped from the frying pan of the German war into the fire of domestic revolution? Is the nation which has conquered a brace of kaisers going to be beaten by Webb and Lansbury? Hardly."

IT'S COMING

[illegible] FREEDOM

Pan — American Congress at Buenos Aires

A Socialist and Labor Conference has been called to meet at Buenos Aires, Argentina, for January 30, to consider the peaceful solution of labor problems, wages, salaries, and freedom of labor, an exchange of views on arbitration and disarmament, and conditions governing labor in foreign owned public service companies. The conference is to be Pan-American in scope and among the labor and Socialist movements invited to be represented are those of the United States, Argentina, Chile, Peru, Canada, Mexico, Panama, Cuba and Porto Rico.

In this connection, it is recalled how Champ Clark, speaker of the House of Representatives, in an address before the Southern Commercial Congress at Charleston, South Carolina, on December 9, called attention to the importance of Pan-American relations from the American business man's point of view in these words:

"Our best hunting grounds for trade will be Central and South America—right at our doors. * * * These amazingly rich countries are our neighbors and our friends. They now contain about 50,000,000 of population and illimitable resources. They are growing by leaps and bounds."

The conference assumes added significance when one considers that two South American Republics, Chile and Peru, are at swords' point with each other, the issue being the question of who shall own two certain rich provinces, Tacna and Arica. One feature of the situation is the fact that the war mongers in Chile are busily engaged in fostering sentiment for the deportation of 18,000 Peruvian workers in Chilean nitrate fields.

The conference is also regarded as highly important in view of the efforts of American imperialists to stir up sentiment in this country in favor of

Foreign Policy of Irish Labor

After considerable delay, a copy of the statement on International Aims, presented by the National Executive of the Irish Labor Party, and unanimously endorsed by the special congress of the Irish Trade Unions held in November, has reached America. The statement is addressed to the Internationale. Excerpts and summaries of the principal points follow:

"In welcoming peace, Irish Labor again proclaims its adherence to the Russian formula of a peace of the peoples on the basis of genuine democracy, the real self-determination of all peoples, and no annexations, no indemnities, and no undemocratic or secret treaties. * * * From such a settlement Irish Labor would exclude no people, no matter to which of the two sets of billigerents this people has been, or is now, subject. * * * Real self-determination must be by free, equal, adult and secret suffrage without any military, political or economic pressure from outside, without reservation or restriction imposed by capitalist or imperialist governments, and uninfluenced and untrammeled by the power of any force of occupation."

The manifesto then congratulates such peoples as the Jugo-Slavs, the Poles, Ukrainians and others upon having been accorded self-determination, but adds that that same right must be given to the peoples of Ireland, India, Egypt and others who have not yet been assured this inherent right.

"Irish Labor, within its own nation, asserts its right that upon any delegation which shall make the claim of the Irish nation, with the authority of the Irish people, the workers of Ireland shall be directly represented by a duly accredited labor section."

The manifesto next calls for an early convocation of the Socialist Internationale and declares the readiness of Irish labor to attend such a conference whenever and wherever held.

Finally Irish Labor "utters its vehement protest against the capitalist outlawry of the Soviet Republic of Russia," demands the withdrawal of troops from Russia, and congratulates the Russian workers upon having for twelve months "exercised that political, social and economic freedom for which Irish workers, in common with their fellows in other lands, still strive and aspire."

New Alberta Party to be Formed

The question of forming an independent political party in Alberta, Canada, of which the labor forces will constitute a unit, will be the chief subject of discussion at the convention of the Alberta Federation of Labor in Medicine Hat early in 1919. It is expected that the farmers will also take part in this movement.

Workers Victorious in Ontario Elections

Two significant features of the municipal nominations and elections throughout Ontario during the first days of January were the nomination, in Toronto, of Arthur Skidmore, who was in jail serving a month's imprisonment for having two copies of a prohibited Socialist paper in his possession, as a public utilities commissioner, and the election in Hamilton, of Gordon Nelson as hydro-electric commissioner. Nelson is the editor of the Hamilton Labor News. He defeated T. J. Stewart, member of Parliament and prominent member of the Unionist government, by a majority of more than 800 votes. Other Hamilton Labor Party candidates were elected as controllers, aldermen and board of education members. As for Skidmore, the fear of his possible election forces the Dominion government to release him and cancel the fine of $500 imposed upon him.

Nationalization of Railways in Great Britain

According to an interview given by Emil Davies, chairman of the Railway Nationalization Society of Great Britain, to a representative of the Central News, railway nationalization is bound to come in Great Britain, no matter what government may be in power. "It is the only possible solution," he said, "of the labor unrest which became dangerous before the war. Furthermore, the public will not stand any further rise in rates and fares merely to enable a number of separate and unequal companies to continue to distribute dividends." It is interesting to note that while only one Chamber of Commerce has identified itself with the Railway Nationalization Society, the membership of the organization includes approximately 800 trade unions, co-operative societies, trade councils, etc., representing over 4,000,000 electors.

Labor Opposition to Intervention Growing

Central labor bodies throughout the Dominion of Canada are adopting strong resolutions calling upon the government to withdraw troops from Russia. Reference to the leaders of the Soviet Government always calls out enthusiastic applause at labor meetings. The sympathetic attitude to the workers' government of Russia is also spreading among Canadian soldiers. Thus a Canadian expeditionary force stationed at Vancouver, B. C., on [illegible]

Care of Editor O. S.

Dear Henry: You need not be afraid to write to me and tell me what you honestly think, because you have a right to utter your honest convictions. Your revolutionary forefathers died in 1776 to give you a free country and nobody there dare to censure your letters or stop your papers. The same flag that stands guard over the battlefields of those who died that liberty might be born in America, flies over you and protects you from all demagogs and scoundrels who would steal away your liberties. Didn't you learn this in school?

You wrote as though you expected your letter to be censored. You surely must have been joking when you told me that there were thousands of men and women in your jails just for daring to tell the truth and being honest with themselves. I refuse to believe that the people of America would disgrace their heroic dead by allowing anything like that to happen.

Here amongst the Allfools such things are common, but these folks are fools and not the wisest nation on earth like your America.

Since the last time I wrote to you I have been soliciting business for a large gambling house here. They have very strict laws here about gambling and any Gog found gambling with cards or dice for dinero is immediately arrested and taken before a chief dignitary who looks very solemcholy and fines the Gogs many pieces of dinero and also many days of enforced idleness in what is locally known as the Can.

Not being allowed to gamble with cards or dice, these Allfools gamble on each other's life. Large gambling companies, called Assurance Companies, bet the Allfools huge sums of dinero that they can not live long enough to collect the bet. The Gogs do not have much dinero but they take out small bets and pay a small sum weekly. It really is buying a funeral on the installment plan.

The Magogs would of course, have to bury or otherwise dispose of the Gogs who die but the Gogs here in life assume all the work and worry of existence leaving the Magogs nothing to do and nothing to worry about and in following this policy it is but natural that the Gogs, while alive, should strive by means of Assurance to save the Magogs any trouble or worry over them when they die.

You wouldn't think you could get anybody to make a bet they would have to die to win, but the practice is very common here. One person out of every three that dies here is buried out of Assurance funds. The people who take care of the dead are called Overtakers and the Overtaker's trust has grown very wealthy just by collecting Assurance funds.

Nobody is allowed to kill anybody in Devil-May-Care-Land unless he is hired to do so by the state.

The people who are hired by the state for killers are of two kinds. Those who kill their fellow humans inside the jails here by shooting or hanging the victim, and those who are sent by the state on killing expeditions.

It is quite a custom here to raise huge armies of Gogs and send them out of the state to kill off the men of other tribes so that the owners of mills and factories in Devil-May-Care-Land may have a market for the vast amount of commodities these industrious Gogs produce.

All the young Scissorines here are easily captivated by anything that looks like a uniform and it is quite amusing to hear the piffletalkers try to justify the brand of morality they have been teaching the Gogs with the results of the infatuation of the girls for the uniform. No one is supposed to mate here in Allfools land without first getting the sanction of the state and the piffletalkers.

The piffletalkers sanction the tribal wars and encourage the young men to go. They get the Scissorines to aid in every way possible by teaching them that such aid is a duty they owe to the Piffletalker's God and state.

The girls cannot resist the uniform and youth cannot resist the girls. Nature has her way and babies born without the sanction of either church or state is the result. These babies are called tribalwar babies and just now the dignitaries here are much worried over the question. Maternity homes are full of them and their mothers have to eat! And the morals of the Allfools are sadly twisted!

These wonderful Gogs are so industrious and have improved and invented so much machinery that the Magogs have more food and fuel and clothing than they can dispose of anywhere. While some of the Gogs were gone to the last tribalwar the Scissorines took their places in the workshops and now they refuse to go out of them, and the factories do not have jobs enough to give employment to all who seek it.

So we are on the verge of a panic here in Devil-May-Care-Land. The Gogs have worked so much that now there is no work to do. They have made so much food that now they must go hungry. They have made so much clothing that now they must go naked. They have made so many homes that now they must go homeless. They have dug so much coal that now they must freeze! They have created so much wealth that now they must be paupers.

Oh a wonderful land is Devil-May-Care,
A land of most wonderful tools,
Wonderful factories and wonderful mines,
But mostly, most wonderful fools.

Hoping you are the same, I am
Yours truly,
Ichabod Skygac Jones.

GERMAN SOCIALISTS IN WAR-TIME

By ANISE, Union Record.

(Facts taken from Labor Year Book, issued by Rand School; and "German Social Democracy During the War," by Edwin Bevan, published by George Allen and Unwin Co., London).

III. THE OPPOSITION FINDS VOICE

As the weeks wore on, the first enthusiasm of the German people, swept off their feet by the apparent ease of victory began to die away. The reality of a long and wearing war appeared through the mists of illusion. The 14 members of the Social Democratic group in the Reichstag, who had opposed the voting of war credits in the party caucus, but had obeyed the voice of the majority on the following day, began to recover breath.

Some of the prominent Socialist writers spoke of the policy of "the Fourth of August" as an "apostacy." Among these were Karl Kautsky, the dominant literary mind in German Social Democracy in recent years. Kautsky is now in power as under secretary of foreign affairs. No one has expounded the principles of Socialism with such authority and such extensive knowledge. It told heavily against the official leaders that Kautsky condemned their action. Yet at first he also held that maintenance of party unity was superior to all other considerations, though gradually events led him to change this belief.

Hugo Haase, president both of the reichstag group and of the party as a whole, threw his weight into the scale for the opposition. More extreme anti-militarists, Franz Mehring and Rosa Luxemburg, started a new periodical which was promptly suppressed. Fights began within the party for the control of the party press. In Wurtemburg the directorate of the party threw out of office the entire editorial staff of the party organ, which, like Vorwarts, had sided with the opposition.

Bernstein Converted to Minority.

Membership of various groups began to shift. Some extreme radicals became infected with military fever and passed into the ranks of the imperialists. Others who had previously belonged to the conservative wing of the party, favoring co-operation with bourgeois parties, became disgusted with Germany's case in the war and swung to the left.

Most notable among these last was Edward Bernstein, leader of the revisionists, or gradual reform group. In the autumn of 1914 he approached Haase: "You were right," he said. "Our party is indeed in the thick of a crisis; for myself I cannot go any farther along this road."

Two reasons were given by Bernstein for his change of heart. The true history of the days before the war, and of Germany's part in them, began to filter through into Germany and destroy confidence in the righteousness of the war. And the thinking Socialists could not be blind to the gradual corrupting of Socialist morale which was taking place through the favors of the government. (Bernstein is now under-secretary of finance in the Ebert government.)

And Still War Credits Come.

Again in December, 1914, the government asked for war credits. Now there were 17 against them instead of 14; but again when the meeting of the reichstag occurred, the party stood before the world as a unit. All except one member—Liebknecht. This was his now famous stand, one man against the world! He voted alone. He was censured almost unanimously by the entire party for his breach of party discipline, but a motion to deprive him of the privilege of membership failed to carry.

Again in March the government asked for war credits. The demands kept coming as fast as liberty loan drives. And this time there were 30 Socialists against it. No longer did they conform their actions to those of the majority and present an unbroken front to the world. George Ledebur, an elderly, clean-shaven Hanoverian, cast away reticence and told the reichstag what the minority thought. When the time for voting came, Liebknecht and Ruhle voted against the credits, and 30 other members publicly withdrew from voting.

Scheidemann Becomes Majority Spokesman.

Haase, the president of the group, went with the minority. Scheidemann, a man of 54 years, printer by trade, who had risen less through eminence of mind or character than through a good presence and by being "a good parliamentary hand," spoke on that day for the majority. Scheidemann is an effective and ready speaker, conscious of his audience, and, like vain people, easily swayed by currents of opinion.

A week later the official spokesman in the reichstag was Ebert. He reported the assurances that the Social Democrats would stand by the country, but added that they desired a peace "not embittered by fresh annexations."

The burning question of annexations first came up at this time. Pan-German circles were agitating for vast new territories. This gave the majority Socialists a new issue. They could save their face; they could still claim that their attitude was one of protest against imperialism. They were no longer, it is true, "against the government." but they were against the Pan-Germans. They wanted a just and democratic peace.

Suppression of Free Speech Grows.

Before a year of war was over the rift between the government and the minority Socialists was apparent. The old antagonisms and suppressions, drowned against the majority of the Socialists because of their conspicuous "loyalty," appeared again, as in all warring countries against those Socialists who opposed the war. Vo- [illegible] had his house searched and was put under arrest.

Groups of Socialists got out manifestos. One of these, published in Vorwartz, reading "the people want no annexations, the people want peace," led to the suppression of that paper, for five days. But one looks in vain through the records of German prosecutions of this time to discover anything like the rigor of suppression practiced in our own country. Papers were suppressed, temporarily, and allowed to begin again after brief punishment.

Trade Unions Pro-War.

During all this time the official group of the trade unions stood strongly for the war. Legien, president of their general committee (recently added to the imperial cabinet as one of the redical members in an attempt to stave off the revolution), took the lead in motions to thrust offenders out of the group.

And yet, in spite of violent discussions in the party press, the party still considered itself one group. War credits were again voted in August, 1915, and again a protesting group left the chamber. The party as a whole carried on a campaign against high prices and profiteering and against the censorship, behaving exactly as our own large labor groups have done in the first year of war.

But on December 31, 1915, the split in the party was manifest to the world. Forty-four were now against the war credits; 66 in favor. When the vote came twenty voted against the credits according to their convictions; 22 left the room; the others supported the government. Hugo Haase definitely resigned as president [illegible]

Victor Berger Te

BERGER ADMITS HE IS "YELLOW" IF THAT TERM IMPLIES "CONTRUCTIVE SOCIALISM"

(By David Karsner.)

The last defendant to take the stand in the trial of five Socialist officials at Chicago was Victor Berger, congressman-elect, and editor of The Milwaukee Leader.

"I believe in absolute obedience to the law, whether it is good or bad," he declared. "The best way to get rid of an odius law is to obey it," he said.

No Patience With I. W. W.

"I knew Mr. Burleson very well," he said. "We sat in the House of Representatives together, and Mr. Burleson and I were the antidotes of Haywoodism." Berger seemed to be anxious to let the jury know that he was a constructive socialist who approved of orderly methods of accomplishing socialist principles. He confessed he personally was the author of Article two, section six adopted by the Socialist Party convention in 1912, by the terms of which Haywood and the I. W. W. were read out of the Socialist Party.

"I have no patience with them," he announced on the witness stand, referring directly to the I. W. W.

Berger said he did approve of the spirit of the St. Louis war statement of the party, but not the letter. "The report did not speak my language," he said, "although it did express my sentiments. I wrote my own statement as to what I thought the position of the Socialist Party should be," said Berger. It has never been recorded that Berger's statement was ever submitted to the St. Louis convention.

Coming down to the St. Louis convention April 6, 1917, Berger said that its purpose was to put the Socialist Party of America on record in relation to the war. "The party did not have a definite position," he said, "although the International Socialist movement was always opposed to wars. The convention was intended to be held before Congress met to consider the war declaration, but the President pushed up the date for congress to meet. It was not to assemble until about April 20, but it actually passed the war declaration the same time the Socialists were holding their convention. He could not help that."

"The convention was controlled largely by delegates from the west and the south," said Berger, believing that from the west "came the impossibilists who wanted to do everything in a hurry."

Asked if he believed in the Young People's Socialist League, Berger declared that he "never had much time for it."

"I am opposed to artificial methods being used to effect the growth of the Socialist Party. Socialism is the next phase of civilization. It cannot be taught. It must be lived."

Berger said he thought that only "mature minds" were fit to understand Socialist philosophy."

Read Spargo Article to Jury.

The attitude of John Spargo to the Socialist Party at present was brought up by Attorney Cochems. An article which Spargo wrote for The New York Call, January 9, 1916, entitled "The Truth About Preparedness" in which he vigorously criticised the preparedness campaign, and blamed the capitalists for stirring up the nation to war hysteria, was read to the jury.

"How long has Spargo been a citizen of the United States?"

"Three years," replied Berger.

"How long have you been a citizen?"

"Thirty-four years."

Berger declared that Tucker's pamphlet entitled "The Price We Pay," which is one of the overt acts in the indictment, "might have become a classic of the war if it had only been blue penciled." He called Tucker "an impossibilist." The Socialist cleric, sitting at the press table, denied the allegation.

"Did you ever hear anything about the underground railroad stuff that has been brought into the case by the government?" asked Cochems. Berger held up both hands, declaring:

"I have no time to read dime novels." Judge Landis instructed the stenographer to strike out Berger's answer.

[illegible] as the Bolshevik crowd in Russia.

"Lenine is the head and brains of the Bolshevik movement in Russia," said Berger, "but I think it can be said that the real constructive brains reside in the Mensheviki." Berger said that "it is a historic fact that in all countries that have gone through a revolution the extreme party gets on top for a little while."

"Bolshevism is not in harmony with my views," said Berger answering a direct question of his attorney. He said he thought that perhaps the majority Socialist opinion in America was not Bolshevik.

Some Striking Featur es in Berger's Testimony

The continued testimony of Victor L. Berger in the Socialist trial before Judge Landis developed three striking features:

First: That Berger says the Socialist Party and the Industrial Workers of the World have absolutely nothing in common.

Second: That Berger supported and signed the St. Louis Majority Report because he feared the convention might adopt a more radical war proclamation.

Third: That Berger took Mayor Daniel W. Hoan, of Milwaukee to task because he was "neither fish nor flesh," on the St. Louis war proclamation.

Henry Cochems personal attorney for Berger, read to the jury several newspaper interviews with the Socialist congressman-elect in which he severely criticized the I. W. W. Berger supplemented the printed statement by declaring:

"I suppose the I. W. W. hates me more than any other man in the country. They have a right to because I have fought them from the beginning and am fighting them yet on their principles. I have always taught Socialism, not revolution."

Later on in the inquiry when the prosecutor brought to Berger's attention a letter which he had written last May to the secretary of the I. W. W. in Milwaukee, and enclosed his check for ten dollars to the defense fund of the Wobblies, Berger said that he believed the I. W. W. was more virile than the American Federation of Labor whom Berger characterized as "the tail of the capitlist kite."

He said he believed in industrial unionism and indorsed the I. W. W. that far, but pounding his first on the end of Judge Laidis' polished bench and squarely facing the jury, Victor Berger denounced "the impossibilists," the reds "as they style themselves in the working class movement."

He again claimed authorship of the amendment to the Socialist Party constitution in 1912 which read the I. W. W. element out of the party.

A moment later Berger was telling the jury that he had never refused a line of patriotic advertising in support of the war, but said it was hard to get. He tried to get into the record some figures showing that Milwaukee and Wisconsin "had gone over the top" as he phrased it, in all of the nation's war activities.

"Is it not a fact that you and Morris Hillquit controlled the St. Louis convention?" asked Fleming.

"No, sir. The reds and impossiblists controlled the convention. I was the fourteenth man chosen for the resolutions committee. There were fifteen on the committee. In former years I would have been the first chosen."

Berger said that when he went to St. Louis on April 6, 1917, he "hardly recognized the convention as a Socialist gathering."

"Did you hear Hillquit make a speech on the floor of the convention?"

"Yes, of course."

"Did you approve of it?"

"I approved of it in spirit. In its general statement, yes."

Berger said he did not speak at the convention, but stated that he did write a war statement but did not present it to the convention "because he did not think it stood any chance of being adopted."

Berger steadfastly denied that he had ever advocated force or violence in any manner or means of accomplishing the rights of the workers.

Prosecutor Fleming promptly fished out of a pile of documents the file of The Social-Democratic Herald for 1909, and made Berger read to the jury an article under his signature in which the defendant predicted "a bloody revolution if the capitalists continue to push the workers downward." In the same signed editorial appeared a statement to the effect that the workers might have to back up their ballot with bullets. Berger tried in vain to explain what he meant.

While Berger was on the witness stand for the third day his attorney, Henry Cochems, a Progressive of the Rooseveltian stripe, read to the jury in Berger's defense an article which Berger wrote Jan. 15, 1916, favoring the preparedness campaign then being waged.

"The public schools should be the center of national defense," the article read, "and boys should know how to hit a target." The rest of the article

"Labor Will Win the War"

(Written Before the Armistice)

"Ships will win the war." "Steel, coal and food will win the war." "Labor will win the war." Just so. At last comes the admission that Labor is "it." Labor, crystallized labor power will win this war.

Time was, to quote Mr. Dooley, when the capitalist said, "Me min, your brawn coupled with me brains have enabled me to accumulate a million dollars during the past year." (Cheers).

The production of ships, steel, coal, food, etc., depends not on the brains of the profit-takers, but upon the skill and strength of the wealthmakers.

It's a far cry, as the word wallopers are fond of saying, when seas of ink were spilled to prove that the buddies, capital and labor, working hand in mitt, were the source of all wealth.

They build our railroads, mined our coal, smelted our ore, constructed our autos and harvested our crops. Oh, those were the happy days when the pals, capital and labor had the Gold-dust Twins looking like star boarders at a rest cure.

"Labor will win the war," eh? To alter slightly the words of a thriller manufactured for the ethical and artistic uplift by the party of the second part by the party of the first part, 'Thems fine words Cap, but that puts no oligenious by-products upon my bread. Your generous admission may warm the cockles of your heart and suffuse your being with a wave of generosity. In recognition of our services you may decide to do something for us. Your welfare workers may be ordered by you to unpack their satchel of sociological tricks—and 'Come on boys; step up and have a shot in the arm.' Prizes for those turning out the most work; prizes for the largest head-of cabbage grown in your home garden; savings banks for your heirs; domestic science for the wife; a mutual benefit society—we, the party of the first part seeing to it that we keep from your wages the money which would otherwise be squandered in paying union and Socialist Party dues. In return for the trouble we are put to in holding out, you are to receive a wreath, "Always Faithful," when you go to your reward.

O tempora! O mores! (Roughly, oh very roughly, translated from the Latin, meaning, O Henry, Wilhelm) pulled that same stuff when the Poetess of Passion was putting them across with both mitts long before Bull Durham was fenced in. (Ask grand-dad. He knows). Cap, it's no use. You're about as original as a mummy and as funny as a display of Painless Yanker's skill.

We recall that it was only a few months before this country entered the world war that the Employers' Association of the U. S. advised that WE adopt the German industrial efficiency system. It didn't look good to us then and you're not going to be able to pull that capitalistic-imperialistic - militaristic - feudalistic - paternalistic - efficiency hodge-podge, when "Johnny Comes Marching Home."

Labor is not only going to win the war. Labor is going to have a voice in the making of peace terms. It should be no more difficult for you to realize that fact than it was for us to believe in the past that some humans came into the world booted and spurred to ride on the backs of those who toiled.

The advancing hosts of labor have a conception of democracy that you cannot conceive of, the democracy of industry, self-determination of labor, as it were, a condition under which those who will win the war, the workers, will win the world for peace, plenty and brotherhood.

Yesterday only a few caught a vision of that time; today millions are dreaming of it; tomorrow their ranks will be augmented by millions more.

Yes, labor will win the war. Labor will also build upon the ruins of an industrial system that has run its historic course an Industrial Democracy under which its interests, ideals and aspirations will reflect the interest of all mankind.

Why Irish Labor Withdrew Candidates

A recent issue of "The Voice of Labor," the organ of the Irish Labor Party, just received in this country, explains why it was that the Irish Labor Party, though having put into the field candidates for the general election, withdrew them later. This was done "in the hope that the democratic demand for self-determination * * * will thereby obtain the greatest chance of expression at the polls. * * * We shall also thereby demonstrate to the peoples of all nations, as emphatically as peaceful means allow, that at this hour, when other small nations of Europe are asserting their freedom, Ireland, too, demands all rights of a free nation." In other words, the Labor Party refrained from putting a ticket in the field, lest the votes of those who stood for Irish independence be split.

LENINE'S APPEAL TO AMERICAN WORKINGMEN

Nicholai Lenine, Premier of the Russian Soviet Republic, has addressed an open letter to American working men, which is published in the December issue of "The Class Struggle." A short summary of the document follows:

"Had the Anglo-French and American bourgeoisie accepted the Soviet invitation to participate in peace negotiations at Brest-Litovsk, instead of leaving Russia to the mercy of brutal Germany, a just peace, without annexations and indemnities, a peace based upon complete equality, could have been forced upon Germany and millions of lives might have been saved."

But though the bourgeoisie deserted the Soviet Republic, the workers of the whole world, in whatever country they may live, rejoice with the Russian workers. They understand that Russia had to come to terms with German militarism in order to save the revolution.

As for the mistakes in methods and in technical execution made by the Soviet government, these Lenine frankly admits. "It is not to be expected that the working classes who have been exploited and forcibly held down by the clutches of want, of ignorance and degradation for centuries should conduct its revolution without mistakes. The dead body of bourgeois society cannot simply be put into a coffin and buried. It rots in our midst, poisons the air we breathe, pollutes our lives, clings to the new, the fresh, the living with a thousand threads and tendrils of old customs, of death and decay."

Lenine closes with an appeal to the American working men to rally to the support of their Russian fellow workers: "We know that it may take a long time before help can come from you, comrades, American working men, for the development of the revolution in the different countries proceeds along various paths, with varying rapidity. * * * We know full well that the outbreak of the European proletarian revolution may take many weeks to come, quickly as it is ripening in these days. We are counting on the inevitability of the international revolution. But that does not mean that we count upon its coming at some definite, nearby date."

GREAT BRITAIN

British Labor Faces a Crisis.

The British labor movement faces a serious crisis, in the opinion of G. D. H. Cole, one of the leading experts on British labor problems. Writing in a recent number of The Dial, Mr. Cole states that the war has brought into existence a new element, the shop steward movement, which threatens to revolutionize the old standards of trade union organization.

The shop steward movement, in the opinion of Mr. Cole, provides a machinery "through which trade unionists can hope, by gradual extensions of their power, to assume control in the workshops." Mr. Cole tells that the trade unions are very barely prepared to take this step. However, he insists that wherever the movement has gained strength, "the same far-seeing stewards are beginning to work out the immediate problems of control."

SWITZERLAND

The General Strike of November 11-13.

A detailed account of the general strike in Switzerland, in which 900,000 workers participated, and in the course of which postal, telegraph and transportation service were entirely interrupted, has reached the editorial offices of the New Yorker Volkszeitung. It appears that the strikers demanded new elections to the Parliament on the basis of proportional representation, woman suffrage, popular reorganization of the army, guarantee of food supply in co-operation with agricultural producers, a 46-hour week, general obligatory labor, state monopoly of importation and exportation, old-age and invalidity insurance, and payment of the public debt by the propertied classes. After three days, however, the strike committee was persuaded to call off the strike.

ITALY

Important Agreement Between Laborites and Socialists.

An important conference has been held between the representatives of the Socialist Party and the General Confederation of Labor. An agreement has been reached by which the Confederation yields to the party the absolute right to call any general, local or national strike for a political reason. On the other hand, the Socialist Party pledges itself to give all the support it is able to give to any economic strike called by the Confederation.

FRANCE

Labor United in Opposing Imperialism.

The General Federation of Labor, the League of the Rights of Man, the Republican Coalition and the Socialist Party have signed a joint manifesto setting forth that these organizations are resolutely opposed to any policy of imperialism in the coming peace settlement.

Labor Clauses to be Demanded in Peace Treaty.

The labor committee of the Chamber of Deputies has adopted a report on clauses relative to international labor legislation to be inserted in the peace treaty. These include: Prohibitions against night work for young industrial workers and a 10-hour day for women and youths in factories or mines, with half a day's rest weekly; the institution of periodic international labor conferences.

Lima Wins Legal Fight

I feel that nothing causes ideas, whether they be religious, political or Socialistic, to grow more than under unfair persecution and suppression.

I never saw an idea grow as fast as it does when everybody is trying to keep it suppressed. You will never cause Socialism to die by denying it the same privileges that everything else is permitted to enjoy. If you want Socialism to perish in this country, or in any other country, you must submit it to free discussion; both upon the pulpit or from the stump, or through the press.

It must be able to stand criticism, it must be able to stand the test. If it fails to do that on a fair trial, the people will turn it down and refuse it. On the other hand, if you try to suppress it, many virtues will be attributed to it that it never possesses and no one claims for it, and it will grow.

That is just as true of religious ideas, and all political ideas, and, while I am not a Socialist I feel as deeply as any one can feel that Socialism will grow and continue to grow if we try to forbid it to grow by denying them the right to discuss it wherever they wish, by denying them the right to use the press. * * *

I think many of the things that many Socialists are advocating are accepted by thousands of people as being practical because they feel that if the press and the public permitted them to explain them as others are permitted to explain their ideas, they could convince the public that they are practical and feasible.

On the other hand, I believe that many of their ideas, if they were submitted to public discussion, through the press and, from the stump,—my ideas in general are they would be able to convince the general public of their Utopion character.

Again, on the other hand, I think that there are many ideas in the Socialist philosophy that not only are practical, beneficial to the human family but they will be accepted by the world as axiomatic principals. * * *

I think I heard no less conservative a man than William McKinley say that the ideals of yesterday are the truths of to-day. The ideals of today will be the accepted philosophy of tomorrow. And so, you can realize the danger that lies in any course of practice that has the tendency to suppress any man's voice or pen because [illegible] demic of the Influenza at this time, and as long as that exists, I will not compel the Commissioners to grant the use of the hall to Mr. Blank, secretary of the Lima Socialist Party, providing they are not permitting others to use it. But as soon as they permit others to use it, Mr. Blank is to have the same privileges that they have.

LIMA WINS ANOTHER CASE.

In the summer of 1917 a street car strike was declared in Lima, during which the mayor prohibited street speaking. Because Attorney Blank attempted to read the U. S. Constitution upon a street corner he found himself in jail with bail denied.

A writ of habeas corpus was secured and Comrade Blank was taken before Judge Klinger, who ordered that bail be accepted or an immediate trial be given. Comrade Blank was released on $50 bail. He was tried and found guilty of speaking without permission of the mayor and fined $25. The case was then carried to the Court of Appeals and reversed and the defendant ordered discharged.

Attorney Blank then instituted suits for damage for false imprisonment against the Director of Public Safety and the Chief of Police. The first case was tried and the jury awarded damages in the sum of $600. The second case has not yet been tried but a similar verdict is practically certain.

Thus the plutes of Lima are learning with whom they are dealing in their fight against the legal rights of those with whom they differ in opinion.

Soldiers and Workers Join Forces

The idea of working out a means of better understanding between the organizations of returned soldiers and the trade unions took definite shape recently, when it was decided at Vancouver, B. C., to form a Returned Men's Association to act with delegates from the Central Labor bodies. A joint committee was appointed, consisting of twelve representatives of the Returned Men's Association and six each from the Trade and Labor Council and the Metal Trades Council. A platform was submitted and discussed which called, among other things, for the nationalization of natural resources, government operation of the basic industries, substantial reduction of the working day to six hours, [illegible]

[illegible] according to the Piqua Daily Press, is after all "Provi[illegible] it awakens the people of Piqua to a full understanding of what [illegible] says the daily. The taint of Socialism is upon that [illegible] Socialism gained its victory in Piqua because of gang domination. [illegible] All this the daily admits.

[illegible] forward with a brand new scheme, now about an old [illegible] neither of the old political parties is strong enough to beat [illegible] in Piqua, therefore a "fair, clean, non-political" control must [illegible]. That is, as both of the old parties in Piqua have proven [illegible], unfair, gangsters and false leaders, therefore a combination of the two rotten old parties is to be effected, and—presto change, [illegible] will be a pure, sweet, wholesome, non-political aggregation of poli[illegible] will lead Piqua—where?

[illegible] the case stands like this: The Piqua Press, itself a false [illegible] that the old party leaders are false leaders, asks for a combi[illegible] false leaders to win Piqua back for the false leaders and in [illegible] calls the new party, the Socialist Party and its officials false.

Anyway, Gentlemen, we thank you for letting us know what kind of a [illegible] you are going to try to play on the Piqua voters this fall.

We shall be on the spot to expose it.

AGAIN—WE THANK YOU GENTLEMEN

It's not at all fair to always print just one side of a story. The other [illegible] is often much more amusing. So squat down upon the mat folks, pick up your chop sticks and enjoy the following bit of chop suey prepared for your [illegible] edification by the Cincinnati Enquirer:

STAMP OUT THE RED FLAG!

The red flag has no place in America. It is a symbol of danger, a warning to keep aloof from impending peril. Its presence in gatherings or processions marks plague patches, seats of diseased thinking, areas of mental pestilence that organized society should eradicate and extirpate no matter how radical the operation.

Little groups of malcontents, grumblers, loafers and dead beats must not be permitted to poison and infect the minds of America's teeming, contented millions each with his full share in the control of public affairs, and with a complete opportunity to exercise his political rights. * * *

In Ohio this week at Canton, led by Debs and Wagenknecht, convicted of treason, the Socialists called upon the proletariats to rise and demand amnesty for political prisoners. The Philadelphia dynamiters declared that it was the refusal to grant this freedom that caused the hurling of their bombs into homes where innocent women and children slept. Knowing the terms of this war upon society let the fight be carried sternly forward. For every man, woman or child slain by the murderous carriers of the red flag let there be summarily strung up in reprisal an instigator of anarchy and treason. Let dynamite be met with the drumhead court-martial.

Rich junk, eh folks? First the poor red flag is again maligned until it [illegible] redder red than its usual red!

Then the poor Socialist is dished up to us as a malcontent, grumbler, loafer and deadbeat. These loafers and deadbeats must not be permitted to poison and infect the minds of America's teeming, contented millions. And [illegible], what's the matter, gentlemen? Is there any danger of these dead[illegible] Socialists working the trick? We thought a deadbeat was something [illegible] that a loafer loafed and that neither would ever think of stirring up [illegible]! "America's teeming, contented millions," however, is a real choice [illegible]. The printer must have made an error. "America's steaming millions" would have been better. Steaming under the yoke of the gang of [illegible] of which the daily we quote is a much respected member.

Real spice is added by the attempt to scramble the demand of the Socialists for amnesty for political prisoners with the Philadelphia dynamiting. And we eat the last savory morsel with a grin, for once more a "law and order" daily advocates violence and murder while pretending to preach [illegible] it.

Really, it's too rich. It's so rich it's nauseating.

Pass the red pepper!

It is said that great men live longest after they are dead. Somebody died last week. Gee whiz—we've forgotten who it was!

"Vessels under the red flag will be sunk without warning," read an order supposed to have originated with the British government. Now we know what is meant by "freedom of the seas."

THE WRECKING CREW

YOUNGSTOWN NOTES

Ruthenberg made a hit Jan. 5. He took extra pains to go into details so as to carry real socialism to the audience. Hall was too small. Nearly a hundred had to stand. Collection $85.

In the evening of the same date we held an entertainment and luncheon. The entertainment was by our Social Science School, composed of children. Comrades Coope and Margaret Thum are to be congratulated upon their ability to supervise the "Sunday School" of ours. Little eleven-year-old Sophia Ulansky made the hit of the evening by singing the new song, "Hearts of the World."

"At our last meeting ten members paid their dues in advance for 1919. Send me more dues stamps at once." Chas. Litz, Sandusky.

A total of $27.50, of which $23.75 is for the Debs' Fund and $3.75 for sustaining fund stamps was received from S. Zizic, secretary of the South Slavic Branch, Barberton.

WE SAY THIS TO YOU.

If your local has not met regularly for some time it becomes your duty to call a meeting and get back into action. If there is no local of the Socialist Party in your city or town [illegible]

Official Notices to Locals of Ohio

Notices which appear under this heading should receive the attention of the [illegible] at the next business meeting.

CALL FOR NOMINATIONS: A call for nominations for three members of the National Executive Committee, four International Delegates and one International Secretary was mailed locals and branches on Jan. 8. If your local or branch has not received a nomination blank, notify the State Office at once.

NEW LOCAL OFFICERS: Every local must send the State Office AT ONCE and upon a separate sheet of paper, a full list of the local officers elected to serve for the first half of 1919. If the State Office has not the name and correct address of your local secretary, mail is bound to go astray.

REMEMBER: The State Office is trying to keep expenses at a minimum. We are getting along with as little help as possible. The help that is employed HAS NO TIME TO UNRAVEL LETTERS. This means that we again ask you to PLEASE not write an order for dues stamps, for supplies, Ohio Socialist subscriptions, news for insertion in the Ohio Socialist and a half dozen other matters into one and the same letter.

When you order dues stamps and supplies use an order blank. When you send in subscriptions use a subscription blank. When you write local news for insertion into the paper, write upon a separate sheet of paper. This will facilitate the work of the State Office and make it possible for us to avoid mistakes.

WANTED: Even if your local does not decide to insert an advertisement in the Ohio Socialist, making public its meeting date, time and place (and it really should at $2.50 a year) at least have the local secretary send to the State Office immediately the time and place of your local's business meetings so that we may have this information to refer to when needed.

SPEAKERS ATTENTION: The state constitution specifies that all speakers accepting engagements in this state must notify the State Office of dates and places of meetings. This is necessary so as to avoid confusing dates when State Office makes routing.

MISSING: We still miss a number of Debs' Defense Fund lists. Whether money has been collected upon the lists sent you or not, return them at once to the State Office. Monies collected should be remitted to the State Office THIS WEEK.

TO J. W. F., CRESTON.

Thank you for your invitation. We shall remember the stop. But at present we are far too busy for a visit. We have read your letter carefully. We get your point. Paragraph you refer to in the Ohio Socialist was written by one of our correspondents and should have appeared with other matter under his name, making him responsible for it.

HUBBARD ELECTS PRESS AGENT

Laurence Williams was elected Press Agent for Local Hubbard at its recent meeting. Comrade Williams will have full charge of securing subscriptions for the Ohio Socialist, selling press stamps and securing renewals. "We now have over 50 subscribers in Hubbard and we intend to make it 100 before spring," writes T. H. Davies. Other officers elected are: E. B. Patterson, organizer; T. H. Davies, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Hazel Miller, financial secretary; T. J. Stalnaker, literature agent.

COLUMBUS NOTES.

Local Columbus began the new year in a most encouraging manner. The local met on the second Thursday in the month and took in five new members.

Financial Secretary Wiekers reported that many members had paid dues in advance for the year 1919, and that others had expressed their intention of doing so in the very near future.

A goodly number of bad standing members have paid their arrearagess up to Jan. 1.

Propaganda meetings upon the second and fourth Sundays of the month, in the afternoon, will continue during the winter months.

Charles Baker will be the speaker on Sunday, Feb. 9, and C. E. Ruthenberg will address the audience on Feb. 23.

Jos. Sharts will address the Sunday afternoon meeting of Jan. 26.

Members-at-large are still insistent upon paying dues in advance for the entire year. Chas. Boydelatour and W. E. Riley were heard from this week with three dollars each.

Doings of the Red Army

Local Galion is another local which sells press stamps four at a time. A list of names of seven new members all of whom subscribe for a year is good proof that the comrades are in to stay.

Comrade Ruthenberg's meeting at Youngstown was a success in many ways. Especially so in the number of subscriptions secured. Thirteen being the number Comrade Thum sends in.

Comrade Edward Dulli is another new recruit from Hamilton. Ten half yearlies is the number on his first list. If Comrade Dulli can do so well the first time how many can he get when he is in good training?

Comrade Anton Soukup of Neffs orders nine dollars worth of subscription cards and sends in two half yearlies. The subscription card orders continue to grow which proves how good that method is in securing readers. Try it.

New Bremen local is placing its members in good standing with press stamp sales. Four received from Comrade Secretary Heil means that the comrades are in fighting trim.

With an order for 100 dues stamps Local Dayton sends in two yearlies.

• • •

Six more are added to the Columbus list this week through the efforts of Comrade E. B. Eubanks.

Comrade Catlin of Youngstown shines up his record this week with two added to it.

Comrade A. Ammeter of Mansfield is a comrade who sees the necessity of the workers building up the worker's press. He sends in two new yearlies.

"Do you think I could belong to the Red Hundred," writes Comrade Ralph Horbert of Salem. Six dollars for as many subscribers proves he is eligible doesn't it, comrades? This is the spirit that is winning.

Comrade John Rehm of Springfield is with us again this week. He comes strong this week in order to make up for his absence last week. $6.25 for nine subs is his bit.

"Anyone who really reads our paper is compelled to admit it is the best ever published and I have proof that it is doing great work." This praise comes from Comrade F. W. Goll of Lorain. He encloses six dollars to prove he means it.

Local Massillon's list of readers is growing fast. Eight subs sent in by Comrade Weltlich will help to keep the fires a glowing.

"Nothing gives me greater pleasure than to pick up a new subscriber for our paper, which I consider the best little paper printed." So writes Comrade Wm. G. Schultz of Napoleon, one of our very best members of the Red Army. Comrade Schultz sends six dollars for nine subs.

Ten subscriptions from Local Cincinnati this week shows the comrades are busy as ever.

Local Cuyahoga County sends in 26 subs secured through press stamp sales.

Comrade G. L. Artz, M. A. L. at Wayland, renews his subscription and sends another for company.

Local East Liverpool is keeping its members on the right side of the fence. Six subscriptions Comrade Shepp mails us.

Six subscriptions Comrade Joseph Wilnecker sends in this week with an order to increase Local Toledo's bundle order to 150 copies a week. What is your local doing in the matter of distributing the Ohio Socialist at meetings and factory gates? This is important. Give it your attention.

From Mt. Vernon comes three subscriptions. Comrade Wolfe is the responsible party. He is one of those who believes in doing a little more for Socialism each week.

Five more subscriptions from Local Hubbard this week. The comrades of Hubbard are establishing a record that is bound to count big for the future growth of Socialist sentiment.

Local Hamilton comes to bat with 23 more. Have you noticed the regularity with which the comrades of Hamilton appear on the job?

Comrade T. J. Eiler of Defiance renews his sub and also locates another new reader.

Two half-yearlies are received from Comrades F. Straus of Piqua and S. Silberman of Canton.

Elmwood Place is scheduled for a bright place on the Socialist map if Comrade F. J. Theil keeps up the gait he is following at present. Six subscriptions from him proves he has the right idea.

• • •

Comrade Wm. E. Lange of Mantua says the farmers of Portage Co. are eager to learn more of the meaning of socialism and its relation to the farmer's problems.

What Do You Think Of It?

Increase in Ohio Membership Must be a Surprise to Those Who Thought Otherwise.

The increase in the membership of the Socialist Party of Ohio for 1918 over the membership for the year 1917 surprised many. After making computations for the year, we find that the gain in membership for 1918 was 128. This will be a surprise to many Socialists in the state, for what with prosecution, persecution and a general campaign to discourage Socialist activity, most Socialists thought that the 1918 membership of the party would show a falling off.

The total dues stamp sales for 1917 were 68,267. The sales for 1918 were 69,789. The average monthly membership for 1917 was 5,689 and for 1918, 5,817.

Again we say, "kill us some more." Renegade Socialists and politicians, who were so elated over the death of the Socialist Party, because of its "erroneous" stand upon the question of war, and who have been preaching funeral sermons for the party for the last year, are now invited to a seat in the rear to watch the party do its 1919 business. For 1919 is to be THE BANNER YEAR.

GOOD RETURNS FROM OUT OF STATE

The comrades in other states are securing excellent returns from their efforts in boosting the O. S. West Virginia comrades must be especially recommended for their hearty co-operation in extending the scope of usefulness of our paper in that state. Subscriptions were received from the following cities in West Virginia this week. Fairmount, 11; Weirton, 5; Cedar Grove, 16; Ward, 3; Glasgow, 2; Charleston, 1; Gayford, 4.

Kentucky comrades are also busy making the O. S. reach a larger number of comrades. Twelve subs sent in by Comrade Goodman of Louisville tells the story of that local's activities in this regard.

Comrade Sladek of Paris, Mo., mails us two more subs. Comrade Paul Dasovich of Wyandotte, Mich., subscribes for a friend. Comrade Perry Shipman of Rock Island, Ill., is to hand with a list of four. Comrade W. B. Dillon of Albuquerque, N. M., sends in three and Comrade N. B. Davidson of Monroeville, Ind, three.

We quote from a letter from a comrade in Cheyenne, Wyo., which shows a prevalent sentiment among a large portion of the former readers of the New Appeal. "I want to do all I can for the Socialist papers that have stood true to the cause of Socialism and the principles that were enunciated long before Grandma Benson and the New Appeal was born." Alex Van Gundy. Comrade Van Gundy has two sons and four grandsons over there and he says there will be six more Socialist votes when they get back.

ATTEND THESE MEETINGS

Readers of the OHIO SOCIALIST are invited to attend the following Socialist meetings, to be held in Ohio within the next two weeks.

CHARLES BAKER

State organizer Chas. Monster Socialist Meetings Scheduled for Ohio

Socialist meetings at which audiences will be larger than ever before are scheduled for Ohio for the last of this month and the first of next. Dates and places for these meetings will be found in another column. The speakers who are to address these meetings are known nationally, not only to Socialists but to the public in general.

Eugene V. Debs will fill a few more speaking engagements before his case is finally decided by the Supreme Court on Jan. 27th. Scott Nearing, new resident of New York is booked for four or five meetings. George R. Kirkpatrick former candidate for vice president, will fill three or four dates. L. E. Katterfield, member of the national executive committee, an experienced organizer will work in Piqua, Guernsey county and Belmont counties from Feb. 5 to 14 inclusive. And Chas. Baker, state organizer will begin his tour of the state at Lorain, Feb. 16th and will continue at work all through the winter months.

Locals who desire to put new life into their membership should lose no time in holding a public Socialist meeting. Write to the state office of the party and place your application for a speaker. One will be assigned your local as soon after the application is received as possible.

Congratulates Piqua

W. M. Farris, formerly of Piqua and now of Toledo, writes The Ohio Socialist, congratulating the Piqua Socialist Party upon its victory over the disgruntled politicians. He says in part: "I see you pulled one over on Mr. Leonard and a few of the Piqua upper four. I say—go to it. I lost my job because I changed my political views when I was at the Farrington Elevator. Comrade Grunert is a stayer, surely. I know personally that he has suffered financially and in other ways on account of the stand he took for the workers.

"I hope that at the next election the Piqua Socialists will make a clean sweep of the old parties, for Piqua needs a thorough housecleaning. Hit while the iron is [illegible]. Piqua comrades, and make every [illegible] count one more councilman."

Constitution of Socialist Russia

81. The All-Russian Congress of Soviets or the All-Russian Central Executive Committee determine what matters of income and taxation shall go to the state budget and what shall go to the local Soviets; they also set the limits of taxes.

82. The Soviets levy taxes only for the local needs. The state needs are covered by the funds of the state treasury.

83. No expenditure out of the state treasury not set forth in the budget of income and expense shall be made without a special order of the central power.

84. The local Soviets shall receive credits from the proper People's Commissars out of the state treasury, for the purpose of making expenditures for general state needs.

85. All credits allotted to the Soviets from the state treasury, and also credits approved for local needs, must be expended according to the estimates, and cannot be used for any other purposes without a special order of the All-Russian Central Executive Committee and the Soviet of People's Commissars.

86. Local Soviets draw up semi-annual and annual estimates of income and expenditure for local needs. The estimates of urban and rural Soviets participating in county congresses, and also the estimates of the county organs of the Soviet power, are to be approved by provincial and regional congresses or by their executive committees; the estimates of the urban, provincial, and regional organs of the Soviets are to be approved by the All-Russian Central Executive Committee and the Council of People's Commissars.

87. [illegible] expenditures not set forth in the estimate, or where the allotted sum is insufficient.

88. In case of an insufficiency of local funds for local needs, the necessary subsidy may be obtained from the state treasury by applying to the All-Russian Central Executive Committee or the Council of People's Commissars.

The Coat of Arms and Flag of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic

Chapter Seventeen.

89. The coat of arms of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic consists of a red background on which a golden scythe and a hammer are placed (crosswise, handles downward) in sun-rays and surrounded by a wreath, inscribed, Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

Workers of the World, Unite!

90. The commercial, naval, and army flag of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic consists of a red cloth, in the left hand corner of which (on top, near the pole) there are in golden characters the letters R. S. F. S. R., or the inscription: Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

Chairman of the fifth All-Russian Congress of Soviets and of the All-Russian Central Executive Committee—J. Sverdloff.

Executive Officers—All-Russian Central Executive Committee: T. I. Teodorowitch, F. A. Rosin, A. P. Rosenholz, A. C. Mitrofanoff, K. G. Maximoff.

[illegible]NSTITUTION OF SOCIALIST RUSSIA

[illegible] Federated Soviet Republic was translated by "The Nation" from an official printed text embodying the latest revisions. It is re[illegible] to be posted in all public places in Russia. We reprint it for two purposes. First, to give our readers first hand knowledge of the fundamental law of the first Social[illegible] the Workers. Second, to make it possible for our readers, thru this knowledge, to combat and disprove the many lies printed daily in the capitalist papers about the Rus[illegible]. Edicts and laws may be passed by the Soviet Power in extenuation of the constitution, but hereafter when you read of any order supposed to have been promulgated [illegible] "Forced" which negates or contradicts this fundamental law of the Russian Socialist Republic, you will know it for what it is—a lie of the blackest kind.

[illegible]STITUTION

([illegible] Law)

[illegible] Socialist Federated Soviet Republic

[illegible]sions of the 5th All-Russian Congress of Soviets, adopted on July 10, 1918

The declaration of rights of the laboring and exploited people (approved by the third All-Russian Congress of Soviets in January, 1918), together with the Constitution of the Soviet Republic, approved by the 5th Congress, constitutes a single fundamental law of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

This fundamental law becomes effective upon the publication of the same in its entirety in the "Izvestia of the All-Russian General Executive Committee." It must be published by all organs of the Soviet government and must be posted in a prominent place in every Soviet institution.

The 5th Congress instructs the People's Commissariat of Education to introduce in all schools and educational institutions of the Russian Republic the study and explanation of the basic principles of this Constitution.

Article One

Declaration of Rights of the Laboring and Exploited People

Chapter One.

1. Russia is declared to be a Republic of the Soviets of Workers', Soldiers' and Peasants' Deputies. All the central and local power belongs to these Soviets.

2. The Russian Soviet Republic is organized on the basis of a free union of free nations, as a federation of Soviet national Republics.

Chapter Two.

3. Bearing in mind as its fundamental problem the abolition of exploitation of men by men, the entire abolition of the division of the people into classes, the suppression of exploiters, the establishment of a Socialist society, and the victory of socialism in all lands, the third All-Russian Congress of Soviets of Workers', Soldiers' and Peasants' Deputies further resolves:

a. For the purpose of realizing the socialization of land, all private property in land is abolished, and the entire land is declared to be national property and is to be apportioned among husbandmen without any compensation to the former owners, in the measure of each one's ability to till it.

b. All forests, treasures of the earth, and waters of general public utility, all implements whether animate or inanimate, model farms and agricultural enterprises are declared to be national property.

c. As a first step toward complete transfer of ownership to the Soviet Republic of all factories, mills, mines, railways and other means of production and transportation, the Soviet law for the control by workmen and the establishment of the Supreme Soviet of National Economy is hereby confirmed, so as to assure the power of the workers over the exploiters.

d. With reference to international banking and finance, the third Congress of Soviets is discussing the Soviet decree regarding the annulment of loans made by the Government of the Czar, by landowners and the bourgeoisie, and it trusts that the Soviet government will firmly follow this course until the final victory of the international workers' revolt against the oppression of capital.

e. The transfer of all banks into the ownership of the Workers' and Peasants' government, as one of the conditions of the liberation of the toiling masses from the yoke of capital, is confirmed.

f. Universal obligation to work is introduced for the purpose of eliminating the parasitic strata of society and organizing the economic life of the country.

g. For the purpose of securing the working class in the possession of the complete power, and in order to eliminate all possibility of restoring the power of the explaiters, it is decreed that all toilers be armed, and that a Socialist Red Army be organized and the propertied class be disarmed.

Chapter Three.

4. Expressing its absolute resolve to liberate mankind from the grip of capital and imperialism, which flooded the earth with blood in this present most criminal of all wars, the third Congress of Soviets fully agrees with the Soviet Government in its policy of breaking secret treaties, of organizing on a wide scale the fraternization of the workers and peasants of the belligerent armies, and of making all efforts to conclude a general democratic peace without annexations or indemnities, upon the basis of the free determination of the people.

5. It is also to this end that the third Congress of Soviets insists upon putting an end to the barbarous policy of the bourgeois civilization which enables the exploiters of a few chosen nations to enslave hundreds of millions of the toiling population of Asia, of the colonies and of small countries generally.

6. The third Congress of Soviets hails the policy of the Council of People's Commissars in proclaiming the full independence of Finland, in withdrawing troops from Persia, and in proclaiming the right of Armenia to self-determination.

Chapter Four.

7. The third All-Russian Congress of Soviets of Workers', Soldiers' and Peasants' Deputies believes that now, during the progress of the decisive battle between the proletariat and its exploiters, the exploiters can not hold a position in any branch of the Soviet government. The power must belong entirely to the toiling masses and to their plenipotentiary representatives—the Soviets of Workers', Soldiers' and Peasants' Deputies.

8. In its effort to create a league—free and voluntary, and for that reason all the more complete and secure—of the working classes of all the peoples of Russia, the third Congress of Soviets merely establishes the fundamental principles of the federation of [illegible] Soviet Republics, leaving to the workers and [illegible] of every people to decide the following [illegible] at their plenary sessions of their [illegible] whether or not they desire to participate, and [illegible] in the federal government and [illegible]

General Provisions of the Constitution of the Russian Socialist Federatel Soviet Republic

Chapter Five.

9. The fundamental problem of the Constitution of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic involves, in view of the present transition period, the establishment of a dictatorship of the urban and rural proletariat and the poorest peasantry in the form of a powerful All-Russian Soviet authority, for the purpose of abolishing the exploitation of men by men and of introducing Socialism, in which there will be neither a division into classes nor a state of autocracy.

10. The Russian Republic is a free Socialist society of all the working people of Russia. The entire power, within the boundaries of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, belongs to all the working people of Russia, united in urban and rural Soviets.

11. The Soviets of those regions which differentiate themselves by a special form of existence and national character may unite in autonomous regional unions, ruled by the local Congress of the Soviets and their executive organs.

These autonomous regional unions participate in the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic upon the basis of a federation.

12. The supreme power of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic belongs to the All-Russian Congress of Soviets, and, in periods between the convocation of the Congress, to the All-Russian Central Executive Committee.

13. For the purpose of securing to the toilers real freedom of conscience, the church is to be separated from the state and the school from the church, and the right of religious and anti-religious propaganda is accorded to every citizen.

14. For the purpose of securing the freedom of expression to the toiling masses, the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic abolishes all dependence of the press upon capital, and turns over to the working people and the poorest peasantry all technical and material means of publication of newspapers, pamphlets, books, etc., and guarantees their free circulation throughout the country.

15. For the purpose of enabling the workers to hold free meetings, the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic offers to the working class and to the poorest peasantry furnished halls, and takes care of their heating and lighting appliances.

16. The Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, having crushed the economic and political power of the propertied classes and having thus abolished all obstacles which interfered with the freedom of organization and action of the workers and peasants, offers assistance, material and other, to the workers and the poorest peasantry in their effort to unite and organize.

17. For the purpose of guaranteeing to the workers real access to knowledge, the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic sets itself the task of furnishing full and general free education to the workers and the poorest peasantry.

18. The Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic considers work the duty of every citizen of the Republic, and proclaims as its motto: "He shall not eat who does not work."

19. For the purpose of defending the victory of the great peasants' and workers' revolution, the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic recognizes the duty of all citizens of the Republic to come to the defence of their Socialist Fatherland, and it, therefore, introduces universal military training. The honor of defending the revolution with arms is given only to the toilers, and the non-toiling elements are charged with the performance of other military duties.

20. In consequence of the solidarity of the toilers of all nations, the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic grants all political rights of Russian citizens to foreigners who live in the territory of the Russian Republic and are engaged in toil and who belong to the toiling class. The Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic also recognizes the right of local Soviets to grant citizenship to such foreigners without complicated formality.

21. The Russian Socialist Federatod Soviet Republic offers shelter to all foreigners who seek refuge from political or religious persecution.

22. The Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, recognizing equal rights of all citizens, irrespective of their racial or national connections, proclaims all privileges on this ground, as well as oppression of national minorities, to be in contradiction with the fundamental laws of the Republic.

23. Being guided by the interests of the working class as a whole, the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic deprives all individuals and groups of rights which could be utilized by them to the detriment of the Socialist Revolution.

Construction of the Soviet Power

A. Organization of the Central Power

Chapter Six.

The All-Russian Congress of Soviets of Workers', Peasants', Cossacks' and Red Army Deputies.

24. The All-Russian Congress of Soviets is the supreme power of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

25. The All-Russian Congress of Soviets is composed of representatives of urban Soviets (one delegate for 25,000 voters), and of representatives of the provincial (Gubernia) congresses of Soviets (one delegate for 125,000 inhabitants).

Note 1. In case the Provincial Congress is not called before the All-Russian Congress is convoked, delegates for the latter are sent directly from the county (Ouezd) Congress.

Note 2. In case the Regional (Oblast) Congress is convoked indirectly, previous to the convocation of the All-Russian Congress, delegates for the latter may be sent by the Regional Congress.

26. The All-Russian Congress is convoked by the All-Russian Central Executive Committee at least twice a year.

27. A special All-Russian Congress is convoked by the All-Russian Central Executive Committee upon its own initiative, or upon the request of local Soviets having not less than one-third of the entire population of the Republic.

28. The All-Russian Congress elects an All-Russian Central Executive Committee of not more than 200 members.

29. The All-Russian Central Executive Committee is entirely responsible to the All-Russian Congress of Soviets.

30. In the periods between the convocation of the Congresses, the All-Russian Central Executive Committee is the supreme power of the Republic.

Chapter Seven.

The All-Russian Central Executive Committee.

31. The All-Russian Central Executive Committee is the supreme legislative, executive, and controlling organ of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

32. The All-Russian Central Executive Committee directs in a general way the activity of the workers and peasants' government and of all organs of the Soviet authority in the country, and it co-ordinates and regulates the operation of the Soviet Constitution and of the resolutions of the All-Russian Congresses and of the central organs of the Soviet power.

33. The All-Russian Central Executive Committee considers and enacts all measures and proposals introduced by the Soviet of People's Commissars or by the various departments, and it also issues its own decrees and regulations.

34. The All-Russian Central Executive Committee convokes the All-Russian Congress of Soviets, at which time the Executive Committee reports on its activity and on general questions.

35. The All-Russian Central Executive Committee forms a Council of People's Commissars for the purpose of general management of the affairs of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, and it also forms departments (People's Commissariats) for the purpose of conducting various branches.

36. The members of the All-Russian Central Executive Committee work in the various departments (People's Commissariats) or execute special orders of the All-Russian Central Executive Committee.

Chapter Eight.

The Council of People's Commissars.

37. The Council of People's Commissars is entrusted with the general management of the affairs of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

38. For the accomplishment of this task the Council of People's Commissars issues decrees, resolutions, orders, and, in general, takes all steps necessary for the proper and rapid conduct of government affairs.

39. The Council of People's Commissars notifies immediately the All-Russian Central Executive Committee of all its orders and resolutions.

40. The All-Russian Central Executive Committee has the right to revoke or suspend all orders and resolutions of the Council of People's Commissars.

41. All orders and resolutions of the Council of People's Commissars of great political significance are turned over for consideration and final approval to the All-Russian Central Executive Committee.

Note: Measures requiring immediate execution may be enacted directly by the Council of People's Commissars.

42. The members of the Council of People's Commissars stand at the head of the various People's Commissariats.

43. There are seventeen People's Commissars:

a. Foreign Affairs.
b. Army.
c. Navy.
d. Interior.
e. Justice.
f. Labor.
g. Social Welfare.
h. Education.
i. Post and Telegraph.
j. National Affairs.
k. Finances.
l. Ways of Communication.
m. Agriculture.
n. Commerce and Industry.
o. National Supplies.
p. State Control.
q. Supreme Soviet of National Economy.
r. Public Health.

44. Every Commissar has a College (Committee) of which he is the President, and the members of which are appointed by the Council of People's Commissars.

45. A People's Commissar has the individual right to decide on all questions under the jurisdiction of his Commissariat, and he is to report on his decision to the College. If the College does not agree with the Commissar on some decisions, the former may, without stopping the execution of the decision, complain of it to the executive members of the Council of People's Commissars or to the All-Russian Central Executive Committee.

Individual members of the College have this right also.

46. The Council of People's Commissars is entirely responsible to the All-Russian Congress of Soviets and the All Russian Central Executive Committee.

47. The People's Commissars and the Colleges of the People's Commissariats are entirely responsible to the Council of People's Commissars and the All-Russian Central Executive Committee.

48. The title of People's Commissar belongs only to the members of the Council of People's Commissars, which is in charge of general affairs of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, and it cannot be used by any other representative of the Soviet power, either central or local.

Chapter Nine.

Affairs in the Jurisdiction of the All-Russian Congress and the All-Russian Central Executive Committee.

49. The All-Russian Congress and the All-Russian Central Executive Committee deal with questions of state, such as:

a. Ratification and amendment of the Constitution of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

b. General direction of the entire interior and foreign policy of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

c. Establishing and changing boundaries, also ceding territory belonging to the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

d. Establishing boundaries for regional Soviet unions belonging to the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, also settling disputes among them.

e. Admission of new members to the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, and recognition of the secession of any part of it.

f. The general administrative division of the territory of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic and the approval of regional unions.

g. Establishing and changing of weights, measures and money denominations in the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

h. Foreign relations, declaration of war, and ratification of peace treaties.

i. Making loans, signing commercial treaties, and financial agreements.

j. Working out a basis and a general plan for the national economy and for various branches in the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

k. Approval of the budget of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

l. Levying taxes and establishing the duties of citizens to the state.

m. Establishing the bases for the organization of armed forces.

n. State legislation, judicial organization and procedure, civil and criminal legislation, etc.

o. Appointment and dismissal of the individual People's Commissars or the entire Council; also approval of the President of the Council of People's Commissars.

p. Granting and canceling Russian citizenship and fixing rights of foreigners.

q. The right to declare individual and general amnesty.

50. Besides the above-mentioned questions, the All-Russian Congress of the All-Russian Central Executive Committee have charge of all other affairs which according to their decision, require their attention.

51. The following questions are solely under the jurisdiction of the All-Russian Congress:

a. Ratification and amendment of the fundamental principles of the Soviet Constitution.

b. Ratification of peace treaties.

52. The decision of questions indicated in Items c and h of Paragraph 49 may be made by the All-Russian Central Executive Committee only in case it is impossible to convoke the Congress.

B. Organization of the Local Soviets

Chapter Ten.

The Congresses of the Soviets.

53. Congresses of Soviets are composed as follows:

a. Regional: Of representatives of the urban and county Soviets, one representative for 25,000 inhabitants of the county, and one representative for 5,000 voters of the cities—but not more than 500 representatives for the entire region—or of representatives of the provincial Congresses, chosen on the same basis, if such a Congress meets before the regional Congress.

b. Provincial (Gubernia): Of representatives of urban and rural (Volost) Soviets, one representative for 10,000 inhabitants from the rural districts, and one representative for 2,000 voters in the city; altogether not more than 300 representatives for the entire province. In case the county Congress meets before the provincial, election takes place on the same basis, but by the county Congress instead of the rural.

c. County: Of representatives of rural Soviets, one delegate for each 1,000 inhabitants, but not more more than 300 delegates for the entire county.

d. Rural! (Volost): Of representatives of all village Soviets in the Volost one delegate for ten members of the Soviet.

Note 1. Representatives of urban Soviet which have a population of not more than 10.000 persons participate in the county Congress; village Soviets of districts of less than 1,000 inhabitants unite for the purpose of electing delegates to the county Congress.

Note 2. Rural Soviets of less than ten members send one delegate to the rural (Volost) Congress.

54. Congresses of the Soviets are convoked by the respective Executive Committees upon their own initiative, or upon request of local Soviets comprising not less than one-third of the entire population of the given district. In any case they are convoked at least twice a year for regions, every three months for provinces and counties, and once a month for rural districts.

55. Every Congress of Soviets (regional, provincial, county and rural) elects its Executive organ—an Executive Committee the membership of which shall not exceed:

(a) For regions and provinces, 25; (b) for a county, 20; (c) for a rural district, 10. The Executive Committee is responsible to the congress which elected it.

56. In the boundaries of the respective territories the Congress is the supreme power; during intervals between the convocations of the Congress, the executive Committee is the supreme power.

Chapter Eleven.

The Soviet of Deputies.

57. Soviets of Deputies are formed:

a. In cities, one deputy for each 1,000 inhabitants; the total to be not less than 50 and not more than 1,000 members.

b. All other settlements (towns, villages, hamlets, etc.) of less than 10,000 inhabitants, one deputy for each 100 inhabitants; the total to be not less than 3 and not more than 50 deputies for each settlement.

Term of the deputy, three months.

Note: In small rural sections, whenever possible, all questions shall be decided at general meetings of voters.

58. The Soviet of Deputies elects an Executive Committee to deal with current affairs; not more than 5 members for rural districts, one for every 50 members of the Soviets of cities, but not more than 15 and not less than 3 in the aggregate (Petrograd and Moscow not more than 40). The Executive Committee is entirely responsible to the Soviet which elected it.

59. The Soviet of Deputies is convoked by the Executive Committee upon its own initiative, or upon the request of not less than one-half of the membership of the Soviet; in any case at least once a week in cities, and twice a week in rural sections.

60. Within its jurisdiction the Soviet, and in cases mentioned in Paragraph 57. Note, the meeting of the voters, is the supreme power in the given district.

Chapter Twelve.

Jurisdiction of the Local Organs of the Soviets.

61. Regional, provincial, county, and rural [illegible]gans of the Soviet power and also the Soviets of Deputies have to perform the following duties:

a. Carry out all orders of the respective higher organs of the Soviet power.

b. Take all steps towards raising the cultural and economic standards of the given territory.

c. Decide all questions of local importance within their respective territory.

d. Co-ordinate all Soviet activity in their respective territory.

62. The Congresses of Soviets and their Executive Committees have the right to control the activity of the local Soviets (i. e., the regional Congress controls all Soviets of the respective regions; the provincial of the respective province, with the exception of the urban Soviets, etc.); and the regional and provincial Congresses and their Executive Committees in addition have the right to overrule the decisions of the Soviets of their districts, giving notice in important cases to the central Soviet authority.

63. For the purpose of performing their duties, the local Soviets, rural and urban, and the Executive Committees form sections respectively.

Article Four

The Right to Vote

Chapter Thirteen

64. The right to vote and to be elected to the Soviets is enjoyed by the following citizens, irrespective of religion, nationality, domicile, etc., of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, of both sexes, who shall have completed their eighteenth year by the day of election:

a. All who have acquired the means of living through labor that is productive and useful to society, and also persons engaged in housekeeping, which enables the former to do productive work, i. e., laborers and employees of all classes who are employed in industry, trade, agriculture, etc., and peasants and Cossack agricultural laborers who employ no help for the purpose of making profits.

b. Soldiers of the army and navy of the Soviets.

c. Citizens of the two preceding categories who have to any degree lost their capacity to work.

Note. 1: Local Soviets may, upon approval of the central power, lower the age standard mentioned herein.

Note 2: Non-citizens mentioned in Paragraph 20 (Article Two, Chapter 5) have the right to vote.

65. The following persons enjoy neither the right to vote nor the right to be voted for, even though they belong to one of the categories enumerated above, namely:

a. Persons who employ hired labor in order to obtain from it an increase in profits.

b. Persons who have an income without being any work, such as interest from capital, receipts from property, etc.

c. Private merchants, trade and commercial brokers.

d. Monks and clergy of all denominations.

e. Employees and agents of the former police, the gendarme corps, and the Okhrana (Czar's secret service), also members of the former reigning dynasty.

f. Persons who have in legal form been declared demented or mentally deficient, and also persons under guardianship.

g. Persons who have been deprived by a Soviet of their rights of citizenship because of selfish or dishonorable offences, for the period fixed by the sentence.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN.

Elections.

66. Elections are conducted according to custom on days fixed by the local Soviets.

67. Election takes place in the presence of an electing committee and the representative of the local Soviet.

68. In case the representative of the Soviet cannot be present for valid causes, the chairman of the electing committee takes his place, and in case the latter is absent, the chairman of the election meeting replaces him.

69. Minutes of the proceedings and results of elections are to be compiled and signed by the members of the electing committee and the representative of the Soviet.

70. Detailed instructions regarding the election proceedings and the participation in them of professional and other workers' organizations are to be issued by the local Soviets, according to the instructions of the All-Russian Central Executive Committee.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

The Checking and Cancellation of Elections and Recall of the Deputies.

71. The respective Soviets receive all the records of the proceedings of the election.

72. The Soviet appoints a commission to verify the elections.

73. This commission reports on the results to the Soviets.

74. The Soviet decides the question when there is doubt as to which candidate is elected.

75. The Soviet announces a new election if the election of one candidate or another cannot be determined.

76. If an election was irregularly carried on in its entirety, it may be declared void by a higher Soviet authority.

77. The highest authority in relation to questions of elections is the All-Russian Central Executive Committee.

78. Voters who have sent a deputy to the Soviet have the right to recall him, and to have a new election, according to general provision.

Article Five

The Budget

Chapter Sixteen

79. The financial policy of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic in the present transition period of dictatorship of the proletariet, facilitates the fundamental purpose of expropriation of the bourgeoisie and the preparation of conditions necessary for the equality of all citizens of Russia in the production and distribution of wealth. To this end it sets forth as its task the supplying of the organs of the Soviet power with all necessary funds for local and state needs of the Soviet Republic, without regard to private property rights.

80. The state expenditures and income of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic are combined in the state budget.

Reds Ousted But Red Prevails

Mooney Congress the Most Momentous in History of U. S. Labor— Radicals in A. F. of L. at Last Assert Themselves—Gompers Will Now Have to Speed Up Or Shut Up.

(Special to Ohio Socialist)

The officialdom of the American Federation of Labor and the conservatives and reactionaries in that organization were shell-shocked in Chicago last week and if indications foretell, will have to spend the balance of their unprogressive lives in hospitals and die a lonely death unless they mend their ways.

It happened at the Mooney Congress which convened Jan. 14 in the North Side Turner Hall, windy city. A thousand delegates from all parts of the United States and some from Canada met in five days' sessions and every day saw the breaking of some hard and fast A. F. of L. precedent or idol. Labor is setting its face toward the rising sun, toward the east where the crimson of the new day greets mankind with the new message. Labor has thundered its ultimatum in foreign lands and its lightening has blasted the chains of wage slavery. The storm clouds were seen at the Mooney Conference and lightening will flash and thunder will crash in the camp of the profiteers in this country before many more moons grace the sky.

The first day of the congress was a blue day for the "crimson-red-cerise gang," as the Chicago wielders of the poisoned pens called those delegates who represented Socialist locals and the I. W. W. By methods not quite in harmony with democratic practices, these "reds" were ruled out of the convention, it being contended that only A. F. of L. organizations were invited to take part. But those who thought that this would keep the Mooney Congress "within bounds of reason" reckoned without an eye upon the new spirit which has given labor a new life. Also, they did not remember, for the minute, that it was the radicals within the A. F. of L. who alone stood up for Mooney, who were first to come to his rescue and that the conservatives still fail to grasp the deep injustice to labor involved in the Mooney frame-up, and that it was, in most instances, only the radicals who cared to spend time at such a conference.

Turns a Real Red.

It was, after all, a very significant diplomatic stroke, this ousting of the Socialist delegates. All the credit can now be assumed by the A. F. of L. delegates. Ed Nolan, treasurer of the Mooney Defense Fund, who was the [illegible] and permanent chairman of the conference, complained after the first day's session that there were delegates present "who wanted to consider everything from Mooney to Russia." He was right, but this was nothing to complain about and the second day saw the chairman gradually changing his position in an attempt to get nearer the heart of the delegates present so that he could use this influence in holding them in leash.

Two "awful" deeds were perpetrated by the delegates upon this second day. The first was to invite Eugene V. Debs to address them, and the second was to deny seats in the convention to representatives of the Italian labor mission, a mission repudiated by Italian labor, yet welcomed by Gompers—a mission appointed by the government of Imperial Italy.

Besides telegraphing Debs to come to the convention, E. B. Ault, secretary of the conference and editor of the Seattle Daily Union Record, also wired Judge Westenhaver to permit Debs to leave the jurisdiction of his court for a period long enough to speak to the delegates. The judge answered that such permission would have to be obtained in open court with both sides represented. The open court hearing was had the next day, but as all Socialists prophesied, the judge refused to grant Debs the privilege to visit Chicago.

The few conservatives among the delegates, seeing the trend of events upon this second day, attempted by caucuses, to swing delegations from various states and organizations back into line. Quinlivan of the Toledo Central Labor body attempted this with the Ohio delegates, but to no avail. The conference had turned red without the reds and the Socialists who were denied seats—yes, even those delegates who carried red cards, sat tight and watched the march forward.

"It's Going My Way."

Remarks made in an impassioned speech by a Socialist delegate told the story. "Labor has advanced a hundred years here today. Sit tight. I'm satisfied. It's going my way," said he. And then the reply of Debs to the invitation extended him by the conference was read and the convention went wild, ending the demonstration with three cheers for the invincible peer of labor.

Debs' Telegram.

Terre Haute, Ind., Jan. 15, 1919.

E. B. Ault, Secretary Mooney National Labor Congress, Chicago, Ill.:

A thousand thanks to the convention for its kind invitation. Nothing would give me greater pleasure than to appeal to the delegates in behalf of Mooney and Billings, but I am in the custody of federal court officials and not permitted to go to Chicago. Free speech prevails in Russia but is dead in the United States since the world has been made safe for democracy. This morning I wired Delegate Wag-[illegible] respecting the purpose of the convention. The conservative element has the unqualified approval and support of the capitalist press, which can only mean that the conservative element is true to the capitalist class and false to the working class. I am with and for the radicals. The hour has struck for action. Long winded resolutions and humble petitions to corporation tools in public office and corrupt po-

Capitalist Interests Prepare for Invasion of Mexico

The American investors in Mexico are uniting for a joint move against the efforts of the Carranza government, to take the full value of the natural resources for the use of the Mexican people. "Curb News," published by the Jones & Baker Securities Co., New York, January 6, 1919, carries a front page story which gives full details of the organization of "The National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico."

The Association has two objects—the rapid development of Mexico's great natural wealth and the protection of American rights in this development. It is planned that the Association shall include in its membership "all corporations operating in Mexico as well as every holder of Mexican securities."

One of the leaders of this powerful Association is quoted as saying: "We feel that the Peace Conference should take up the subject of Mexico and that one of the first steps of the League of Nations, if it is formed, should be to save Mexico and its great mineral and oil wealth from the bandits and others who are ravaging the country. The world sorely needs Mexico's raw materials. Mexico must settle her own internal difficulties or expect the League of Nations to step in and settle them for her."

According to the reports carried by "Curb News," "Eager, restless, two-fisted men are thronging the sun-baked streets of El Paso, Texas. * * * Engineers, miners, prospectors, drillers and other trail-blazers are only waiting the word before swarming across the border to assist in a more rapid development of the fabulous riches of old Mexico. All of which is believed to foreshadow an early satisfactory settlement of the vexing Mexican problem, which has simmered and boiled for years.

The writers of the article note that "coming events cast their shadows before." The trading in securities of companies having Mexican holdings has been particularly active of late. The price trend has been upwards. In some cases the rise has been extremely rapid. This is held to be an indication that the newly formed organization will be able to make itself felt in re-establishing [illegible] operating conditions."

The article contains a glowing description of the gold, copper, oil and other Mexican resources, all of which [illegible] waiting for the establishment [illegible] government. [illegible] of the Ameri- [illegible] government is aiming to lay a heavy tax upon all natural resources for the purpose of securing to the people of Mexico the full benefit of their own rich possessions. It is this taxing proposal that is meeting with the chief opposition from the American vested interests.

The situation lends new importance to the recent Pan-American Labor Conference, held at Laredo, in the course of which the workers of Mexico, Central America and the United States pledged their united support to a movement that would safeguard the American's against the menace of financial imperialism.

General Strike Convulses Argentine

The acute labor unrest which has been convulsing Argentina for months came to a climax on January 8, when a general strike was declared throughout the Republic. It resulted in a complete tie-up of all industries. Even the police, the firemen, the street-cleaners, and other municipal employes in Buenos Aires joined the strikers. The center of the disturbances was the Vasena Ironworks, where some twenty thousand men did picket duty. The government finally broke the strike, after various street battles had taken place, on January 11 by declaring martial law and appointing General Dellepaine as military dictator. In congress the Socialist deputies demanded an explanation of the government's use of force in the strike. The session broke up in wild disorder, fist fights being one of the attendant circumstances.

The labor movement of Argentina is overwhelmingly under Socialist control. The only paper circulating during the strike was La Vanquardia, the Socialist organ. The other papers were seized by the strikers as fast as they appeared, who pointed to the fact that the only paper supporting them was La Vanguardia. No authentic news has as yet come through from Argentina to indicate whether the strikers won any of their demands.

The Argentina labor troubles are but a part of the series of strikes that has taken place throughout Latin America in recent months. The Pan-American Socialist Conference, therefore, which has been called to meet in Buenos Aires late in January, bids fair to be of historic importance.

Now is Time for Labor to Rebuke Capitalist Crime and Strike Blow for Industrial Freedom

Debs Telegraphs Mooney Conference

Telegram

Greetings to the radicals, the true friends of Mooney and the real representatives of the American Labor movement. Stand by your program. The organized workers must now show that they are men and women to be respected and not sycophants and slaves to be spat upon with contempt.

The capitalist press is full of praise for the conservative element. This of itself is proof of the cowardice or treason of that element.

Down with the cowads and traitors who in the name of union labor would crucify Mooney and betray the labor movement! They wear union badges but they are even lower and viler than the plutocratic pirates and their servile tools who framed up Mooney and his associates.

Mooney's worst enemies are the treacherous union men who have their thirty pieces for their perfidy and would now make a farce and failure of this conference.

Mooney and Billings are innocent and we know it. The whole world knows it. That is enough. Let the conference issue its ultimatum. Waste no time on capitalist courts, legislation or politicians. Give the capitalist conspirators so many days. Unconditional release or general strike. No compromise. Upon that issue we can face the world. If the capitalists must have war let it come. The people are with us. We have all to gain, and nothing to lose but our chains.

Do not crawl and beg but stand erect and command. The honest workers of the nation will back you up to the finish. All they ask is bold and fearless leadership. Now is the time for labor to rebuke capitalist crime and strike a historic blow for industrial freedom and social justice in the United States.

Arrogant Parasites Roll in Wealth While Useful Workers Starve

A more glaring instance of arrogant brutality on the part of members of the capitalist class was never instanced than in that of the wearing of a sable coat costing $75,000 by the wife of W. E. Cory, the steel magnate. According to the daily press the fur centers of the world were searched to find the most costly and perfect materials for this garment which clothes a parasite who never expended an ounce of energy in earning a penny of this huge sum. To outdo in extravagance and vain show the titled nobility (what the Bolsheviks have left of that bunch of useless junk) of Europe seems to be the highest ambition of the industrial autocrats of democratic (?) America.

Fattened on the enormous profits of war the steel kings and their consorts may now flaunt their arrogance before a nation of jobless and impoverished workers. While American workers were giving their lives on the battle fields of France and at home were laboring night and day in self-denial that democracy might rule the world, the manufacturers of steel were piling up millions in profits greater than at any previous time. The new millionaires produced by the war and the miseries of mankind, can well afford to squander in shameless follies their unearned wealth while the producers, the rightful owners, tramp the streets in search of a master to further exploit them.

From the sweat and blood and toil of the workers is derived every cent of this huge sum that is lavished upon the back of a useless social drone. From their denial and that of their wives and children comes every particle of comfort and elegance that is in this garment. The cries of starving babies, the agonized weepings of broken hearted mothers, the despair of fathers is muffled in its rich folds. The very blood of the workers drips from its hem.

The brutality, the fiendish and criminal immorality of a robbing and ruling class is examplified in this outrageous assault upon decency and the higher precepts of moral teachings and was never mirrored in a more illuminating instance than this. At the hour when poverty, grief, disease, sadness and death holds millions of Americans in the grip of despair, the exploiters, the profit-takers, the social parasites roll in undreamed of luxuries and flaunt before their victims the evidence of their thievery.

Seventy-five thousand dollars for a fur coat for a social parasite whose usefulness to the world is nil, while the babies of the useful and necessary workers die like flies of disease and starvation and have not even rags with which to cover their nakedness!

The whole monstrosity is a crime against social justice and cries aloud for a readjustment of the distribution of the products of labor. Could evidence of the basic wrongs of the present industrial system be plainer? Is it nto evident in this latest debauch of a fatted parasite that the problem of problems before the American workers is a juster distribution of the wealth they create?

This is the problem before us today and the hour of its solution draws near.

The workers alone have the right and the power to settle it justly. The beneficiaries of this system, the $75,000 coat wearing parasites who fatten on the labor of the exploited millions are not going to even attempt to solve it. Indeed, why should they? It is not their concern. Their concern is but to keep astride the bent backs of the workers and as long as the workers prefer to be ridden they certainly will be content to do the riding. What think you, workers?

Bread Line for Heroes and Workers

Washington, Jan. 16.—"When the men in the army are demobilized," said Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, today before the house immigration commission, "we are going to have bread lines in every industrial center by May 1. After that date it is hoped that building will pick up and take some of the men."

Surveys of industrial conditions in many cities were presented by Mr. Morrison, who urged legislation prohibiting immigration for four years. The estimated number of unemployed given by the survey included: Cleveland, 40,000; Clifton, Ariz., 650; Los Angeles, 8,000; New Britain, Conn., 2,000; Chicago, 75,000; Rockford, Ill., 200; Fort Wayne, Ind., 350; Louisville, 2,900; New Orleans, 20,000; Boston, 10,000; Grand Rapids, 5,000; St. Paul, 8,000; St. Louis, 15,000; Kansas City, 2,000; Paterson, N. J., 1,200; Trenton, 2,500; New York City, 20,000; Cincinnati, 5,000; Portland, Ore., 9,000; Toledo, 17,000; Youngstown, 5,000; McKeesport, Pa., 600; Scranton, Pa., 200; Aberdeen, Wash., 3,000; Wheeling, 750; Wilwaukee, 7,000; Superior, Wis., 750.

Jersey City said there was "no noticeable distress because of unemployment."

Newark, N. J., reported "five men for every job." Jacksonville, Fla., said that supply and demand were equal.

McDonald, Socialist, Heads Illinois Labor Federation

Chicago, Ill.—Duncan McDonald of Springfield, Ill., one of the veterans of the Socialist movement of this state, has been elected president of the Illinois Federation of Labor, according to the results of the referendum just completed. He succeeds John H. Walker, a national figure in the labor movement, and former Socialist.

McDonald is a member of the Coal Miner's Union, having served for many years as secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of Illinois. He was a member for several years of the Socialist Party national committee from Illinois.

McDonald's election as head of the Illinois labor movement, and with James H. Maurer having occupied a similar position for years in the Pennsylvania labor movement, places Socialists in command of two of the strongest state labor federations in the country.

Other officials of the Illinois Labor Federation were elected as follows: Victor A. Olander, Seamen's union, secretary-treasurer; J. P. McGrath, vice president; Edward Carbine, second vice president; Michael Whalen, third vice president; Thomas Kelly, fourth vice president; Joseph W. Mor- fifth vice president; Al Towers, sixth vice president; Emil Reinhold, seventh vice president; Joseph B. Connors, eighth vice president, and Waldo Cross, ninth vice president, these constituting the executive board; the auditors being William Jampel, Jerry Kain and Bert Gray.

Unemployment Among Discharged Soldiers.

There has been unemployment among discharged soldiers for many months past. The Monthly Labor Review issued by the United States Department of Labor shows that in April, May and June of 1918 more than a third of all the soldiers interviewed by the investigators of the department were "seeking employment." Apparently the situation was acute in the summer. How much more difficult must it have become now that the winter months have decreased the demand for labor, while the system is [illegible]

Striking Features of Meeting of National Executive Committee

Special Wire.

A monster free speech and amnesty for political prisoners' convention to be held at Chicago on International Labor Day, May 1st has been called by the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party in meeting at Chicago, Jan. 18-19-20. All radical and liberal organizations of the nation are invited to take part.

Among other matters of pressing importance upon which the committee acted was that of stating the position of the Socialist Party of America in relation to the so-called labor party that has been organized at Chicago and a few other cities. "No fusion, no compromise," is the keynote sounded. Socialist Party members are prohibited joining it the same as other political parties.

Instructions to the party's delegates to the International Socialist Conference at Luzerne, Switzerland, were that they maintain the party's expressed position upon international questions and work for the upbuilding of the Revolutionary International of the working-class of the world.

James A. Maurer, president of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor was chosen as delegate to represent the Socialist Party at the South American Labor Conference which convenes at Buenes Aires, in April.

A national weekly paper under party control was one of the decisions of the committe which makes this meeting one ofthe most momentous in history. A department of Organization and Propaganda under direction of Alfred Wagenknecht, State Secretary of Ohio was established as one of the principal features connected with the new weekly.

Among important resolutions were those demanding withdrawal of American troops from Russia.

How our Comrades on Trial Viewed Verdict of "Guilty"

By ADOLPH GERMER, Nat'l Sec'y.

The verdict of the jury is, of course, disappointing though not in the least surprising. The venire from which we had to choose was made up of men who are instinctively hostile to us. The prosecution was extremely careful to keep from the jury anyone who, at any time or in any way came in contact with, or had the slightest knowledge of the labor movement. Men who had a glimmering of the economic and political forces that are at work were not wanted on the jury by the prosecution. Men with opinions and prejudices against us were needed to convict. Retired farmers, retired business men and insurance and real estate men, whose income is derived from the profit system, were given to us and we were obliged to submit our fate in their hands. I am not in the least questioning the honesty of the jury but it is true as Marx says, "The way a person makes his living determines his mode of thinking."

Much as the prosecution might deny it, it stood out as clear as the noonday sun that it was not the five defendants who were on trial but the Socialist Party and its principles. The war hysteria was carried into every phase of the case to add to the natural prejudices of the jury. Had the jury carefully followed one phase of the judge's instructions, only one verdict could have been returned and that is, "Not Guilty."

The jury was instructed in substance that we had the right to hold and express our political and economic views; that we had a right to discuss the causes and the effects of the war and if they found that our object was to improve the conditions of society, they were to return a verdict of "Not Guilty."

There was abundance of evidence to show that we carried on similar propaganda before the war and that what we did during the war was consistent with the traditional principles of the Socialist Party.

Personally speaking, and I am sure I am expressing the sentiment of my colleagues, I have nothing to regret and nothing for which to apologize. If the democracy of which we heard so much and for which we were told we entered this war can be had only through prison cells, I am willing to take my place with countless others who have been denied their liberties because of a conviction.

The Socialist movement will not suffer from the verdict rendered against us. Quite to the contrary, it will be vitalized. The unpardonable crime of sending men to prison for having an opinion has never destroyed any movement. Bismarck sought by oppression and persecution to destroy the Socialist movement of Germany but instead of destroying it, he gave it life and determination. Postmaster General Burleson may exclude our papers from the mails and thus seek to destroy our press. Attorney General Gregory may order prosecutions by the wholesale and send our faithful comrades to prison by the thousands, their acts of infamy will serve to enlighten the masses to the growing despotism of the American plutocracy. In European countries political prisoners are released. In this country alleged political offenders are sent to prison."

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

"The old order sat in judgment on the new, and the verdict would not have been different. Eleven Republicans and Democrats, and one Prohibitionist, returned a verdict of guilty against five Socialists because they carried on the work of the Socialist movement in the United States. In no other country, in or out of the war, with the exception of Russia under the czar, has the established government sought to stop progress by such an insane attack upon the rising Socialist movement as we are witnessing here in the United States. The reverse of the Chicago proceeding would be a trial with twelve Socialists sitting in judgment on the capitalist system. This verdict, that capitalism must pass, is being written, not in court records, but in the minds of the workers of the world. Capitalism's effect to save itself in this country by the conviction of a few Socialists in Chicago, speaking for American Socialism, will only hasten its own doom."

Bank Clerks Strike and Win Demands.

That even "white-collar slaves" are beginning to see the value of united action, is seen from the fact that the bank clerks of Zurich recently conducted a successful strike for higher pay and other concessions. Their wages are now from $50 to $60 a month instead of $16 to $20 a month, the pitiful wages given them before the strike. The general public was in hearty sympathy with the strike, and persuaded the women who were offered the bank clerks' places, not to accept the offers.

Furthermore, cafes, taxis, stores, restaurants, cafes and public offices went on strike in order that the bank clerks might win their demands.

CANADA

Western Labor Preparing for Conference.

A western inter-provincial conference of labor is to be called early in March, the city of Calgary, B. C., having been tentatively agreed upon as the seat of the conference. The labor movements of British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan have already expressed their sympathy with the project. It is intended that the annual convention of the British Columbia Federation of Labor be held during the first three days of the week, and that the balance of the week be given over to the Western Conference.

FRANCE

What to Do With Munitions Plants.

The national conference of workers in the chemical powder mills, recently held in Paris, went on record against the proposal raised in many quarters to close the munition plants erected by the government at great cost, and to sell them to private companies for industrial purposes. The conference points out that experts have testified that these plants can easily be turned over into government-owned chemical fertilizer plants, or into dye works, or into establishments for the manufacture of other articles now imported from foreign countries. It demands the appointment of a mixed commission of parliamentarians and representatives of the labor unions for immediate investigation of and action on this problem.

Reconstruction Program of Syndicalists.

The Central Federation of Labor of France has issued a reconstruction program which calls, among other things, for the constitution for a League of Nations through the free co-operation of all the people for the abolition of economic protectionism and the doing away with an economic war after this war, for disarmament, for the establishment of an international bureau of transportation and reparation of raw material, for the internationalization of colonies, and punitive indemnities, and self-determination for all peoples.

Other features of the manifesto [illegible] of labor in the peace conference, greetings to the Russian, Austrian, Hungarian and German workers, demands for the restoration of free speech and assemblage, amnesty for civil and military war prisoners, the recognition of syndical rights for all workers, and an eight-hour day.

New Elections Postponed.

For months the Socialists of France have demanded that new elections take place at the earliest possible moment, and that these elections be preceded by a change in the electoral system. The French government has decided, however, to postpone the elections until after the signing of the peace treaty and then to conduct them according to the old electoral system. Electoral reform is to be left to the new chamber.

GERMANY

Abolition of Night Work.

It is an interesting fact that on the third day after the Socialists took hold of the government of Germany, night work and Sunday work was abolished in all bakeries and confectioneries throughout Germany. The abolition of night work has been a Socialist demand throughout the world, and the Socialists of Germany proceeded at once to put this part of their program into operation in various industries, notably the ones above mentioned.

RUSSIA

Co-Operation in Archangel.

A recent report of the Archangel Co-Operative Union shows that practically the whole population of the Archangel province is united in various co-operative societies. There are over 500 consumers' societies with a membership of 127,000 persons. Besides these, other than consumers, such as credit societies, societies for timber felling, for producing tar, creameries, etc. The report estimates that the members together with their families thus linked up in various co-operative enterprises aggregate 500,000 persons, which is almost equal to the whole population of the province.

Great Britain

Labor Strong in British Election.

Abraham Cohan, editor of the Jewish Daily Forward, of New York, has cabled the following interesting data concerning the British elections:

"The latest report of the results of the elections in England are very interesting. The figures show that the Union Party, which had a tremendous victory in the elections, received 3,700,000 votes, and elected 359 members of parliament. The Labor Party received 2,700,000 votes and elected only 65 members of parliament. While the Union Party elected one member to every 10,000 of its votes, the Labor Party elected one member to every 41,000 of its votes.

"This fact has made a tremendous impression in England. Even in the districts where the Labor candidates were not elected [illegible]

The Mother of [illegible]

By [illegible]

[illegible] was to be a collective age of [illegible].

Immediately following Frances [illegible] came the brilliant Polish [illegible] Ernestine Rose, who for fifty years carried messages of religious and political freedom. Coming here in 1836 this handsome orator, starting out alone, paying her own expenses, arguing in legislative halls, lecturing in all large cities, in hamlets, in the back woods of Ohio and Indiana and in negro churches, encouraging [illegible] bravely in their fight for liberty, soon found many other women marching along the path of Human Progress.

The path was often hard. At the convention of 1853, while advocating the same rights of guardianship of children for mothers that fathers had, the "respectable" citizens of antediluvian ideas yelled, "Oh dry up! Bow-wow-wow! Waugh; Hiss-is-is! Get out!"

Gazing on the Law Givers did Ernestine Rose recall the innumerable petitions she had sent to legislatures? Was she recalling how, before large and small audiences her melodious voice had rung out against the social evil?

"It is a shame to talk about licensing a social evil. It is a shame to the republic. It is a violation of woman's nature. It is an insult to womanhood, and if a woman has one drop of pure blood stirring in her heart she must revolt against it. At the same time, I say to the legislature that, if you enact laws against social evils, whatever those laws are, let them be alike for man and for woman. If you want to derive a revenue from the corruption of the community, let it be drawn alike from both sexes. The social evil belongs to both, the social remedy must belong to both. Do not degrade woman any more than she is degraded. Perchance, she is driven, through your injustice, to that step to maintain her wretched existence, because every office of emolument is barred against her. Let woman have the franchise, let all the avenues of society be thrown open before her, according to her powers and her capacities and there will be no need to talk about social evils."

And even today there are men who refuse woman the right to work!

Ever the champion of the oppressed she attacked all wrongs. That she knew times changed and with them customs, is shown in her speech defending the widow where she wittily said:

"As to personal property: after all debts and liabilities are discharged, the widow receives one-half of it and, in addition, the law kindly allows her her own wearing apparel, her own ornaments, proper to her station, one bed, with appurtenances for the same, a stove, the Bible, the family pictures, and all the school books; also, all spinning wheels and weaving looms, one table, six chairs, tea cups and spoons. But the law does not inform us whether they are to be tea or table spoons, nor does the law make any provision for kettles, saucepans and all such necessary things. But the presumption seems to be that the spoons meant are teaspoons, for, as ladies are generally considered very delicate, the law presumed that a widow might live on tea only, but spinning wheels and weaving looms are very necessary articles for ladies nowadays. (Hissing and great confusion). Why, you need not hiss, for I am expounding the law. These wise lawmakers, who seem to have lived somewhere about the time of the flood, did not dream of spinning and weaving by steampower.

"When our great-great-grandmothers had to weave every article of apparel worn by the family, it was, no doubt, considered a very good law to allow the widow the possession of the spinning wheels and the weaving looms.

"But, unfortunately for some laws, man is a progressive being, his beliefs opinions, habits, manners and customs change, and so do spinning wheels and weaving looms, and, with men and things, law must change too, for what is the value of a law when man has outgrown it? As well might you bring him to the use of his baby clothes, because they once filled him, as to keep him to such a law. No. Laws, when man has outgrown them, are fit only to be cast aside among the things that were."

Two sisters from the south were in one of the groups. They were Angelina and Sara Grimke.

They had left home and friends to venture north in search of ways to aid in securing human freedom for the black slaves. They knew that any kind of slavery was a stumbling block on the highway of progress.

Many times the gifted Angelina had courageously faced the mobs, as she pled the negro's cause. While the mob threw stones at the windows, howled and hooted and attempted to wreck the building in their rage, she calmly told of the suffering of the chattel slaves. Was it any wonder that woman retaliated by demanding equal privileges and that hourly the woman's rights movement grew?

Stepping out from the group of Unseen Workers, a Quakeress surveyed the Law Givers. She beckoned to one of her friends, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who came to the side of the enthusiastic, impulsive, energetic Quakeress, Lucretia Moll. The twain smiled knowingly to each other in remembrance of another time when men passed judgment on women.

They remembered the days when the nation's conscience began to awaken many to espouse the cause of the down trodden slave. The womanhood of the north entered the lists by the side of the men. When the English, in 1840, called a world wide anti-slavery convention, many American anti-slavery societies sent as their delegates women who had responded nobly and dared to face mobs and rioting that the cause of the negro might be heard.

But alack a day! They did not know that this was not a convention wanting to free all slaves. Great was the consternation and commotion among the "liberal" minded men when the American women delegates arrived. Lucretia Moll, one of the delegates, was deemed as especially strong-minded and undesirable. The discussions about the seating of the women delegates were heated. The clergy were so bitter in their denunciation and so positive of "woman's place" that they whipped the other men in line to refuse to seat the women.

As a special bit of sarcastic salve the women were permitted to view the work of the convention from a screen, where they could not be seen and thus entice the "holy men" from their "duty" of "saving the world."

Little did these ministers realize what a storm they had provoked, nor did they foresee that they had taught the women that while they were working to free the black slaves they would also have to take a stand for the equality of women.

Lucretia Moll meeting the young and beautiful bride of one of the delegates, Henry Stanton, discussed with her not only the bigoted action of the convention but human rights. Man's injustice to woman spurred these two to work for the emancipation of woman as well as the abolition of chattel slavery. Out of the struggle to help the black race, the women defending themselves as human beings entitled to free speech and free assemblage were driven into the woman's rights movement asking citizenship for themselves.

Pan-Hellenic Labor Federates

A few weeks ago, a national convention of all the labor unions of Greece was held in Athens, according to Greek newspapers just received in this country. There was formed the Pan-Hellenic Federation of Labor, and for almost a month the 800 delegates sat to perfect the news organization. Two cardinal points in the constitution of the Federation are: 1, the recognition of the class struggle, and 2, a relationship of co-operation with the Socialist movement. The government tried to interfere with the publication of the minutes of the convention in the Socialist press, but so strong was the protest of the representatives of 200,000 workers assembled against this attempt to suppress free expression in the press, that the government yielded. Among the resolutions adopted was one of congratulations to the Soviet government of Russia, another demanding the restoration of free press, speech and assemblage, and a third calling for the release of the many Greek radicals who have been imprisoned during the war. The newspaper accounts further add that the government offered to send two laborites of its own choosing to attend the Interallied Labor and Socialist Conference, but the federation declined, stating that it would either send its own delegation and not a hand-picked government one, or else, failing to receive passports for them, would abstain from participation in the conference.

In this connection it is of interest to note that a mass meeting of Greek Socialists and workers was held in New York during the first week of January which cabled strong resolutions of protest to the Greek prime minister against the reported intention of the Greek government to send troops to Russia to intervene in the affairs of the Russian Soviet republic.

Yet in spite of the richness of their country the people of Wherisit were shockingly poor.

And do what they would they were unable to discover the reason for this anomalous state of affairs.

The fact itself was so obvious that the most careless observer could not fail to note it. It was the theme of constant discussion among every section of the community, and some of the explanations offered were as fantastic as they were futile.

The drought was blamed, though it happened but once in twenty years, and during the other nineteen the rain was permitted to run to waste. The flood was blamed, though it came along rarely, and left behind it abundant compensation for the temporary damage that it did.

Prayers were offered up to God to turn on the rain, and prayers were offered up to him to turn it off; and God, who dearly loved a joke, enjoyed these silly supplications very much.

Neither drought nor flood was the cause of the people's poverty, for the fat years were many times more numerous than the lean, and in the bureau of statistics prosperity was chronicled in ever swelling figures.

But the higher the national wealth was piled the deeper in poverty the people sank. And nobody could understand why it was so.

"IT'S DRINK!" cried the Whiskered Wiseacre. "If you saved what you spent on booze you could give yourselves and families more to eat and better clothes to wear."

[illegible]

"It's Improvidence," a Professor of Political Economy declared. "You squander your wages instead of practicing thrift and learning the art of Doing Without."

But this made no appeal to the people either, for they already did without so much that life was one long struggle with [illegible].

"It's Irreligion!" stormed the Very Reverend Dr. Pomp, D. D., High Priest of Wherisit, shaking his fist from the great altar. "You are wicked. You do not come to church. You put nothing in the collection plate for the clergy, and the curse of God is on you."

The people read this in their evening papers and it impressed them not a bit, for if God cursed them for not supporting the clergy, he would curse the clergy for not supporting them.

"It's Slowing Down!" shouted the Moneylord, orating at the annual dinner of the Ancient Order of Unconvicted Swindlers. "You don't produce enough. Increase your output 50 per cent. and I'll get one of my judges to raise the living wage 25 cents a week."

But the people know that already their lives were shortened by excessive toil, and that whenever the judge raised the living wage the Moneylord reduced it again by the simple expedient of putting up prices. So they read the speech in the evening papers with a dull unconcern.

Then WHY were they always poor? Why were the wolves of want continually scratching at their doors? Why were they shabbily dressed, and meanly housed, and sparsely fed, and not half educated?

They looked at the land. It was golden and green with plenty. They looked at the stores. They were crammed with all that the heart of man desired. They looked at the heavens. There were no signs there of a malevolent destiny. They looked at their hands. They were thickened and calloused with labor. They looked at their faces. They were seamed with anxiety and effort.

And yet their poverty was an incessant evil, afflicting them relentlessly [illegible] it all, and [illegible]

[illegible] "it [illegible]. It has been so since the memory of man; and in my opinion 'twill continue so to the end."

"It's in the nature o' things, if you ask me," said the [illegible]. "Somebody must work, d'you see, an' if there wasn't no poverty no one would work at all."

"It's good to be poor," said the Abject Crawler. "It makes yer 'umble and chastens yer pride. Bear it patiently an' you'll be rewarded in the next world."

These were the prevalent views among the people of Wherisit. They summed up the philosophy of the crowd, and ignorant and hunger could reason no further.

BUT ONE DAY there rose up from among the workers a young man who spake Strange Things.

"I can tell you why you are poor," said he.

"Tell us!" they cried.

"You are poor," said the young man, "because you are robbed!"

And he proceeded to paint out to them that the Ruling Class of Wherisit took so much of the products of their labor that there was not enough left for them to live upon in decency and comfort.

"They produce nothing themselves," he said, "and they take what is justly yours. It is for them you glean in the fields. It is for them you delve in the mines. It is for them you fell the forests and drain the marshes and wrest from the wilderness a wonder of wealth. For them you build palaces, and the hovels in which you and your children dwell are death traps for the body and soul. You gather for them the choicest fruits, and weave for them the costliest raiment, and the food YOU eat is coarse, and the clothes YOU wear are shoddy. Keep what is yours, and poverty you shall know no more. God is not to blame for your sufferings. The land is not to blame. Drink is not to blame. Improvidence is not to blame. Irreligion is not to blame. YOU only are to blame, for you are plundered and do honor to the thieves."

Now this speech caused a great commotion among the people. They had never heard anything like it before, and the idea that they were robbed by their rulers was one that staggered and bewildered them.

Every instinct of their being revolted from the thought, and yet at the same time it stirred them like a revelation.

They hated to believe it—and KNEW IT WAS TRUE.

"Who are you?" they cried.

And the young man answered:

"I am the voice of your secret soul. I am the wisdom of the ignorant. I am the courage of the cowardly. I am the pride of the meek. I am the Rebel."

And the people brooded over what he had told them. And wheresoever the Rebel went in the land, uttering his astonishing words, vast crowds followed him, and the excitement grew and deepened, till the very air seemed tremulous with tempestuous possibilities.

Reds Ousted but Red Rules

liticians are worse than useless. Mooney is innocent and the world knows it. This is enough. The convention can do no less than demand his unconditional release and issue an ultimatum to that effect giving due notice that if that fails a general strike will follow at a specified time and industry paralyzed throughout the land. Appeal has been made to their conscience in vain and now let the batteries of labor be opened on their profits. There is no half way ground. Every expedient has been tried and failed and now the working class must courageously proclaim its purpose and assert its power if the American labor movement is not to stand convicted of cowardice and treason before the world. The capitalist class and their official hirelings have utterly forfeited their right to counsel obedience to law. They, themselves, have trampled the law in the mire in their cold blooded determination to murder labor leaders too rigidly honest to sell out and too courageous and self-respecting to be browbeaten and intimidated. Let the ultimatum be the unconditional release of our fellow workers or a general strike. If the silk hat conspirators and would be lynchers out on the Pacific coast and elsewhere insist upon war, let it come. We have nothing to lose but the gags upon our lips and the chains on our bodies. Now is the time to prove the solidarity of our class. The people are with us in this fight and will stand by us from coast to coast in our determination to rebuke capitalist criminals and maintain our rights as American citizens.

EUGENE V. DEBS.

After receipt of this message from Debs many delegates proposed to again wire Judge Westenhaver expressing their dissatisfaction with his decision, in not granting Debs permission to come to Chicago, and making further demands upon the judge, but it was soon realized that this procedure would be waste of time.

Weinberg Testifies

Isreal Weinberg, now a resident of Cleveland, and one of Mooney's co-defendants, gave a graphic description of the attempt to bribe him to testify against Mooney. The first bribe was one of $5,000 and four times that amount was offered him later on. He told that "the bomb which did its deadly work upon preparedness day in San Francisco was filled with bullets of various sizes by those who were framing up the case so as to be able to prove that, because bullets of the same size were found in homes of defendants, that therefore these defendants had made the bomb. And what fool would fill a bomb with an assortment of bullets in various calibres?" he asked. He ended his speech with the assertion that if it had not been for the reds, Mooney and all defendants would have been hung long ago.

Another Bomb.

Another kind of bomb exploded in the camp of the A. F. of L. officials when G. T. Yoshihara, reprepresenting the Japanese railroad workers of Japan and the United States mounted the platform. Cheers, applause and loud calls of approval were given the statements of this Japanese delegate.

"The Japs in this country are now acquainted with the English language and they can not be used as scabs in any great number as here-to-fore," he said. "But the white men will have to learn that we must all unite as a class, no matter what our nationality. We must unite into an industrial union so that our strength will multiply. America is backward but Japan is the most backward country as far as organization among the workers is concerned. Yet, since the rice riots things have changed a bit and let me suggest to you not to wait so long that the Japs will have to come and tell how to do it."

A negro delegate received an equal ovation, and to both these classes of workers the A. F. of L. has been particularly indifferent, refusing to grant charters to Japanese unions and refusing to organize them.

International Officers Criticized

tional A. F. of L. unions as well as from the A. F. of L. officials themselves. This proved the repeated assertion made upon the floor ofthe convention that the heads of the American labor movement were luke-warm in this matter of freedom for Mooney.

The Chicago press, to make its lying record good, kept up a steady fire of invectives against the "Bolsheviki of the convention". Most papers reiterated day after day that "the reds were making a desperate effort to control the conference", and this is undoubtedly the color of the lie flashed broadcast. But every mention of the soviets of Russia brought cheers and applause and when a telegram was read by the Soldiers and Workers' Council of Seattle, an organization of the metal trades which is attempting to find jobs for returned soldiers and which is supporting them so that they do not beat down wages, the conference showed its true color. Telegrams were read from all corners of the country, many advising that resolutions for withdrawel of troops from Russia and for amnesty for political and class war prisoners be passed. And it was only resolutions of this nature that received the applause of the delegates.

The resolutions

Resolutions day came and the delegates, all of them, were in a mood most tense. That the Mooney case would be properly covered by the appointed resolutions committee was admitted, but what would this committee do about Russia and other prisoners?

Some debate ensued upon the Mooney resolution proposed. It covered three main methods of effort, first, to again make a trial for federal intervention. Second, to secure a change in the laws of California so that miscarriages of justice would be less probable. And third, that if these methods fail, that then a general strike be called upon July 4th, 1919.

Many of the delegates opposed what they termed "again crawling upon their bellies to Washington to beg" and others claimed it futile to try for a change in California laws, claiming the state too corupt for any good. July 4th as the day upon which the general strike should take place was also criticized as "the day when we are laid off and that therefore striking on that day was farcial." But the majority passed the resolution as reported by the committee.

One other resolution was reported upon this, the last day of the convention, and that was one demanding amnesty for all political and industrial prisoners; self determination for nations and withdrawel of troops from Russia.

The conference then, made its mark. It aimed high and will pass into history as the begining of a new labor movement in this country—a labor movement charged with class feeling and class duties. Never before in the life of the A. F. of L. has a general strike been encouraged. Every delegate present at the Mooney conference is now pledged to secure the support of his union for the declaration of such a strike. And while Gompers, at the Pan-American Labor Conference, defeated the efforts of the southern delegates to declare for amnesty for industrial and political prisoners, the rank and file of the A. F. of L. have now declared for such freedom despite their "leader".

No less a victory for justice is the demand of the conference for the immediate withdrawel of troops from Russia. American labor is recognizing with a clearer vision day by day, that intervention in Russia is unmoral and not at all compatible with any kind of democracy, whether it be the Wilson kind or that of the most extreme revolutionist.

Many other resolutions, such as demands for shorter workday; program for reconstruction; endorsement of industrial unionism were placed before the resolutions committee, which committee at a late hour Friday afternoon brought a report that "all other resolutions are not germane to the purpose of this convention." The Chameleon

By NORA GILLESPIE.
Huntington, W. Va.

With the passing of Roosevelt, Socialists and radicals the world over heave a sigh of relief. Imbued with the ideas and beliefs of the stone age he was a menace to all progressive thought and action.

Any new idea for the benefit of the race was ignored until it waxed mighty, when it would be adopted as the child of his brain.

Only a few years ago he very distinctly told the women their place was at home, bearing children; that the best women were the ones who had the most children. The men understood what the women wanted or needed better than they did themselves. But when something like six million women were given the ballot he decided it was good for them and when he held his little pet convention in Chicago, one of the prominent planks was for woman suffrage. It seems that women's memory was better than most men's, as Roosevelt was still a private citizen after election.

Under his administration millions of dollars were appropriated to study diseases of hogs and something like fifty thousand dollars were spent for the children. The idea that it is a crime to bring children into the world without provision being made for their care and education never occurred to him.

Only the other day he asked to have the school books of New York changed because in them he endorsed the president's position on the neutrality question, but had changed his mind in sixty days!

In his book on the Spanish American War, the first edition contained a lengthy account of how he shot a Spanish boy in the back as he was running away. After Socialists held this page up to the world in ridicule, the type was changed and the other editions did not carry these glad tidings.

With almost his dying breath he attacked the red flag as the cause of all wars. It is strange, to say the least, that followers of the red flag all over the world have served or faced prison sentences for opposing war. The kings, kaisers and czars of Europe hated the red flag as much as Roosevelt did and with a lot more reason. The followers of the red flag have rid the world of more despots than any group of people in history. Today the red flag waves over great nations, and although the once privileged classes are struggling to maintain the old established order, they will soon hear the "Voice of the people which is the voice of God."

As a lifelong politician he has fed at the public crib. The growth of the Socialist movement has threatened his meal ticket. The red flag stands for equal opportunity to all and he stood for special privileges for a few.

Virginia Bulletin

Official Organization News

B. M. DUTTON, State Secretary.

Virginia Comrades:

The Ohio Socialist has kindly consented to publish our monthly bulletin. This will be of vital advantage to us as it will keep our movement co-ordinated and our membership in touch and interested. For this favor we must all get behind the Ohio Socialist and boost. In so doing we will not only be discharging our obligation to the Ohio Socialist, but promoting our own organization interests at the same time. No radical movement can long remain virile without efficient press support. It is human nature to follow off after strange gods if the voice of "the one god" remains silent too long.

This truth has been well demonstrated, to our sorrow, during the war, while our own press was silenced by official "frightfulness," and the voice of "The New Appeal" kept on "patriotically" singing its sireen song into ears at first reluctant. That "The New Appeal" has printed and yet continues to print much good matter cannot be denied, but this only makes the thing the more dangerous, considering the fact that its mission is to build up a new and conservative "socialistic" party and disrupt the old radical and "impossiblest" Socialist Party—our party.

The voice of "The New Appeal" falls as a singular anachronism in these stirring times when thrones and dynastics are falling, and as the old and corrupted institutions of imperialism and wage slavery are being discredited the world over, the storm of revolution sweeps more and more strongly to the left. Radicalism is always generated by reaction. During the war a reactionary force was developed by imperialism and capitalism the world over, more drastic and intolerant than the world has ever known. This in turn has induced a radicalism more potent and virile than the world has yet seen. Besides this new and potent radicalism the French Syndicalism, the German, English and American bourgeoisie Socialism, looks pale and sickly.

The American Socialist movement finds itself in singular harmony with the new spirit, because at the outbreak of the war the "impossibilist" element in the party got in the lead. The conservatives who bolted and at once tried "patriotically" to break up the party by organizing a "practical and patriotic" imitation, now find themselves without a mission. They are out of harmony with the times and their activities will result only in giving aid and comfort to capitalism and imperialism. Though they may temporarily weaken and embarrass the real Socialist Party, the strength they gain thereby will only add to the might of the masters, who in turn will use it only to pile up more fuel unto the day of wrath.

The very worst type of reactionaries are in the saddle, both in England and America. That they will recklessly use their power to stamp out "Bolshevikism" in these countries is a foregone conclusion. In their zeal these worthies will not only frown down all reforms, but will in fact move backward by uprooting such reform legislation as has already been enacted. Reconstruction in the hands of reactionaries who have no social vision and who will turn deaf ea[illegible] to all advise as to the necessity [illegible] constructive legislation in averting [illegible]dustrial panic and widespread u[illegible]ployment, misery and unrest, ca[illegible] fail to draw down an acute crisis [illegible] which the iron hand of governmental power will be recklessly used.

Drastic action invites reprisal in kind, and in the political warfare that this state of affairs will engender the summer agitator and the sunshine revolutionist can have no part.

Intelligent action and organization, if taken NOW, may do marvels in softening the rigors of the times that await us. The stronger and more perfect our organization the sooner may the workers of this nation arrive at the final consummation in which PEACE AND PROSPERITY may be ours through economic justice and industrial democracy.

I hope our Virginia comrades wi[illegible] realize the futility of all conserva[illegible]tive dreams, and at once fall in line with us and help make our movement here what it should be.

Next month we shall get out a more detailed and "newsy" bulletin and we want all locals to get busy and report their notes.

BRAIN TEASERS

By TOM J. LEWIS.

HURRAH! Food has been released. But money is tied up. There is plenty of food out of reach. Now the question is, how to get it? There is an excuse for hunger and starvation in the countries where a famine exists but its a shame and a disgrace in the land of plenty.

UNEMPLOYMENT is already here. where is that predicted prosperity we were to get when the war had terminated? It has gone where the woodbine twineth. Like all the commercial and political promises.

MENSHEVIKI? The minority party that stands for compromise and reform of capitalism.

BOLSHEVIKI? The majority party uncompromising, controlled by the workers intent upon abolishing capitalism. Berger belongs to the former. What a representative of the working class! He is also a National Executive Committeeman. Comrades, America has its Scheidemann's also.

THE SPARTACUS party of Germany, is the same as the Bolsheviki of Russia. Two chips from the same block, whose aim and motive is the world for the workers.

SOVIETS. A form of government adopted, controlled and operated by the workers of Russia. Representation through delegates elected by the producers and distributors, election every three months. But no capitalist landlord or any one who lives on an uncarned increment is allowed to vote. One must do useful work to be a citizen in the Soviet republic.

Around the peace table, with only a piece of the globe represented in an attempt to dictate a peace that will go all to pieces.

Any news from Russia? Oh yes, the Bolsheviki have met with some ad defeats, they have taken eighteen more towns and have captured Riga and are within a few miles of Reval.

Do you favor the Bolsheviki? Sh! You're in a democracy. Well how do you like the democracy? Will tell you better when I get a job.

Well Bill, how do you like the change from war to peace? Say, where do you think you are, in Russia? There everybody can work who wants to and its the only country where the workers are respected. While the war was on we fought the Germans, and now that it is over, we must fight each other for jobs.

IN A DEMOCRACY the factories and shops take the workers and exploit them. In the Soviet Republic the workers take the shops and factories and exploit them. Where would you rather be?

* * *

THE SOVIETS are conducted from the bottom up. Democracies in general are conducted from the top down. What end are you on?

A valuable New Year's resolution! Decide to do your own thinking.

The world is changing, are you? Or are you like long standing water, creating a bad odor? That aids in breeding disease, that must weaken and possibly destroy. Inspect yourself and see if all is well.

Some Liberties We Have—Not

By THURBER LEWIS.

As a humorous offering to his auditors the following was ventured by a well known vaudevillian: "We took this country from the Indians and if it goes dry we are going to give it back"—a witty but meaningless statement to the shallow minded theatergoer. But to those of a more progressive turn of mind there may be discerned in the inferrence of the quotation a truth worth considering.

It is well understood that no bourgeois minded comedian consciously inferred that this country in Caucasian hands has been a failure. Nevertheless this does not prevent the gathering and assimilation of certain facts.

In our argument, the mention of a possible liquor prohibition in the United States is only valuable insofar as it expresses constraint of personal freedom. Consider for a moment the personal liberty our red friends in the pure and natural democracy of their primitive, yet contented, communism. (It may be expedient if at this point to remark about the similar but move advanced freedom of our red friends in Russia). But the prohibiting of indulgence in alcoholic liquors is but one of the numerous and vicious attacks on the freedom we are now enjoying in our "democracy."

Surely we have not yet forgotten the autocratic actions of our Bourbon [illegible] at German spies and hit free speech. Even now, after we have won democracy in Europe (failing of course to start at home first) we are unable to assemble peacefully together. These are only a few of the political curtailments on our liberties, think of what constraint exists in industry.

It is true that it is a foolish thing to continue ad infinitum on what liberties we do not enjoy. But what, may I ask, can be written on what liberties we do enjoy?

In the three hundred years that we white folks have existed in this continent as a social unit, instead of creating a system surpassing that of the "barbarous aborigenes," we have built up a government composed of institutions, the sole purpose of which seems to be the repression, if not the destruction, of all freedom. We were not content with corrupting ourselves in this manner, but we went further and contaminated the innocent natives with the "glories of civilization."

Yes, we have truly been a failure. The quotation might have read: We took this country from the Indians and we should be willing to admit that since we have been a social failure we should not have disturbed the peaceful communistic domains of the [illegible] man in the first place. But the [illegible]nal quotation in the red [illegible]

THEIR REWARD

The hero's reward is not always in proportion to his heroism. This is being realized by an ever-increasing number of returned soldiers. The boys who doffed overalls to don the khaki carrying with them the promises of their employers of a job when they returned are now walking the streets while they ruminate upon the value of the masters' promises. The job does not materialize. And their last month's pay swiftly vanishing.

Labor, too. A few short weeks ago labor was [illegible], extolled, made to feel itself a necessary and worthy part of the social scheme. No longer so. Labor is now a drag on the market, there being now no great market for the products of labors' hand and brain. Factories and mills are closing, throwing upon this already filled to overflowing labor market hundreds of thousands of workers. Labor is no longer profitable to the masters, hence the [illegible] cessation of fulsome eulogies and praise.

Labor is not only at the present time not to be profitably employed but for the same reason is become a potential menace; liable to become infatuated with the germs of Bolshevism, exceedingly dangerous to the existing system of exploitation and for which there has been discovered an antidote.

Such are the conditions confronting the workers of America at the close of a great war won for democracy—but not Democracy in Industry. The same old scheme of robbery of the many by the few, the same subjugation of the great masses of the world to the will, the knavery and the exploitation by a small class of autocrats still continues and all the powers of the capitalist state are in league with them, in fact are their tools and instruments to make their autocracies more secure.

While the capitalists of America decide upon the future course of their industries, look over the chances for future exploitation of labor at home and abroad, lay plans for conquests of world markets and frame a course of procedure best calculated to serve the interests of capital, labor is being fed promises of a rosy future—in a few months the dinner pails will be filled —if American capital succeeds in getting a strangle hold upon markets wrested from former competitors.

In the meantime American workers are advised to not think of shortening the hours of labor for the purpose of employing more workers in this crisis, a dangerous precedent! Workers are not to consider the advisability of operating the industries of the nation for the benefit of the workers—for use instead of for profit, a still more dangerous precedent. And all the time are the workers admonished to remain loyal to their country during this reconstruction period, which means remaining in servile obedience to those who exploit them and to lend themselves to every scheme of robbery imposed or proposed by the financial and industrial free booters of this country.

What will be labor's answer?

NEEDED RECONSTRUCTION IN PARTY PROPAGANDA

Now that war time restrictions upon the use of print paper are removed, numerous Socialist publications of various degrees of usefulness to the movement are being launched by individual party members in all parts of the country. Without questioning in the slightest degree the sincerity or well meaning of these comrades in their desire to serve the great cause to the utmost of their ability we wish to reiterate our oft-repeated statement that PRIVATE CONTROL OF THE PARTY'S PROPAGANDA IS DEAD WRONG.

If there ever was a time when the welfare of the Socialist movement demanded party control of every avenue of propaganda, well organized, well financed and heartily supported by every member, that time is now. The welfare of the party, the course it must pursue in the great events of the immediate future, the questions it must meet and answer, the problems it must solve, all, demand unquestionably a party controlled press.

The Socialist movement should seek to establish enough activities to absorb the energies of every comrade who desires to serve the revolution. It should establish itself so firmly and formidably in the various propaganda and organization measures as to leave no room for individual and ofttimes injurious enterprises.

The acquisition of party owned daily, weekly and monthly publications of various types that will cover all the different phases of our propaganda are vitally necessary. This is the problem of the immediate future. Every comrade should give his earnest support to this forward movement.. Let us prepare to take this step.

OTHER EDITOR'S SAY

The other day daily papers carried a headline—clear across the first page —"31,000 Bolsheviki Captured in Siberia." That only leaves a trifle like one hundred and sixty millions yet to be "captured." Measured by the time taken to accomplish what has so far been done, the job will take only 50,000 years. —Union Record.

According to the New York Tribune the Bolsheviki have been in the habit of giving the peasants 10 cents for every military officer killed. It, however, omits to tell how the peasants can collect the money; but we suppose a Bureau of Scalps has been appointed to attend to this matter.—Revolutionary Age.

"Even now drafts of British troops, men who volunteered to fight the German and defend liberty, are being ordered to Siberia to fight the battles of Kolchak and Semenoff. If the British government does not stop this disgraceful adventure of its own accord, it will find it will soon be stopped for it."—The Manchester Guardian.

Let's see, if we understand the situation correctly, the Russian revolt was caused by German money and now the German revolution is caused by Russian money. This sum of money is causing a whole lot of trouble and unless it gets settled somewhere there may be no end of revolutions.—The Proletarian.

Let's see, how many German spies did the A. P. L.'s catch? Oh, come, don't accuse them of doing real work.

And daily the list of crimes and robberies grows in Cleveland and still the A. P. L.'s are bravely staying away from dark corners.

One is almost persuaded that that delectable organization is passing up the greatest opportunity ever offered for a career in real men's work.

ATTEND THESE MEETINGS

Readers of the OHIO SOCIALIST are invited to attend the following Socialist meetings to be held in Ohio within the next two weeks.

CHARLES BAKER.

State Organizer Charles Baker will visit the following cities to hold meetings: Marietta, Jan. 24; Portsmouth, Jan. 25; Cincinnati, Jan. 26, Socialist Hall, 1216 Vine St.; Norwood, Jan. 27; Hamilton, Jan. 28; Dayton, Jan. 29; Springfield, Jan. 30; Marion, Jan. 31; Mansfield, Feb. 1; Akron, Feb. 2, G. A. R. Hall, 50 S. Howard St.

THURBER LEWIS.

Akron, Jan. 26, G. A. R. Hall, 50 S. Howard St.

EUGENE V. DEBS.

Cleveland, East Side, Jan. 23; New Bremen, Jan. 24; Warren, Jan. 26, afternoon, Youngstown evening.

Meetings already booker for the early part of February are: Kirkpatrick: Akron, Feb. 8; Cleveland, Feb. 9; Youngstown, probably, Feb. 10.

Scott Nearing: Canton, probably, Feb. 13; Dayton, Feb. 14; Cleveland, Feb. 16, afternoon and probably Youngstown in the evening.

Katterfeld: Belmont county, Feb. 5, 6, 7; Guernsey county, Feb. 8, 9; Piqua, Feb. 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14.

WINTER SOCIALS

Now is the time of year, comrades, when socials and indoor entertainments are most productive of good. Arrange one for your local members and the public. Put more pep and sociability in your local movement by getting together in a social way to advance the cause. We are informed that Local Tiffin will enjoy a "Hard Time" social on the 22d of anuary.

DAILY LIARS CHANGE TACTICS

We are informed that the Socialist meetings of Cincinnati are receiving special attention at the hands of the mouthpieces of the capitalist class in that fair city of exploitation. Whereas our meetings were formerly ignored or given scant attention and the numbers attending reduced about two-thirds in the accounts given, now the audiences are augmented to such a degree that even the most optimistic Socialist would not recognize them. The change merely means that the slimy ladies of the kept press are attempting to frighten the citizens with the growth and portent of "Bolshevism." The local comrades are onto the game.

FROM A LIVE WIRE

With a list of five subscriptions Comrade Chas. D. Hirst of Salineville writes: "It is my first attempt, but I hope not my last. I have also sent my card into the East Liverpool local and hope that I am now a member. Had no trouble at all in getting the subscription." What do you think of that from a new worker, comrades? Doesn't it take some of the discouragement out of your bones, you old timers? We should say so.

FOR THAT DAILY

Another five dollars is pledged by Comrade Walter Conradi of New Bremen to help make the Ohio Socialist a daily. A word is due the comrades on this matter at this time. At the rate subscriptions are being gathered by the comrades from many states the time is not far distant when the Ohio Socialist can be issued twice a week. That is the next objective for which we must now bend every effort. In the last few weeks the comrades have placed the party paper upon a self-sustaining basis. From creating a deficit each week it is now paying its way with a surplus over. The next step toward victory is to make is possible to publish twice a week. What is your answer?

HE IS ONE OF US

In a note from Comrade Debs to the State Office concerning party work in Ohio, in which Comrade Debs is greatly interested and for which he is giving many valuable suggestions he says, "I feel myself one of you 'Buckeye Bolsheviks'." Comrades will appreciate theso words of comradeship from "our 'Gene."

DECKS CLEARED FOR ACTION

Local Mt. Healthy has cleared her dacks for action throughout the New Year. Books were audited. Officers elected for the first six months, the comrades re-dedicated themselves to the cause. So says Comrade Geo. W. Markert.

MIDVALE TAKES A PLUNGE

Local Midvale took a decided plunge in renewed activities last week when the comrades awoke to the necessities of the present hour and paid up their dues. Secretary Rex Wolfe remitted for 21 yearly and 26 six-month subs and ordered $18.80 worth of dues stamps. He promises more subscriptions in the near future.

This is the spirit that is animating every local in the state. The last few weeks have changed the whole situation in the party in Ohio and the nation too if reports signify anything. Read the report on this page from National Secretary Germer as an indication of the party's upward climb.

It is a fact that the Socialist Party of Ohio and the nation is now taking the first step in the greatest [illegible]

A WORD TO NEW MEMBERS

The splendid response from Socialists all over the state to an appeal for contributions to the "Firth Defense Fund" indicates either that Comrade Firth, in his conduct of the office of State Secretary, endeared himself to the comrades, or that the Socialists of West Virginia are so devoted as to come gratefully forward to the relief of one who has given himself so enthusiastically in service to their cause. Be that as it may. West Virginia Socialists will be glad to know that Comrade Firth came out of confinement unbroken in spirit or health. On account of the impairment of his finances and loss of time incurred by the ordeal through which he has passed, he was compelled to resign his office and give his undivided attention to business; but he has not forgotten us or our cause. Mrs. Firth has just undergone a serious surgical operation, but am glad to be able to report that she is doing well, at this writing.

Socialism in Huntington has lost an enthusiastic proponent and tireless worker, in the removal of Comrade H. L. Franklin, who has been Acting State Secretary since Comrade Firth began to serve his sentence. He will locate at some point up state, probably at Fairmount or in that vicinity. What is the Fourth District's loss will be the First District's gain. Comrades, give Comrade Franklin a royal welcome and receive him with open arms—you will find him a true "Red" and a self-respecting gentleman.

Until the State Committee has time to fill the vacancy in the office of State Secretary, I have consented to take care of the affairs of that office, and while I have the opportunity I feel like introducing myself to the membership of the Socialist Party of West Virginia. Since my coming into the party organization here, three years ago, I have become acquainted with so many good people among the Huntington Socialists that I would like to meet more West Virginia comrades.

As a closing word to this bulletin, I urge that every local have a Literary Agent or committee to solicit subscriptions. "The Ohio Socialist," which contains our bulletin, I consider one of our strongest going papers. It not only gives us the most reliable Socialist news in this country and Europe, but its editorial staff is able and radical, furnishing the best propaganda obtainable for the advance of our movement.

Piqua News

By ROBERT JOHNSON.

The old party council at its first meeting of the new year was compelled to cat crow. It was with very bad grace that the chairman of the finance committee announced the inclusion of the back salary of Comrade Priller, service director, in the appropriations for the first half of the present year. Last July this bunch of fossilized remnants of the stone age tried to reduce the service director's salary from $1,200 per annum to $200 per annum. Comrade Priller promptly brought suit to collect his former salary with interest and attorneys fees added. The case was heard by Judge Jones of the common pleas court, who rendered a decision upholding Comrade Priller's contention that a service director's salary could not be reduced during his term of office and ordering the city council to pay arrearages due Comrade Priller.

G. W. Berry, Republican city solicitor of Piqua, erstwhile known as "Lindsey's office boy" is the goat for all the city council's blunders. Poor "Gawge." Before a Socialist administration appeared on the scene George by looking wise and studying wreaths of cigar smoke above his head had accumulated a reputation for much wisdom. But alas nothing remains of said reputation. George's advice to council these days is given in fear and trembling for he knows not what moment some evil-minded Socialist will arise and puncture his rulings on law. George's career as a politician will cease with his present term of office. He can't deliver the goods for his bourgeoise master. The local press is demanding the selection of men of exceptional ability for the next campaign in order to defeat the Socialists, so George's triumphal march to the presidency of the U. S. A. will come to an early end.

One of the greatest of seeming mysteries is the inability of capitalists and their henchmen to grasp the processes of evolution in today's world. They will admit that evolution wrought the mighty changes of the past but that this same force is at work in human progress in our day is inconceivable, so they propose in all seriousness to keep back the incoming tide with a broom. The jailing of Socialist officials and leaders, the suppression of free press, free speech and assemblage is the last form of opposition that can be originated by a decadent capitalist mind. Such measures for upholding the profit system are doomed to failure. Suppression of progress and the bolstering of a worn out order was tried to the utmost in Russia.

Socialists are not concerned about the perpetuation of capitalist law.

1718 6th Ave., Huntington, W. Va.

They propose to establish justice and equity and, as capitalist law contains neither of these elements it must perish with the system that gave it birth. Elected Socialist officials must enforce and abide by the laws on the statute books, but, written law must be interpreted and all depends on the interpreter. Let a Socialist interpret the laws and he cares not who makes them. The Socialist administration of Piqua interprets every law in favor of the working class and further, never has there been a better administration of city affairs from the executive side, our enemies being the judges. Here is a passage from the state examiner's report, the said examiner being an old line Democrat: "The present occupant of the mayor's office has been in authority less than six months but during that time we believe, from what we have observed during the audit, that he has fully demonstrated that he is conscientious as to the performance of his official duties and that he has no hesitancy in enforcing the law, both statutory and ordinance, impartially and without fear or favor. We are convinced that he is desirous of conserving the best interests of the city and, in this laudable purpose, he should have the full support and hearty co-operation of every citizen, with such support we have no doubt as to the success of his administration."

Councilman Leonard and his gang of old partyites are very sore over their failure to oust Mayor Hamilton and his associates through arrest on charges of sedition. One of the gangs' spies was a member of the local for months and was unable to find anything on which to base a charge and finally gave up in disgust.

Members of Local Piqua will nominate their city ticket at their hall Sunday, Jan. 19, 2 p. m. Every member of the party should be present and take active part. The campaign this year will be the most important in the local's history. We propose to whip the two old parties to a finish. Our motto is, "Lay on Macduff and damned be he who cries, 'Hold, enough.'"

Holman, the "Texas cyclone," made a short address at the last meeting of the local. He is one of the old war horses of the movement and the comrades were glad to greet him once more. The local has secured a number of copies of Holman's latest book, "How to Organize Society." Everybody should secure a copy and read up on this most important subject.

State Executive Committee Meeting.

State Executive Committee met on Jan. 3, 1919. Members present, J. J. Bosemer, Rasmussen and Stevens. Absent, Noe and Goodman.

Minutes of last meeting approved.

Upon report being made by Acting State Secretary that ballots had been sent out in the election of a State Secretary and Treasurer and members of the State Committee, same was approved.

The following were reported as nominees without opposition:

Fred E. Stevens, Louisville, Ky., for State Secretary-Treasurer.

For State Committee: A. H. Lee, Livia, Ky., Second District; M. L. Ament, Beaver Dam, Ky., Fourth District; R. M. Rasmussen, Louisville, Ky., Fifth District; H. Plaggenburg, Covington, Ky., Sixth District.

Vote closes Jan. 20.

State Executive Committee voted unanimously to ask that dues be increased for state and local.

It was decided that owing to increased living expenses and a higher rate of wages being paid, that it was absolutely necessary to ask for an equal increase in membership dues. A basis of 25c for state dues (dual dues 30c) and locals should increase their dues to at least 50c per month.

The following facts were offered as a reason for increased dues: The present rate was not sufficient to do any kind of work and pay for having some one to devote their time to this work. It was argued that only by making dues high enough to make possible a salaried State Secretary could there be any practical work transacted in the state. That the haphazard manner of having the State Office handled as charity by comrades doing the work when they could and making their living at some other trade, could not get any lasting results and now that the time was ripe for a general awakening and a great national campaign being launched that Kentucky should get in line and put a competent State Secretary and organizer on the job to devote all his time to this work.

Every party member and sympathizer who reads this report in our official organ, The Ohio Socialist, should at once either join a local, or take steps to organize one, or become a member-at-large. Members-at-large would also pay 50c per month dues or if paid in advance and for one year, their dues will be $5.00. This will apply also to all local members. It was argued that if 100 members would pay one year's dues in advance at $5.00 each that this would give the State Office $500 to start a big paign with and new members added would soon make a stron ganization in the state. Who w the first to start the 1919 cam by paying $5.00 for a year's Then after that let us see how will pay six months, $2.50, in vance?

"DEMOCRACY" IN LORAIN

Local Lorain is up against real capitalist democracy. A hall large enough for a Debs' meeting could not be obtained because the chief of police advised the hall owners not to rent to the Socialists—though he has nothing against the Socialists. Well, the time is coming when the workers of Lorain will be compelled to resort to the use of their economic and political power to place their own representatives in public office for the purpose of eradicating such discrimination and just such dirty acts as these are driving them to it—and worse.

Former Bolsheviki.

"Cromwell was a Bolshevik; and in the same sense did I mean that George Washington was the Bolshevik of his time"—referring to speaking of Washington as a Bolshevik, in one of his recent lectures in Cleveland. "He was known as the 'notorious outlaw'; he was shot at because he advocated unpopular principles, because he was true to them and became a leader in movements to put them in force.

Great Characters.

"Just so Trotzky and Lenine are the greatest men in present history—they are colossal characters. They are making a heroic fight under awful circumstances. Why, it took America [illegible] years to establish a democracy when she had no great opposition; Russia is trying to do that on an inheritance of national bankruptcy.

"You know," and a whimsical smile came into the blue eyes, "we are in a peculiar position of having an enemy for an ally—Germany is our ally against Russia. There are both German and American soldiers in Russia. If we are not at war with Russia, why have we our soldiers there? In doing so, we ally ourselves with despotism.

"And who are the Bolsheviki? They are the people who have governed Russia for the past fourteen months. If they can do that they must be the choice of the majority of the people.

One Idea Man.

"Lenine is a wonderful man, I should say that he has more knowledge of American history than any professor of it in Indiana," said Debs. "He's a one-idea man, true—but one's enough, if it's a big enough. And it takes a big man to have only one idea."

His eyes seemed perhaps a little kinder, his finger tops came together as he leaned his elbows on the arms of his chair.

"About my own situation, I have no resentment against those who are unsympathetic with me; I do not blame them—that would be selfish of me.

"But there are those who are staunch friends—"

Mr. Debs read extracts from letters of encouragement from business and professional men and women all over the country, a professor in Wisconsin university and one from Columbia.

"I have letters of congratulation on my stand and sympathy from ministers, doctors, lawyers, business men and women of the underworld and vagabonds, and alike treasure them all.

"Why, just last week, I, an undesirable agitator, was a guest at the house of a bishop in Gallion, Ohio—the personal guest of Bishop William Montgomery Brown, who has recently become Socialist.

"My case comes up in Washington before the Supreme Court Jan. 27. I have made no plans for action of any kind; I can afford to wait and be patient. I have only stood for the things I honestly believe. I have been true to my principles."

Mr. Debs expressed no fear of a penitentiary sentence, saying if he had to serve, he would make the prison "a center of agitation." But he feels that he will not have to serve.

Mr. Debs predicts "contradictory influences" by spring. He thinks private interests will get the "whip hand" and that the employment problem will be great.

He feels that some real system should be worked out for the placing of returned soldiers.

"The hero of today will be the hobo of tomorrow," said Mr. Debs, "and when he's bumming around from place to place looking for a job, he will not be met at the station by fine women and given food and cigarets; he'll be arrested as a vag."—Terre Haute Post.

Free Speech, an Inalienable Personal Right

By PERLEY DOE

The passions and prejudices of war have created confusion in the minds of many people as to the distinction between the inalienable rights of the individual and the rights of majorities. John Stuart Mill said:

"Over himself, over his own mind and body the individual is sovereign."

We fully recognize today many of these inalienable rights of the individual, for instance, freedom of religious worship: No person, however high and mighty, has the right to compel or forbid my beliefs on religious matters; no majority, however large, has a right to impose its forms of religious worship upon the minority.

There are an innumerable number of these inalienable personal rights recognized today over which the individual is sovereign. It would be a gross infringement of personal liberty for instance for any potentate or any majority to dictate to the individual what he should eat or what clothes he should wear, who his friends shall be or whom he shall marry.

The recognition of the fact that each and every individual is sovereign over his own personal actions, and especially over his own opinions, is the basis of modern liberty. The medieval conception recognized for the individual no inalienable rights, either of action or opinion, which the sovereign, the state or the church were bound to respect.

The question that is forcing itself now upon our minds today is whether free speech is an inalienable personal right, or has the state the right to limit freedom of speech; has the majority the right to suppress the opinions of the minority.

John Stuart Mills' answer to this was emphatic: "If all mankind minus one were of one opinion, and only one person was of contrary opinion, mankind would not be justified in silencing that one person."

"I think every man feels in his heart this inalienable right of free speech for himself. Who does not resent being refused the right to condemn injustice, to contradict falsehood? No free soul but what will rise in indignation to find its ideals suppressed, its faith denied expression.

Yet unfortunately we do not always feel the same way about the other fellow. It is so easy to argue thus: "I am right and therefore have the right to speak for the right. But my opponent is wrong and has no right to speak for the wrong. I will suppress him, then, for to me he seems to be promulgating evil." The fallacy here of course is that I set myself up to be both advocate and judge.

There are no end of pretexts, excuses and subterfuges being offered in these times in an attempt to justify the violation of free speech.

"We have been too lenient with free speech. It has lapsed into license."

"In war time free speech is dangerous."

"The country has a right to protect itself against enemy agitators."

"The minority has no right to obstruct the majority."

"Democracy means that all must acquiesce in the decision of the majority."

But all these excuses will be found to beg the real question. They are based on this assumption: "We are right. We know we are right. Anyone who opposes us, thinks differently from us, or criticizes us, is wrong. Being sure we are right, we have the right to deprive our wrong-headed opponents of their rights."

The constitution of the United States is almost as emphatic in declaring free speech to be an inalienable [illegible] as was Mill. It [illegible] Congress, re[illegible]senting the highest law-making power of the whole people, from even "abridging' the right of free speech. Similar declarations have as a rule been embodied in each state constitution or bill of rights.

It would be wholly a mistake, however, to think that these inalienable personal rights rest upon the laws of man. They are God-given. They are every man's birthright. The constitution did not give us these rights; it merely stated them and tried to safeguard them. The idea that a man has no rights except what the laws of the state give him is essentially Prussian. No man is born subject to other men in his opinions and personal conduct. "Every man is born free." The state can, however, forbid him from interfering with the freedom of others.

No government that really stands for liberty will seek to suppress the ideas of any of its citizens. Democracy and progress are the children of free speech and free press. The majority that would silence the voice of the minority is not to be trusted, for it lacks faith in its own cause.

I am sovereign over my own tongue and pen. Over them other people have neither responsibility nor control. They, however, are sovereign over their own ears and do not have to listen to me if they do not choose. But if I can find a man sympathetic to my thought who does wish listen to me, then all the world beside has not the right to interfere between us. The suppression of free speech is even a greater violation of the rights of the audience than of the speaker. It is a denial to men of their right to seek knowledge and information. And no right can be more sacred than that.

Monarchs claiming power from God, democracies representing the will of majorities, neither the one nor the other, has any right to abridge the inalienable personal prerogative of free speech. We speak of "divine rights" as a relic of an age that is past. It is not so. Personal liberty is, always has been, and always will be a "divine right." Absolute sovereignty over his own opinions and their expression is a "divine right" for every man.

For full recognition, however, of its sanctity free speech is one of those inalienable divine personal rights which await an age that is yet to come.

Unemployment Approaches "Danger" Point

Twelve States Reported Surplus of Common Laborers.

Washington, Jan. 14.—Unemployment of common labor now exists in twelve states as against seven a week ago, said a message today from the National Council of Defense to its state councils, which were urged to do everything possible to find employment for those needing it.

"The situation as to common labor has materially changed since the armistice was signed," said the message. "The twelve states in which there is a surplus of labor are California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Missouri, Montant, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oregon and Utah. The country's surpluses in all labor seem to follow a belt across country from Connecticut to Minnesota.

"The area of unemployment is increasing and it is probable the danger point will be reached within 30

"A subscriber wants a definition of Bolshevism. It's a disease, friend. No doubt about that. And the Trotzkys and their kind who come to the surface are the pustules.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

It seems to us that the editor is slightly in error. Bolshevism and kindred "isms" are not of themselves diseases, but are rather the eruptions which appear on the surface of the body politic to give notice that disease exists within. When the world has discovered the real disease and applied the proper remedy the editor of the Sentinel may seek the couch of oblivion and, lulled by the dulcet strains of the Marseillaise, dream sweet dreams of the good old days when kingship, kultur and kapitalism reigned supreme with a worshipful working class at their feet.

"I know of only one principle to make a nation great, to produce in this country not the form but real spirit of union, and that is to protect every citizen in the lawful pursuit of his business. He will then feel that he is backed by the government; that its arm is his arm; and will rejoice in its increased strength and prosperity. Protection and patriotism are reciprocal. This is the road that all great nations have trod."—John C. Calhoun.

When we stop and think that the only "business" of 85 per cent. of the people is exchanging their labor power for the necessities and comforts of life we feel like agreeing with him.

The National Republican says editorially:

"The United States Supreme Court has decided that news is property. A good bit of the news handed out to us during the past year or two, however, has been damaged goods."

The editor must have been thinking about the news from Russia and, since the armistice was signed, from Germany; or it is possible that he had just finished reading the capitalist reports of the recent Chicago trial of Victor Berger and the other Socialists on trial with him.

Canada's War Costs.

"Up to the end of November, Canada's war expenditure is officially estimated at $1,068,000,000. An additional outlay of $500,000,000 before the army is demobilized is regarded as probable. Canada has been in the war four and a half years and put half a million men overseas."

Smile, Canadian brother, smile. If you get it paid off in thirty years it will only amount, including interest, to a nice little farm for each family of you. Of course, a little thing like a small farm is nothing in your young lives. If you see nothing in this to smile at remember that "No man knoweth what the morrow may bring forth."

The capitalist press has been telling us recently that Von Hindenberg has taken charge of the armed opposition to the Liebknecht faction. So far we have not noticed any mention of Allied intervention to put him down on account of his friendliness to the kaiser and kaiserism, and to assist Liebknecht because of his lifelong struggle against these same things. We respectfully suggest a rereading of the above short editorial from the N. P.

The verdict: "Crucify him."

Living Costs Still Going Up

Reports From Various Countries Show Prices Rising.

The cost of living is increasing all over the world. The workers in South America, South Africa, Australia and Europe are facing the same difficulties as the workers of the United States. Their wages will not buy the necessities of life.

The United States Department of Labor reports wholesale prices in September, 1918, 108 per cent. higher than they were in July, 1914. This increase has occurred in the case of all of the important commodities. Clothes and clothing show the greatest rise—a total of 151 per cent.

The cost of living has increased very rapidly in Italy. Prices in August, 1918, are 172 per cent. higher than they were in August, 1912. The cost of living for a workingman's family is 206 per cent. higher than it was in 1914. The Italian workers are suffering intensely, particularly from the high prices of food, clothing and shoes.

A report from Scandinavia shows that in March, 1918, prices were far higher than in July, 1914. In Norway they had advanced on the average of 137 per cent.; in Sweden, 103 per cent., and in Denmark, 82 per cent. The Danish figures show that a workingman who bought his food in April, 1914, would be required to pay $254.60. For the same food in July, 1918, he must pay $476.24.

Neither from the Peace conference nor from any other official source has come a suggestive remedy which will meet the serious situation presented by the high cost of living. Increased wages cannot keep pace with increasing prices.

[illegible] Success in Australia

The second annual report of the state government insurance office of Queensland shows the following gratifying results. The state has lowered the insurance rate from 25 per cent. to 50 per cent. below those of the private insurance companies. It has paid claims without necessitating the hiring of lawyers on the part of the workers affected. It has done away with "red tape" and has made it possible to secure the money on the day of death or accident if necessary. The household workers department, finding that the premiums paid during the first two years are sufficient to insure the policyholders for a third year, has credited all persons insured with a third year's payment. The miscellaneous accident department reduced premiums by 20 per cent. and yet made a profit of $100,000. It will be remembered that the Queensland government is completely under the control of labor.

Sure Signs of "Prosperity"

Bradstreet's Commercial Review commenting on commodity prices, notes that "the signs thus far indicate nothing but marked strength" and "the situation as to foodstuffs is plainly stronger than ever." These observations bear out the prediction which experts have been making for some time past—that there would be no material decrease in the cost of living following the end of the war. Jobs are daily growing scarcer but the records show that the cost of living as measured by Bradstreet's was 14 per cent. higher in December, 1918, than it was in December, 1917, and almost double what it was in August, 1914.

By way of contrast, the same issue of Bradstreet's publishes some notes regarding the earnings of the United Fruit Co. for the year ending September 30, 1918. At that time the balance available for dividends was $19,990,496 or an equivalent of 40 per cent. on the capital stock. This is a comfortable showing when compared with the 27 per cent. earned on the capital stock in 1917.

At the same time the Pennsylvania Railroad announces that it is to receive $53,608,427.50 per year under its contract with the federal government. "This will be enough" announces President Rae of the Pennsylvania "to pay all fixed charges and continue the 6 per cent. dividend."

New York Hotel Workers Strike

Seven thousand members of the International Federation of Workers in the hotel, restaurant, club and catering industry in New York city are entering upon the twelfth week of strike. On October 28, the workers in nine leading New York houses, among them the Knickerbocker, the Waldorf-Astoria, Sherry's and the Vanderbilt, left their jobs and struck for higher wages, clean lockers, better food, an eight-hour day for kitchen workers and a ten-hour day for dining room waiters.

Officials of the union declare that their members have had to work from 15 to 18 hours per week, that they had often to pay graft to the head waiters to get a job, that the food was extremely poor and the lockers filthy.

On New Year's eve, a general strike was called, which crippled the fashionable houses of the city most seriously. Even from unorganized houses such as the Ansonia hotel, the workers walked out to show their sympathy with the strikers. As the organization is an idnustrial union, the tie-up of the houses affected is practically complete. All efforts thus far to bring in strike-breakers have been fruitless. Some 40 restaurants and hotels have already settled on the terms of the union, which has a membership of over 20,000 members. It appears that the chief thorn in the flesh of the bosses is not so much the question of higher wages as it is the fact that the union maintains the shop delegate system, every department in each establishment being represented by a member of the union who is himself employed in that particular house and therefore knows conditions at first hand.

While the strike is going on the Federation is carrying on a thorough campaign of education. Lectures and addresses on national and international problems are given to the strikers in their various meeting halls.

Harbor Workers Effect Record Tie-Up

The most complete tie-up of any port in the world took place in New York last week, when even the municipal ferries ceased to run, and had to be put into operation by policemen and men of the navy. So serious was the situation precipitated by the walkout of about 13,000 men that President Wilson had to intervene from Paris and give the War Labor Board powers to make an award, even though the boat owners had declined to submit the grievances to this board. The National War Labor Board is now conducting hearings, and the workers have gone back to their jobs, pending the award.

JAPAN

Labor Demands Increasing.

A special correspondent, writing in the British Columbia Federationist calls attention to the fact that, while Japan is now under the control of the small business element, the working people are more and more becoming interested in Russian Socialist Literature. Says the correspondent, "the ruling class are anxiously considering how to deal with unemployment and the other economic problems which will affect Japan, like all other industrial states, during the next few years."

He further quotes in reference to the rice riots as follows: "As the demand for labor increased the laboring classes became conscious of their growing strength. Not only did they show no hesitation in demanding an increase of wages and presenting other demands, but their self-confidence was largely strengthened, and the opposite occurred with 'the educated classes.'"

[illegible] County Activities

The following is an outline of the work already done and an out line of future efforts in Rock Island County, Ills. Sunday, Jan. 12, a mass meeting of party members was held in Moline for the purpose of mapping out a program to be pursued in the spring campaign.

The names of all the party members of the eleven branches in the county were filed with the secretary who was instructed to get in immediate touch with said members ind induce them to render the obligations they took upon themselves when they signed their applications for membership. Arrangements were made to concentrate upon Moline where conditions are exceptionally favorable to success in the municipal elections next spring. It was decided to place a weekly campaign paper in every home in Moline once each week for six weeks by a literature distribution squad which was also organized.

Kate Richards O'Hare spoke at Turner Hall, Moline, Wednesday evening, January 15 in what was perhaps the greatest meeting ever held in that city. The hall was packed to the doors and a collection of $178.00 was taken which splendidly indicates what may be expected when the campaign really warms up.

State Cecretary Oliver C. Wilson will be in Moline Monday evening, Feb. 3 and a mass meeting of party members will be held for the purpose of further outlining plans along the lines of the campaign and organization.

On Tuesday evening Feb. 4, Edgar Owens, County Secretary will lecture at Workmen's Hall, 712 8th St., Rock Island, this being the second of a series of lectures dealing with socialism as a science. His subject is announced as "The Marxian Law of Value."

[illegible] lecturer on the [illegible] will speak in Moline. A special effort will be made to make of this meeting a greater one even than the O'Hare meeting.

All comrades are urged to attend these meetings and to bring others with them.

SCANDINAVIA

Visit of Scandinavian Journalists.

In connection with the visit of Scandinavian journalises, who came to America at the invitation of the Committee on Public Information, three Socialist editors recently visited the Rand School. They were Otto Johanson of the Social Demokraten, Stockholm, Sweden; Emil Marrot, editor of Fyens Social Demokrat, Odense, Denmark, and Jacob Vidnes, former editor of the Social Demokraten of Christiania, Norway. They stated that very little labor and radical news regarding America was permitted to reach Scandinavia. Thus the only news regarding Eugene V. Debs that filtered through was the false report that he had denounced the St. Louis resolution of the Socialist Party. About the I. W. W. trial, they stated, practically nothing was known.

Goteborg Workers Want Food.

The Communal Federation of Workers of Goteborg has addressed a demand to the Swedish government that a just distribution be made of the food supplies that are being imported into Sweden. The manifesto points out that the middlemen are making enormous profits, and that food is only within the reach of the wealthier classes. The limit of endurance has been reached by the workers, it states. The manifesto demands that all middlemen be eliminated. The workers of other communities are called upon to make similar demands.

"Phrases Versus Facts"

While making his triumphal tour through Italy President Wilson was greeted by a demonstration of 150,000 working people in the city of Milan. In addressing this audience President Wilson is quoted as saying:

> "I am as keenly aware, I believe, sir, as anybody can be, that the social structure rests upon great working classes of the world, and that these working classes in several countries of the world have, by their consciousness of community of interest, by their consciousness of community of spirit, done perhaps more than any other influence has to establish a world opinion which is not of a nation, which is not of a continent, but is the opinion, one might say, of mankind."

The only organization which has done what the president describes is the International Socialist movement. He was addressing working men and women who are Socialists and his words can have no other meaning than that the International Socialists have "by their consciousness of community of spirit, done perhaps more than any other influence has to establish a world opinion which is not of a nation, which is not of a continent, but is the opinion, one might say, of mankind."

These are fine words on the part of Mr. Wilson, but how do his acts square with these words? In this country, we know, that he is the responsible authority in a government which has savagely persecuted and thrown in prisons for long terms of years those who dared voice that "consciousness of community of spirit" and the "world opinion," which is the opinion of "mankind."

Does the president hope to hypnotize the workers of Europe with fine phrases, as he was so successful in hypnotizing liberals and some radicals in this country? David Lawrence, the correspondent from whose article the above is quoted, seems to think so, for he goes on to say:

> "The president is cognizant of the tremendous undertone of Socialism and Bolshevism, and apparently his desire is to keep the movement in control by their consciousness of community of spirit, done Wilson is the first statesman to dare remotely to suggest the influence of the working classes in recent days, and while other diplomats are whisperingly calling it the greatest menace in Europe none is willing to take the initiative in controlling it, but believe that the best method is to resort to every form of suppression of radical opinion or manifest action."

We doubt whether the President will be as successful in Europe as he has been in this country. The European workers have been too thoroughly drilled in the principles of the working class movement to accept phrases which do not square with the facts for a very long time.

From a Man Who Knows

Albert Rhys Williams, who lived in Russia during fifteen months of the revolution and served in the foreign office of Soviet government and while in that position helped to prepare the propaganda which was sent into Germany to stir up the revolution, told a New York audience the other day, that:

> "With German armies far advanced into Italy and France, the downfall of imperialistic Germany came about through the Bolsheviki propaganda sent into Germany. United States military experts agreed that it would require two or three years and the lives of 500,000 or 1,000,000 American soldiers before Germany was conquered.
> "That the Bolshevik leaders, even while they were being condemned in this country for accepting German gold and obeying the order of the German general staff, were spending Russian gold and exerting all devices to break down absolutism, should entitle them to American gratitude rather than American hostility."

It seems that now that the fighting is over the capitalist press doesn't care whether the people know the truth about what the Allied nations were fighting for. The Plain Dealer tell them in a recent editorial that "Early in the war two secret treaties were signed by the entente powers providing for a division of the spoils. These treaties were quite in accord with precedent. In its earlier phases the war was not wholly different from former wars. The entente nations looked forward with satisfaction to territorial aggrandizement and made agreements among themselves for the assignment of prizes. One of these secret treaties awarded the eastern coast of the Adriatic to Italy. The other provided for the partition of Turkey, assigning Constantinople to Russia and giving France and England valuable compensation' in Asia Minor, Syria and Mesopotamia." The Plain Dealer adds that when the United States came into the war the treaties should have been invalidated, but it knows very well that a leading British statesman said in the House of Commons less than six months ago that England considered the treaties valid and sacred agreements which must be carried out.

In the New York Times we read that the policy of the Bolsheviks toward the Allies is "to play upon their feeling of humanity and their disgust of violence." We can stand a great deal, but when this shining example of the prostitute press tries to tell us that governments which have just been through a war that has cost more human lives and destroyed more human treasures than all the wars of the last century have "a disgust of violence," that is going too far.

How Socialists Viewed Verdict

a verdict that could not be found on the same charge and under the same circumstances in any other civilized country today, with the possible exception of Japan.

"And as a matter of fact, the trial proved that the five Socialists were not put on trial on account of the position of the party toward the war, or on account of any real or imaginary conspiracy to interfere with the armed forces of the United States, but because our American plutocracy is determined to put the Socialist Party out of business.

"Our American plutocracy fears the Socialists and the Socialist Party, especially in view of what is happening in Europe today.

"It seems to be the historic fate of every ruling class to dig its own grave.

"It it in keeping with these short-sighted and stupid tactics that our plutocracy employed all its tentacles—the National Security League, the Loyalty Legion and the American Protective League—to keep me out of congress by defeating me at the polls last November. Our enemies did not succeed. I was elected by a big plurality and therefore a number of indictments were framed up to keep me out of congress by another method. I want to remind my fellow citizens that the United States is the only country in the world today where we still have political trials and political prisoners. And that condition is only one of the queer results of the war we have waged to make the world safe for democracy."

By IRWIN ST. JOHN TUCKER.

"If we had been acquitted, after Debs was convicted, I should have felt that we were tried in the balance and found wanting. The issue is perfectly clear. No one can now, honestly or otherwise, believe that the Wilson administration has the slightest taint of sincerity or democracy about it. The news of the verdict will remove from the minds of Socialists in Italy, France and England any lingering suspicion that Wilson might possibly mean anything that he says on the subject of Democracy or truth."

By ALGERNON LEE,

"First let me express my regret, though not my astonishment, at the outcome of the trial. As things now stand, facts and law have little to do with the result of any prosecution brought against Socialists. I am still hopeful that in the near future the tide will begin to turn and justice will be done."

"Here's to you! My heart was never with you more than now. I am, of course, not the least surprised. Your judicial doom was sealed in that court. Well, it's all fine and inspiring. It is worth something to a Socialist to be convicted in that court. Acquittal only would brand him with disloyalty and damn him for treason. So you have my congratulations. Now let me make another guess. They will never put you in the pen one day. Not that they will relent or show any sign of mercy, but by all the gods they do not dare. Let us see. But whatever they may do, we will defy them and keep our faces to the front, our heads up, and our souls aflame with the holy fires of the revolution.

Chandler Owen, president, and A. Philip Randolph, secretary, of the National Association for the Promotion of Labor Unionism Among Negroes, writes as follows:

"It is with keen regret that we read of the conviction of our official leaders in the American Socialist movement. Nevertheless, it is the trend of the movement everywhere to make assaults upon the leaders of the fight for liberty, justice and democracy. We appreciate that Comrades Berger, Germer, Engdahl, Tucker and Kruse have been convicted for disloyalty to the profiteers and loyalty to the people. The growing radical labor and Socialist forces, however, will vindicate your position and see that you never serve the hideous sentences which may be imposed."

By Duncan McDonald, President-elect of the Illinois State Federation of Labor:

"I was indeed sorry to learn of the outcome of the trial, but was not very much surprised, as I felt right along that they would find you guilty. It is a case where Socialists or Socialism is on trial before an anti-Socialist jury and the result is against Socialism."

The twenty-one Socialist members of the Wisconsin legislature, with Frank B. Metcalfe acting as chairman, and William E. Jordan as secretary, wire as follows:

"The comrades of the Wisconsin legislature extend to Comrades Berger, Germer, Engdahl, Kruse and Tucker their faith in your ultimate vindication and that a true understanding of Socialism will bring an end to all persecution. You may rest assured that you will have our continued support in order that justice may prevail and that the freedom as guaranteed by the constitution of the United States will be properly interpreted."

Withdraw American Troops From Russia Socialist Demand

(Special Correspondence)

Chicago.—Withdrawal of all American troops from Russia and the recognition by the United States government of the Russian Soviet Republic is again demanded by the American Socialist Party in resolutions adopted by the party national executive committee in session here.

The demand is made at this time in the name of democracy, in the interest of world peace, in the interests of the Russian workers and in the name of international decency and fair play.

This campaign against intervention in Russia, which has been carried on more than a year by the Socialist Party until it is now being supported by many non-Socialist elements in the country, is renewed with the following declaration:

"The Socialist Party again protests against the use of troops in Russia and demands the immediate withdrawal of allied and American armies from that country. The Soviet government of Russia is so far the greatest achievement in the establishment of working class government in the history of the world. It should not only be permitted to develop unhindered, but should receive the encouragement and support of the workers in all countries."

"Russia has been cut off from communication with the outside world. It has been interned by a barrier of censorship and boycotted by nations professing to be democratic. Plots, counter-revolutions, intrigue, wholesale lying by a mercenary press, and invasion of territory have not shaken the affection of the Russian masses for the Soviet government. No other government in all history has survived such tests of stability.

"Despite these facts, press accounts report from day to day the co-operation of allied troops with old Czarist generals for the 'restoration of order in Russia.' The German armies invaded Russia with the same cry for their justification. Thousands of Russian workers and peasants killed in this enterprise at the same time that we are assured that the United States is not at war with Russia.

"While this program proceeds Russian representatives of the old czarist regime carry on their reactionary propaganda here for the overthrow of the Soviet government. Some of them frankly state that the property of the former landed junkers is to be restored, thus reducing the peasants to their former servitude. Monarchist generals and black reactionaries conduct this propaganda in the United States while the friends of the Russian masses and their government are denied a hearing.

"This is a reversal of all American traditions. This country has always claimed to be an asylum for the oppressed and refugees of all nations, not as a field for the activities of foreign reactionaries.

"Castro, the Venezuelan dictator, was not permitted to plot in this country for the return of his dictatorship. The assassin, Huerta, attempting a similar coup in Mexico from this country, died a prisoner of the United States government.

"In 1800, the masses of this country turned the Federalist Party out of office for its lack of sympathy for the French Revolution. On the other hand, Kosciusko, the polish revolutionist, and other exiles, were always welcomed in this country.

"Today, the reactionaries propose to bayonet and starve the Russian Revolution. This shameless proposal means a reversal of the historic attitude of the American people. It would make us the jailor of refugees, and the partners of imperialists and mercenaries.

"In January, 1918, President Wilson said, 'The evacuation of all Russian territory and such a settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest co-operation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her an unhampered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development and national policy, and assure her of a sincere welcome in the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing; and, more than a welcome, assistance also of every kind that she may need and may herself desire. The treatment accorded Russia by her sister nations in the months to come will be the acid test of their good will, of their comprehension of her needs as distinguished from their own interests, and of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy.'

"Why should American soldiers be used to recover the gold of British, French and American bankers, loaned to the former czar to pay his hangmen?

"Why should American boys shed their blood to restore the monarchy or recover the losses of the former ruling classes of Russia.

"Withdraw the troops from Russia! Abolish the censorship which prevents real news and encourages wholesale lying about Russia. Refuse to co-operate with the Kolchak, the Semenoffs, the Denikines and other monarchists of the old bloody regime. Recognize the Russian Soviet Republic.

"We demand this in the name of democracy, in the interest of world peace, in the interest of the Russian workers and in the name of international decency and fair play."

Demand Wilson Act on Denial of Passports

(Special Correspondence)

Chicago.—Application direct to President Woodrow Wilson has been made by the Socialist Party for passports for its delegates to the International Socialist and Labor Congress to be held at Bern, Switzerland.

This action was taken when the bureaucrats of the state department at Washington had announced that passports to the Socialist Party delegates, Algernon Lee of New York city; James Oneal of Brooklyn, and John M. Work of Chicago, would not be granted.

Under instructions from the Socialist Party National Executive Committee, Adolph Germer, National Secretary, sent a cablegram addressed to President Wilson at Paris, France, as follows:

"Socialist Party elected three delegates to International Socialist and Labor Conference. British Labor Party and French Socialist Party urge representation of American Socialist Party. State Department refuses passports. We protest against the discrimination and appeal to you to act."

The same cablegram was sent to J. Ramsay MacDonald of the British Independent Labor Party, and Jean Longuet, spokesman of the French Socialist Party, in addition to Camille Huysmans, secretary of the International Socialist Bureau at Brussels, Belgium, with the information that the cable had been sent to President Wilson.

These messages are, of course, subject to the American cable censorship, which may prevent even this communication with the Socialists of the United States and those of Europe.

The Socialist Party National Office received its first word that the passports had been denied in a telegram from Algernon Lee in New York city. Lee wired that he had received word from Socialist Congressman Meyer London, who had called personally at the State Department that the department had notified Lee by mail that his passport had been turned down. Lee had not yet received the letter.

Later.—The campaign being directed from the National Office of the Socialist Party here took a new turn today when Adolph Germer, National Secretary, received a wire from Algernon Lee, of New York city, one of the delegates, to the effect that the State Department claims it has not [illegible] down the Socialist [illegible] man Meyer London at Washington, who has had another interview with Acting Secretary of State Polk, who now claims that the information given out Wednesday as to the refusal of passports is incorrect. Congressman London says he understands that there is no disposition to refuse passports but that the State Department is trying to get definite information as to whether the contemplated International Socialist and Labor Conference will take place and that as soon as this is known passports will be issued.

"This is a very peculiar position to take," declares National Secretary Germer. "I wonder if the State Department was so anxious to learn about the conference that Gompers, Spargo and Russell claimed they were going to attend. The passports should be granted irrespective of whether this conference will be held next week or next month, at Lausanne or at Bern, Switzerland.

Scottish Workers to Have Daily Papers

Labor Party to Have Daily Papers.

The Scottish Conference of the Independent Labor Party, held during the first week in January, decided to organize a daily press of its own throughout Scotland. The Christian Science Monitor reports J. Ramsay MacDonald as saying: "The Labor Party must have a daily press of their own in London, Glasgow and elsewhere." He said that before many weeks they would have a daily paper in London, and he predicted that at the next election they must have 560 instead of 360 candidates, and contest practically every seat in the country.

Mr. MacDonald stated that there was city after city in Scotland which the Independent Labor Party would win directly the coalition began to break up, and a little more educational work had been done.

The Independent Labor Party has made considerable advance in Scotland since 1910.

Fight for New Trial for Five Chicago Socialists Continued

(Special Correspondence)

Chicago, Jan. 23.—Judge Landis today continued the hearing on the motion for a new trial for the five National Socialist Party officials, Congressman-elect Victor L. Berger, Adolph Germer, J. Louis Engdahl, Irwin St. John Tucker and William F. Kruse, until Saturday morning at 10 o'clock.

All indications up to the present have been that the motion for a new trial would be turned down without question, and that sentences upon the five Socialists would be immediately imposed. This had resulted in the stage again being set in Judge Landis' big court room, with an army of newspaper men present, and crowds of Socialists being turned away for lack of accommodations.

The continuance of the arguments would now indicate, however, that there will be a real struggle for a new trial, and that the added time is being used for preparation. The attorneys for the Socialists are making good use of the time allowed to prepare the case for appeal to the higher courts.

Landis Calls Berger Jury to Sift Scandal

Chicago, Jan. 25.—A sweeping investigation of alleged irregularities in the jury deliberations in the recent trial of Victor L. Berger, Adolph Germer, Wm. Kruse, J. Louis Engdahl and Irwin Tucker, who were convicted on charges of violating the espionage law, will be made tomorrow by Federal Judge Landis.

Subpoenas have been served on the twelve members of the jury which heard the case, and they will appear before Judge Landis at 10 a. m.

The hearing was ordered on the plea of the defense, which claims to have in its possession an affidavit sworn to by Thomas C. Nixon, an inventor, 4858 North Monticello avenue, who was a member of the jury, and who is said to have alleged that prejudicial remarks against the defendants were made by certain jurors and a deputy marshal during the progress of the trial.

"Bombs" Prepared by Defense.

Rumors concerning a sensational development in the case have been in circulation at the federal building for several days, and with the issuance of subpoenas today it became known that the attorneys for the defense were preparing to explode a bomb in their effort to obtain a new trial, a motion for which will be heard after the investigation.

Yesterday Attorneys William A. Cunnea and Henry Cochems, representing Berger and his co-defendants, Irwin St. John Tucker, William F. Kruse, Adolph Germer and J. Louis Engdahl, appeared before Judge Landis and offered a copy of Nixon's affidavit. An inquiry was ordered immediately by the judge.

Judge Landis, District Attorney Charles F. Clyne and Attorneys Cunnea and Cochems refused to discuss the coming inquiry beyond admitting the truth of the report.

"I am sorry the investigation became known before it had actually begun," said Judge Landis. "I had hoped for little publicity on the matter. There may be nothing to the charges and there may be a great deal."

Deputy Marshal Involved.

Juror Nixon, in his affidavit, is said to have charged that certain other jurors made derogatory remarks against the defense during the course of the trial, and that a deputy marshal who had access to the jury was outspoken in his prejudice against the Socialists. Other jurists refused to discuss the case. Some charged they had been "hounded" by agents of the defense since the close of the trial.

Japan Socialists Issue Manifesto

Socialists Issue Manifesto.

The Socialist Party of Japan, according to "Le Populaire," has issued a manifesto in the form of an address to the Council of Soviets in Russia. In the course of this manifesto the Executive Committee makes the following statement:

"All of our attention is given to the progress of the Russian Revolution and it is with profound sympathy that we observe the vigorous advance of the Russian proletariat—an advance which produces an ineffacable impression on the soul of the Japanese people.

"We are full of indignation against the methods of the Japanese government, which, under one unimportant pretext or another, sends its troops into Siberia in order to check the free development of the Russian Revolution. We regret very much not having enough organization to ward off the present danger which menaces you on the part of our imperialistic government. But you may be persuaded, that although persecuted as we are today by the government, the flag of liberty will float some day over Japan."

"Le Populaire" notes that Socialist groups have difficulties in Japan where the legislation against them is very oppressive. It is, therefore, difficult to keep in touch with the activities of the Japanese Socialists. The above document, however, throws an interesting sidelight upon some of the things that they are trying [illegible]

Meet Labor Party With Common Sense

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.
(Special Correspondence)

Chicago.—Pointing out that Labor Party movements springing up in different parts of the country are merely expressions of the radicalism of the times, the Socialist Party National Executive Committee, in session here, urges all Socialists everywhere to use common sense instead of prejudice in meeting this new development.

The statement issued by the Socialist Party Executive Committee on this question in full is as follows:

"The formation of labor parties in several of the larger cities has aroused the interest of members of the Socialist Party. This new political party, an expression of the radicalism of the times as well as a protest against the conservatism of the American Federation of Labor, may spread to other industrial centers. In view of this possibility, we, the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party, remind every Socialist Party member.

"1. That State and National Constitutions of the Socialist Party forbids members from joining any other political organization.

"2. That endorsement of any other political organization by any member or sub-division of the Socialist Party is equally prohibited.

"3. That even though the new labor party may proclaim in favor of industrial democracy, may ennunciate the fact of the class struggle and may profess internationalism, the history of all such organizations has shown that they must be judged by their deeds rather than their promises.

"Socialist Party members are asked to view this new political venture in the light of these facts. They should understand that it is the persistent and uncompromising attitude of the Socialist Party, together with the sweep of late events, which accounts for the radical expressions in Labor Party platforms. It is only by continuing our position and economic interpretation of events that we can hope to organize the workers so they will not only declare for industrial democracy, but will act through the Socialist Party to gain this goal.

"On the other hand, our members must realize the futility of destructive criticism of this new labor party. Where the labor party is dominated by old party politicians and corrupt influence, there we must oppose the labor party. But where it is a rank and file movement, declaring for independent political action, based upon the class struggle, we must refrain from criticism which would result in enmities and hostilities. We must maintain an open mind, and a philosophical attitude toward this new political manifestation. In times like these a measure of common sense instead of prejudice, because of competition in the political field, should rule us.

"Middle and West Europe is ablaze with revolution; Great Britain is making strides toward Socialism; unrest and dissatisfaction is fast ripening in the orient; Russia is living through the labor pains of an industrial democracy. Times such as these may give rise to a new party in this country. Socialist in all but name; but unless such a party should manifest its character by proof in action, all Socialists must maintain their position of advance guards of labor's forces upon the political field. Only by this method can we hope to educate all workers in the fundamental principles as ennunciated and practiced by our party, and which are absolutely essential to the winning of the world for the workers."

Gov't. Ownership Success in Queensland

Queensland, Australia, has tried government ownership of public utilities, and finds it an unqualified success. The Queensland Minister for Railways is now in the United States on a tour of inspection of the American Railway System. "My mission to the United States is primarily to inquire into your methods of management of railroads under government control," said the minister as reported in the Christian Science Monitor. "The policy of the government of which I am a member is the nationalization of all public utilities, and although the war with all its manifold problems has diverted us somewhat from our activities, we are yet moving gradually toward our objective."

The minister goes on to explain that the government in Queensland owns the whole railway system, conducts State Saving Banks, a State Commercial Bank, and State Fire, Life and Marine Insurance companies. The Workmens' Compensation Insurance is a government monopoly. The government also has purchased several cattle stations. In the centers of population the government conducts a large number of retail butcher shops which also handle fish. Queensland is the sugar producing state of Australia. The government has set up many modern sugar mills in order to stabilize the industry, and to prevent the introduction of cheap labor. The state is opening an iron producing plant and expects to make steel within the next year. The state is also prospecting for oil. The government operates a steamship line that has its own coal mines, its own saw mills and perform all of its own public work.

Socialist Party Backs Fight to Free Mooney

(Special Correspondence)

Chicago, Jan. 22.—Hearty co-operation with the aims of the recent National Mooney Labor Congress held in this city has been voted today by the Socialist Party National Executive Committee.

This puts the Socialist movement directly back of that great part of the labor movement that is actively struggling to secure justice for Mooney, even to the calling of a general strike on July 4, to force his liberation from prison.

Immediate steps will be taken by the Socialist Party to launch a national movement for the unconditional liberation of all war prisoners at once. One of the plans provides for the calling of an Amnesty Congress to be held in Chicago, May 1, with delegates present from all organizations interested in securing amnesty for all those imprisoned because of their political, industrial and religious views.

The National Office of the Socialist Party will get in touch with all organizations that can be interested in this great campaign, when a general call will be issued on behalf of all of them. The National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party feels assured that such a congress will call together from 2,000 to 3,000 delegates from every section of the land.

The National Executive Committee adopted a resolution demanding amnesty for political prisoners as follows:

Resolution Demanding Amnesty for Political Prisoners.

"The Socialist Party calls attention to the atrocious sentences given to the war dissenters and those representing minority opinions in this country.

"In comparison with the punishments for these alleged offenses in the late autocracy of Germany, the practice in this country has been ferocious. Men and women expressing even minority political opinions that were freely permitted in France and England, have been sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying from five to twenty years.

"In view of the workers republics rising in Europe and the decline of autocracy in other parts of the world, the Socialist Party demands complete amnesty for all political prisoners. It demands this for all such prisoners regardless of their political, religious or economic views, whether they be known as Republican, Democrat, Socialist, Anarchist, Non-Partisan League, Industrial Workers of the World, Pacifist, Christian Pacifist, Conscientious Objector, or by any other title.

The Socialist Party, as the political representative of labor in this country, demands the release of all such prisoners and their return to the society of their fellows not only as a measure of justice to them, but as a partial atonement for the violation of fundamental constitutional guarantees. The suppression of these minority opinions by unconstitutional means, mob violence and war hysteria, is a disgrace to all our professions of "democracy" and will ever remain such in view of enlightened mankind.

Amnesty for these victims is one of the supreme issues of the present and the United States cannot be considered as again a member of the progressive nations of the world until this measure of tardy justice has been accomplished.

Babson's Warning to Big Business

Roger W. Babson, head of Babson's Statistical Organization, Inc., which furnishes reports to merchants, bankers and investors, has sent out a "Barometer Letter," in which the lessons of the war are discussed. This letter raises the question, "Shall we all voluntarily give up something, or shall we all run the risk of losing everything?" The answer, Babson tells his business clientele, depends upon whether or not we are willing to profit by the real lesson of the war. If we are willing to let the bulk of manual workers of this country peaceably retain the prestige and privileges which the war has given them—if we are willing to run the country in the interest of the producers of property rather than the inheritors of property, then we can head off disaster. If, however, the financial and business interests of the United States and Allied nations attempt to return to pre-war economic conditions then there surely will follow an explosion."

Bosses Stir Up Strikes

Basil M. Manly, Joint Chairman of the National War Labor Board, has issued a public statement in which he accuses the American bosses of using detective agencies for the purpose of fomenting strikes and breaking labor unions. Manly cites two specific instances in which supposed union men were urging unjustifiable strikes, and declares that many similar cases had been found. Manly continued: "Such employers as these, who deliberately stir up industrial strife in order to discredit unionism, are the greatest menace to American institutions existing in the country today."

Marine Council Formed in Gulf State

Delegates from all the gulf states met in New Orleans on January 2 to form a Gulf District Marine Council of the various organized crafts engaged in building ships. Approximately one hundred delegates representing 10,000 men were in attendance.

ENGLAND

Labor Party Urges Government to Keep Factories.

The British Labor Party has taken a vigorous stand in favor of having the factories and other works built by the government during the war, retained under national control. The "London Times" in an effort to discredit this move has been urging the government to permit the trade unions to make an experiment in guild Socialism by taking over some of these factories and managing them in competition with private industries.

The "London Nation" in commenting on the situation calls attention to the fact that even should the trade unions make an effort to take over the factories and manage them, they would very easily be discredited by their failure to secure raw materials and to obtain markets. Workshop control is only a small part of modern business. The trade unions controlling the shops would be helpless in the hands of the bankers, producers of raw material and marketers of the product they created. "The Nation" warns the unions that any attempt to follow the suggestion of the "Times" is bound to fail. It further suggests that the "Times" desires this failure in order to discredit the work of the Labor Party.

CANADA

Labor Protests Censorship.

The Alberta Federation of Labor at its recent convention, decided that it would call for a general strike within 60 days unless all censorship laws are repealed. The convention was also unanimous in its demand that Thomas Shannon, a miner who was convicted for having forbidden literature in his possession, be released at once. Other Canadian unions in Toronto and Ontario have taken action to secure the release of several of their members who have been convicted and sentenced, in one case to three years in the penitentiary, for having Socialist literature in their possession.

Labor Wins Political Victory.

The Hamilton Independent Labor Party recently elected one commissioner, [illegible] two candidates in the election; an aldermanic candidate and a school board candidate.

ARGINTINA

Strikers Win Great Victory.

The labor unions of Argentina have won a sweeping victory, as a result of the nation-wide strikes that have spread over the country during the past month. The dispatches indicate that all except the harbor workers have gone back to their jobs. President Irigoyen has made important concessions to the labor unions.

The reports from other South American states indicate victory for the striking workers. A new spirit of aggressive class-conscious unionism has taken possession of the important industrial centers of South America.

MEXICO

Labor Laws Enacted

Mexico has secured a number of important labor laws, according to "The Carpenter." Wages and working conditions were extremely bad at the beginning of the present Mexican administration. The situation has been remedied by the enactment of a code of labor laws which at first seemed drastic, but which are now proving highly satisfactory. At present, workmen take so much interest in governmental affairs, that much of the legislation proposed is suggested by the labor organizations of Sonora, Vera Cruz, Pueblo, Yucatan, and other states.

ENGLAND

Miners Demand Six-Hour Day.

A report from London announces that the Southport Miners' Federation has unanimously adopted a resolution demanding that the miners in the British army be demobilized immediately, and be given employment. The resolution also asks that those disabled in the war receive the wages which they would have earned if they had not been injured. The concluding paragraph of the resolution demands that a six-hour day be substituted for the present eight-hour day.

Debs at Toledo

By THOS C. DEVINE.

An intense and dramatic moment was experienced by the audience that filled Memorial hall, Toledo, to the doors, Jan. 2, to hear Eugene V. Debs, the Socialist leader. Hours before the meeting opened the hall was filled and a second hall in the same building was secured and filled in a few moments with an eager and expectant crowd. Hundreds were turned away unable to get inside the building. Many police were present but no disturbance occurred, the audience waiting patiently for Debs to make his appearance. Many returned soldiers in uniform were scattered throughout the hall and helped girl ushers in taking a collection.

As Comrade Debs stepped upon the platform a beautiful girl, carrying red carnations, accompanied by her sweetheart in uniform walked to the platform. The soldier stood at attention while the flowers were presented to the beloved Debs.

A dramatic moment ensued. An intense silence seized the great audience as it gazed with tear-dimmed eyes upon the picture of the champion of the working class receiving this tender homage. One thought seemed to hold all minds—that the things which the capitalist class and its hireling press has told of Debs' utterances and purposes were blackest lies. Tears dimmed the eyes of the audience while Debs' own eyes were notice to weep with affection, and love.

Taking the girl by the hand and with the other upon the shoulder of the soldier, Debs said: "I have stood upon this same platform many times. Here I met your Golden Rule Mayor and at other times many others—but nothing has ever touched me so deeply as this. I know what you boys have suffered. Something of how your mothers have waited patiently and longed for a word from over there. This is a beautiful thing, to meet you here tonight, and of all the pleasant memories of my life this moment I believe will live the longest—and remain as fresh as these beautiful flowers, and not only while I live, but at my death and after—yes, after—their fragrance will remain."

The applause was spontaneous and prolonged. The audience seemed to take relief in giving vent to its heartiest approval in cheer after cheer.

One of the Toledo daily papers reported the meeting as follows:

Lauds Lenine.

After acknowledging that he was a Bolshevik "from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet," Debs protested against Postmaster General Burleson's action in barring from the mails literature written by Nicholai Lenine, Bolshevik leader in Russia, whom Debs termed "the greatest of European statesmen."

"In the name of the Socialist Party as I stand here on parole I protest against the suppression of free speech, free assembly and free press," Debs shouted.

Scorns His Sentence.

Debs spoke with scorn of the ten-year sentence hanging over his head. "I hate and abhor the capitalistic system, but I don't hate its victims," Debs said. "I went to Cleveland the other day and took by the hand the man who sent me to jail, and I felt sorry for him. He didn't know; it was his misfortune.

"I got my ten years for telling them they would rather have the kaiser than see the working class rule.

"I am liable to be accused of stirring up class hatred, and get ten years more for my words tonight. My little liberty—what does that matter? A sentence to the pen for ten years doesn't thwart me. I can go there and be perfectly serene, but I couldn't go if I couldn't look myself in the face for being too cowardly for inviting the sentence."

Love for Lincoln.

He likened himself to Lincoln, pointing out that both the martyred president and himself loved the common people.

"They murdered Lincoln," said Debs. "I got only ten years. I don't look up to king, politician, priest or preacher; I look up to the working class—that beautiful class in which I was born. A class with dirty faces but clean hearts, rough hands but tender souls—the class that has fed and sheltered the race through all the ages.

"You working people haven't lived; you know not love, sunshine, song, laughter. Your life is work, the shop bell, black faces, a boss.

Easy for Master.

"Your wages go up, then they go down, then you are out of a job. Your master is away; he owns the tools that you work with, but he is not at work.

"You build a mansion for him, but you cannot enter; you fashion a limousine for him, but you cannot ride in it. He has nothing but contempt for you.

"Still he rides you to the polls on election day, and you vote his ticket.

Rich Are Poorest.

"The poorest man I know is Rockefeller, and the second poorest is Andrew Carnegie, who has lost his mind jingling the coins you made for him, and fearing that they would be taken away from him and he would die a pauper.

"Can you imagine how poor Rockefeller feels without one comrade—not one? That is poverty."

"We know so little about existence. So little about life. We are so used to struggle, treachery, dishonesty. It is bred by the system under which we now live. You, [illegible]

The Woman's Cause

A DEPARTMENT FOR WOMEN WHO THINK

The Mother of Humanity

By LAURA JIM REYNOLDS
(Written for The Ohio Socialist)

PART V

As Lucretia Mott and Elizabeth Cady Stanton were recalling the London convention they were joined by the sister of Lucretia, Martha C. Wright, attired in the unassuming, yet characteristic costume of the Quaker, and Mary McClintock, an embryo modern woman suffragist and early advocate that colleges admit women students. These four audacious spirits were even now astounded at their daring in issuing a call for a woman's convention to discuss woman's problems.

The social forces of history had reached a stage of development which necessitated a break with the narrow views prevalent at that day and it is to the glory and credit of this quartette that they were the first to feel the need and act upon it.

Eight years after the meeting in London Lucretia Mott again saw her young friend Elizabeth. Gathering around the tea table with Mrs. Wright and Mrs. McClintock, they energetically returned to the topic of "the propriety of holding a woman's conventions." Never realizing the gigantic task they were undertaking, unaware that from the political field this movement must invade the industrial lives of women, the quartette naively announced to an unsuspecting world that "a convention to discuss the social, civil and religious conditions and rights of women was to be held within five days."

Four little women, sipping tea and eating cake, not only created a tempest of wrath that was to whirl around them, but set in motion a movement that was destined to sweep to the outermost ends of the earth.

The call was issued. The four had a declaration of rights to draft and must find some grievance. Having good, kind, broadminded husbands, they had no personal grievances. The unjust man-made laws had not left their brutal mark on them. They knew that woman's lot was not what it should be. There were grievances that were being endured by many of their less fortunately situated sisters.

After much delay one of the circle took up the Declaration of Independence and read it aloud with much spirit and emphasis, and it was at once decided to adopt the historic document, with some slight changes such as substituting "all men" for "King George." Knowing that women must have more to complain of than men under any circumstances possibly could have and seeing the fathers had eighteen grievances, a protracted search was made through statute books, church usages and the customs of society to find the exact number. Several well disposed men (yes, they accepted men's help) assisted in collecting the grievances, until, with the announcement of the eighteenth, the women felt they had enough to go before the world with a good case. One youthful lord remarked, "Your grievances must be grievous indeed, when you are obliged to go to books in order to find them out."

Thus was woman's declaration of woman's rebellion against old usages and customs framed. They declared "woman is man's equal—was intended to be so by the Creator, and the highest good of the race demands that she should be recognized as such," and "that the women of this country ought to be enlightened in regard to the laws under which they live, that they may no longer publish their degradation by declaring themselves satisfied with their present position, nor their ignorance, by asserting that they have all the rights they want," and, therefore, "it is the duty of the women of this country to secure to themselves their sacred right to the elective franchise."

The convention was a big success and many signatures to the declaration were obtained. When the press heralded accounts of the convention a storm of ridicule and abuse descended upon the signers. The same old tirades that we now hear against the Socialists, I. W. W. and the Bolsheviki were hurled at this courageous little band of determined women.

"Visionary!" "Impossible!" "Long haired agitators!" "Short haired women seeking notoriety!" "Women out of their latitude!" "Reign of petticoats!" "Men would have to wash the dishes!" "Blue stocking effusion!" Such were the dignified comments of the brainy class then in power. The church denounced them as lost vixens forevermore.

Mrs. Stanton's father, Judge Cady, journeyed hastily to his daughter, thinking she had gone insane, and the judge exclaimed, "I wish you had waited until I was under the sod before you had done this foolish thing." The daughter cooly replied, "Ah, sir, don't you remember how you used to give me law books to read in order that I might have something sensible to say to your friends? It was reading those laws books that I found out the injustice of our American laws toward women. I might never have known anything on the subject except for yourself."

One paper decried that after six thousand years the women, if they had rights "would set the world by the ears." An editor whose geology was of the six thousand years' variety couldn't be expected to endorse a progressive idea. Besides, the old world needed its ears "set by" if it was ever to notice women.

A stately woman emerged from one of the larger groups and smilingly confessed that when she read of the convention it had "startled and amused her and she laughed heartily at the novelty and presumption of the demand." Her serious minded Quaker family had attended the convention and considered it a great forward movement. They explained its object to her. She had taken part in the temperance cause by speaking publicly for it, and, now as her folks expounded the woman's rights doctrine she became a convert to "Votes for Women." This Unseen Worker was Susan B. Anthony.

French Workers Restless

The working people of France are aroused as they have not been for many years over the problems that are confronting them as a result of the world war. A special mail despatch recently received in the United States indicates that French labor is in no mood for trifling. The despatch states: "Forced into extremist positions by the angry rejection of its most moderate demands, French labor is more restive every day. The French government is afraid to close the munitions factories for fear of idle labor, and tanks and ten-inch shells are still turned out monotonously. The government fears to demobilize the army, uncertain of its temper, certain only of its own incapacity to re-establish peace-time industry."

Workers Will Pay Damages

Attorneys and officials of an American railroad have discovered a new and very promising method of covering up losses and adding to profits. They have sued one of their workmen to recover damages for a railroad wreck in which he was involved. The Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company has brought suit against one of its locomotive engineers, Kleitz by name, to recover $30,585.14. The railroad alleges that Kleitz was negligent in that he ran at high speed past a "caution" block signal, crashed into the train ahead of him and killed two men.

The incident is reported in "Bradstreet's" for December 28, with this comment:

"The new line of conduct presented in the action of the railroad company is founded on a desire to obtain remuneration for losses sustained and in order to teach other employees to be duly careful."

Rent Interest and Profit

More than three-quarters of the income which goes to the rich people of the United States is in the form of rent, interest and profits. The United States Department of Internal Revenue has just published a summary of Statistics of Income based on the income figures for 1916. At that time there were 429,401 people who received "taxable" incomes. That is, incomes in excess of $3,000 for single persons and $4,000 for married persons. The total amount of "gross" income received by these people was $8,350,000,00. One-fifth of this total was income from personal services, either in the form of salaries or of professional fees. Three-tenths was income from business in the form of profits. The remainder (46%) was "income from property," divided as follows:—Rents $602,000,000; Interest $668,000,000; Dividends $2,136,000,000. These three items with certain miscellaneous incomes from property brought the total in this class up to $3,861,000,000.

People with the smaller incomes received three-quarters of their income from personal services and from business profits. People with the higher incomes received one-third of their income from personal service and business profits and two-thirds from property. In the case of those individuals having incomes between $500,000 and $1,000,000 a year (there were 376 of them) the division was as follows: $11,500,000 in salaries and $94,000,000 in business profits; $8,000,000 in rents; $23,000,000 as interest and $136,000,000 as dividends. The total income from property of these 376 persons was $200,000,000.

It Costs $1,800 Year to Live

Recent investigations by the War Labor Board and by the United States Department of Labor point to the conclusion that a workers family of five, consisting of a man, his wife and three children, needs in the neighborhood of $1800 to maintain a decent standard of living.

Frank P. Walsh in a speech made in New York City recently stated that the War Labor Board has reached the conclusion that $34.80 a week was the minimum unskilled labor wage which would provide decent living.

The same standard is set by Dr. Royal Meeker, head of the Bureau of Statistics, U. S. Department of Labor, in an address before the recent Public Health Conference. Dr. Meeker stated that investigations clearly showed that a really decent standard of living for a family of five cannot be maintained on less than $1687 a year and perhaps it cannot be maintained on less than $1800. Dr. Meeker claimed, however, that the ordinary working family in a large majority of cases falls very far below this standard and as a result is compelled to adopt a standard of living which threatens the health of individual members of the family.

Protest Against Child Labor

The National Child Labor Committee has issued an appeal to the American people to set aside January 25, 26, 27, as days of protest against the existence of Child Labor. Franklin D. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, is urging the observance of these Child Labor days. Recent investigations have shown a greatly increased number of child workers in the factories and mines of the United States. This has been particularly true since the Child Labor Law was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

Very Neat Indeed!

To avoid widespread industrial disaster, payment of $1,650,000,000 is asked of congress, this money to be paid to war profiteers in settlement of obligations entered into with the government in "good faith." War contracts had to be cancelled because the war ended, unfortunately, and now the profiteers are arguing against losing this sum.

In the meantime, a bill is pending in congress to give the soldiers, the many young men who staked their lives, a pittance of six months additional wages—$180 each. Draw your own conclusion.

Minimum Wage for Women $13.20

The Washington Industrial Welfare Commission has fixed $13.20 as the minimum wage for any woman over 18 years of age who is engaged "in any occupation, trade or industry throughout the state during the period of the war." This order is based upon recommendations made by a War Emergency Conference held in August, 1918, and became effective in November. The working women of Washington are asking whether they will now be expected to live on less than $13.20. The war is ended but the cost of living is higher than ever.

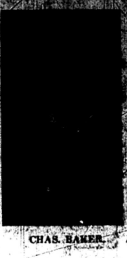
BAKER SAYS "GET BUSY"



CHAS. BAKER.

Are all these locals so out of touch with transpiring events that they fail to see the opportunities which are at hand for organizations more virile and numerically stronger than we have ever had before?

Every local in the state that has braved the persecution of the opposition has come out of the war with colors flying. These locals have established themselves in the hearts and minds of the workers of the cities and are looked up to as leaders in revolutionary thought and action.

Reports come into the state office day after day, which state that meetings held lately have been surprisingly large. In many instances they could not be packed into two halls, and thousands have been turned away.

"I find, since I have been on tour, that everything is ripe for successful organization work and Socialist victories this fall. The field is ready for dozens of speakers and organizers. People who never were troubled with a thought before are now thinking hard," writes Chas. Baker.

"All that locals need to do is to advertise a meeting and advertise it thoroughly. Crowds will flock to it for everybody wants to know more about Socialism and everybody is talking about this topic.

"The Lorain Socialists have decided to arrange a meeting for Debs. These comrades have been inactive for a long time but now see that the time has come for propaganda work. The movement in Lorain is ready to boom.

"In Steubenville I had a fine meeting. The attendance was small, for it was called mainly for reorganization purposes. The Steubenville Socialists decided to have another meeting within a month and until then will get subscriptions and reinstate members. At Niles I had two good meetings, one in the afternoon and one in the early evening. The comrades at Niles know how and have had, in the last two months, the largest meetings ever held in the city.

"Was called to Youngstown the same evening I spoke in Niles and there addressed a packed hall until 10.20. At Bellaire the meeting more than paid for itself, several applications for membership were received and subscription cards sold. There are some extra good rebels here and the movement will hear from them.

"The audience at Byesville numbered about a hundred. This was the first meeting in over a year. The Byesville Socialists realize that our hour has arrived.

"Right now is the opportune time to gather the many Socialists capitalism has made into the fold. Locals that are inactive are missing the chance of their lives. Awaken to your duties! Get into harness!"

Meetings In Ohio

Overflow meetings are reported from all quarters. Locals that have called the bluff of the jingoes and laughed at the ravings of the capitalist press; locals that have kept up a steady propaganda campaign, are now reaping their just reward.

Meetings scheduled for the next few weeks follows:

CHAS. BAKER.

Charles Baker, state organizer, is billed to speak in the following cities: Ravenna, Feb. 3; Cleveland, Feb. 4; Sandusky, Feb. 5; Toledo, Feb. 6; Lima, Feb. 7; Piqua, Feb. 8; Columbus, Feb. 9; Xenia, Feb. 10; Alpha, Feb. 11; Miamisburg, Feb. 12; Middletown, Feb. 13; New Bremen, Feb. 14; Convoy, Feb. 15; Indianapolis and Anderson, Ind., Feb. 16.

• • •

C. E. RUTHENBERG.

C. E. Ruthenberg is scheduled to speak in Toledo, Feb. 9, and in Columbus, Feb. [illegible]

SCOTT NEARING.

Big meetings are being arranged for Scott Nearing at four points in Ohio next month. Nearing has written the State Office that more dates for Ohio would be available after May 1. His February dates in this state are: Canton, Feb. 13; Dayton, Feb. 14; Cleveland, Feb. 16, afternoon; Youngstown, Feb. 16, evening.

GEO. R. KIRKPATRICK.

The State Office is in communication with Kirkpatrick with a view of securing him for a tour of the entire state. His February dates are: Akron, Feb. 8; Cleveland, Feb. 9; Youngstown, Feb. 10.

L. E KATTERFELD.

L. E. Katterfeld, member of the National Executive Committee and experienced organizer, will give ten days to intensive organization work in this state. He will work in the following places: Belmont county, Feb. 5, 6 and 7; Guernsey county, Feb. 8 and 9; Miami county, Feb. 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14.

• • •

A motion is now before the State Executive Committee to employ H. L. A. Holman, formerly of Texas, for organization work in the state. W. R. Snow is expected to begin his tour of the state in the near future. Other speakers and organizers will be engaged to supply the increasing demand for field workers.

BRAIN TEASERS

By TOM J. LEWIS.

The bullets that ended the careers of our two comrades, Liebknecht and Rosa Luxembourg, are but messages to the rising proletariat to beware of all compromisers, reactionaries and advocates of capitalist law and order.

The struggle for supremacy between the two world forces, "Capitalism and Socialism," is on. The advocates and apologists for capitalism are trying to retain the old subdivision of peoples on national lines, also religious and political. But the class struggle looms greater each day with the result, it is uniting the workers into an international body, thereby eliminating race, creed or color divisions and exposing the nature of things in the evolutionary process, which demands organization of the forces antagonistic to each other determined by their material interest, since the close of the national war. The class war is now in its ascendancy, overshadowing all other battles, so from now on there will be but two nations. The workers and the shirkers, Capitalism and Socialism at grips.

The workers are to reap again as the result of promises. A stricken world loaded down with misery and job hunting, owing to the growing unemployed army. Such is the world when made safe for democracy.

Business men compete for trade.
Capitalists compete for markets.
God and the devil compete for souls.
Just an economic reflection, that's all

Seattle Laborites Propose Labor Bank

The Central Labor Council of Seattle is promoting the organization of a banking institution to be known as the Trades Union Savings and Loan Association. Its board of directors will be composed of a member of each of the unions holding stock. An effort is being made to interest the grange, farmers unions and other friendly organizations in the new venture.

This scheme of the Seattle laborites is not a novelty. The Finnish workers in America, for instance, have for years maintained a bank at Fitchburg, Mass., which successfully finances all enterprises of the Finnish workers.

Fertilizer From Goverment at Cost

The Secretary of Agriculture has announced, that under the authority of the food-control act and subsequent legislation, the Department of Agriculture during the coming season, will offer nitrate of soda for sale to farmers for fertilizer use. The nitrate will be sold for cash at cost. The price to the farmers will be $81 a short ton, free on board cars at the loading point or port. In addition, the farmer will have to pay the freight charges to unloading point and any incidental expenses that he may himself incur in connection with the delivery of the [illegible] a remorseless struggle for existence. We are strangers to our neighbors.

"Have you ever paused in a crowded thoroughface, where humanity was sweeping toward you? Have you peered into the faces of the young—old before they were born? Have you seen the tragedy of ages written upon the human countenance? Have you ever felt yourself impeached for being decently dressed? Have you ever felt ashamed for having had your breakfast when so many children are starving?

A Contrast.

"Capitalism is the thing you vote for every time you vote the Republican or Democratic ticket; every time you vote against the Socialist ticket.

"I recently picked up a paper and read two items.

"The first told of an impoverished mother, who had borne seven children, who choked her last-born to death so that it would not starve.

"The second told of a capitalist who had just bought a $75,000 sable coat for his wife, a former actress.

"I am not telling you this to appeal to your emotions; rather would I reach your intelligence."

Meeting Record Breaker.

More than 3,000 people attended the Toledo Debs' meeting. Between 600 and 1,000 were turned away, unable to find standing room. Police were kept busy clearing the aisles in conformity with fire regulations. An unusually large collection was taken and much literature sold.

Socialism's Superiority

By WM. M. BROWN.

If during the year 1919, all adherents of International Socialism throughout the world could and would regularly read and lend Socialist publications, the result would be the ringing out of hell from the earth and the ringing in of heaven upon it through supplanting the competitive system by the co-operative one for the production and distribution of the necessities of life.

Then would the peace on earth and the good will among men, of which angels in the sky have sung so much and people on the ground have experienced so little, cover the world as the waters do the sea.

Within the nineteenth century there were forty conflicts between nations, and there will be more of them and worse ones in the course of the twentieth century, if capitalism stands through it. There have been several already, among them the worst one of all history.

Nor is the suffering by capitalism resulting from such conflicts all or even half of it; for there is the strife and ill will arising from the universal and perpetual conflict between the classes—the class of surfeiting masters, who live by owning, and the class of starving slaves, who live by working.

Fortunately the tremendous struggle between the English and German nations with their allies, which has filled a large part of the world with death, hatred and sorrow, has issued in a more tremendous struggle between the master and slave classes which will fill the whole world with life, love and joy.

This war is now an event in the making, certainly the greatest among all events which have occurred on the earth and probably there has never been one or ever shall be as great a one anywhere else in the universe. On its account the year 1919 will be the most momentous and memorable of all years.

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and glorious time;
In an age or ages telling
To be living in sublime."

The world has never had a gospel which is at all comparable in its excellency to that of Marxian Socialism, according to the Bolsheviki interpretation of it. The gospel of Jesuine Christianism, according to the orthodox interpretation of it is no exception; for, granting it to be superior to the Mosaic, Buddhistic, Mohammedan and other gospels, it is nevertheless almost infinitely inferior to the Marxian gospel.

Gospels are for the purpose of saving the world from its suffering. The Jesuine and Marxian gospels are alike in having for their object the salvation of the proletarian world. The superiority of the gospel of Marx over that of Jesus will appear from the follow representations:

1. Marx seeks to save by doing away with both the master and slave classes—Jesus by exalting the slave class above the master class.
2. Marx exhorts the slave class to look to itself for deliverance—Jesus taught it to look to a God for this.

"Socialist Stirs Ire By Talk in Bellaire." "Speaking in hall directly over police station, Charles Baker, state organizer, rails at capitalists." So read the headlines in a recent issue of the Martins Ferry Times. "Despite his incendiary language he was heartily applauded," this paper goes on to day. Now what do you think of that? What hurts this daily most however, is that a good, Red Socialist speech was given "right over the police station." And that is just about bearding the lion in his den, we admit.

Another nation-wide Bolshevik plot has been uncovered. This time by the wide awake Martins Ferry police. Leaflets were found calling a meeting "by a society." The speakers were to talk about "Revolutionary Socialism." It was to be a meeting of foreigners. And further, similar meetings were reported to be advertised in Cleveland and other places. Well, we confess. They are being held all over the country. Now that the plot has been uncovered, we confess.

GERMAN SOCIALISTS IN WAR-TIME

By ANISE, Union Record.

(Facts taken from Labor Year Book, issued by Rand School; and "German Social Democracy During the War," by Edwin Bevan, published by George Allen and Unwin Co., London).

VI—PARTY SPLITS

When the reichstag group split openly in its vote on war credits in December, 1915, the local organizations all over the empire began to pass resolutions, approving or condemning the action of the small group which voted against the war. It was pointed out in Vorwarts, which at this time stood for the minority, that the actual number of votes represented by the minority was larger than those represented by the majority.

Still, however, no one could tell, in the absence of a party congress, how the rank and file throughout Germany would vote. Liebknecht's own constituency later voted against him and, on the other hand, so did Scheidemann's.

Opposition to War Strong in Berlin

Berlin was one of the places where the minority was strongest. The central body there passed a vote approving the minority by 41 to 17. On the other hand, the party in Hamburg where hatred of England was especially bitter, were strong for the majority and vetoed a proposal to allow Haase to address them.

In January the reichstag group elected Ebert as its president in place of Haase, who had resigned to go with the minority. Friedrich Ebert is a man from the working class, a Heidelberg tailor, of solid, healthy bodily frame, an honest commonsense bureaucrat who might be trusted to discharge the business of the party conscientiously and efficiently.

The reichstag committee, which now consisted of majority members only passed a resolution expelling Liebknecht from membership in the group. A lively controversy arose. Vorwarts declared that expulsion could not be done by any committee, but only by the party at its annual congress. Otto Ruhle voluntarily took his stand with Liebknecht, as outside even the recognized "minority."

Introducing the Spartacus Section

We have heard much lately of the Spartacus section. This group made its appearance at about this time. The extreme group, followers of Liebknecht, thoroughly international and opposed to all national distinctions of any kind, carried on an active propaganda by means of pamphlets, sometimes printed, but more often typewritten. Those which attracted the most attention were known as the Spartacus letters, and were circulated among confidential correspondents. It was known that there was more than one author and that Liebknecht himself had a hand in their composition.

These letters consisted largely of mocking, bitter attacks on the sections of the minority which followed Haase, ridiculing them as timorous and half-hearted. It seems to be a characteristic of radical groups in all countries that more intense bitterness is displayed towards those who are nearest to them in sympathies and who yet do not follow them completely, than against the even more divergent groups farther away.

However, the accusations brought by the Spartacus group against the German government were sufficiently thoroughgoing. According to them the German and Austrian governments had "deliberately contrived the murder at Sarajevo"—an accusation which, as far as I know, was not even made in the allied countries.

The Minority Organizes

Great bitterness was added to the fight between the two sections of the party by the Spartacus accusations. And when, in March, 1916, the usual war credits vote bobbed up again, and Haase spoke on the floor of the reichstag, voicing vehement opposition to continuing the war, the majority Social Democrats joined in the angry cries that helped to howl down their old chief.

Immediately after the meeting in the reichstag the party [illegible] "Social Democratic Group." Protesting against the right of the directorate to deprive them of their rights as members of the Social Democratic party, the minority nevertheless proceeded to organize a new group, known as the Social Democratic Labor Fellowship. Haase and Ledebour were its two chairmen, and Dittman, who is another man recently prominent as a member of the Socialist cabinet in Berlin, was secretary. He is a cabinet maker by trade from the Lubeck district and at that time 41 years of age.

Throughout all the accounts of German Socialists, the age of the prominent men is a matter for comment. The Russian revolutionary figures, with some exceptions, seem to have been young men; the revolution there was full of the fire of youth. Possibly the German revolution, as it swings to the left, may come under the control of the younger group; or possibly the greater age and solidity of Socialism in Germany may keep a less fiery but more careful group in control.

Liebknecht Arrested

The second May day of the war found the relations between the government and the radical Socialists more strained than ever. Wherever the comrades assembled the secret police followed. And on that May day Liebknecht was arrested for inciting a large crowd in Berlin with the cries: "Down with the war! Down with the government!" A pamphlet written by himself, of which over 1,000 copies were found in his possession, called the workers to "a class war against the government," and said that "the government's lust for dominion was responsible for the war. The workers must tolerate the slaughter no longer."

The violence of Liebknecht's words, as compared with any of the speeches ever imagined possible in our country, are very startling. Even before May day he had made a speech in which he called the war loan a "colossal swindle." He was a soldier, subject to military jurisdiction.

Was Liebknecht privileged as a reichstag member? The matter came up for discussion. The Haase group defended him against the charge of treason, but the house decided to abandon him to his fate. He was condemned to two years, six months and three days penal servitude, and removal from the army "for attempted treason in war."

The Fight Grows More Open.

The fight between the two factions of Socialists grew more open. The majority attempted to secure control of Vorwarts, the party organ, and succeeded to the extent of having a "censor" appointed. But greater Berlin openly revolted against their control. And Vorwarts was the organ for both the Berlin central directorate and the whole Socialist party, and was thus in an increasingly awkward position.

All this time the terms "majority" and "minority" meant merely the relative strength of two groups in the reichstag. The party as a whole had not spoken. A complete congress was impossible until the soldiers should return to vote. As a substitute for this a conference of delegates was at last callen in September, 1916. It went off more quietly than expected. The "majority" obtained, indeed, a majority of the delegates, but the constituencies represented were found to be about equal. On the whole, the cause of the minority was advanced. It was learned, with surprise, how large a part they really formed of the party.

This relatively harmonious gathering was the last time in which the two groups met as one.

The months that followed saw the gradual growing of two distinct organizations [illegible]

"AMERICANS KILLED IN MEXICO"

A war with Mexico is in the making.

And the devils implicated in this hellish brew—well, you only need one guess to guess rightly.

How else could these vendors of poison exist? How else could they earn their master's gratitude? How else could they protect the interests of the industrial lords by whom they are paid, and richly, too, for manufacturing public sentiment to order?

A war with Mexico is in the making. Our industrial kaisers resent all efforts the Mexican government is making to make Mexico a good country to live in. For, making any country a good country to live in means making that country a bad country for profits and dividends.

Our industrial kaisers must have profits and dividends. Life? Why—let life go hang, it's dollars they want. And if dollars, in absolutely correct ratio to investments, do not roll into their coffers, then a hint to the daily capitalist press is sufficient.

"Americans killed in Mexico" was blazoned across seven or eight columns of space in one of Chicago's dailies about ten days ago.

The day after this, the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party was addressed by a native of Mexico, whose forefathers had fought to make Mexico free for its workers.

When asked for information about this latest "news," the Socialist Party Executive Committee learned that the "killing" referred to occurred in the year 1913. "And further," said the Mexican, "you hear much about Americans being killed in Mexico, but how about the many Mexicans killed by Americans?"

Surprising, isn't it? And yet it's not. Nothing will be left undone to protect the profits of the profiteers. And, as Mexicans have committed no "overt act" in recent months, therefore, at a loss for "news" of the right kind, the kept press trots out a 1913 "killing."

We are at the cross roads again!

Will we permit ourselves to be led into a war with Mexico for the sake of protecting profits. Or will we travel the road, the sign post upon which reads—TO INDUSTRIAL FREEDOM AND THE NEW DAY.

LEADING THE PARADE

In thought and in action there seems to be a rush toward the "left" these days. The march toward Industrial Freedom is now along a road which is admitted by many to be a short cut.

The "right" of Labor's Army, which has plodded the furrow of conservatism these many years, is gradually being depleted in numbers and it will soon be but a corporal's guard, shouting it's usual "don't."

The "left," or radical wing gathers strength day by day. It understands its mission, knows its aims, is courageous and determined in its demands. It fears not, neither does it hesitate.

Workers' Councils, composed of Socialists, trade unionists and industrial unionists have been formed in Butte, Duluth and many other cities. A Soldiers' and Workers' Council has been organized by the Metal Trades Section of Seattle unionists. Socialist Party locals are voicing their support of the Russian Socialist Soviet Republic by speech and pamphlet. Overflow meetings are being held in all large cities at which demands are make for amnesty for all political prisoners and for withdrawal of troops from Russia.

In all this thought and action the "left" leads.

The "right" may think it is leading, but it's going to wake up some fine morning only to discover that a parade can't be led from the rear end.

Those Bolsheviks are strange people. In one column of the kept press we read that they are responsible for strikes in Argentina and in the United States; that with the employment of millions upon millions of rubles they are fomenting revolutions in a half dozen different countries at once; that they are secretly implicated in every riot and killing of any account. And right in a neighboring column we are told that they are hopelessly bankrupt; utterly disorganized; opposed by a majority of Russians and violently at odds with themselves. Indeed, strange people!

OTHER EDITORS SAY—

We should be charitable with the papers these days, for they have a lot of hard work to do. They must convince us that Liebknecht, who fought the German government throughout the war, is our enemy, and the majority Socialists who went fifty-fifty with the kaiser in all his crimes, are our real friends.—Liberator.

M. Pichon, the French Foreign Minister, is reported as saying that the czar and his family were put in a small room and jabbed with bayonets all night long and then shot in the morning. Which merely goes to show that royalties are like cats—they have many lives. M. Pichon's informant is Prince Lvoff, which, doubtless, accounts for the fact that the late czar's family is still alive, and although in reduced circumstances, from a financial and social standpoint, yet in good health.—Revolutionary Age.

The date hasn't been set yet, but along about the middle of next month we may confidently expect that the Spartacus group will announce the wholesale slaughter of everybody in Germany able to count four and possessing a handkerchief. It makes interesting reading, and it harms nobody.—New York Call.

Some people may mistake a plausible flunky of the special interests for a real reformer. Some people buy paste diamonds for the real thing, too. But the special interests never make a mistake. Their abuse or praise shows whether the specimen is genuine. This is one cue we can practically always rely on from the kept press.—Union Record.

Italy has freed all political prisoners.

Germany has done so; Austria, Hungaria, Bulgaria, Russia, have done likewise. France and Canada have promised to take the same course.

Will America lag behind?

The kaiser, before his abdication, released Karl Liebknecht.

Will democratic America be less magnanimous than the Beast of Berlin? —American Bolshevik.

New York having protested against Jewish progroms in Poland, it is now up to Warsaw to object against Negro pogroms in America. One lawless murder of a Negro every four days is our proud record.—New York Call.

Experts have given up the idea of making a monkey talk. Well, we would like to have experts find a way to prevent men in public places from talking like monkeys.—Chicago Socialist.

They're Doing This in Lima

Comrade Edwin Blank of Lima informs us of a plan that Local Lima is executing in its campaign of organization and increasing the circulation of the Ohio Socialist.

At the last business meeting each member volunteered to take three to [illegible] cards and to sell them [illegible] nothing wrong with [illegible] this idea out in your local. It will work like a charm, we are sure. Try it. The comrades of Lima are up to their ears in organization activities.

The Debs' meeting in Lima had to be given up because the Memorial hall, owned by the public, but under control of the county commissioners, could not be obtained. The matter had been taken in court and a favorable ruling obtained for the Socialists but upon application for its use they were again refused and had to again take the case to court. The case will not be settled in time for the meet- [illegible]

The Best of Advice

Locals, when holding propaganda meetings, should do three things at all meetings before the speakers of the evening are introduced.

1. Ask all Socialists in the audience who are not yet dues paying members to join our party. Have plenty of application cards on hand and have ushers pass them out.

2. Solicit subscriptions for the Ohio Socialist. Have plenty subscription cards on hand and sell them through the audience.

3. Sell literature to the audience. Buy a new pamphlet for each meeting and make special effort to sell every person present that one book. Do not try to sell too many different kinds of books. Have some comrade read the book you intend selling and then have him introduce it to the audience, touching upon the points the book covers.

We also suggest that the financial secretary occupy a table in the rear of the hall and that the chairman announce that all members who desire to pay dues can pay them to the financial secretary.

Meetings locals arrange must be made as useful to the party as possible and programs including the above items, should be carefully arranged in advance.

Local Youngstown has enjoyed an unprecedented sale of Socialist literature this month. Nearly 2,000 10-cent pamphlets were disposed of by this local at its meetings.

Another hundred press stamps for Local Cincinnati. And an equal number for Local Hamilton.

TAKES FIRST PLACE

Again we have a tale to tell about Local Youngstown. This local buys more copies of the Ohio Socialist than any other local in the state. Orders for 500 copies, 700 copies, 1,000 copies have become a once a week habit with this local.

LOOSERS FEAST THE WINNERS

An oyster supper was enjoyed by both losers and winners as a result of the membership contest held in Portage county recently. The losers paid the bill. "We start another membership drive, which is to last during the months of February, March and April, with the same captains and teams will wind up with a supper and dance, the losers again paying the bill. Watch the indicator in this county. We will be there at the finish." So writes C. G. McVay.

• • •

Frank Stidd reports a good meeting held at Bellaire with Chas. Baker. Many subscription cards sold, new members secured and much literature disposed on.

AGAIN WE TELL YOU—

Foresight is still the winner and hindsight the loser. By which we mean that if you want a bundle of the Ohio Socialist you will have to order in advance and not after the edition is off the press. "But," you'll say, "I do not know whether I want a bundle of it or not until I see it." And neither do we, comrade. We can't tell whether we are going to receive your order for several thousand copies of an issue after it is off the press or not. And we can't afford to print thousands of extra copies every week and then not sell them.

Consequently, the very best thing to do is to order a bundle regularly. We get orders for hundreds of copies of the Ohio Socialist after the edition is exhausted. And we are indeed sorry to disappoint so many of our supporters by our inability to fill orders after the issue wanted is off the press. The only way out is to place yourself upon our mailing list for a bundle every week.

Local Massillon joins the bundle brigade. A hundred a week is its order. They will be used for free distribution at the shops.

Local Lorain applies for a Debs' meeting.

The meeting addressed by Chas. Baker at Steubenville, though attended mostly by party members, resulted in much good to the organization. Three new applications for membership were secured and many Ohio Socialist subscription cards were sold. E. P. McDevitt writes that the local members feel much encouraged.

PIQUA WARMING UP

LOCAL GIRARD WAKING UP

"I shall make an effort to get the comrades together at once. You can expect to hear from me again. Interest in the movement in this valley is at fever heat. Debs has stirred them up and has spurred the comrades on to greater efforts. Long may he live." Fred Wilson.

Local Canton is arranging a meeting for Scott Nearing on Feb. 13. This local also applies for a speaker once a week for a series of Sunday afternoon meetings.

A Voice From Jail

County Jail, Albuquerque, N. M.,
January [illegible], 1919.

Dear Comrades of Ohio:

I have just been convicted in a court of law, of disloyalty to capitalism. The court has been lenient, assessing the penalty of six months in a federal jail. As I have no funds and our state and national treasuries seem to be depleted, I will serve this sentence and with good grace, feeling that in so doing I am only suffering for and serving the workers and that, too, much less than thousands of others have done and are doing.

Please change the address of the Ohio Socialist from address of Roswell, New Mexico, to new address, Deming, N. M., care county jail. I must have the paper while locked up if permitted to do so.

With confidence that the day of the workers is near at hand and without remorse or shame, I am,

This is part of a letter from W. A. Jenkins, secretary of Columbiana county. And it's looking ahead that counts. Arranging for May Day celebrations now means that success is bound to attend efforts made to interest the workers generally in this international holiday.

Dear Comrades:

Please accept the congratulations and good wishes not only for the Ohio Socialist, but for every other Socialist aircraft sailing aloft. And the same hand of good fellowship to every sister and brother that the sun shines on or the rain or snow falls upon.

Hamilton Nominates Ticket

With some other comrades in the state the comrades of Hamilton have seen the wisdom of nominating their city ticket early. This method gives more time to get the candidates' names before the voters, and also has the effect of spurring the comrades on to starting the campaign at an earlier date than usual.

The Socialists of Dayton have also nominated their city ticket. Other Ohio locals are expected to follow this method of holding their city convention early this year. Ohio city elections occur in November next.

Following is a report of the convention held by Local Hamilton on Jan. 12:

Meeting opened promptly at 9 a. m. with Comrade Kopp in the chair. The following nominations were made and concurred in by the convention as the candidates of the Socialist Party of Hamilton in the next city election:

For mayor—John M. Cahalane.
For city solicitor—Horace J. Shank.
For auditor—Ernst Sheafor.
For president of council—Arthur Sapp.
For council-at-large—John Baureiss, Joseph Felblinger, Seth Felblinger.
For board of education (two to be elected)—Mrs. Bonnie Shank, W. W. Vinnedge.
Ward councilmen as follows:
First Ward—Otto Graf.
Second—Harry Bacon.
Third—Walter Baureiss.
Fourth—Ormsby Gray.
Fifth—Harry Frenk.
Sixth—Harry Berry.
Assessors as follows:
First Ward—Dan Lauderman.
Second—Ed Dulli.
Third—John Rochelle.
Fourth—Charles Evans.
Fifth—Aaron Klein.
Sixth—Alvie Jones.

We have a ticket in the field of which Local Hamilton may well be proud.

Red Army Smashes All Records

For lack of space in last week's issue this column was delayed until this number.—Ed.

All former records of the Red Army were smashed last week when a total of 400 subscriptions were rolled up by these boosters of our party paper.

Lack of space forbids us to publish but a very few of the many letters and words of encouragement which reach the State Office from our comrades throughout the nation. However, their words are more than appreciated, they are inspiring and attest the esteem in which the Ohio Socialist is held by the comrades in all parts of the country.

Below are listed numerically the results of one week's work of the Red Army. Many renewals are not here listed.

Local Midvale rings the bell with 25 yearlies and two half yearlies. No other local reached this number this week.

—17—

Comrade John Rehm of Springfield is next highest on the list as above noted.

—11—

Local Hamilton is the only local hitting this mark this week.

—10—

Local Columbus sends in an even ten, four of which the local sends the paper to as a means of inducing their further education in Socialism. This is good constructive work and is a worthy example to other locals.

—9—

Local Toledo is next on the list with a total of nine new ones.

—8—

Here is where we begin to double up. Comrade Edwin Blank, one of the live wires of Lima, and Comrade Jos. Bower of Creston, hit the bullseye at the same time with the above number to their credit.

—7—

Still more doubling up. The above number of subscriptions were received from the following locals:

Dayton and Wadsworth.

—6—

Comrade Wm. G. Schultz of Napoleon sends six subs and an order for five sub cards. Thomas Adams, Middleton, sent in six.

—5—

Now we are in the average class. Wonder if it is not possible to raise the average. We believe it is, what do you think? Those sending in five subscriptions this week are Clarence R. Lortes, St. Marys; Chas. D. Hirst, Salineville; T. H. Davies, Hubbard, and C. G. McVay, Ravenna; J. Gartleman, Cincinnati; Fred White, Martins Ferry, all yearlies. A. W. F. Steckel, Tiffin.

—4—

—3—

And here are two comrades who held the fort for real democracy this week. Comrades O. Ruchtaeschel, Cincinnati, and Thos. Adams of Middletown.

—2—

And here are the names of some comrades who are on the job every day.

They are: Anton Soukup, Neffs; E. C. Wolf, Mt. Vernon; Walter Conradi, Scott Wilkins, Ada; J. H. Sims, Bethel; Mrs. A. L. Hitchock, Cleveland; Walter Dearolf, Rittman; Lyle E. Gardiner, Akron; Allen Cook, Canton; Fred W. Seibert, Lawndale; Clarence Case, Hamilton.

—1—

The following comrades sent in one subscription each: Robert E. Blackstone, Cleveland; Robert Green, Martins Ferry; Stephen [illegible] [illegible] town; Ben Lieberman, Warren; C. A. Hudbeck, Struthers; W. D. Marshall, Leetonia; Ward Lowery, Canton; A. C. Holloway, Akron; H. E. Egger, Byesville; Carl W. Fry, Akron; N. Weltlich, Massillon; G. F. Schnauffer, Piqua; F. From Other States

Local Battle Creek, Mich., walks away with the belt with a total of 51 subscriptions. What do you think of that, Ohio Locals? On top of that comes a supplementary list from Comrade W. E. Reynolds containing 6 more. Single subscriptions were received from Wm. Raider, Niles; Rener Dyk, West Oline; Comrade John Kuskila of Hancock, besides a bundle of ten weeklies.

West Virginia, Too

That the comrades of West Virginia intend to support the Ohio Socialist and to get all the benefits it can give toward the upbuilding of the party in that state was again made manifest when a list of 31 subscriptions were received from Comrade R. M. Goodall of Ronceverte. Another list of four from Comrade H. F. Link of the same city shows there is more than one live wire there. From Fairmont, W. Va., comes a list of 6 from Comrade Jesse Bird. Comrade H. F. Oberholtzer of Huntington also sends in two. One each are received from Comrades S. Robef of Ethel and James M. Holt, Weston, and Luther M. McIntyre. Comrade James W. Foley of Sutton sends two yearlies.

New Mexico

State Secretary W. B. Dillon sends in a list of 7. Eight were received from Comrade W. P. Calkins of Weed.

Kentucky

A list of six are to hand from Comrade Louis Scharstein of Newport. Comrade Stark and Comrade Bell of Louisville send one each. Comrade Walter Demar sends one. Comrade S. P. Allen of Guston sends a list of ten and offers his services in the distribution of literature at any time. Thanks comrade. We shall have a job for you. A renewal is received from Comrade Jno. H. Grigsby of Louisville.

Virginia.

J. W. Cassell, Secretary of Local Roanoke, sends in a list of six.

Illinois

Comrade Otto Adams mails a list of five, together with $5 for a year each. Comrade Perry H. Shipman of Rock Island sends a list of five and orders a bundle of 25 a week. Comrade L. K. England of Moline mails in a list of nine.

Pennsylvania

Comrade Pearl E. Playfair of Irwin sends us a list of eleven yearlies. Comrade E. E. Swanson sends in two yearlies from Freedom.

Tennessee

Three from Comrade Curtis Cannon of Huntingdon and one from Comrade Hugo Gernt of Glenmary adds to the list of readers in sunny Tennessee.

Oklahoma

We have a growing list of readers in far away Oklahoma too. Subscriptions from the following comrades were received this week: U. P. Pace, Loveland, 2; State Secretary Clara Smith, Oklahoma City, 1; G. A. Lighter, Olustee, 2. Among other things, Comrade Lighter writes: "We wish to inform you that every Socialist in this neck of the woods is standing by the Socialist Party. The so-called League for Democracy has not made a dent. The YELLOW sheet known as the New Appeal to Treason has no support here. The war is over, no menace from invasion by Germany, yet the lid is on tighter than ever. We ask that all Socialists stand firm and hold out for the truth for our time is coming and with a gallop. The class that hates Socialism has done the very thing in Europe to hasten its coming."

Indiana

One each was received from Comrades C. H. Pickwood of Paoli and Jno. E. Brosher, Lebanon.

Arkansas

Three yearlies were sent in by Comrade B. W. Tuche of Pine Bluff.

One each was received from Comrades C. O. White, Lusk, Wyo.; Bert B. Dusick, Puyallup, Wash. (formerly of Ohio); Riverton G. Reed, Exeter, Mo., and Fred C. Haacker, Trenton, N. J.

Piqua Passes Resolutions

In as much as we have just emerged from a great world war, in which the main issue was, Democracy vs. Autocracy, which has terminated satisfactorily to the workers of the several nations; and,

Whereas, our boys (who took an active part in the conflict) were promised that the jobs which they held before entering the service would be open for them upon their return to citizen life, and,

Whereas, we find that this promise has not been fulfilled in many instances, thereby leaving these soldiers to beg for a job elsewhere, or tramp the long lane of the unemployed.

And, whereas, the present disorganized state of society renders a member of the unemployed a beggar in his own domain, since wages are necessary to the sustenance of life.

Realizing that the conditions are not in harmony with the issue of democracy which has so indelibly been stamped upon our minds;

Therefore, be it resolved that any job held by one of our boys before entering service and now being held by one of us shall upon the return of such soldier be offered and surrendered to him, and that we will strive to influence others to the same end, and that we will take such soldier into our confidence, co-operating with him, in an organized effort to establish democracy and to abolish wage-slavery, thereby ushering in a democracy which all humanity shall rejoice to behold.

Piqua Local Socialist Party of Ohio, J. H. Denman, secretary; Frank Hamilton, chairman.

A Breeze From Oklahoma

Whoop-ee! Hurrah, Hurrah for American democracy! A $75,000 fur coat for the bosses wife. If they can have the Socialists all put in prison and have their papers suppressed so you can't learn anything and then you get yourself a job at $5 per day and will not eat anything nor wear any clothes and will work 365 days each year for 41 years and 35 days you can buy your wife a $75,000 fur coat.

Wouldn't you feel happy marching around with your wife with a $75,000 fur coat on even if you had on only a pair of overalls and a shoddy wool cap. Go to it, you wage slaves, and be happy. Nothing like it in this world or the world hereafter.

Hurrah for American Democracy!

WANTED CIVIL ENGINEER

Applications for position as civil engineer will be received by the Socialist Party of Ohio, R. D. 2, Brecksville, Ohio. Applicants must be party members. Position is under Socialist city administration. Pays $110 a month. Work is light and plenty of time for extra jobs.

Kate Richards O'Hare reports overflow meetings in the west, where she is now filling speaking engagements. G. J. Peek of Davenport, writes that the O'Hare meeting in that city was so large, hundreds were turned away. As usual, the pushers of the poison pen lied about the meeting.

The Ohio State Journal says, editorially, that the Bolshevik program would terminate our civilization. Right of course. And who wants to continue the kind of civilization we have had these last few years?

H. L. RICKER SAYS—

I have been reading papers every day,
And used to believe anything they would say,
Until about twelve years ago
I found out something I did not know.
At that time good papers were not many
And very few boosters to supply you with any,
But today we have the OHIO SOCIALIST grand
And boosters pushing to beat the band.
So today if a working man has a dollar
And you ask him to subscribe and he starts to hollow,
Just mark him down as a capitalist goat,
Who will never learn till he begins to croak,
That the capitalist press is all out of date
He'll not find out until too late.
So take that dollar you have in your pocket,

The Bolshevists: Grave-Diggers of Capitalism

By C. E. Ruthenberg

Bolshevism—what fear and anger the word arouses in the minds of the rulers of society!

Daily the press pours out its denunciation and men in high places issue their warnings and threats against it. Bolshevism is anarchy, it means rioting and bloodshed, wholesale murder and destruction. It means the collapse of orderly society, the breakdown of production and consequent misery and poverty.

Thus speak those whom Bolshevism threatens with the loss of their privilege to amass wealth at the expense of the misery and poverty of the masses, and with this lurid version of what they term a new movement of the dregs of society they desperately seek to inspire the masses of the people.

Why does Bolshevism arouse such dread and anger among the exploiters of the workers? Why do they fear it so and why these threats of merciless suppression?

Is Bolshevism really something new? Is it something that the working people of Europe have just discovered,—something to which they were driven, perhaps, by the suffering and misery resulting from the world war?

MARX AND ENGELS FURNISH ANSWER

The answer to these questions are to be found in the writtings of Karl Marx and Frederick Engels,—who first formulated the scientific principles underlying the modern Socialist movement. By examing these principles, as stated in their writings, particularly in the first workingclass platform based on the development of capitalist industry,—the Communist Manifesto,—we can find out whether Bolshevism is merely the bursting forth of too long suppressed popular unrest, or whether it is the culmination of a workingclass movement, guided by sound, scientific principles.

Marx and Engels said that the history of the past was the history of a class struggle. They said that in each period of the past there appeared a ruling clss,—rich, powerful, living in luxury and splendor—and an exploited class which worked hard and long but enjoyed little of the wealth it brought into existence. They said that in the past the struggle between these classes had resulted either "in the revolutionary reconstruction of society or the common ruin of the contending classes."

In modern society this struggle presents itself, they said, in a conflict between the capitalists who own the factories, mines and mills and the means of production generally, and the workers who have to sell their labor power to these capitalists in order to earn a living.

HOW THE WORKERS ARE ROBBED

They said that since the capitalists own the things that the workers must use in order to earn a living the capitalists have the whip-hand and that they compel workers to sell their labor power for much less than the value of what they produce. In fact they argued, that the workers usually receive in the wages paid them only just enough to buy the necessities for a poor sort of living for themselves and to provide for the raising of children so that the line of workers might not be exhausted. The workers produce the amount of wealth they receive in wages in two, three or four hours, depending upon the technical development of industry, but they are compelled to keep on working up to eight, ten or twelve hours and during the hours they work over and above the time required to produce their wages they produce "surplus value" for the boss.

They said that naturally the workers attempted to improve their standard of living by an effort to secure more of the wealth they produced and that the capitalists resisted this effort of the workers in order to keep as much as possible of the product of industry for themselves as profits, and that, consequently, there was a class struggle between the workers and capitalists.

That Marx and Engels were right any workingman who thinks at all about the facts of how he gains his living must admit. That he must secure the consent of the capitalists, or their representatives, in order to work, he knows well enough from bitter experience in hunting for a job. That he receives in wages only about enough to feed, clothe and house himself and his family,—and sometimes even has a hard struggle to get that he knows equally well. That on the other hand there is a small number of people who live in luxury and splendor without doing anl productive work, because they get the profits he produces, is equally plain. To prove that there is a class struggle he need only think about the numerous and constantly occuring strikes.

CLASS GOVERNMENT

Marx and Engels said, further, that the governments in all capitalistically developed countries were instruments of class rule: that they were controlled by the class which owned the machinery of production and that the power of government was used to uphold the system of exploitation and to suppress the efforts of the workers to win their freedom.

That they were right in this, also, we can easily prove by the acts of the governments of capitalist countries. Even in those countries which have the most democrratic institutions the governments are class governments,-"committees for the conduct of the common affairs of the bougeoisie." In the United States the workers have the ballot and are in a majority, but the capitalist class controls the means of information. It controls the newspapers, the schools, the colleges and the pulpits, and through this control it is able to mold the minds of the voters so that they elect to office men who will uphold their class interests. And when they are unable to control the voters they can always win over the "good men" elected to office by the pressure they can bring to bear through their economic power and promises of preferment. Consequently the government of this country,-as is proven by its acts, is greatly concerned and constantly engaged in passing laws conserving the interests of the capitalists, but never legislates in the interests of the workers.

THE WAY TO FREEDOM

Marx and Engels pointed out, also that the development of the means of production was bringing larger and larger masses of workers together in industry and that the system of production was changing from individual production to collective production. Private ownership of industry, they said, was a fetter on the development of the highest and most efficient form of collectivism.

They meant by this what Mr. McAdoo, Director-General of Railroads, pointed out in his annual report, when he said that under private ownership the railroads sent freight by round about routes and lost millions of dollars because they did not use common terminals. The coal industry furnished another example of the fetters of private ownership on collective industry.

Marx and Engels said that the way to freedom for the workers was, in harmony with the development of industry, to transfer industry from private control and ownership by the capitalists to the common ownership and democratic management by the workers.

They said that to accomplish this the workers must gain control of the state,—the government—and change it from an instrument of capitalist oppression to a means of establishing the common ownershp of industry and management by the workers.

They said that when the workers took control of the government there would come into existence a "dictatorship of the proletariat;" that such a dictatorship of the proletariat was necessary in order to break down the resistance of the capitalists to the socialization of industry, but that, as the transformation of industry from private ownership for profit to collective ownership with management by the workers in the industries proceeded, the state would lose its class character and become merely an organization for the administration of industry; that in place of being an instrument of class rule it would become a huge co-operative organization of all the workers for the common purpose of supplying themselves with food, clothing, homes to live in and education a recreation.

The capture of political power by the workers might come through a mass movement and revolution, as it did come in Russia and as it is now manifesting itself in Germany, or it might come as did in Finland, where the Socialists elected a majority of the Finnish parliament and where civil war exists because the propertied classes resorted to force to stop the workers from proceeding with the work of socializing industry.

BOLSHEVISM—APPLIED MARXIAN SOCIALISM

Now we are ready to answer the question whether Bolsehvism is something new.

If we place in pararell columns the principles of Marxian Socialism and the acts of the Bolshevists we will find that the Bolshevists are acting upon the principles that Marx and Engels laid down more than a half century ago.

They organized the workers for a class conflict.

They seized control of the power of the state and established a dictatorship of the proletariat.

They are using the power of the state to wrest control of industry from the hands of the capitalists and to build up a democratic administration of industry by the workers.

In the period of transition the power of the state is being used to establish collectivism and democratic management. This process wipes out of existence the capitalist class, and as this class disappears, being absorbed in the ranks of the workers, and its power of resistance ends, there disappears with it the coercive power of the state and industrial democracy takes its place.

Bolshevism is not something strange and new. It is not a blind, raging force of destruction. If at present its triumph is accompanied by bloodshed and destruction it is because the bankruptcy of capitalism precipitated a cataclysm and the workers are obliged to build the new order amidst the wreckage of the old and with those who profited from their former oppression and exploitation placing every obstacle possible in their path.

Bolshevism is Marxian Socialism in action. It is the social revolution underway. It is the workers on the road to victory and a better world.

WE ARE NOT IMMUNE

The capitalist owned newspapers are shrieking loudly against Bolshevism. They are lying about it. They are resorting to the most desperate measure to poison the minds of the workers against it.

The reason why they do this is clear.

They know that the exploitation and oppression of the workers in industry exists in this country as it exists in Europe. They know that the Socialist Movement in this country has and is carrying on the same kind of campaign of education and organization among the workers that was carried on in Russia and in Germany, and that the time is coming when the workers here will engage in the same struggle for their emancipation that is now going on in Europe.

They know that this struggle will not be precipitated by the schemes of a few individuals, but that it will be the logical result of the historical development in industry.

The Bolshevists are the grave-diggers of capitalism and the builder of the new world. They are removing the wreckage and debris of a bankrupt system of production and putting in place the foundation on which will be erected the structure of the new society,—the better and more beautiful world of the future.

It is because the grave-diggers of the system that gives them great wealth and luxury are at work that the capitalists rave and are filled with fear and dread.

For the workers the present is the period of hope and joy in anticipation of coming happiness.

JUSTICE TO RUSSIA

(From The Nation)

From the start the unfriendly intent behind Allied intervention in Russia was revealed by the frank though futile opposition of President Wilson. His objections gave the situation away; he admitted it to be a bad business before he became a partner in it, and his final surrender served only to emphasize the helplessness of benevolent intentions before the cynical determination of the controlling forces among the Allies. The excuses offered from time to time by the governments engaged in crushing what the Germans had left of the Russian revolution were dishonest and hypocritical, but they served their purpose for the time being. They quieted the protests of timid liberals. They stilled the natural objections of those who pointed out that our armies had been enlisted to fight Germany, not to carry on military operations against Russian working men. But the propaganda of lies and suppression of facts was indeed a house built upon the sands.

Even to persons who had no way of knowing the flimsy stuff of which the building was made, the course of the Allies in Russia must sometimes have seemed perplexing. The newspapers talked of German arms and German gold, and autocratic rule in Russia, and disorder and terror, and the Czecho-Slovaks, but every man with sympathy and imagination must have seen something more. He must have seen a great people struggling with the hardest problems a nation has ever faced; struggling to build out of disorder and corruption a new untried society, struggling to demobilize without suffering and upheaval fourteen million war-sick men and to create fresh forces to defend the new-born revolution, struggling against German domination and intrigue and Czarist plots, struggling most fiercely of all against the horror of starvation—struggling, yet holding its head high and shouting its faith to an indifferent world. He must have [illegible] with wonder the spectacle of "the great democracies of [illegible]" picking up their weapons and trying to destroy [illegible] to see before, surely he must see now; for the whole structure of falsehoods and excuses has collapsed. The "unstable" Soviet government has lasted a year and a month in the face of all its trials and its enemies. The need of an Eastern front against Germany disappeared with the signing of the armistice. The duty of chasing the Germans out of Russia disappeared at the same time, and German troops were actually invited to stay in the invaded parts of Russia to help the Allies in "preserving order." The Czecho-Slovaks are discovered to have been offered by the Bolshevist government free passage through Russia if they would return home in peace. Arms and materials of war are no longer in danger of falling into the hands of an Imperial Germany. The most hostile critics of Bolshevism are now loudest in their assertions of its complete hold upon the people of Russia. And as for the disorder and chaos and terror which have formed the most recent and widely-advertised Allied excuse, the New Statesman, always bitter in its opposition to the Bolshevist government, is reported as saying in its latest issue: "Order is more thoroughly established in Russia now than at any time since the fall of Czardom. Food distribution is better organized than at any time during the whole war. Factories are rapidly starting up again as fast as raw material can be obtained.* * * Terror has ceased. It has been greatly exaggerated."

New voices are being raised in every country demanding the facts about Russia, demanding the reasons for intervention, demanding action by the peace conference. It looks as though Allied statesmen would be forced to listen, at least, and to answer. The latest reports from Paris indicate that the Allies do not intend for the present to undertake intervention on a large scale, but are to keep their troops in Russia to gove "moral support" to those "orderly" governments that are or may be in existence, and send forces into the Ukraine to relieve the departing Germans. This is the moment when the question is up for decision, when every [illegible] Will the cry of [illegible]

The men who will gather there are commonly called statesmen; but they are also politicians, and politicians will always listen to the voice of the people if it 's loud enough and speaks in no uncertain terms. Not as political partisans or "intellectuals" or "liberals," but as honest men of decent impulses, we Americans must tell the government that represents us the only course that seems to us to accord with the principles of self-determination which it has proclaimed.

We ask the withdrawal, as rapidly as physical conditions permit, of all American troops from Vladivostok and northern and southern Russia, and meanwhile the complete cessation of hostilities. We ask that the plans announced for a military expedition into the Ukraine be abandoned. We ask the recognition of the Soviet government and, as the immediate consequence of such action, negotiations leading to the establishment of commercial relations with Russia. We ask the diplomatic and other accredited agents of the Soviet government be received and that Boris Bakhmeteff, the so-called Russian ambassador, be deprived of the diplomatic and financial privileges now accorded him. We ask that all unfriendly propaganda carried on, by the government of the United States or any of its branches immediately cease. We ask that the government of the United States bring pressure upon the Allies to abandon their present policy in Russia and secure, under threat, if need be, of complete dissociation from their plans, the withdrawal of all Allied troops. We ask that representatives of the Soviet government be admitted to the peace conference. We ask the prompt dispatch in co-operation with the Soviet government, of food and clothing and necessary industrial and agricultural machinery for sale or free distribution. We ask these things for the Russian revolution and the starving people of Russia; but even more we ask these things in order that the United States may for its own sake share in righting an intolerable wrong, that no man in this war shall have died for empty words and worthless phrases, and that from this time forth the world [illegible]

LETTERS

From the Land of Devil-May-Care

Written for the Ohio Socialist by W. E. Reynolds.

Aislesay, Awgwan,
Devil-May-Care-Land, Jan. 22, 1919.
Mr. Henry B. Dubb and Family,
Care of O.S.
Dear Folks:

I wish you were with me in this wonderful country and could see what I see.

This Devil-May-Care-Land is a land of illusions. An illusion, Henry, as you well know, is something you see that "ain't there." Everything here is something different from what it seems to be, but the Gogs who live here think it is what it seems to be.

The Gogs, which are working class folks, and the Magogs, which are idlers and blue blooded aristocrats, both have a great deal of faith in the permanency of their illusions. These illusions, like everything else in Devil-May-Care-Land are for the benefit of the Magogs.

One illusion here is the equality illusion. The class lines are so distinct that they can be felt as well as seen, yet the illusion that there are no classes in Gogdom is almost universal. The Magogs won't see them and the Gogs have too much faith in their pifflefalkers and dope sheets to question them. While no Gog ever gets to be a high mucky Magog, all Gogs think they could be if only they had had any luck!

The illusion of luck! Even the wisest of the Allfools are deluded by it. We know of course that this is a universe of causes and effect, but the Gogs, not knowing this great truth, ascribe their miseries to hard luck. This fatalistic reliance on luck and the general denial of the existence of classes makes it easy for the Magogs to work the life out of the Gogs without a murmur of protest.

Another illusion here is the illusion of ownership. The Magogs claim ownership to all mills, mines, factories and means of travel and transportation and also all the means of communication. The Gogs own nothing, not even their jobs or their bodies. The jobs belong to the Magogs and their bodies belong to the Magog's state. The Gogs pay rent all their lives to the Magogs for the poor privilege to being allowed to remain on the Magog's earth in order to work for the Magog to get dinero enough to pay the rent in order, etc., etc. Yet in spite of it all, each Gog firmly believes he has a country.

One day I told a Gog that instead of saying "my country" he should say "my master's country" but being a Gog he failed to see the point. He only flew into a rage and attempted to beat me with his fists. The Gogs use their fists much more than they do their heads. The pollywags here take advantage of the Gogs' love of his master's country in many ways. It is quite amusing to hear a pollywag pifflefalking to a bunch of ragged, hungry, homeless Gogs about "our" wonderful country and "our" marvelous resources.

The illusion of freedom is another great illusion here. All these Gogs think they are free persons and "their" country a country of freedom for all. Talking about freedom and having freedom are two different matters and these Gogs, instead of being free, haven't even the freedom to talk about freedom. Devil-May-Care-Land is ruled by the Mucky Magogs with a great Chief as their leader. They do not have a constitution which guarantees free speech, press and assemblage, like your glorious country.

The Magogs here have the freedom to speak or write or gather into what is called libertymobs, but the Gogs have only the freedom to do what the Magogs will allow. A Gog doesn't even dare commit suicide—it is against the law!

The Gogs have the so-called freedom to work and breed and keep their mouth shut. The work is done under the supervision of a Magogboss. The breeding is done under the careful supervision of the Magog's church and state and the purrient notion that ignorance is innocence. The mouths are kept shut under the careful supervision of their courts of justice, Libertymobs and Penogs.

You will probably remember reading while you were attending Harvard college (or was it Yale?) of a distinguished foreigner, Mr. Aristotle, who believed all well regulated societies had to have two sets or classes of people. One class to do all the work and another set to do all the thinking, and that form of society was known as an aristocracy. Another Hunkie, named Socrates, contended for a state wherein all the people worked and each did his own thinking. This was called a democracy. History records that the aristocrats made Mr. Socrates drink some poison hemlock and so set a world example of what may be expected from aristocracy in their treatment of Democrats.

Aristocracy is rampant here in the Land-of-Devil-May-Care. The Gogs, however, all believe it is a democracy because they have been taught it was. The illusion of democracy! Countless millions have lived a life that was in reality one long endurance test. Had they ever once realized they were but the slaves of autocracy they would have rebelled, but they only saw the illusion and were contented and faithful.

In your country, thanks to the discoveries of modern science, your people have grown too wise to be deluded by the illusions of supernaturalism, but here great joss houses are builded and the minds and will of the populace are systematically stunted. Where you, in your wisdom, build school houses and college, these fool Gogs build massive temples of brick and stone for creedal worship of unreality. All over this land you find shacks for the Gogs to dwell within and massive temples for the dwelling places of the Gog's imaginary Gods.

The Gogs here have the illusion that they labor in order to live. The truth is that they live in order to labor. You in your glorious country of freedom and equality and democracy, labor as a means to an end. You seek to widen, enrich and promote a better state of well being for your people. Here the Gogs labor only to accumulate capital for their employers, the Magogs. Your laborers have reached a position where they can command the respect and attention of kings. No Gog is of any consequence except as a working unit to create wealth for others to enjoy. No Gog would ever think of holding up his head in self-respect in the presence of a king.

In your country, Henry, you know all the people benefit by new inventions and discoveries. Here no Gog ever benefits from any new invention. If you were working at digging a ditch and should invent a trench digger you would probably light up your pipe, sit down and enjoy seeing a machine do your work. The Gogs under the same circumstances would turn the new machine over to some company of Magogs and hasten away to find a new job. In your country the present dominates the past. In Gogdom the past dominates the present. Your children are taught twentieth century truths, the children of the Gogs are taught first century falsehoods. The Gogs are not thinkers, but doers, yet they have the illusion that they are quite a bit the best aggregation of thinkers on earth.

The Magogs stole the Land-of-Devil-May-Care. They are a piratical band of liars, thieves and hypocrites, yet they masquerade as "best citizens" and the Gogs do not see through the illusion.

The greatest illusion of all here is the illusion of "Full Reward for Service Rendered." You know in your country if you create ten dollars' worth of value you receive the full ten dollars less, of course, the capitalist's small profit, which he gets as a reward of abstainence, (from work) but here when a Gog creates ten dineros in value he only gets two and yet thinks he is pail in full.

Yes, Devil-May-Care-Land is Illusion Land.

The Gogs think they think and they do not think. They think they are free while they are slaves. They think there are no classes, yet two classes exist. They think they are wise and are easily fooled. They think they make laws whereas they only obey them. They think they own a country, yet they pay rent. They think they have a government. The government has them. They think they have a democratic administration; they obey the autocrats. They think they are prosperous, they are paupers. They think their great men will do for them; they "do" them. They think they are Christians; they are pagans. They think somebody will "save" them; I think they'll have to save themselves.

Hoping you are the same, I am.
I. SKYGAC JONES.

Great Card Sale

A sale of Ohio Socialist subscription cards is what we refer to. We tell of this sale in order to encourage more comrades to invest a few dollars in subscription cards. After all, there is one excellent way to secure subscribers to YOUR paper, and that way is to have a subscription card always handy and ready to sell.

Did you notice the emphasis we placed upon "YOUR". We would like you to understand that the Ohio Socialist is YOUR PAPER. It belongs equally to every member in the state. And as every member has equal ownership in the paper, it becomes the duty of every member to SUPPORT IT IN EVERY WAY POSSIBLE.

One way possible is to invest some money in subscription cards. Many comrades are already giving their support by so doing. Some are buying a dollar's worth at a time and others are buying ten dollar's worth at a time. But no matter how few or how many you buy, please BUY.

And so we announce this sale. Is it a less price sale you ask? Quickly we answer—NOT. Fact is, we ought to sell Ohio Socialist subscription cards for more than they are priced, because the Ohio Socialist is worth it.

Yearly cards—$1.00. Half yearly cards—50c. How many shall we send you? Remember, we sell for cash only. Remit in advance.

Charge U. S. 'Framed' Rebellion In Russia

Naval Commander Says That Archangel Government Was Set Up By U. S. And Great Britain To Give Excuse For Intervention.—Senator Johnson Again Demands Withdrawal of American Troops

Washington.—The black cloud of untruth and misrepresentation which has hidden from the American people the truth about the attack upon the Soviet government of Russia is slowly lifting.

The latest development is a statement by Commander G. C. Sweeney, of the United States navy, which puts the Wilson administration in a very discreditable position when considered in the light of President Wilson's many fine sounding protestations of friendship toward Russia.

The statement by Commander Sweeney, which was printed on the editorial page of the Philadelphia North American, indicates a conspiracy between the British and American powers to overthrow the Soviet government by secret plots. Commander Sweeney, who indiscretely told the facts about the matter was evidently in a boastful mood over his achievement, for the interview with him appears under the caption "Two Men Overthrow North Russia Reds."

The story seems to indicate that in order to provide an excuse for armed intervention, the British and American governments staged a counter-revolution through agents who mapped out their plans in England.

To make it appear that the Russians themselves desired intervention, a Russian of prominence under the old regime was made the head of the new government, while the American and British officers who managed the affair remained in the background.

Commander Sweeney's Story.

The story, as printed in the Philadelphia North American, reads as follows:

"How two men, a British government agent and an American commander, overthrew the Bolshevik government in norther Russia by means of a printing press is told by Commander G. S. Sweeney, formerly of the Olympic, who was at the Bellevue-Stratford yesterday. Commander Sweeney was the American in the counter-revolution, and his success in the overthrow is evidenced by the fact that the regime set up by him and the Englishman is still in power after nine months.

"'We staged the revolution in England,' Commander Sweeney said last night. 'We knew a month before it happened exactly what we intended to do, and when we arrived in Russia there was nothing left but to put the plans into execution.

"'Commander McGrath of the British navy was picked out by the Admiralty to go to Russia to bring the revolution off and to reopen Archangel to Allied commerce.

"'When the Olympic arrived at Archangel there was chaos in the town. There was no money at all, and all trade was by barter. In addition, there was the practice by local Bolshevists of forcing a man to give over all that he held into a common fund. If a fisherman went out for a trip, he was made to give up all his catch to the Soviet authorities, and then a distribution was made among all the needy. The same condition applied to a farmer and his crops. As a result, the state of affairs was approaching where all the wise Russians were refusing to work at all, but were supported by others.

"'McGrath had a printing press and manufactured scores of bundles of paper rubles. Each note bore a secret British mark, so that in case of need we could identify the notes that we had engraved. But there proved to be no need of the identification mark.

"'Men in Archangel took the notes greedily and were easily won over to the Allied cause. We found a man who had been of some prominence under the older regime, and we made him head of the government, while McGrath and I stayed in the background.

"'Ambassador Francis helped us out wonderfully. Francis was the only man in whom Russians had any confidence, and he was enabled to present the American point of view in the most convincing manner to the people of what later became the government of north Russia. Up until the time he was taken ill and was obliged to leave the country, Francis was of inestimable help to McGrath and myself in the operation.'

"Bolshevism never can win in Russia. Commander Sweeney declares from his observation, because it is upheld only by force."

Senator Johnson Speaks Out Again

Washington.—Senator Hiram Johnson, of California, last week again demanded the withdrawal of American troops from Russia in a speech in the senate. Disclaiming any sympathy with the ideas of Lenine and Trotzky, Johnson read into the records of the senate the questions addressed to the Allied governments and the United States by the Soviet government, when it was endeavoring to secure support for the continuance of the struggle against German Imperialism just before the ratification of the Brest Litovsk treaty.

"I will not be put in the attitude of defending in any degree the Soviet power of Lenine and Trotzky," said Senator Johnson. "Their fantastic theories no sane man, in my opinion, can indorse. But our dealing with Russia and the dealings of the Allies with Russia have been not only an exhibition of the crassest stupidity, but have contributed to the awful tragedy there. Early in March the Soviet government officially presented to the Allies certain questions, favorable answers to which every man then in Russia agreed would prevent a ratification of the Brest-Litovsk treaty by the All-Russian Soviet congress. A translation of the official document thus transmitted to the Allies from the Soviet government is as follows:

The Inquiry of the Soviet Government.

"'In case (a) the All-Russian congress of the soviets will refuse to ratify the peace treaty with Germany, or (b) if the German government, breaking the peace treaty, will renew the offensive in order to continue its robbers' raid, or (c) if the Soviet government will be forced by the actions of Germany to renounce the peace treaty—before or after its ratification—and to renew hostilities.

"'In all those cases it is very important for the military and political plans of the Soviet power for replies to be given to the following questions:

"'1. Can the Soviet government rely on the support of the United States of North America, Great Britain and France in its struggle against Germany?

"'2. What kind of support could be furnished in the nearest future, and on what conditions—military equipment, transportation, supplies, living necessities?

"'3. What kind of support would be furnished particularly and especially by the United States?

"'4. Should Japan, in consequence of an open or tacit understanding with Germany or without such an understanding, attempt to seize Vladivostok and the Eastern Siberian railroad, which would threaten to cut off Russia from the Pacific ocean and would greatly impede the concentration of Soviet troops toward the east about the Urals—in such case what steps would be taken by the other Allies, particularly and especially by the United States, to prevent a Japanese landing on our Far East, and to insure uninterrupted communications with Russia through the Siberian route?

"'In the opinion of the government of the United States and to what extent—under the above mentioned circumstances—would aid be assured from Great Britain through Murmansk and Archangel? What steps could the government of Great Britain undertake in order to assure this aid and thereby to undermine the foundation of the rumors of the hostile plans against Russia on the part of Great Britain in the nearest future?

"'All these questions are conditioned with the self-understood assumption that the internal and foreign policies, of the Soviet government will continue to be directed in accord with the principles of international Socialism and that the Soviet government retains its complete independence of all non-Socialist governments.

"Why did we enter Russia?" Johnson asked. "I answer for no vary good reason; and we have remained for no reason at all.

A Miserable Misadventure.

"What is our policy toward Russia? I answer we have no policy. We have engaged in a miserable misadventure, stultifying our professions and setting at naught our promises. We have punished no guilty; we have but brought misery and starvation and death to the innocent. We have garnered none of the fruits of the victory of war, but suffer the odium and infamy of undeclared warfare. We have sacrificed our own blood to no purpose, and into American homes have brought sorrow and anguish and suffering.

"Bring the American boys home from Russia."

Debs' Freedom in Hands of Supreme Court Judges

Verbal arguments in the appeal of the case of Eugene V. Debs, convicted of violating the Espionage Law in a speech at Canton and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment, were made before the Supreme Court last week.

The appeal hinges entirely on the question of the constitutionality of the Espionage Act.

Replying to contentions that the act interferes with the freedom of speech, the government brief said:

"No authority can be adduced for the defendant's contention that there is a constitutional right to obstruct by speech the exercise of the power to raise armies so long as the speaker does not urge a violation of the law. If, as has been held by this court, punishment may constitutionally be meted out for a wilful obstruction of the administration of justice, it is difficult to see why the administration of the war powers of congress is not entitled to the same protection. The events of 1917 showed that war may become as essential as justice to the preservation of our democratic form of government.

"This Espionage Act was obviously designed to protect the whole military program against all types of interference therewith, and it is a reasonable inference that in the phrase 'obstruct the recruiting and enlistment service' congress intended to cover all wilful interference with the process of raising of the army. But 'purposeful incitement to specific unlawfulness on the part of others' is just what the defendant was charged with in this case and the jury found him guilty."

Attorney Gilbert E. Roe filed a brief in the case contending that the Espionage Act interfered with freedom of speech and the press, and "that all hostile criticism of every measure even remotely connected with the war" had been suppressed through punishment of those attempting to indulge in such criticism.

In passing the Espionage Act and subsequently amending it, congress, the brief said, "clearly yielded to temptation under the exigencies of war to strike down and destroy the free speech and free press clause of the constitution, in order, as it was believed, that the war-making powers of the government might be more effectively carried into execution."

Government Confesses Error.

The government confessed error, which means that the defendants were illegally convicted in the first two appeals to the United States Supreme Court from convictions under the Espionage Act have been successful. Both cases arose in South Dakota. One was that of William J. Head, a Socialist organizer who, in the summer of 1917, circulated a petition for the repeal of the Conscription law, and expressed the opinion that the Conscription law was unconstitutional that the war was caused by the money interests in the east and that "we were all damned fools for supporting it."

The other case was that of Emanuel Baltzer and 26 other Socialist farmers of Russian and German extraction, who sent to the Governor of South Dakota and others a rather incoherent petition protesting against the allowance of credits for volunteers in determining draft quotas, demanding a referendum on the Draft law; urging the governor to advocate payment of war expenses by taxation instead of loans; and demanding "immediate action and answer, and, if we fail to get it, we demand your resignation and will spell sure defeat—you, your party, and your little nation, J. P. Morgan, as we have the people with us."

Decision in the case of Eugene V. Debs may not be rendered for a month or more, as the court has taken from four to six weeks after the hearing before handing down its verdict in similar cases in the past.

Marshal's Remarks Claimed to Have Prejudiced Jury

Chicago, Ill.—Are the five Socialists, Victor L. Berger, Adolph Germer, J. Louis Engdahl, Irwin St. John Tucker and William F. Kruse, entitled to a new trial?

This question was being argued beford Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis in the federal court last Monday.

The lawyers for the five Socialists, who were convicted Jan. 8, based most of their arguments on the revelations of Juror Thomas C. Nixon regarding irregularities in the handling of the jury by Bailiff W. H. Streeter. They voiced their belief in the truth of all that Nixon charges, and claim that the other jurors failed to corroborate Nixon's testimony through lack of courage.

The government prosecutors claimed that the testimony of the eleven jurors should be accepted as against that of Nixon. They also contended that even if all that Nixon charged were true, the verdict would not have been different.

After hearing the arguments on both sides, Judge Landis may take the matter under advisement, or he may give his decision immediately. If he overrules the motion for a new trial, he may sentence the five Socialists at once.

The jury scandal is the latest high light in the spectacular prosecution of the five Socialist officials began with the sensational raid on the National Socialist headquarters in this city, in September, 1917.

What Nixon Charges.

Here are the facts sworn to before Judge Landis by Juror Thomas C. Nixon, on which counsel for the five convicted Socialists in Chicago hope to win a new trial. All of the jurors agreed that United States Marshal W. H. Streeter was much given to the use of profane language. The unprintable portions of what he had to say about the Socialist defendants are left out of this production of Nixon's affidavit. Dashes appear instead. Here is what Nixon charges:

Many Organizations Unite to Secure Amnesty for War Prisoners

(Special Correspondence)

Chicago.—Seventeen organizations in addition to the Socialist Party, are being asked to co-operate in the call that will soon be sent out for the holding of a National Convention, May 1, in this city to deal with the question of amnesty for all persons prosecuted or convicted for political, economic or religious convictions.

The convention will also work for the rehabilitation of the first amendment of the constitution providing for the right of free speech, free press and free assemblage.

Among the organizations that will no doubt be represented at this conference are the People's Council, the National Non-Partisan League, the Chicago Labor Party, the American Federation of Labor, the American Union Against Militarism, the National Civil Liberties Bureau, the Workmens' Circle, the United Hebrew Trades of New York City, the United Hebrew Trades of Chicago, the International Ladies Garment Workers of America, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, the Forward Publishing Association, the Industrial Workers of the World, the National Workmen's Committee on Jewish Rights, New York City; the National Workmen's Committee on Jewish Rights, Chicago, Western Division; Socialist Labor Party and the New York Labor Party.

Numerous organizations are expected to be added to this list as the movement for amnesty for war prisoners grows in power. Those wishing information concerning this conference should communicate with Oliver C. Wilson, temporary secretary, Immediate Action Committee Amnesty and Free Speech Convention, Room 405, 803 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Socialists Show Why Labor Party Should not have Support of Workers

With very few dissenting votes the County Central Committee of the Socialist Party of Cleveland and Cuyahoga County went on record as opposing the new labor party and urging the National Executive Committee of the party to take a similar position. The meeting at which the declaration was adopted was one of the largest meetings of the County Committee held recently and the adoption of the resolution was preceded by a debate in which different views were aired.

The declaration was drafted by a committee of nine elected to study the matter at the previous meeting of the committee. It analyzes the forces that are behind the new labor party and shows by its program that it proposes nothing that will free the workers from oppresion and exploitstion under the capitalist system.

The declaration, which is in the form of a resolution, declaring opposition to the new party and urging and demanding that the National Executive Committee take similar action, reads as follows:

RESOLUTION ON THE PROPOSED LABOR PARTY.

The murderous war, the great mass slaughter and deprivation of the workers of the necessities of life has caused the workers to lose confidence in the former mighty rulers of the world. Like a great, powerful tide the revolutionary movement grows higher and broader in the old world and in sweeping the rubbish of the criminal capitalist system before it.

The exploiters of the world are trembling before their exploited victims. To avert the consequences of independent, revolutionary working class action the exploiters are making an effort to control the rebellious spirit of the workers through a new method.

In every country they are able to find individuals who are economically part of the working class, but who frequently ally themselves with the ruling capitalist class and become its ready tools. Their action before and during the war prove beyond doubt that these men are doing the work of the capitalist class. These mis-leaders of the workers notice that they are losing the confidence of the workers. They know that the workers are beginning to realize the necessity of independent working class political action and that sooner or later they will take such action independent of them.

If the workers resort to independent political action spontaneously, without the consent or even contrary to the wishes of their leaders, these leaders will be swept aside. And so they are taking preventative measures by organizing a labor party that will be safe and sane and under their control.

The workers must not again consent to be thus misled. They were urged time and time again to support the reactionary Republican and Democratic Party by these leaders, and they did so. They know they were deceived. Otherwise why should these leaders now propose that they throw these parties overboard and organize a new party?

The new question before the workers is whether those who have kept the workers in leading-strings for the capitalists have changed their character over night, or are their hearts just as black as before? The evidence in the case proves the latter.

The destiny of the modern capitalist nation is determined by its foreign relations. Trade and commerce are international. International competition creates friction and a conflict of interests and breeds wars, which at the present state of technical development are terribly destructive and bring unexpressable misery to the toiling masses.

Any political or industrial movement which does not aim to overrun the system of exploitation on which modern capitalism is founded and to secure control of the means of production and distribution for the workers, is hopeless as a medium through which to secure the freedom of the workers from the evils of the present capitalist system.

Reform measures are useless in dealing with modern capitalism; revolution—revolution in the sense of capture of the governmental power by the workers and the use of this power for the complete overthrow of the capitalist control of industry and the substitution of the workers control and industrial democracy—is the only effective weapon in the workers' struggle.

The platforms of the labor party of Chicago and New York fall far short of the needs of the hour. They propose reform measures only and even these do not go very far.

The paltering attitude of these organizations is indicated in their stand in regard to compulsory military training. They oppose compulsory military training in peace time but do not condemn compulsory military training in war time. That should be entirely agreeable to the capitalist class. It is in their interest. The capitalists are aware of the great cost of standing armies By organizing and maintaining training schools in which officers are drilled the means can be provided, with compulsory military training established in war time, to quickly raise great armies.

To this policy the labor party consents and by consenting commit themselves to the program of capitalist imperialism.

The workers must take a definite stand. They must declare war against the capitalist system. There is no middle ground.

To this policy of uncompromising opposition to the capitalist system and class action against it until it is overthrown, the Socialist Party is committed.

The Socialist Party has stood the test of war.. It is growing in strength and power and will be a more formidable opponent to capitalism in the future. It is to the interest of the workers of this

DECEASED

On Feb. 1, last, unwept and unmourned, an organization that violated every principle of Americanism, if Americanism is expressed in the Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States.

It railroaded innocent men and women to filthy holes called prisons and held them there until compelled to release them because it could bring not charges against them. It abridged the right of public assemblage by hustling men it didn't like, found at certain meetings, to jail until the meetings were over.

It was autocratic because it overrode the law. It was anarchistic because it refused to recognize any law.

The American Protective League is dead. May the memories of its founders and members be forever haunted by the acts of violence they committed in the name of law and order.

A Welcome and a Welcome

The members of the 331st regiment were welcomed back to Cleveland last week Friday. The soldiers returned from France, marched through streets black with people. Bands played, the line of march was strewn with flowers and cheers greeted them everywhere.

Mayor Davis marched at the head of the procession on the way from the depot to the armory. Other public officials and merchants and manufacturers participated in the cheering and speeches of greeting.

It was a royal welcome that these returned soldiers received.

In a few days they will be discharged from Camp Sherman. They will return to their homes. A few days more and they will return to the stern business of every day life. They will turn to the work of earning a living.

The welcome they will receive in the industrial life of the city is indicated in the following news item, which we quote from the Cleveland News:

TELL SOLDIERS FEW JOBS HERE

Hhe mayor's war board Saturday sent a letter to Gen. Matthew Smith, commandant at Camp Sherman, in an attempt to offset rumors at the camp that there is plenty of work for discharged soldiers in Cleveland. Reports have been received by the board that men from other Ohio cities have been told to come to Cleveland when discharged, and they would be sure of getting work.

The letter, signed by Harry L. Vail, executive secretary of the board, says that 70,000 already are out of work in Cleveland and that the board thinks every community should take care of its own men.

Need we add any comment?

Debs Given Ovation at Youngstown

Three thousand Socialists of Youngstown cried at the top of their voices: "If they put you in jail we'll go with you!" as Eugene V. Debs stepped before them at Diamond and Bushnell hall last night, his face wreathed in a kindly smile. Women and children crowded about their leader hugging and kissing and crying over him; men wrung his hands and patted him on the back. Such affection has rarely been shown at a public meeting here.

That thousands idolize him, no student of human nature there could deny. The cheering was wild and prolonged. He accepted it in his modest and appreciative way. Although recovering from a serious illness he made three talks Sunday that stirred enthusiasm to the highest pitch. He poured out his soul to his hearers and they drank it like nectar. Scheduled for Diamond hall, the overflow jammed the immense crowd into the Public Square two hours before Debs appeared, and the announcement an overflow meeting would be held later, filled Bushnell hall until it fairly bulged. His admirers waited several hours in the second hall to hear him.

Predicts Labor Revolution.

Margaret Prevey of Akron preceded Debs and defined Bolsheviki as Socialists, and said the capitalists didn't like it under a new name any better than under the old name. Enthusiasm all but turned into a stampede when she said, "You are going to solve your future, your destiny in this country either peacefully or by a great revolution." She said suppressing the red flag and free speech will not solve the problem.

Heroes Now Hoboes.

Debs declared hundreds of thousadns of men are out of work in America today and referring to the khaki-clads he said: Our heroes of last week will be hoboes next week—there are no jobs and they are here and conditions will be worse."

He told of Ransome, correspondent of the London Daily News, sent to Russia to "Write down the Bolsheviki movement. Ransome, seeing the light, quit his job, knowing that the News would not print the truth. He issued a booklet praising and lauding the Bolsheviki."

The Russian Idea.

Ransome says the Russian people are on their way to establishing the greatest democracy that the world has ever seen—that the land is to belong to those who till it, the industries to the people who work in them. The tales of starvation do not apply to the workers but the parasites—the rich who try to barter gold for food and necessities. They're not wanted unless they go to work and the propaganda the world has of the Bolshe-

Finnish Elections Bring Socialist Victories

Stockholm, Sweden.—Reports just received in Sweden indicate that the Socialists have won a considerable success in municipal elections in Finland. L'Humanite in commenting on the report, notes that the bourgeois government of Finland, which was placed in power with the aid of German troops and the Finnish White Guard, after having massacred the Red Guards, composed of Socialist workers, has lost heavily at the polls. The government, which suppressed Socialist newspapers, prohibited Socialist meetings, destroyed millions of dollars worth of property of the Socialist co-operatives and shot many thousands to death and imprisoned a large number, has been unable to maintain its position in the elections, apparently. The result is indicative of the sentiment of the majority of the Finnish people. The Social Demokraten, of Stockholm remarks in speaking of these elections, that the bourgeois government in Finland can hardly hope to continue in authority if in spite of all its energetic efforts at suppression, the Socialists, without a campaign, are able to win such notable successes as those attained in the municipal elections.

That order of "Work or Fight" has been changed to "Fight for Work"

A VOICE OUT OF RUSSIA

By GEO. V. LOMONOSSOFF

(From The Dial)

Americans have always pictured Russia as some fairyland such as India or Tibet. Formerly it was the land of the czars, the whip, and the Cossack, and now it is the land of the still less comprehensible Bolsheviki. Yet there is a great likeness in character between Americans and Russians; for instance, devotion to land, love of liberty, natural humor, and a carefree attitude. But there is a great difference, owing to historic reasons, between the mode of life of the United States and that of Russia. First of all, the white pioneers went into the forests and prairies of this country one by one or in small groups and settled immediately as individual farmers. The Russian people migrated a thousand years ago from the Carpathians to the east en masse. They occupied lands for "artels" (groups). During that thousand years they grew accustomed to cultivating the land by communistic methods. But the American farmer is first of all an owner, whereas the Russian peasant is a communist—and here lies the reason of the success of Socialist teaching in Russia. Second, in America material and spiritual advantages are distributed among the population more evenly than in Russia. Until the very outbreak of the Revolution the law distinctly divided the Russian "subjects" into two uneven parts; 3 per cent. of the population were the so-called "privileged" classes and 97 per cent. the so-called "tax paying" people. All comforts and necessities of life, including education, were the privilege of the 3 per cent.; admittance to high schools and universities, to state service and officers' rank was totally closed to the 97 per cent. It should not be forgotten that 85 per cent. of the population were freed from the state of slavery only fifty-eight years ago, and naturally they still bear much malice to their former masters. But even among the 3 per cent. of the privileved there was not full content; the capitalistic class and the Intelligentsia were deprived of political power, which was monopolized by court adventurers. Discontent was universal. It was already evident in 1905, but not being sufficiently organized, it was crushed.

The war precipitated the climax. It is well known that the war found Russia inadequately prepared. Nevertheless we performed the self-imposed duties more than honestly; we performed them with self-sacrifice. And this did not fail to react; owing to the undeveloped state of our economic life we were ruined by hunger and poverty by the third year of the war.

This did not happen at once. We passed three stages in falling down the slope. The first stage passed with the cry: "The war will end soon!" Owing to this belief the factories and shops continued to work according to the usual peace program and met the demands of the consumers at the expense of the army's needs. Russia had everything in abundance; moreover the cessation of exports created a surplus of goods. The heart of the country did not feel the hardships of the war. It is true that 12,000,000 youths and men were torn away from their families, but the tears for them dissolved in the ocean of apathy and plenty brought about by the flow of money into the villages. The last is of such great importance that we must go into details of it. We know what enormous expenditures a modern war requires. Russia did not have enough gold, and attempts to raise internal loans were unsuccessful, owing to the ignorance of the masses. Therefore only one way was open to us, to print paper money. The sudden increase of its amount in circulation did not fail to show results; the ruble began to fall in value and prices of commodities began to increase accordingly. Inasmuch as the peasant was getting double prices, the peasant sold everything, grain, cattle, linen, grandmother's dresses. "The village is growing rich," shouted the newspapers.

But soon, very soon, the Russian peasant learned a bitter lesson as to the value of money. As thunder from a clear sky came the news of our retreat from the Carpathians in the spring of 1915. It was found that in order to proceed with the war we lacked the most necessary commodities; it was found that our children and fathers were facing the most cruel and powerful enemy totally unarmed. This brought about a feverish mobilization of our industry.

The second stage ensued and ran under the motto: "Everything for the war." We sacrificed our entire industry to the prosecution of the war. We did not merely cease to manufacture nails, candles, and agricultural machinery, but we even gave up 75 per cent. of our textile industry for war needs. And thus the so-called goods famine ensued. But the country did not have articles of necessity, and although goods were yet to be obtained in the cities nothing reached the village. Having money on hand, the peasant found that he could not purchase anything with it. He could not understand it at first, but when he realized it, he became very angry and refused to sell grain for the army and cities. "I don't want your money," he said to the agents of the government and to merchants who would come for the grain. "Give me gingham, nails, scythes, boots—and unless you give me these, you will not get my grain." During the czar's regime even flogging was resorted to, but the peasant was quite determined in his refusal to sell grain.

As a result of this the army and the cities remained without bread, and the cattle were partly consumed and partly starved by lack of hay. A shortage of foodstuffs began, and in addition to this many refugees from Poland and Lithuania fled in the fall of 1915 to the interior cities. Nevertheless we managed to push through the trying winter of 1915-16. And in the fall of 1916 the situation became still worse. Due to additional recruiting of soldiers a shortage of labor occurred. The cultivated area suffered a decrease of 30 per cent. And then in November there was an acute shortage of locomotives on the railroads. We never had had many of them. And during the war, owing to the intensive usage, they were worn out and there was no means of repairing them. As a result of this, the railroads were totally disorganized. On the Don and in Siberia, for instance, grain and hay were rotting at the stations, while on the Roumanian front I personally witnessed how thousands of horses were falling of exhaustion and hunger. And the inhabitants had to sustain themselves upon the meat of these fallen horses. Conditions in the cities were not much better. Hunger and cold penetrated everywhere. The most timid citizens began to complain and protest. And what meanwhile was going on within the government? Dissipation with Rasputin and the placing of favorites in ministerial posts. All slightly capable ministers, in spite of public opinion, were driven out and in their places were put known thieves, cretins and traitors. A sort of madness, hopeless madness, enveloped Tsarskoye Selo and in the name of the weak-willed, drunken Nicholas, the Russian people were governed by his German wife and a clique of scoundrels. Loyal hands, desiring to uphold the prestige of the throne, assassinated Rasputin; but in answer to this followed orgies over his corpse the "provocation" of street disturbances in Petrograd, and the dispersing of the Duma. Then the moment came when all of us—from Lenin to Purishkevitch (the leader of the famous "Black Hundred")—understood that this sort of thing could not continue any longer, that the czar's regime had outlived itself. And it fell—fell painlessly and with ease, as a decayed apple falls from a tree.

In place of Nicholas II came the government of Prince Lvoff, the government of cadets—a revolutionary government without revolutionists. I shall never forget the comment about this government by a former minister of the czar, Krivoshein. "This government," said Krivoshein after he was told of its composition, "has one great fault; it is too moderate. Two months ago it would have satisfied the country; now it is too late. It will not have power, and thus, sir, you will sacrifice your own newborn child—the revolution—and also our all-beloved fatherland, Russia." These words proved to be prophetic. The composition of the first provisional government was not in accordance with the sentiment of the country. And as a result, side by side with this government, sprang up the Soviets, backed by the confidence of the great masses of the people. Among the ministers of the first provisional government there were to be found no men with technical experience and state administration. Lvoff and Miliukoff gave ministerial places to their party friends. The director of the imperial ballet was given the portfolio of the minister of finance; a physician, the ministry of agriculture.

The organization of the second provisional government, which included representatives of the radical bourgeoisie and Moderate Socialists, slightly changed the picture. They could not very well agree. Creative energy was expendid in internal strife. The compromised decisions were not clear. The second provisional government also lacked state experience and will-power. Doubtless the burden placed upon these governments by events proved to be too heavy. The time demanded giants, but instead found midgets. But what was the problem of both provisional governments with which they could not cope? The provisional governments themselves were saying that their aim was to call a constituent assembly. They did not realize that the constituent assembly was not the final end, but only a means, a means of expressing the will of the people and of solving problems placed before them. The substantial mistake of both provisional governments was that they mistook the means for the end.

When the March revolution broke out three collossal questions confronted the Russian people:

1. What is to be done about the war?

2. How is the Russian state to be organized?

3. How are famine and economic disintegration to be stopped?

Now the constituent assembly was to be convoked in ten months. Even in normal peaceful times it is impossible to stop the current of life for ten months. And a revolution is a social condition in which the pulsation of events is increased ten to twenty-fold. It ought to have been self-evident that the wheel of national life could not be stopped for ten months either by Lvoff or Kerensky. No matter how they urged the convocation of the constituent assembly, they were themselves compelled by force of events to solve, little by little, the very questions which they desired to give over to the decision of the constituent assembly.

Consider the problem of the war. Was it possible to say to the Germans: "Wait, gentlemen. Do not shoot until the constituent assembly meets. When it meets, it will decide whether or not we shall go on killing you?" Even the Allies would not agree to such a decision. Yet in spite of the fact that we had sacrificed for the Allies seven millions of our sons, they demanded that revolutionary Russia should participate more actively in the war.

An answer to these demands should have been given immediately. To postpone the answer until the convocation of the constituent assembly was impossible. The provisional government realized perfectly well that a hungry, barefooted Russia, with its disorganized railroads, could not possibly wage war even as it had during the czar's regime. And the treaties signed by the czar and the Allies could have no moral significance for free Russia. Therefore the circumstances and the dignity of Russia required that the provisional government give to its Allies a friendly but firm repulse. It should have demanded immediate aid and should even have threatened separate peace. At that time we still had an army, and the Germans would have paid us highly for a separate peace. But our youthful ministers and ambassadors, instead of taking such a firm course, bowed before the Allies and gave all sorts of assurances that Russia would never conclude a separate peace. Why then should the Allies have hastened with material aid to Russia? I do not blame them for it. "One's own interests are nearest." And meanwhile the army was diminishing and diminishing—hunger had driven the soldiers from the trenches.

State administration presented a similar picture. Its problems could not be postponed until the convocation of the constituent assembly. By force of events the provisional government was compelled to tolerate the self-appointed unlawful Soviets; more than that, they had to listen to their demands attentively and as a result to proclaim Russia a republic. This measure undoubtedly undermined the prestige of the constituent assembly and the belief in its indispensability. For this the provisional governments could scarcely be blamed. Their fault was that they had remained behind the current of life and the expectations of the people. And what were these expectations? The capitalists and the intelligentsia, approximately 1 1-2 per cent. of the population, were dreaming only of seizing political power. The peasants—75 per cent. of the population—were dreaming of the land. The soldiers—and these numbered about 10 per cent. of the population—dreamed of peace and of returning to their dear ones at home; and finally, the working men, who numbered about 10 per cent., dreamed of seizing control of industry.

The provisional governments promised everything, but asked for delay until the convocation of the constituent assembly. But the peasants and workers preferred to realize their desire to get the land and the means of production immediately by revolutionary means. "This is safer. At present the power is in our hands, and what will happen tomorrow, we do not know." This was well understood by the Bolsheviki and this is where the meaning of their doctrine, "the deepening of the revolution"—that is, the immediate realization of the people's desires through revolutionary means—lies. And here lies the cause of their success.

Much is being said at present that such a solution of social problems is not democratic, that violence from the left is just as hideous as violence from the right. In substance this is true, but the trouble is that the Kingdom of God on earth has not come as yet, and force can be crushed only by force. Every revelation provokes violence; why, asked the Russians, is it justifiable to overthrow the czar by force, and not the bankers?

The Socialist Party of the United States

(From the Butte Daily Bulletin)

Socialism is the most powerful movement in society. It is the all absorbing question of the hour. The capitalists of the world are trembling as they see it sweeping onward, growing more powerful with each victory. The philosophy of Socialism explains the historical developments of society; the Socialist Party is the active expression of those who are conscious of this development. The Socialist Commonwealth is the goal. Therefore, we have the theory, the action, the desire. The first international of the govement had theory, and enthusiasm, the second theory, the third theory, enthusiasm and action. There was, perhaps, room for discussion on the soundness of the theory of Socialism in the past, but now there is none. History has given its verdict and it says that Socialism is correct. There may have been room for discussion on the methods of tactics, but now there is none. The revolutionary left, those who claimed that revolution was a necessary part of evolution, those who claimed that nothing but uncompromising action on the part of the proletariat would bring freedom, who said you can not reform slavery, those who said expropriate the expropriators by revolution have been vindicated by the greatest of all judges, namely, history. The schools or groups that have stood uncompromised are now leading the world's revolution. The sections of the movement that have catered and compromised with the capitalist now stand and defend capitalism against Socialism. What is the Socialist Party of America to be in the future? This question seems to be worrying the Spargo-Benson-Russell-Simons fraternity. Already they cry out to stay the party from what they call the extravagances of Bolshevism. Already they are preparing to follow to the last the footsteps of Scheidemann, Hyndman and company, and fight the social revolution. Will they succeed? It depends on the members. They must fight and struggle that the party may rid itself of the opportunistic poison that it has gathered. They must throw off the compromising and reforming element and come out clear and unhampered on a revolutionary base. Capitalism must die, and those who would patch it at this stage of the game but do so to carry its poisonous corpse farther into the new day.

The Socialist Party must be the active living daily expression of the proletariat. It must spread the knowledge of Marx and Engels, the real expounders of revolutionary Socialism; it must enthuse and arouse the workers; it must be active every day, every hour, every minute; it must not be a simple voting machine; it must be a vital fighting organization of the wage earners of the country.

The spirit, the courage, the consciousness of Debs has called for the Russian Soviets to speak of him in the kindliest and most respectful terms. Debs is an example of the spirit of the left. The cowardly, unprincipled meanness of Spargo has called for his condemnation, not only from Russia, but also Italy and France. Spargo is an example of the right. Benson, in his wish-i-washy rubbish of democratizing capitalism, is the expression of the center. Which way shall the party swing? To the left. To the revolution.

Now is the time, now is our day, let every real Socialist strive with all his and her might that the Socialist Party of America arise to the occasion and become the vanguard of the proletarian revolution. Away with all palliating, away with all those who desire office more than the freedom of the working class, and on with the class struggle. Educate, enthuse, act.

A MILITARY PRISONER

By ANISE, Union Record.

"Your CLASS-WAR prisoners," Said Secretary Baker,
"Are suffering no more
Than many other men
As DECENT as they
In our MILITARY prisons.
Why, the last time
I was in Leavenworth
I saw a bright young fellow
And asked him: 'Why
Are you here?'
And he told me, 'ABSENCE
From camp without leave.'
And so
I INVESTIGATED
And it seems his WIFE
Was to be CONFINED
And it was the first child
And he was AFRAID
He would never see her alive.
And he asked
For LEAVE to go HOME
But his SUPERIOR OFFICER REFUSED.
He tried
For quite a while
And then he WENT.
And he was TRIED
By court-martial
And given TWENTY YEARS.
That is ONE KIND OF MAN
We have at Fort Leavenworth."
I started at those words
Of the Secretary of War.
I saw the sick, young wife,
The FIRST CHILD,
The worried FATHER,
And—TWENTY YEARS!
I wondered whether the wife
Had DIED
Or what she is doing now
To support that baby.
And I thought: "THIS Is more HIDEOUS
Than the fate
Of our class-war prisoners;
For THEY are sentenced
In the fever of war
When it is human nature
To be passionate and cruel:
But this is the COLD-BLOODED
UGLINESS Of MILITARISM.
This is the inner meaning
Of SOLDIERS And OFFICERS.
And I thought: If our army
And our nation
And our civilization
Must have for foundation
A discipline which so outrages
HUMANITY
Then better were it
That the "red terror"
Or the "yellow peril"
Or the great WINDS of GOD
Should sweepsus
Into the sea.
And I opened the paper
And read how Wilson says:
"FREE AMERICA
Will bring to ALL the WORLD
The blessing
Of HER FREEDOM."

Party Organization Notes

Locals Boston and Rochester have addressed communications to the National Office requesting withdrawal of international delegates and refusal to attend coming congress of Socialists to be held at Lauzerne, Switzerland. It is claimed that this conference was called and will be attended by "social patriots," of the Scheidemann variety.

Locals Cleveland, Boston, Portland and others have petitioned the National Executive Committee to hold a special national convention specifically for the discussion of the party's relation to the International Socialist situation.

The National Executive Committee is now voting upon a motion to purchase a national headquarters. The building is located at 220 South Ashland Blvd., Chicago.

Local Portland, Ore., has organized a Workers', Soldiers', and Sailors' Council. This local calls upon the National Office to send a Japanese organizer to the coast states to organize the natives of that country.

The property to be purchased by the party for national headquarters is said to have cost $75,000. The party will purchase it for less than half that price. It is a residence building, a typical rich man's residence and was formerly one of Chicago's palaces. The main building contains 18 rooms and a hall that will seat 150 people. The lot is 112 by 200 feet deep, and will lend itself later to the erection of an up-to-date building with printing plant without disturbing the original building.

The "Eye Opener," now a monthly, published by the National Office, will soon become a weekly. A new name is wanted for the paper and suggestions should be sent to the National Office of the party.

BAKER SAYS

"The meeting at Opperman, a little mining camp, was a regular revival. New members were admitted and the meeting paid for itself. Miners are only working one-third of the time and yet coal sells for seven dollars a ton. A few months ago we were told to "work or fight." Now it's fight in order to get work. The greatest soul in the rank of the proletariat is the miner. His heart is as big and warm as his bruised and toil worn hands.

"My meeting at Marietta was an inspiration. It was held in the assembly room of the Court House. The jail was just over the way. I felt right at home. "The Hamilton Journal and the Cincinnati Post gave me front page attention. The meeting in the headquarters of Local Cincinnati was very well attended. Their headquarters would be a credit to any local in the U. S. Took in some new members here.

"Held the first meeting in over a year and a half here at Norwood. Turned eight dollars into the local treasury, the meeting more than paying for itself. Comrades are determined to build a good, healthy local. New members admitted. Am taking many Ohio Socialist subscriptions at all my meetings."

All meetings are better attended than at any time before. Locals that attend to advertising the meeting in the right way, are sure to get repaid by large attendances.

GERMAN SOCIALISTS IN WAR-TIME

By ANISE, Union Record.

(Facts taken from Labor Year Book, issued by Rand School; and "German Social Democracy During the War," by Edwin Bevan, published by George Allen and Unwin Co., London).

V. A NEW PARTY FORMED

Several events led to the final forming of a new Socialist Party, the independent social democrats. Toward the end of 1916, Vorwaerts, the party central daily, which had hitherto been controlled by the "minority" or more radical Socialists, was suppressed by the government and started 10 days later as a majority organ. The military high command made it a condition of the paper's appearance that there should be some person in control of the paper who could give guarantee that the paper would no longer be used to prejudice the national cause.

This was regarded in Germany as a startling extension of the powers of the military; and matters were made more bitter by the accusation that the directorate of the party itself had intentionally made use of the government thus to gain control.

Industrial Conscription Starts.

In November of the same year a kind of industrial conscription began—a bill being introduced which required all males between 16 and 60, not engaged in military service, to do some kind of work required by the state. It is almost startling to note how the same kind of problems appear in all countries at war, and excite much the same division of opinion on the part of the workers.

The majority supported the bill; the minority denounced it bitterly. The officials of the German trade unions, led by Legien, brought up the argument we have often heard, that it was better to work directly for the government under the military, then to work for private profiteers. They gave warm support to the new war department.

Minority Thrown Out of Party.

In spite of bitterness and dissension, the minority never withdrew from the party; it was thrown out. It held, however, a conference of its own in January, 1917, to discuss ways and means for spreading their propaganda within the frame work of the party. Almost immediately the party committee met, declared that a split had [illegible] to start a new local.

The split was now complete. By April a complete now party was organized, the Independent Social Democratic Party of Germany.

The Russian Revolution.

Then came the event which put new heart into the Socialists the world over—the Russian revolution. Even the more conservative Socialists in Germany felt its impulse and grew bolder in their demands for internal reforms; and the government, sensing the threat, made many promises.

But the Spartacus section, which had consented to form part of the new Independent Social Democratic Party, but which was constantly tugging at the reins toward an even greater radicalism, urged the Socialists to use the occasion "to stir up the masses." Large strikes occurred in Berlin and Leipsig, in the munition factories. These were opposed by the trade unions and the majority Socialists.

During May the Independents gained steadily on the old Socialists. This was the more surprising because one after one, the old line party secured possession of the party press, expelling the more radical editors. And while the influence of the old party of the working class grew less, its connection with the government grew stronger. This also, is a phenomenon that has been observed in most of the warring countries. By July, Socialist representatives were being invited to semi-official conferences with the kaiser.

Wilson's Notes Begin To Take Effect.

Even as long ago as September, 1917, the note writing of Woodrow Wilson began to have its effect on the interior politics of Germany. It will be remembered that in 1916, before America entered the war, the president made an attempt to secure a discussion of peace terms between the warring nations, and was received with some cordiality by the Germans, but repulsed by the Allies. This repulse, as might have been expected, strengthened the militaristic [illegible] and the United States was brought into the struggle.

The earlier war utterances of President Wilson were very similar in tone to the usual war speeches of belligerents, and seem to have evoked little discussion in Germany; but in September, 1917, came the first of his remarkable series of speeches, designed to break down the German autocracy. In it he stated that we had no enmity toward the German people, but toward their form of government, which was a menace to the peace of the world. Throughout Germany this was interpreted as a willingness to have peace without annexations or indemnities, on the basis of the status quo, if only the Germans would establish a decent, trustworthy government.

Friendly Words for Wilson.

While the German press in general rose up at the idea of a foreign statesman interfering in German internal affairs, Vorwaerts, now an organ of the old-line Socialists, took a most friendly attitude. All other great governments around us, it insisted, are responsible to the people. Why should it be otherwise with us?

"It is obvious to social democracy that the governments which conclude peace must embody the will of the peoples and be upheld by their confidence."

In an interview given to the United Press of America at this time Scheidemann expressed the belief that the kind of peace desired by President Wilson and by the majority of the reichstag were one and the same; why then should America go on fighting? It was quite reasonable that Wilson should wish that peace terms be guaranteed by a German democracy, but further bloodshed was unnecessary for that. The reichstag had that work well in hand and would go forward faster with it under peace conditions.

Pan-Germans Still a Force.

Yet when it came to a showdown in the reichstag, the Pan-Germans still showed themselves a force. The reply of the German government to the Pope showed their influence, in that all mention of Belgium was kept out of this reply, at a time when Socialists in Germany were emphasizing the need of a clear declaration of the intention to restore that land.

The note to the pope was greeted by the old line Socialists with tempered approval; they considered it a step nearer the goal, and congratulated themselves for having pushed the government forward in the direction they wished to go.

But the Independent Socialists scoffed at the idea. Military pres- [illegible]

"The Trial of Eugene V. Debs"

WRITTEN BY MAX EASTMAN

Max Eastman was present at the Debs' trial and saw many things that even you and I would overlook had we been present. His is an interesting and lucid discription of both the prosecution, the defendants and the judge. You will feel yourself "right there" while reading this new pamphlet, just off the press. It also includes Debs' address to the court upon receiving sentence.

Carl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemberg

They are dead but the revolution lives. It stays not a moment through their untimely death. Even while the capitalist press openly rejoices at the murder of this noblest son and daughter of the revolution, the principles they ennnciated and the tactics they employed are spreading over continents. Revolutions are not made by individuals but by social forces.

They died as they lived, flinging in the teeth of conservatism and compromise the truth of revolutionary tactics. And in so dying they died gloriously for the revolution and the truth. No nobler deaths can close nobler lives than theirs.

Farewell, Comrades, your lives were not lived in vain, and your death shall be a living inspiration to the proletariat of the world to erect as your monument the pillars of the new society upon the solid foundations of proletarian rule.

AMERICA'S INDICTMENT

A tremendous exodus of America's foreign born population is certain the moment shipping facilities are available. Evidence of this is seen in accounts from the daily press. A recent census of the industries of Akron, O., showed that 80 per cent. of the foreign born workmen plan to return to their native lands at the first favorable opportunity.

And in Cleveland Postmaster Murphy, in a recent interview is credited with saying that there were two main reasons given by the increasing number of War Savings Stamp purchasers who are cashing their stamps. The first was that the holders intended to return to the home land and the second was the necessity for obtaining ready money to meet living expenses.

The employers of Akron have instituted a series of lectures whereby they seek to enlighten the workers upon the beauties and benefits of American citizenship and thus offset the yearnings for the home land.

The reasons for the tender solicitude of these employers for the workers is not given but we herewith venture a guess. They desire to see no decrease in the amount of labor power in the country. Much labor means cheap labor. No one knows this better than employers.

While it is true there can be many reasons why those of foreign birth should now desire to return to the home land—to find and meet the kith and kin whom the ravages of war have left them; to settle inheritances and in many instances TO AID THE PROLETARIAN REVOLUTION, still we believe there are other reasons which have a determining voice, especially with those who came from lands with which America has been at war; reasons which the smooth words of hired lecturers will not overcome.

To thousands of these residents the last few months have been months of terror. Suspicion has been heaped upon them. Anathemas have been hurled at them by the viper press. They have been hounded and bedeviled by voluntary would-be spy catchers and also by members of that now defunct semi-official and wholly officious organization known as the American Protective League.. Because of an accident of birth they have been insulted, and in many instances outraged both privately and publicly. They have seen American Democracy put to the test and they were its victims.

This contingent of our foreign born population will have formed very decided views of that democracy, freedom, liberalism, which they were taught existed here. The land of glittering promises has become for them a land of shattered dreams and grim disappointments.

America's promises are seen for what they are—platitudes.

OTHER EDITORS SAY—

Sometimes you year something about "the brains of the Socialist movement." We have never been able to locate any exact spot in which they are situated, but we believe that the heart of the Socialist movement of America still beats in the breast of Eugene V. Debs. And when Debs stood up in front of that jury of retired merchants and farmers in Cleveland, about to sentence him to live and die in a felon's cell, and declared his solidarity with the Russian Bolshevik government, his adherence to the class struggle, his sympathy and respect for the I. W. W., and when he turned to the judge with a magnificent gesture of superiority and said to him, "Your honor, it is true that I am opposed to our form of government"—the keynote of American Socialism for the coming year was sounded, and no manifestos of the National Security League, and no contrary testimony from our more prudent parliamentarians can change it.

Time for Referendum Extended

Chicago.—An extension of two weeks in the time for filing nominations in "Referendum A, 1919" has been given by the National Office of the Socialist Party to Socialist locals.

This means that Socialists will have until Feb. 23, instead of Feb. 9, to make their nominations for National Executive Committeemen, delegates to the International Socialist Congress and an International Socialist Secretary.

This is the start of the second referendum for the election if National Executive Committeemen under the plan of selecting three committeemen from each five districts, making 15 members in all.

At least some of the party members are mystified as to the duties of the International Secretary of the Socialist Party. He is chosen to sit as the American representative in the International Socialist Bureau, which attends to the affairs of the International Socialist movement between the meetings of the International Congresses.

Locals have already nominated for International Secretary, both Arthur Henderson, Secretary of the British Labor Party, and Hjalmar Branting, spokesman of the Majority Socialists of Sweden, in the Swedish riksdag. Henderson and Branting can represent the Socialists of Great Britain and Sweden in the International Bureau, [illegible]

Local E. Liverpool News Letter

By D. J. MORGAN.

Party activity in this locality is going "over the top" with a jump. The local meets each Wednesday night with a bigger attendance, more enthusiasm. We are increasing the membership each meeting with a total of 15 new members for the month, many of them taking an active interest in the movement. Comrade John O'Brian has been particularly active. He sent in 19 subs for the O. S. the night he came in.

The "indoor picnics" now being held each alternate meeting by the local are a decided success. After the business session a lunch is served with music and oratory for desert. There are several promising "soapboxers" among the members since the study class has been reorganized. Comrades from nearby locals are invited to attend the next picnic to be held Wednesday, Feb. 12. A good time is assured.

Since the County Executive Committee has shown such wonderful results in organization work, Local E. Liverpool has elected a City Executive Committee composed of the following comrades: C. F. Podewells, Thos. O'Rourke, first ward; George Eisenbuth, N. K. Burlingame, second ward; Thurman Cunningham, John Venie, third ward; John O'Brien, D. J. Morgan, fourth ward, and County Executive Committeeman J. R. Larimore, member-at-large. Watch the little RED DOT in the lower right [illegible]

Ohio Locals, Your Attention!

The call for Socialist speakers has been unprecedented. The State Office has in fact, found it impossible to fill all applications made. Locals that have held meetings during the last two months write the State Office that even at an admission charge of 25 cents, the halls are far too small to hold the crowds that seek information about Socialism.

These active locals now demand a speaker once a week. Many of them prefer Sunday meetings. We would like to remind these locals that there is only one Sunday in each week and not seven. The State Office will do its best, to provide speakers for preferred days, but we cannot perform the impossible, COMPLY WITH THIS REQUEST.

This is mainly written however, to make a request of all locals. If you desire a Socialist speaker, you are now asked to file your application with the State Office. Write nothing else in the letter except an application for the speaker and write on one side of the paper only. These applications will be filed and a speaker will be sent you as soon as possible. Locals that fail to do this, locals failing to make note of this official request in their official paper, must not be disappointed if last minute calls by them cannot be filled.

SPEAKERS SCHEDULED FOR OHIO.

The State Office has been in correspondence with numerous Socialist speakers and to date we report the following results:

LILITH MARTIN, who toured the state during the municipal campaigns of 1917, will begin a tour of Ohio after May 1.. Her specialty will be organization work, and she will make especial efforts to interest the women in the cause, She is an experienced organizer and her services will be much in demand in Ohio.

W. R. SNOW, who is now in Pennsylvania, has suggested that his Ohio tour begin in about six weeks. Comrade Snow has lectured and has been engaged in organization work in many states and comes well recommended by the Socialist Party of Illinois. Locals desiring Comrade Snow for a meeting must apply AT ONCE.

SCOTT NEARING will be ready to fill speaking dates beginning about May 1. Just when his Ohio tour will start we cannot foretell, but locals desiring a Nearing meeting must file their applications with the State Office NOW.

H. L. A. HOLMAN, of Texas, has just been engaged by the State Executive Committee for a tour of the state. Joseph W. Sharts of Dayton says that, "Holman has a breezy southwestern way of lecturing and he makes friends wherever he goes." Comrade Holman is ready to begin work this minute. Do you want him for a meeting? Apply now.

DENNIS E. BATT, associate editor of the "Proletarian" of Detroit, comes to this state for a meeting at Cleveland on February 23. He has promised to fill fourteen dates in Ohio, following the Cleveland meeting. Comrade Batt is a very instructive lecturer and we recommend him to all locals. Terms are ten dollars per lecture and expenses. Make application for him at once if you desire his services.

CHARLES BAKER is now on tour in Ohio. His meetings, since Jan. 16, have been uniformly successful. He reports audiences starved for information about Socialism, and crowded halls. His prospective dates will be found in another column.

THURBER LEWIS is now making a special organization trip for the State Office. His dates will be found in another column. As soon as this trip is finished he will be open for speaking engagements and further organization work. Thurber Lewis is the son of Tom Lewis. He is eighteen years of age and is usually advertised as the "boy orator." His knowledge of Socialism, his insight into the foreign Socialist situation, his ability to tell his audiences about these in a lucid and entertaining manner, has won him high commendations from many locals in the state. Applications for Thurber Lewis meetings should be made right away.

TOM LEWIS, now residing in Cleveland, can fill Sunday dates and an occasional week-day date. He needs no recommendation.

List of Ohio comrades, resident in the state, who can fill occasional dates, will be printed in the Ohio Socialist as soon as it has been revised.

APPLICATIONS NOW ON FILE.

We have now on hand the following application for speakers:

Local Montpelier applies for Tom Lewis to do organization work in that city for one week.

Local North Star desires a speaker, Chas. Baker preferred.

Local Belmont County applies for an organizer for a week's work.

Local Niles applies for a Scott Nearing lecture.

The locals of Columbiana County ask to have Chas. Baker give them the wook of April 28 to May 4.

Local Canton wants a speaker every Sunday afternoon.

Local Portemouth applies for an organizer to work in the southern part of the state, in the vicinity of Portsmouth, for three months.

Local Youngstown asks for the services of Charles Baker for one week.

Locals in Guernsey County apply for an organizer to help get 1,000 members for the county before fall.

Locals Youngstown, Akron, Cincinnati, Columbus, Toledo and others need speakers every Sunday.

Local Opperman applies for a speaker.

Martins Ferry and Warren apply for Nearing meetings.

Kenmore asks for Tom Lewis.

AND AGAIN WE SAY

Locals desiring Socialist speakers must file their applications with the State Office and a speaker will be assigned as soon as possible. Locals should discuss and act upon this matter at the next meeting.

GUERNSEY COUNTY SOCIALISTS ATTENTION

Attend these Katterfeld meetings. Attend all of them if possible. Assist Herber Knecht in his laudable effort to bring the county locals back into active participation in the Socialist work.

L. E. Katterfeld, member of the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party, will speak in Byesville on Feb. 8, at 7:30 p. m. The Opera House is the place. Oyster supper and social in connection.

On Feb. 9, at 2:30 p. m., he will speak in Derwent.

On Feb. 9, at 7:30 p. m., he will speak in the Central Labor hall. Seventh and Wheeling, Cambridge, O.

What Bigelow Thinks

Herbert S. Bigelow, in a leaflet written by him about that burning question of Bolshevism, has this to say: "Reaction, blinded by self-interest, opposes reasonable change. Revolution, exasperated by injustice, proposes unreasonable change. The need of the hour is a sound liberalism to deal with the Bolshevism in both camps.

"We want no red flag of revolution. Neither do we want any white flag of reaction. We want to go down the middle of the road with the flag of our country."

A very interesting position, surely, for Mr. Bigelow to take. We are wondering how large his camp of liberals is, and when they have to begin the march down the middle of the road, [illegible]

Official Business

Motion "A," 1919, by Jos. W. Sharts: "That H. A. L. Holman be employed by the State Office for organization work upon his terms, namely the collections taken at his meetings."

Comment by Sharts: "Comrade Holman is an old and experienced worker at all ends of the propaganda. He has recently published a booklet entitled, "How," in which he takes up President Wilson's 14 "points" and shows their utter emptiness from the worker's viewpoint, and follows them up with a sketch of a constitution for an industrial democracy. The little book has made quite a hit around here; it looks sound enough to me; and I suppose Comrade Holman will want the privilege of selling his booklet at any of the meetings. He has a breezy southwestern way of lecturing and conversing which makes friends; and I believe the state movement can suffer no harm and will probably receive considerable benefit by giving him free rein in Ohio."

Voting "yes" upon the above motion: All members of the committee. Motion carried.

Motion "B," 1919, as submitted by the State Secretary: "Request that the State Secretary be given leave of absence for two or three months to begin his duties as director of organization and propaganda at the National Office and that Mrs. Wagenknecht act as temporary secretary during the interval."

Voting "yes": Scott Wilkins, Wm. Patterson, Jos. W. Sharts, Tom Clifford, M. J. Beery, Lotta Burke. Voting "no": J. P. Baker.

Comment by J. P. Baker: "I very much appreciate your desire to work for the national organization in the capacity you have stated, but I think it is asking too much of Ohio at this time to make a change. Of course, I know we can not hold you against your will, but I feel you should stay with us this present term of office. You are well liked by the whole state organization and you are getting results, which will amount to something by the end of the year. But if we have to change managers every two or three months, even though they be of the best, we will never get any place. Stay with us for the year and look to higher aspirations afterward."

By Jos. W. Sharts: "Am sorry for the state movement because you are going to take that national job, but, of course, a man ought to take the larger field of operations as long as he has any reserve energy left."

"OHIO SOCIALIST"
"SOCIALIST NEWS"

A co-operative arrangement has been worked out between the "Ohio Socialist" and "Socialist News" through which the plan adopted by party referendum in 1912 and reaffirmed in 1917 will be put into effect. Under this plan the circulation of the "Socialist News" will be limited to Cuyahoga County and the "Ohio Socialist," on the other hand, will not be sent into Cuyahoga County. All the [illegible] subscribers in Cuyahoga County for the "Ohio Socialist" will be sent the "Socialist News." In case the same person subscribed for both papers the subscription will be extended to include the unexpired portion of both subscriptions.

What the Red Army is Doing

No uqestion about it comrades, we will have to hand it to the Red Army! One would think by the results of their skirmishes after subscriptions that they were veterans in these activities. Here is the Ohio Socialist, seven months old as a weekly, and already able to walk on its hind feet and hold up its head like a regular Bolshevik! That a great deal of credit is due the tireless efforts of the members of the Red Army goes without saying. Without their work in the field we would undoubtedly have been crawling in our long clothes yet.

Such is not the case, however. The Red Army has kept us so busy keeping up with the flood of subscriptions and other work that we have somewhat neglected giving them the praise which is so deservedly theirs. Especially the last three weeks. A few weeks ago we thought we were establishing a world record by securing a hundred subscriptions a week. Well, we've established several records since then. We climbed up to a hundred and fifty and then hit the two hundred mark and then the Army got right down to business and boosted the weekly list to five hundred! That means, if it is kept up, that in a year we shall have twenty-five thousand subscribers, which means at least a hundred thousand readers. Is that a goal worth striving for? We think so. We also know that the Red Army thinks so too and in that knowledge we are assured that their activities in the interest of our party paper will continue throughout the coming months.

Owing to the increasing number of comrades who are devoting their time and effort in increasing our list of readers we are compelled to give credit in this form to save space. The following comrades sent in subscriptions last week:

Piqua News

By ROBERT JOHNSON.

The suit of Mayor F. B. Hamilton vs. Henry Kampf and the Leader-Dispatch for $50,000 damages was heard by Judge Barnes on Jan. 31. An account of this case will appear in next week's issue.

A decision in the Hartley case is expected at the next session of the court of appeals in Troy a few weeks hence. Hartley, a Republican ward councilman, was discovered holding two officers contrary to the general code of Ohio which provides in such cases that the office of councilman is vacant. Comrade Frank Strauss was appointed by the mayor to fill the vacancy but Hartley refused to vacate being upheld by his friends in the council. Quo warranto proceedings were filed in the court of appeals where the case has been hanging fire for a year. The law's delays are past comprehension.

Whenever a man talks to you about "making the world safe for democracy" ask him what kind of democracy he means, ninety-nine times out of a hundred he won't know the difference between political and industrial democracy. Call attention to the fact that while we have religious and political democracy in large measure, we have not industrial democracy without which the other is a farce. Socialists should keep INDUSTRIAL democracy at the fore in every argument. When the working class own the tools and raw resources with which they work there is industrial democracy. The railroads, the mills, the mines and factories are the tools, let the working class take them over and real fundamental democracy will be ours.

The fight put up by Comrade Edwin Blank and Local Lima for the right of free speech and assemblage is gratifying to the comrades of Local Piqua. The common pleas court of Allen county decided that the Constitution of the United States is constitutional and that Socialists had some rights in the "land of the free"? The Chamber of Commerce and their cohorts immediately carried the case to the court of appeals hoping for a reversal of the decision.

Local Piqua has nominated their candidates for municipal offices. The "present incumbent" as the local capitalist press terms Comrade Homilton was nominated for mayor. The rest of the ticket is the strongest possible. every man is class conscious, tried and true. The Socialists haven't the slightest doubt about making a clean sweep in this neck of the woods next November. The old parties will combine of course, but we will whip them anyhow. The vicious and ill-timed attacks on Socialist officials have opened the eyes of the working class of Piqua to the true character of the Chamber of Commerce and their lickspittles more effectively than any amount of propaganda.

The last city council meeting was marked with much dispatch. Absence of two members prevented anything being done. Business of much importance lies before council but winter trips to Florida come first. Let city affairs wait. What if the east end of the city hall threatens to tumble down? Let her tumble, the bathing at Palm Beach is superb. Why elect men to office who think of their own pleasures than their obligations as city officials?

The latest attempt to discredit the Socialist administration by the old party press has come to naught. The city council by its neglect to pass necessary legislation for repair of the city building roused the ire of many people. The lying press tried to shoulder the blame on the Socialists but without avail. The Service Department is able to show anyone interested that it is tied hand and foot by the laws of Ohio, until council acts and action can't be had with half its membership playing golf in the sunny south.

Piqua comrades have little hope of a favorable decision from the supreme court in the Debs case. Before this item is read Comrade Debs will in all probability be in jail serving the sentence so unjustly imposed upon him. Debs in jail is more influential than his enemies without. All history proclaims that prisons are no bar to progress. Why does the capitalist hate Comrade Debs? Ah! The poet, Crosby puts the matter truly when he says:

"We dread the man who folds his arms and tells the simple truth
With strong, impetuous protest charms the virgin ear of youth;
Who scorns the vengeance that we wreak, and smiles to meet his doom,
Who on the scaffold still can speak,
and preaches from his tomb."

How About the Young People.

Announcement of the organization of Social Science Schools at Youngstown and Akron makes it incumbent upon us to call the attention of all locals in the state to the need of educational work among the children of Socialists and sympathizers.

We suggest that at the next meeting of the local a census of the number of children of the members present be taken, that a date and place be set for a meeting of these children and that the local appoint as school director the best fitted comrade in the organization. These schools, formerly known as Socialist Sunday Schools, are now called Social Science Schools. For information regarding conduct of these schools, address the Young People's Socialist League, 803 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

The young men and women also should be given attention. These should be organized into Young People's Socialist Leagues. For information address the same as above.

BOLSHEVIKI STILL PLOT.

From Washington we get the news that the Bolsheviki are plotting to capture America. Archibald Stevenson of the Military Intelligence Bureau has discovered that Soviets have already been organized in the industrial centers and that they plan eventual seizure of the government.

Money for this purpose was being sent from Russia, he asserted. Schools have been opened to teach the doctrines of the reds to children.

Even the meeting of the Republican National Committee found the air surcharged with Bolshevism. The question was not broached upon the floor but the committeemen in the lobbies rolled the word over their tongues like a hot potato. "We must stand with faces like flint against Bolshevism; against the bloody kind, the bloodless kind and the Bolshevism of boodle," said one of the leaders.

NEWS AND VIEWS—A WEEKLY SURVEY

Edited By C. E. Ruthenberg

The British Strikes

Reports from Great Britain tell of a series of great strikes sweeping over the entire country. That these strikes are the expression of a movement that has a greater goal than merely to increase wages and shorten hours of labor is indicated in dispatches that reach this country from two different sources.

Paul Wallace Hanna, European correspondent of the New York Call, in a news article written before the wave of strikes begun, gives the reason why the British workers are resorting to industrial action. We quote the following from this article:

> Direct action on the industrial field will be enormously stimulated by the general elections which have just returned a big Tory majority to parliament.
> That is not the opinion of one or a few men. It is the opinion of the best judges in Great Britain—liberals, conservatives and radicals.
> The view that the election was "a government trick was first given me four days ago, before the result was announced and when it was still believed that labor had captured at least 100 seats.
> George Lansbury, editor of the Labor Herald, believes that not more than one-half of the electors went to the polls, and that a still smaller proportion of the soldiers ever received ballots. And the ballots sent to the soldiers, like all others, contained only names, without party designations, so that the average soldier did not know whether Smith was a Tory or a Sinn Feiner. Moreover all labor newspapers had been barred from the camps and prevented from reaching France, so that no Tommy could tell anything about the issues at stake.
> More important than all else, however, is the spreading distrust of parliamentary action that pervades the ranks of the working class.

The correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor confirms the above view in an article written since the industrial movement began. This writer says that what the workers are aiming at is "control of industry." This quotation gives the gist of his comment:

> The conclusion arrived at by the present writer, during a personal tour of the Clyde a few weeks ago, is that the discontent fomented by the irreconcilables is more political than industrial in character, and if the present demands were conceded, there is no justification for the hope that peace would be restored. Rather would the movement thrive and grow impudent with the success attained and steps be almost immediately taken to formulate further proposals. The leaders of the movement declare quite openly and candidly at their own party conferences that they are hostile to the present government, that their ultimate object is the control of industry, first having reduced industry to a condition that it no longer pays the employer to carry on.

The hope of the ruling class that with the end of the war the workers of Great Britain would meekly return to the old conditions under which they were oppressed and exploited is being blasted by this militant industrial movement. That this movement will grow and develope and become something akin to a revolution is very probable.

Placing the Blame

In Cleveland a combination of crooked politics, crooked lawyers and the criminal element has created a situation in which crimes are committed with impunity. Pocket picking, hold-ups, burglaries and murders are daily recorded by the newspapers but arrests are infrequent, prosecutions few and convictions rare.

The stench arising from this conditions has grown so strong that something had to be done. So there have been investigations and pages of publicity.

But the crime wave continued. The public officials grew desperate. At last they hit upon a way to exonerate themselves and satisfactorily explain the existing conditions.

The explanation of the situation appeared in one of the afternoon papers last week. According to the story published it is not criminals of the ordinary sort who are responsible for the existing conditions, but a band of anarchists who hope "by starting what at first would appear simply to be a crime wave of more than usual proportions, they would gradually lead up to creating a state of absolute anarchy, in which no one would be safe on the streets."

Yes, of course. Anarchists now, Bolshevists tomorrow and then the Socialists will be too blame. Such is the utter rot that the people are asked to swallow.

Thus do the supporters of things as they are try to explain away the rottenness of the present social order.

Bribery, corruption and crime are the logical product of a social system in which the ruling class maintains itself and the system of exploitation by force and violence. The world has been engulfed in blood and force has reigned supreme. Is it to be wondered at that individuals are practicing on a smaller scale what capitalism practiced on a grand scale?

* * * *

Not Our Goal

The Cleveland News is one of those newspapers which stands for the unhampered control of industry by the capitalists and belongs to the rearguard even when an advance is made in the interest of the capitalist class. Thus this newspaper has not yet learned that government ownership of certain industries may be to the interest of the capitalists. It hasn't learned, as the shrewder capitalists have, that it is better to have the railroads, telegraph and telephones owned by the whole capitalist class through a government it controls than by individual capitalists.

The Cleveland News is therefore still opposed to government ownership. In order to make point against government ownership it recently printed an editorial proving beyond doubt that the government may oppress the workers and compel them to submit to bad working conditions and pay them low wages, as well as private employers. It points out Mr. Burleson's records in dealing with the postal employes, and, more recently, his treatment of the employes in the telephone and telegraph industry. It quites Miss Julia S. O'Connor, president of the Boston Telephone Operators' Union, as saying that the government is "an autocratic and unfair employer of the wage workers."

The editorial is noteworthy, not as an argument against any change in the control of industry, for which purpose it was printed, but as an argument against government ownership and bureaucratic management of industry. Government ownership, as this editorial so ably emphasized, may make the lot of the workers worse, for they have to deal with a more powerful and resourceful employer—the government. It is more than likely that the needs of capitalism, such as the necessity of increasing the income of the government to meet the interest charges on the great war debt, will compel the capitalist to consent to the government controlling certain great industries and, as pointed out above, the economic advantage of such an arrangement is an argument for it in the minds of some capitalists. The workers, however, need not strive for such a development. It will come without their effort for it does not lead to their emancipation from exploitation.

The workers' goal must be industrial democracy, not government ownership; they must establish control of the shops and factories by the workers themselves, not by a bureaucracy at the seat of the government. The Cleveland News editorial is not an argument against the goal the workers are striving to reach, but merely points the way that they must not go.

Robins on Creel

Colonel Raymond Robins, who was in Russia up to about six months ago, and who has been repeatedly urged to tell the American people the facts about conditions there, has at last broken his silence. He has given the public his information about the work of the Soviet government, but some new light is thrown on the work of the Department of Public Information, headed by George Creel, through which the infamous Sisson documents were published.

Colonel Robins was stirred to speak by an eight-page article by George Creel, lauding the work of his department, which appeared in a recent issue of Everybody's. To correct some misstatements in this article Robins sent the following letter to Senator Johnson:

> The inclosed clipping from the last page of George Creel's eight pages of self-laudation in February's Everybody's Magazine suggests that Mr. Creel is unable to relate facts. The facts are:
> The President's speeches were printed on the Bolshevik government's presses by special permission of that government. They were distributed under government frank and posted on the dead walls of Petrograd by the Bolshevik posting service.
> Mr. Sisson fled from Petrograd March 4, 1918, shouting that the Germans would take the city within a few days, in collusion with the Bolsheviki. The American Red Cross was feeding starving children and evacuating war supplies from Petrograd under Bolshevik protection in quantities until May 11, 1918.
> The Allied military missions were helping to train the Bolshevik Red Army, April 1, and the American Ambassador was seeking, with the consent of the Allied Embassies, the co-operation of the American Railway Mission with the Bolshevik government weeks after Mr. Sisson had fled in terror from Petrograd.
> Mr. Bullard and all the American members of the Committee on Public Information in Russia, fled from Moscow, May 5, reaching Archangel and suffering from the worst case of "buck fever" in my observation.

Think of the paid agents of Germany publishing and posting President Wilson's speeches and evacuating war supplies from Petrograd in the fight against German imperialism.

The Prinkipo Conference

The proposal of the Supreme Council at Paris that all the factions in Russia meet in conference with the Allies at Prinkipo is naturally looked upon with suspicion by the Soviet government. Pravda, central organ of the Bolsheviki, points out that the declaration of the Allies in regard to non-intervention is in contradiction to the facts in the case, since Allied armies have seized Murmansk, Archangel, Baku and a great part of Siberia.

Tchitcherin, the foreign minister in the Soviet government, has sent a wireless dispatch to Jean Longuet, leader of the radical French Socialists, asking him to investigate the proposal of the Supreme Council. We quote the following from this dispatch, which, incidentally throws considerable light on the present conditions in Russia and the influences which have brought about the conciliatory attitude of the Supreme Council:

> The fight conducted by the popular masses in Siberia is directed against the extreme reactionaries, and against the monarchists, and as long as these forces, aided by the Entente, dominate these regions, the people will continue to fight them. In those places where the power of the Soviet is established, there is complete tranquility, and civil war is non-existent. On the other hand, where foreign bayonets are supporting reactionary domination, civil war is inevitable. If the powers of the Entente desire peace, the only way would be to intervene in the internal struggle, and this is the only thing that we desire. Arbitration by a third power to stop the fighting is impossible while this fighting is conducted against monarchist reactions.
> The proposals of good offices to bring about arbitration is a strange thing, coming from the governments fighting against us and occupying certain portions of our territory. The military conditions are also unlikely—the proposition for the cessation of hostilities, which was never made when we were experimenting serious difficulties, is put forward when the reactionary force is now giving way, and the domination of Krasnoff is on the point of crumbling to pieces.
> His defeat is decided, now that the help formerly offered by the Germans, and then by the Entente powers, is beginning to fail. In Siberia, the revolt of the workmen and poor peasants is growing every day, and the position of the reactionary group was broken up from the moment the Czecho-Slovaks departed. The stipulations requiring the withdrawal of armed forces, directed against the territories whose autonomy would seem to be envisaged in the fourteen articles of President Wilson, seem to us not only vague, but apt to become a new source of conflict.
> Although in reality the Soviets and Ukrainians only propose to fight against the directoire with their own forces—the Soviet and Ukrainian armies—we know that the Directoire is spreading false news—such as that the Russian Soviet troops are invading Ukrainia.
> The stipulation in question would thus become a new arm directed against the fraternal Ukrainian Soviet government, and this remark might apply to certain other regions. All measures thus indicated in the wireless message from Paris are thus in complete contradiction to the objects indicated. We bid you to make known to us the reported decision of the powers, and if it is possible, for you to study the documents in detail. Let us know it is not not your impression that the Entente have in reality annexationist views in regard to Archangel, Siberia, Baku, Askhad, Rostoff on the Don—to all those regions where their support is at present rendering possible a continuation of reactionary domination, which the proposals inferred from the Paris wireless would seem to require to be made permanent.

Secretary of Labor Wilson told the joint committee of the house and senate on labor that the philosophy of forcible revolution was gaining ground on the Pacific coast and that "We were able to meet this philosophy during the war, but if we find a condition where men are on part time or are being thrown out of employment, it will be difficult to persuade them that the advantage of the employer and laborer is mutual. Therefore, provide the men with an opportunity to work for at least five or six months from the signing of the armistice." That sounds very much as if the secretary was urging action because labor was aroused and showing its teeth and that employment is to be provided not because the workers are entitled to the opportunity to earn a living, but to keep them quiet. Mr. Wilson couldn't have demonstrated more clearly that the way for the workers to get something for themselves is by boldly organizing their power and threatening to take it.

Herman Schlueter, veteran editor of the New York Volks-Zeitung, died last week. New York Socialists made his funeral an impressive demonstration of the high regard in which this man who had given his life to the workers' cause was held. The big hall of the labor temple in which the funeral ceremonies were held was decorated with the red banners of the scores of Socialist and labor organizations that sent delegations. Schlueter's internationalism was expressed by speeches in English by Algernon Lee and Charles Irwin; in German, by Ludwig Lore; Judge Jacob Panken spoke for the Jewish workers; B. Penyatchka, editor of Flore, for the Hungarian, and Sam Katayama, paid a glowing tribute to Schlueter in the name of those Japanese working men who have found the light of Socialism.

Another action to the value of uncompromising action by the workers comes to us from Italy. It was at Milan, Italy, where the Socialists control, that President Wilson made his speech acknowledging the part that the workers have played in building up the spirit of internationalism. When this fact was called to the attention of one of the Socialist leaders there, he replied, "You say that is the most complimentary thing Wilson has said about labor during his European tour? Very well; it only proves the value of our uncompromising attitude. If the Socialists of France and England had been as frank in expressing themselves, Mr. Wilson would have known within a week after he landed that the workers of Europe are brothers, and determined to stand together in the fight for freedom."

The way was being paved for intervention in Mexico by a resolution adopted by the senate last week. This resolution instructs the Secretary of State to take up wih Mextico for settlement and liquidation all claims by citizens of the United States for personal outrages and loss of property at the hands of outlaws and insurgents.

Lenin is in Moscow carrying on his work as head of the Soviet government according to the latest reports. We thought Trotzky had thrown him in jail. Maybe the latter changed his mind about keeping him in jail and the kept press forgot to report the fact.

It was extremely ungrateful and in bad taste for President Wilson's confreres in the Peace Conference to remind him about Santa Domingo and Haiti when the question of the treatment to be accorded backward nations by the great powers was up.

The latest news in regard to the development of the labor party is that Hearst's New York American is madly pleading for support of that organization. Now it surely will be a success—but not for labor.

When the unbiased historians of the future read the story of how the Soviet government was misrepresented and lied about they will be astonished that such a thing could have official sanction.

Bloodless Revolution

Correspondents Describe Changes Taking Place in the Organization of British Industry.

London, England.—The introduction of the warshop committee into British industry is producing a more fundamental change than has occurred in England since King John signed the Magna Carta. The workshop committees are making no effort to disturb either the king or the parliament. Nevertheless they are setting up a new government, more powerful and more vital in many ways than either of these long established institutions.

The system of works committees, which is being established throughout the United Kingdom, as the basis for this new form of industrial organization. These works committees constitute a new government local, district, and national, always subject to the national parliament, but having wide authority in the direction of industrial processes.

The works committee is the local government. It is composed of equal representation from the workers and from the employers. These organizations, which have been so powerfully constituted outside of the regular agency of government are now made jointly responsible for the conduct of industrial affairs.

The jurisdiction of the works committee is limited only by the boundary of the works. Within the works, the committee is supreme. Questions affecting each establishment are settled by the committee. If the works committee is unable to agree, the district council decides. If district councils are unable to agree, the national industrial council acts.

The plan depends upon the existence of organization on both sides. It pre-supposes trade unions, just as it pre-supposes manufacturers' associations.

There is nothing compulsory about this method of economic organization. Neither the workers nor the employers are compelled to organize. Wherever organizations are formed, they are asked to function jointly through the works, district or national council.

The system of industrial organization which is being adopted in England has not yet found its way into all the [illegible]. It is still in the experimental stage. Where it has been tried out, however, it has resulted thus far in a more effective form of industrial co-operation than has ever before been attained in Great Britain. The new system is not industrial democracy, but it constitutes a long step in that direction.

Strikes in England

London, England.—The labor unrest in England is growing more menacing every day. The postal workers are demanding a 42-hour week, more holidays and the elimination of night work. The miners in various parts of Great Britain have entered their demand for an increase of 30 per cent. in wages and a 44-hour week. Already 20,000 North Nottinghamshire miners and twenty pits are idle, and 14,000 Rhonda men have stopped as a protest against the dismissals of miners engaged during the war. The ship builders on the Clyde are agitating for a 40-hour week and a daily wage of one pound. Some 20,000 of these workers have already gone on strike. They refuse to pay rent or income tax. South Wales ship repairing yards are standing idle. In Belfast 100,000 shipyard employes and electricians have ceased work. There are no trains or light in that city, and the bread supply is reduced to one-half. The engineers and ship builders of Lowestoft have gone on strike for the 44-hour week. At Edinburgh and Leith, the carpenters are demanding a 47-hour week and the iron moulders who recently got 47 hours are preparing to strike for 44 hours. In London, the dock workers are asking 44 hours for day workers and 41 hours for night workers. The bakers are threatening a national strike in protest against night work. The controversy over the establishment of the 47-hour week which has just been obtained by workers in the engineering works, threatens to involve at least 250,000 men. The employers interpreted the 47-hour week to mean 47 complete hours of labor. They therefore withdrew certain privileges that had been previously granted such as ten minutes for lunch and sufficient time to wash up before leaving the shop. The men resent this infringement on what they consider to be their rights, and are threatening a general tie-up, unless a speedy adjustment can be made.

New Bremen Dishonored by Uniformed Soldiers

Descendants of Huns Attempt to Imitate Their Ancestors by Violation of Civil Laws.

New Bremen, O., Jan. 24.—Eugene V. Debs was billed to speak here tonight. About 7 o'clock a bugle call was sounded and about thirty discharged soldiers assembled on the main street of the town.

Most of them had been brought from Minster, Ohio, a neighboring village. They formed in line and paraded up and down the street carrying banners, inscribed, "What is Debs?" "What is a Socialist?" etc.

The soldiers participating in the demonstration, the heroes (?) in khaki, who never saw a battlefield nor faced an armed foe, nor heard the shriek of shrapnel or the whine of the machine gun, except in a training camp, true to the traditions of their ancestors, permitted themselves to be herded and led by a Lieutenant Boesel, son of Julius Boesel, banker, and commanded in chief by a Dr. Dine of Minster, Ohio, to violate the laws of the State of Ohio while in the uniform of their country's army, and to show their undaunted courage by threatening unarmed men, women and children.

But most of those soldier boys were duped. The dirty, contemptible sneaks, the bankers and business men who dare not do their own dirty work either hired or otherwise induced those young boys to do it for them. Three-fourths of the boys showed by their looks that they did not enjoy the game. Their manhood rebelled at being asked to make criminals of themselves in behalf of others.

Remember those rowdies in uniform were supposed to be American citizen soldiers with American ideals of right and justice, but the actions of some of them indicated that they had inherited the Hun characteristics of their ancestors.

After the meeting had begun the rowdies in the uniform of the American army marched into the Opera House where the meeting was held and at once began their attempt to break up the meeting.

When they were asked if they were brought to the meeting and who brought them, our toe-kissing friend, Dr. Dine, jumped to his feet and yelled, "prove it." He was told that "Actions speak louder than words." One of the uniformed thugs cried, "mob him." The doctor was then exposed. He order his flunkeys to refrain. They obeyed. It was plain to all who was the chief engineer of the rowdies. After the meeting was concluded—which was after it was ascertained that Comrade Debs could not be present—the doctor reported to the bankers of New Bremen.

The most interesting feature of the whole affair was when an old veteran of the Civil War unmercifully flayed the young soldiers. He said to them, "This is an outrage, you've dishonered your town, you've disgraced the uniforms you wear. I fought four years for my country before you were born and I never disgraced the uniform I wore by violating the laws of my state. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves. You're a bunch of cowards to threaten unarmed people."

Later this old veteran, grizzled and gray, with some more of his comrades, dared the young hoodlums to fight and strange to say the uniformed dupes, who at the behest of the craven cowards who dared not publicly expose themselves, showed the white feather and beat a retreat. Here's to the Civil War veterans who are true to American ideals and are yet willing to fight to maintain a government for the EQUAL benefit of all the people.

The New Bremen meeting was a fair sample of what the capitalist class will do. They accuse the Socialists of lawlessness, and when they hire or induce others to become law breakers. The old law that "Force begets force" still remains. For every blow struck by the capitalist class they may expect a return when the workers once rise in their might without first being enlightened. The Socialists are endeavoring to enlighten the workers so the solution of their problems may be peaceable. Let the greedy and brutal capitalist class beware if they prevent enlightenment by suppressing free speech and free press and lawful assemblage by mob law. The Socialists can not hold the angry workers in control. They will probably return kind for kind; and then who will squawk?

of the above entitled cause; that he resides at 4858 N. Monticello Ave., Chicago; that he is acquainted with Joseph Buckner, bailiff or deputy marshal of said United States Court and that he knows a W. H. Streeter, who is also a bailiff or deputy marshal and that said Buckner and Streeter, together with Mr. William Barber, had charge of the jury during the trial of said cause.

This affiant further says that on December 19, 1918, while Mr. Kennedy and I were talking in my room Mr. Ballou came in and said:

"Germer is the ——— liar I ever heard and he told nothing but ——— lies on the stand."

I asked him to tell one lie Germer told, whereupon he said he had nothing further to say on the matter, and didn't. This was after dinner in the evening.

On December 21st at the table in the Great Northern Restaurant, the jury were seated and located as follows:

J. T. Buckner
O
Bartholomew O O Hendee
Carlson O O Light
Sheldon O O Joyce
Wakem O O Ballou
Hartford O O Streeter (Bailiff)
Nixon O O Kennedy
Staunton O
O
Wm. Barber.

Mr. Streeter at the table struck it with his right fist to emphasize his remarks which were as follows:

"Every ——— one of those fellows is guilty and if I had my way I would hang every one of them."

On January 3, 1919, Mr. Streeter remarked at the noon meal at the Great Northern that:

"Berger is a ——— lying Dutchman and ought to be in hell."

He also made similar remarks at the table in the evening at the Palmer House. This was our first meal there. Before going over to the Palmer House, in our room the same evening, just before retiring, Mr. Streeter said:

"I wish that ——— lying Dutchman, Berger, would get through with his lies."

On January 5, 1919, which was Sunday, about 8 o'clock p. m., in Mr. Wakem and Mr. Kennedy's room at the Hotel Majestic, at which time Mr. Ballou, Mr. Light and Mr. Bartholomew and I were also present, Mr. Staunton said:

"I am very much opposed to Socialists in every way and make them out dirty liars and claim them guilty."

He said he had talked with his son on New Year's Day about the case. Afterward he contradicted this statement and said that he:

"Long ago talked of having no use for Socialists at any rate."

On January 7, 1919, in the morning immediately after dressing, Mr. Streeter said:

"I wonder where I can buy a copy of the Life of Benedict Arnold?" I answered, "I think at McClurg's." He said:

"Arnold was the ——— ——— of a traitor this world ever knew and those ——— are just like him."

It was generally reported that Mr. Hendee had lost money in playing cards with Buchner and had given Buckner his check for $10. Mr. Wakem, Mr. Joyce and Mr. Sheldon were in games and the report was among the jurors that Mr. Buckner had gotten the greater part of the $30 lost by Joyce and $20 by Wakem.

During the deliberations of the jurors I asked Mr. Buckner for a copy of the Judge's instructions to the jury; there, Mr. Buckner said, the Judge would not give them. Mr. Buckner was asked for a copy of the Bill of Rights and the Declaration of Independence, and replied these were not to be had. He was asked for a copy of the indictment which was given then to the jury. We did not see a copy of the Espionage Act.

This affiant further says that he is ready to appear in open court and testify to the statements herein made.

country to strengthen the Socialist Party and it is to the interest of the capitalists to weaken it. The organization of a labor party means the splitting of the forces of the workers, for the Socialist Party, with a clear vision of the road that must be traveled to achieve working class emancipation, will refuse to yield its place to a labor party with a program that will only serve to mislead the workers. Will the workers unify their forces by giving their united support to the Socialist Party or split them by following the devious path the new organization proposes?

The Socialist Party has urged the workers to take independent political action when the present leaders of the labor party [illegible] support the parties of their oppressors — the Republican and Democratic party. It has always been in the lead in the fight for the workers' cause. It will continue in its position of uncompromising opposition to the capitalist system until this system is overthrown.

Events in Europe are proving that Socialism inevitably succeeds capitalism. There is no other road to freedom. Why should we falter and follow the paths that experience of the workers of Europe and Australia has proven leads nowhere?

Not a labor party but mass support of the Socialist Party and class conscious political action against the capitalists is the way to emancipation and security for the workers. [illegible]

SEATTLE STRIKERS FRIGHTEN CAPITALIST CLASS

See in Uprising in Northwest First Blow of Industrial Workers Seeking to Destroy Profit System

The general strike of thirty thousand Seattle workers in support of a like number of workers employed in the ship yards of that city has shaken the centers of capitalism from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

For the first time in the history of this country federal troops face striking workers within a few days after the beginning of the industrial struggle and capitalist newspapers from coast to coast are loudly shouting that "the time to hit Bolshevism in this country is when Bolshevism first rears its head.

A few short months ago the 30,000 ship builders at Seattle were being appealed to daily to work with all their strength and energy to support American soldiers in France and turn out ships faster in order to send more troops to win the war. They were told that they were as much on the firing line as the soldiers in the army. Today these workers find that the rulers of this country have sent the very soldiers whom they were urged so strenuously to back up, to back up their employers in a refusal to grant them higher wages, and the soldiers stand opposite them with fixed bayonets.

What is there about this strike that has frightened the capitalist class to such an extent that it has prepared for the immediate use of force to suppress it?

The unions involved are all part of the American Federation of labor. It is not an I.W.W. strike, but a strike by a part of Mr. Gompers' organization. Mr. Gompers, who has the unanimous support of the capitalist press in keeping the workers in leading-strings for the class this press serves and whose organization has won high praise because of its patriotic attitude during the war.

Yet these unions of the A. F. of L. are threatened by the fixed bayonets of the government that Mr. Gompers has served so loyally that one is almost tempted to say that he is part of it. What have they done to have directed against them the full force of malignant denunciation of the capitalist press of the country?

The general strike originated in the demand of the shipyard workers for an increase in wages. Last fall the government handed down the so-called Macey award. This award did not fulfill the demands of the shipyard workers for better wages, in fact, it was charged at the time that some of them were left worse off than before the award was made.

There were threats of a strike in the Pacific Coast shipyards as a result of this award even before the signing of the armistice. The workers were discontented and dissatisfied. They found that in spite of the signing of the armistice the cost of living did not come down, but went still higher, and that with the end of the emergency the bosses were assuming a more arbitrary and autocratic attitude toward them.

This situation finally culminated in a strike of the shipyard workers, which began on Jan. 21.

Up to this point there was not difference between the struggle in Seattle and hundreds of other strikes.

But the workers of Seattle have advanced farther in establishing the solidarity of the workers as a whole than elsewhere. Seattle is a hundred per cent. union town. The workers in practically every kind of work are organized. They publish their own daily paper, the Seattle Union-Record.

A referendum was taken on the question of backing up the ship builders through a general strike, which was carried almost unanimously, and thirty thousand miscellaneous workers joined the shipyard workers in an effort to force the employers to grant the demand of the latter.

Although this was a splendid demonstration of solidarity, even thus far the strike did not contain any features to arouse the universal alarm of the capitalist class. But the strikers took a step further.

They and their families composed the great majority of the population of Seattle. Why, they argued, should they, the great majority, suffer the hardships resulting from a general stoppage of work, because a small group of profiteers refused to grant a measure of industrial justice to part of their organization?. In answering that question they took a step never before taken in a strike in this country. They re-opened some of the industries of Seattle under the direction of the organized workers and threatened if the strike continued to extend this action and to gradually re-open the industries of that city in order to take care of the needs of the people.

This is a phase of the Seattle strike that has inspired fear in the hearts of the American capitalist class. The capitalist press is right, the Seattle workers have learned the lesson of Bolshevism. They are challenging the conception of industry which makes it a profit-taking machine for the benefit of a few capitalists and setting over against this the new idea that industry exists to supply the needs of the people and that in order to attain this end the workers should, if need be, simply ignore the rights and titles of the capitalists who for generations have been sucking their very life-blood, and take charge of industry, themselves.

The capitalist class may put down by force this first manifestation in action of the new doctrine of the workers. It will not help them much. The new idea is in the air—Bolshevism, to use the pet phrase which the capitalists use to frighten little children—is sweeping the world. The victorious Russian workers are inspiring the workers the world over to try to attain their own freedom. Germany is on the road; England is shaking under the impact of the demand for industrial democracy; in Seattle we have the first great manifestation that the workers of the United States are not to be left behind.

The capitalists may well tremble.

The workers of the world are preparing to smash the shell which must be broken before the industrial republic of the workers comes into the world.

Seattle is the first blow.

Spartacans Make Appeal For International Solidarity of Working Class

Early in January the Spartacus group of German Socialists held a conference in Berlin, attended by from eighty to one hundred delegates from all parts of Germany. This conference adopted a manifesto, which has just reached this country, in which the position of the Spartacus in regard to the situation in Germany and international affairs is clearly presented.

The conference was attended by Karl Liebknecht, Rosa Luxemburg, Clara Zetkin and Franz Mehring, who are the signers of the manifesto, which reads as follows:

The International appeal is as follows:

"To the workers of all countries!

"Proletarians! Men and women of labor! Comrades!

"The revolution has entered Germany. The masses of soldiers who for four years have been driven to the shambles for the sake of capitalist profits, the mass of workers who during four years were exploited, crushed and starved, have arisen. The horrible tool of oppression, Prussian militarism, lies broken upon the ground. Its most notable representatives, and hence the most notable instigators of this war, the kaiser and the crown prince, have fled to foreign parts. Everywhere Workers' and Soldiers' Councils formed.

Speak for German Labor.

"Proletarians of all countries, we do not say that in Germany all power has actually come into the hands of the working people, that full victory has already been achieved. Those Socialists who in August, 1914, surrendered our most precious heritage, the International, who during four years betrayed the German working class, as well as the International, are still in the government.

"But, proletarians of all countries, now the German proletarian himself speaks to you. We believe ourselves justified to come to your forum in his name. We have striven, from the first day of this war, to fulfill our International duties by opposing that criminal government with all our might and branding those really guilty of this war.

"Now, at this hour, we are justified before history, before the International and before the German proletariat. The masses enthusiastically lend us their approval. Ever larger portions of the working class share the consciousness that the hour of reckoning for the rule of the capitalist class has struck.

"However, this great deed cannot be accomplished by the German proletariat alone. It can but fight and win by calling upon the solidarity of the proletarians of all countries.

"Comrades of the warring nations, we appreciate your position.

"Well we know that your governments, now that they have achieved victory, can blind many people by their outward brilliance. We know that the success of the murder will enable them to obliterate the memory of its causes and aims.

Workers Bore Brunt of War.

"But we also know something else. We know that in your countries, too, the proletariat bore the most frightful sacrifices in flesh and blood, that it is tired of the horrible slaughter; that the worker, now returning, finds want and destitution at home, while wealth counted by billions accumulated in the hands of a few capitalists. He has learned and will continue to learn that your governments, too, have made this war for the sake of the big moneybags. And, furthermore, he will learn that your government, when it referred to 'justice and civilization,' 'protection of small nations,' meant capitalist profits just as much as ours, when it talked of 'the defense of the fatherland;' that the peace of 'justice' and of the 'League of Nations' means the identical base robbery, as the peace of Brest-Litovsk. Here as there, the same shameless voraciousness, the same will to oppression, the same intent to use the brute super-force of the instrument of murder to the limit.

"The imperialism of all countries knows no 'negotiation.' It knows only one right, the profits of capital. It knows only one means, force. And if it speaks now in all countries, in yours as well as in ours, of the 'League of Nations,' 'disarmament,'

Judge Landis Takes Motion for New Trial for Socialists Under Advisement

(Special Correspondence)

Chicago.—"Nixon told the God's truth!" exclaimed Attorney Henry Cochems, one of counsel for the five Socialists here in launching his attack on the jury scandal on which the Socialists are basing their hopes for a new trial.

Frequent clashes between counsel for the Socialists and the government attorneys featured an all-day court battle over the shady methods that were used by the prosecution to secure the conviction of Victor L. Berger, Adolph Germer, J. Louis Engdahl, Irwin St. John Tucker and William F. Kruse.

Judge Landis allowed the court session to continue on into the evening with Attorney Cochems heaping fact upon fact to show that Nixon could have told nothing but the truth. Finally Landis adjourned court until Tuesday morning.

Thomas C. Nixon, an inventor, one of the Socialist trial jurors, charged that Deputy Marshal William H. Streeter, one of three court bailiffs in charge of the jury, had repeatedly attacked the Socialists on trial in the presence of the jurors while the trial was going on.

On one occasion he had claimed that the defendants were all guilty and aught to hang. On another occasion he had referred to Berger as a "Damn lying Dutchman," and again he had stated that he wished, while Germer was on the stand, that Germen would get through with his "damn lies."

Cochems pointed out that one of the reasons the other eleven jurors would not come forward and corroborate Nixon's charges in full was the fact that someone in Milwaukee, had sent everyone of the jurors, by special delivery letter, a copy of the Milwaukee Leader containing an editorial in which the jurors were referred to in not very complimentary terms. But Cochems pointed out that sufficient corroboration had been secured from Jurors Light, Ballou and Wakem to support Nixon's charges.

Cochems charged that the government lawyers had sought to intimidate Nixon, that they had urged him to get a lawyer, which he did, and that his own lawyer had only served to frighten him half to death.

"The prosecution joined Nixon's lawyer in the effort to keep Nixon from telling the truth," charged Cochems. "But Nixon came through with the truth just the same."

Prosecuting Attorney Clyne grew especially wrathy when Cochems attacked the coercion and intimidation of witnesses as practiced by the government lawyers during the trial. Cochems referred to this as "gross prejudicial error" and as "prejudicial conduct." Clyne tried to stem the rush of Cochems argument by claiming he was not following the record, which brought a retort from Cochems that:

"If you ate all the things your memory has slipped up on, you would be the most swelled up man in seventeen states."

At this Clyne subsided for a while as Cochems viewed a host of unsubstantiated matter injected into the trial by the prosecution like the repeated question put to Berger as to whether The Milwaukee Leader had ever received any money from the agents in this country of the German imperial government. No one bit of evidence was offered by the government to show that any Socialist publication or organization ever received a cent of the late kaiser's cash, yet the prosecution repeatedly pantomined this question before the jury until it must have believed it to be a fact. Cochems claimed that the conduct of the prosecution called for a rebuke from the court.

"The prosecution was a strained prosecution," said Cochems. "The

Paterson Strikers Adopt Soviet Form of Organization

By FREDERICK M. KERBY.

Something entirely new in American labor and industry has appeared in Paterson, where 28,000 silk mill workers are on strike.

It is a system of "shop delegates," much like the shop steward plan now in effect among radical English workmen.

Both the silkmill owners and the old-line labor leaders are alarmed.

The majority of strikers are said to have repudiated the American Federation of Labor. They demand a 44-hour week. Federation leaders had agreed to compromise on a 47-hour week.

2 Delegates From Each Shop Meet.

The workers in each mill have met and elected two shop delegates. These delegates meet as a central committee.

"We call it the eight-hour workday conference," said H. J. Rubenstein, member of the committee, in the wings of the stage at 90 Market St., where the shop delegates were in session.

"The A. F. L. men call us I. W. W.'s but our organization contains members of Silkmakers' Union, No. 25, of the Workers' International Industrial Union; the Textile Workers' Industrial Union of the I. W. W.; Socialist Party; Socialist-Labor Party; Workmen's Circle, Sons of Italy; Jewish National Workers' Alliance, Paola Zion, an Independent Workmen's Circle, and Jewish Socialist-Labor Federation.

"And now local 980 of the United Textile Workers of America, which is in the A. F. L., has broken away from the federation and joined us.

"The vast majority of the strikers are not in any unions.

"We have one demand only—the 44-hour week. Up to two days before the date set for the strike, the A. F. L. also demanded the 44-hour week; its membership in their locals voted for it. But their officials announced a compromise on 47 hours.

"When we were all locked out, the workers in each mill met and selected two shop delegates, who came together in this central conference."

For two hours I listened to the new conference in action. There were no "leaders"—every man and woman had been at work two days before. The chairman had never presided at a meeting before. A dozen nationalities were represented.

Of the eight officers on the platform, two are I. W. W.'s one belongs to the Workers' International Union, two are Socialist Party members. They have sunk their differences for the moment to get one thing—the 44-hour week. Nineteen mills had capitulated on the second day of the strike and granted the demand.

Louis Magnet, leader of the Paterson branch of the United Textile Workers, the A. F. L. organization, told me the real purpose of the eight-hour workday conference is to disrupt the A. F. L. organization.

A. F. L. Leader Blames the I. W. W.

"It is backed by the I. W. W." he said. "We have 10 locals here with a membership of 8,500. Our locals did vote for the 44-hour week, but at a meeting of our textile council, composed of five delegates from each local, we voted last Friday night to accept the 47-hour week instead. We felt public sentiment might not support the more extreme demand."

Albert Wyman, secretary of the employers' association, said the employers are ready to submit the entire question to the war labor board without reservation.

Police Chief John Tracey has made provision for possible disorder, but, in striking contrasts to the bloody riots of 1913, perfect order prevails.

The Chamber of Commerce has appointed a conciliation committee, headed by James T. Jordan, which is endeavoring to bring employers and strikers together.

Life of Man Who Exposed Mooney Frame-up in Danger

By ROBERT E. BLACKSTONE.

"A man has no chance in San Francisco if they start to get him. They can jostle a man off the street, kill him and have a dozen witnesses testify he pulled a gun and started the fight. It is worse than New York. I have been in nearly every city of importance in the United States and San Francisco is worse than any of them." so said J. B. Densmore, when he was told that they wanted him to return to San Francisco to testify against the gangsters that are maladminister ing "justice" in the Golden Gate City.

Who is this man Densmore that he speaks in such terms of public officials? Is he a nut? A Bolshevist (as [illegible] "[illegible]" would have us believe?) Maybe he is "Pro-German?" (Whatever that means?) Probably he is a "rabid" Socialist? That talks overtime about such foolish things as "democracy;" the work of the Soviets, the German Republic; the brotherhood of man—and—and similar "rot!"

No. Densmore is not any of the above!

He is a personal friend of President Wilson's.

The president appointed him to organize the United States Employment Service. In three months he had, owing to his genius for organization, a most efficient service, consisting of some of the most expert employment men in the world, with thirteen regional directors in the field and a network of more than 900 branch offices throughout the U. S.

Being a man of ability Secretary of Labor Wilson selected him to investigate the "Mooney case." He did.

And now his life is in danger. Any day he may be shot, stabbed, "framed-up," run over by an automobile, poisoned, found dead in bed or tarred and feathered and rode out of town on a rail.

Just think would not that be a strange thing? To read in the newspapers how a government man had been "man-handled" by the "Knights" of Liberty, or "The Apes," or some kindred organization that is trying by every foul means possible to prove this is a government "of the people, by the people and for the people." In other words a ligitimate government investigator being "beat up" and run out of town by a self-appointed, gun-toting crew of curs that could not "catch a limberger in a cheese factory."

Such is the unenviable position of Mr. Densmore.

And what has he done? Told the truth. Now what has happened to people who have told the truth in or about California?

Francis J. Heney, was shot in open court, while prosecuting Ruef, former boodling District Attorney of San Francisco; "Big Jim" Gallagher's house was dynamited; Hasse, the man who tried to kill Heney, was murdered in his cell; J. Edward Morgan, Mooney publicity agent, was beaten up by a mob and carried away into the mountains by automobile; Fickert, the man who Densmore's dictaphone reports exposes, beat-up Schulberg, and later Fremont Older, editor of the "Post-Call."

Since the bomb defendants were arrested there is not a man or woman, friendly to the defense, who has not been brow beaten, threatened, clubbed, bulldozed, insulted—(this is Fickert's long suite)— getting the wives of

A VOICE OUT OF RUSSIA

From The Dial.

But I have anticipated. Before speaking of the present, let us return to the provisional governments and see how they solved the third fundamental problem; that is, the reorganization of the economic life of the country. The question can be answered in a few words: "They did not solve." Lacking economic experience and not venturing, for fear of the Allies, to decrease war production or the number of soldiers at the front, the provisional governments enacted nothing new. And conditions were growing worse; occupied with the "deepening of the Revolution," the workmen hardly worked. The productivity of shops and factories decreased manyfold. General economic disintegration constantly increased. The villages had no goods, and the cities and army had no bread. A real famine ensued and this was followed as usual by robberies and violence. They reached their height in August-September of 1917—about two months before the Bolshevik Revolution took place. The provisional government even at that time had no authority or power. The prestige of any power is always best measured by the forces that rally around it for its defense. And the provisional government for its defense could only rally Junkers, a few Cossacks, and the Women's Battalion of Death. And it can hardly be said that the Bolshevik offensive was an unexpected blow to the provisional government. Just the reverse; the Bolsheviki widely advertised it two weeks in advance, so that the provisional government had sufficient foreknowledge. It is therefore evident that it was in possession of defensive forces and that the popularity of the provisional government was not greater than that of the czar's.

One way or another, fourteen months ago the power was transferred definitely and finally to the Soviets, with the Bolsheviki as the dominating political power. And thus came their turn to decide the vital questions of war, state, and economic organization. The question of the war they decided to solve immediately. They disclosed the secret treaties showing imperialistic war aims of the Entente, at the same time offering the Allies a general democratic peace. The latter did not even answer! And this fact is of utmost importance, because it arouses serious doubt as to who was betrayed by whom—whether we have betrayed the Allies, or the Allies have betrayed us. Not having received any answer, the Soviet government started pourparlers for a separate peace. It could not possibly have acted differently. It was impossible to wage war further; the army had run away, the railroads had come to a standstill. Nevertheless, when the predatory tendencies of the kaiser became evident, the Soviet government delayed the ratification of the peace treaty and entered into negotiations with the Allies, promising to re-establish the Russian front if the Allies would come to their aid. The Allies did not accept this proposal, the sincerity of which can hardly be doubted. Lenin was obliged to present the Brest-Litovsk peace treaty for ratification to the Congress of Soviets. At that moment, as far as I am concerned, the question as to who betrayed whom was finally understood and decided. Upon presenting the peace treaty for ratification of the congress, Lenin did not deny it was humiliating. But at the same time he insisted that this humiliation was temporary, that the German revolution was not far away. Many did not believe it at that time, but now the German revolution is an accomplished fact.

As far as state organization was concerned, the Soviet government decided that at that time the question could be postponed. Russia was in the throes of a social revolution and in the midst of a struggle with internal and external enemies of the new order. Russia is being built by the plain people, by the peasants—slowly, firmly, and without any definite plan. To foretell into what forms this rebuilding will finally shape is utterly impossible. It can, however, be definitely said that the present rebuilding of Russia is not the last word of the Russian revolution. The word "Soviet" will probably remain with us forever. The Russian people grew fond of it. It was also adopted in Germany, but the meaning attached to this word will be perfected in the future. However, it must be kept in mind that the controversy which split Russian society into two uncompromising camps does not pertain to its meaning. This controversy does not formally touch upon the ideology of the future, but solely concerns the tactics of the present. The adherents of one camp say that it is first necessary to shape Russia into a definite political form, to establish a permanent government and to let it decide social problems slowly; that it is beyond the strength of the Russian people to accomplish a social and political revolution at the same time; that it is necessary to be satisfied for the present with the political revolution alone, and to bring about the social reforms through evolution. More than that, representatives of this camp insist that our people are young and "dark;" that the time has not arrived for them to decide their own destiny; that the people do not know what they need, but that they, the representatives of the radicals and the Socialist Intelligentsia, do know. Therefore they are the ones to govern the "dark" people, to educate the people, to prepare the people for self-government.

The representatives of the opposition camp, on the other hand, insist that their experiences with the first two provisional governments and especially with the third—the Omsk government, which is now dormant in the pocket of Kolchak—is sufficient warning not to repeat mistakes. Their deep conviction is that the Russian people are interested most of all in social reforms and demand these reforms immediately by revolutionary means. Yes, the Russian people are "dark" and uncultured, but they possess a natural common sense. They will acquire their knowledge in the process of reconstruction. Without the Intelligentsia they cannot possibly get along, but they want to select from the latter those who are willing to serve them, and not those who want to govern them against their will. The "darkness" of the Russian masses naturally obstructs the tempo of the Russian revolution. I repeat, Russia is being rebuilt by the peasants—slowly, firmly, and without any definite plan. In this process of rebuilding much has to be broken down. It is also true that it is beyond the power of the Russian people to accomplish both political and social reconstruction. Now the Russian people are busy with the construction of a new social order, and when this shall have been crystallized into definite form, they can begin the political construction of Russia. It can be foretold already that for the new social conditions new political forms will be required. It may also be predicted that neither the French nor the American clothes will fit the free Russian peasant; it will be necessary to sew special Russian clothes of new cuts. And such work requires time and care; "Measure the cloth seven times and cut it once," says an old Russian proverb. And history confirms it. Of all the constitutions that were ever written on our planet, the most flexible one has proved to be the Constitution of the United States. Written in 1787, with seventeen amendments, it is alive today. But it must not be forgotten that it was written in 1787, eleven years after the Declaration of Independence. Why then ask of Russia that she write her political constitution in definite form only one year after the revolution, a revolution deeper than that of 1776? It may be retorted that social reforms require just as much care; that they also cannot be decided in haste. I perfectly agree with this, but I also understand that the Russian people do not care to wait any longer and do not trust the "masters." No words are strong enough to convince me to the contrary. To back one's arguments with Japanese bayonets and English machine guns is just as criminal, in my opinion, as to assassinate one's own mother. And all the outcries of the interventionists—that this is a "democratic" way of helping Russia—are mere hypocrisy.

When one and one-half years ago the monarchy was overthrown in Russia, I, as well as many others, believed that Russia could not cope with the political revolution, war, and the social revolution at the same time. It was true. We were thrown out of the war, and for this we had to pay with the Brest-Litovsk treaty. But we are confronted with an accomplished fact and we are powerless to turn back the wheel of events. We have lost the war, yet in social progress we have taken tremendous steps ahead. And now the question is—What are we to do? Insist that the social revolution is untimely? Shall we, together with the reactionaries and czarists, liquidate all the gains of the revolution and assist the French and English in dividing Russia among themselves? Or shall we, with our opponents from the left, defend Russia and the revolution from her internal and foreign enemies? As far as I am concerned, there can be no question, and that is why, while remaining a Moderate Socialist, I sincerely and conscientiously believe that I must serve Russia under the Soviet banner.

There is still another point to be considered. We may not fully agree with the Soviet government; we may doubt the possibility of realizing some of its ideals, but we can hardly deny the fact that it is consistent and clear in its demands. The opponents of the Soviet government have no platform whatsoever and they cannot have any. They represent the most picturesque conglomerate; side by side with old revolutionists we see former officials of the czar's police; side by side with noble dreamers we see the faces of criminals; side by side with monarchists we see anarchists—all of them are united in their mad desire to overthrow the Soviet government; and the old English diplomats, who are operating behind their backs, have finally realized that such a union is not stable and that it must be replaced by a whip.

And so the Siberian khedive Kolchak has appeared on the horizon. He began his political career with the arrest of the members of the Constituent Assembly, with the reopening of the vodka factories, and with the reintroduction of the czar's rules against Jews. So the question is as follows: Kolchak, or the Soviets?—The dictatorship of the working people, or the dictatorship of an insignificant group of adventurers, behind the backs of whom there are foreigners? The people, or generals? The decision is clear.

The Soviet government has found it difficult to bring the economic life of Russia back to normal. The peasants have received the land, but remain without agricultural implements, nails and textile goods. The workmen have obtained control over production, but remain without bread and without coal. Production itself has slowed down. The most important factor in this situation is the isolation of Russia. She is practically excluded from the world exchange. She is now like a besieged fortress, a fortress which the enemy wants to take, if not by force of arms then by hunger. By what right? For what? It is said that we have committed two sins. First, we do not want to pay the debt to France. Yes, in principle we do not consider ourselves responsible for the czar's loans, because part of them were expended for the oppression of the Russian people. But practically we do not refuse to discuss this matter—this is quite clear from the note of Tchitcherin of October 26. Second, it is being said that we have betrayed the Allies. In my opinion the Allies have betrayed us and are now dividing among themselves the booty which was promised to us. But we do not protest against this. Proclaiming a peace without annexations and contributions, Russia has renounced her participation in the division of any booty. But having sacrificed for the Allies 7,000,000 of her sons, she is justified in demanding that she be left alone. But let us assume for a second that we are guilty of breaking a treaty; then what about Italy who broke the treaty with the Central Powers? She is being complimented on it!

But we also have a third sin, of which people do not speak aloud: We are weak, but our land is rich—why not make use of it? I understand this perfectly well. Together with England we partitioned Persia and only a short while ago we dreamed of the partition of Austria and Turkey. And now we are being partitioned! I understand it all. I understand the English and French very well, but I cannot understand the Americans at all. We owe you very little; we have no treaties with you and never had any, and in the division of Russia you do not intend to participate. Why then do you keep your soldiers in Russia? The interests of the United States do not conflict with the interests of Russia. More than that, no other country is more interested in the realization of the ideals of the freedom of the seas and the League of Nations, which your president is faithfully upholding in Europe, than Russia. All our seas are not free. Our government is most of all international. Moreover the interests of exchange between Russia and America at present should be mutual. During the war the United States had tremendously developed her production, and she needs foreign markets. Russia could be one. She needs goods. She cannot of herself increase production and stimulate industry. Yet we have plenty to pay with; our natural resources are enormous. The question of how to utilize these resources in order to pay for your goods may be decided upon by mutual understanding and discussion either in Washington or in Moscow, but surely this cannot be decided by mutual destruction in the swamps of Archangel. The Soviet government has attempted many a time to begin such discussions.

This argument is usually disposed of by referring to the Bolshevik danger. First of all, the responsibility of power has compelled the Bolsheviki to become more moderate. Second, the Soviets and the Bolsheviki are not one and the same. The Bolsheviki at the present time dominate the Soviets—to a great extent because of the policy of the Allies. Yet, fearing Bolshevism, you are cultivating it. More than that, by your actions you justify its ideology. As far as the philosophic side of the question is concerned, we differ from the Bolsheviki in the matter of natural impulses. The Bolsheviki say that such impulses are only class interests. We, realizing that class interests are the most important interests of mankind, nevertheless believe that mankind has other interests: Religious, moral, national and esthetic. At present this point of view is being subjected to a difficult trial. There is some ground for your accusation that the Bolsheviki are serving the interests of one class only. But what about those who attempted to tighten a steel lasso around the neck of Russia, those who forget that she came to this condition fighting with the Allies and for the Allies—whom are those interventionists serving? The class interests of the propertied class or the ideal of justice? Is it really possible that these ideals are only a myth?

Class Power

By EUGENE V. DEBS.

Do not allow any of the retainers of the capitalists to fool any of you workers with their silly twaddle about "arraying class against class." That game, to use a bit of slang, is "played out." The classes have been arrayed against each other, lo, these many years, and the capitalists have always been at the top and the workers at the bottom.

If it is wrong for the capitalists and workers to be arrayed against each other then the capitalists must condemn their own system and not attempt to blame the workers for it.

Work is done with tools and these tools today consist of mastodon machines. These machines which do the work in modern industry are owned by the capitalists while they are used by the workers and here is where the workers and the capitalists are face to face in the class struggle, and "class is arrayed against class." The capitalists want the big end in the way of profits and the workers want more wages and this is why these two classes are at war with each other and "class is arrayed against class."

Socialists are opposed to this state of affairs. They believe that capitalism and capitalists have had their day and that they are no longer needed in this day of concentrated and cooperative industry. The workers constitute an overwhelming majority and they are in a class by themselves. They have made all the machinery, they do all the work, and they produce all the wealth, and now they propose to take over to themselves the productive machinery, dispense with the capitalists, and produce wealth for their own consumption and enjoyment.

To inaugurate this change the workers will have to develop and apply their class power. This means that they must unite in one and the same industrial organization and fight the everyday battles of the workers and at the same time organize in one and the same party and vote together at every election day.

The class power of the workers, economic and political, when fully developed and intelligently applied, will set them free and make them the rulers of the earth.

If you believe in this program step into the Socialist line and stand up with your class in the struggle to abolish capitalism and emancipate the working class.

Russia to the Allies

You that allowed the crumbling Czardom room,
Year after year that saw exiles tread
By tens of thousands to their living tomb
In the Siberian waste, and no word said,
What mighty need has brought your armies now?

You that beheld my surging crowds lack food,
My peasants' dream of liberty turn gall
And wormwood of another servitude,
Yet sat not in the judgement seat at all,
What mighty need has brought your armies now?

You have seen the blood upon the snow
Of student and of worker, that have seen
Pogrom, espial, fraud and Cossack-blow
With never a demand to intervene,
What mighty need has brought your armies now?

You that afar off watched the abysmal fire
Of Revolution roll on ended night
Deep after deep the people's dumb desire,
And veiled your eyes from fierceness of the light,
What mighty need has brought your armies now?

I cast the sword away. The torch outshone;
I lifted it against my enemy,
With the authoritative dead alone
I stood the hour that you abandoned me.
What mighty need has brought your armies now?

Evangels of "Democracy," that fly
To me, the reaper of man's tragic good,
Your driven cities left to judge you by
And all the past you bore with fortitude,
What mighty need has brought your armies now?

AFTER THE WAR—WHAT?

By C. E. Ruthenberg

IX.—The End of War

One of the strongest arguments used to secure support of the war by the masses in this country was that it was "a war to end war."

In deciding upon our program of reconstruction it is of paramount importance that we know whether the principles we adopt will lead to realization of the ideal of a society in which there will be no more war.

At the present time an effort is being made to reach this goal through the organization of a League of Nations. This is the means through which the supporters of the present industrial order hope to make war impossible in the future.

The structure of the League of Nations is just emerging from the council of statesmen representing the Allied nations and the United States, but the lines on which the super-national organization is to be built are clear enough to warrant a conclusion in regard to whether it will prove a barrier against future wars.

There are two ways in which the League of Nations is to prevent future wars. It is to be the trustee of the capitalist nations of the world in charge of the backward countries, which are to be administered through "mandatories" under its direction, and there is also to be set up as part of the super-national organization machinery for conciliation and arbitration of disputes which arise between nations.

There is nothing in either of these proposals which will eliminate the cause of wars.

Let us examine the situation we face by considering the relations that will exist between two groups of countries after the peace treaty is signed and the League of Nations organized.

On the one side will be the United States and Japan; on the other Russia and Germany.

It is fairly certain that in the United States and Japan capitalism will still flourish, and we will presume that in Russia and Germany Socialist industrial republics will be established.

We would then find that in the United States and Japan the machinery of production would be in the hands of a relatively small class which would operate the industries for its profit. The workers would be able to secure the opportunity to work only by consent of the owners of industry. When they did work they would receive in wages only a small part of the product of their labor. They would work eight of ten hours per day, but would receive in wages only the product of two or three hours work. The remaining hours after they had produced their wages they would be producing "surplus value" for the owning class.

Since the workers received only part of the value of their product in wages it would naturally follow that they would be unable to buy and consume all of the goods they produced. The capitalist class, relatively small in number, could not consume the goods the workers could not buy and would be compelled to seek foreign markets in which to sell these goods. The capitalists would also amass new capital as a result of the profits they took and this would lead them to seek colonies and "spheres of influence" for development and exploitation.

Thus we would find the capitalists of the United States seeking to control the markets of China and the capitalists of Japan endeavoring to gain control of the same markets; we would find the capitalists of the United States and Japan seeking to exploit the Philippine Islands and the countries of South America. The capitalists of both countries would be driven by the inexorable conditions of capitalist production into bitter competition with each other and the history of the past tells us that such competition begun on the comcercial field would lead inevitably to the battle field.

Will the League of Nations be able to prevent the logical development of commercial rivalry which capitalism produces?

It is an effort in that direction. The capitalists of the world realize the danger for them which accompanies war. Aside from the great destruction of wealth and the piling up of huge mountains of debts, there is always the threat that war will precipitate a revolution, such as took place in Russia, and which, although not yet complete, followed the defeat of Germany. So the League of Nations is being organized to act as the international agent of capitalism and to minimize the possibility of the recurrence of such a conflict as this through which the world has just passed.

The League of Nations, as trustee of the backward and undeveloped countries, assigning to each certain territory for exploitation. When disputes arise the League of Nations will seek to prevent war through conciliation and arbitration.

Can it succeed?

One of the favorite arguments of the supporters of the League of Nations, in support of their scheme, is to point at the fact that the thirteen colonies, after the break with England, were each separate, independent states, which federated as the United States, with resulting harmony and peace.

This argument overlooks the fact that an economic question about which two groups of states differed was left unsettled, and that in spite of all the machinery for settlement of disputes provided in the Constitution of the United States there resulted the bloodiest civil war of modern times over the question whether chattel slavery or wage slavery should prevail.

Just so capitalist Internationalism presenting itself in the form of a League of Nations will have to deal with commercial imperialism—the logical product of the exploitation of the workers in modern industry—which in spite of all the machinery of arbitration and conciliation will drive the capitalist countries to an appeal to arms in the struggle for survival.

Now let us consider Socialist Russia and Socialist Germany, supposing that in the latter country the social revolution is completed and the workers take control of industry.

In each of these countries the industries will no longer be the private property of capitalists. The industries will be owned by the people. The workers in each industry will organize for the management of the industry in which they work. They will select their representatives in city councils, or state or national councils, in which the workers from the various industries will meet to decide matters of common interest. There will be no exploitation of the workers and therefore no need to seek foreign markets in which to sell surplus products. There will be no economic motive to push the workers of Russia into a war with the workers of Japan to decide whether the capitalists of Russia or Japan should exploit the markets and resources of Manchuria, such as took place some fifteen years ago. There will be no economic motive to force the workers of Germany into a struggle to secure control of the spheres of influence in Asia Minor in which to sell surplus products and make more profits for capitalists.

The workers of each country will enjoy the wealth they produce. If, after supplying every family with good food, good clothing, a comfortable home and the opportunity for education and recreation, they find they have surplus products on their hands, they will simply cut down the hours of labor. If the workers of Russia find they are producing too much wheat and need machinery and the workers of Germany produce too much machinery and need wheat, they will arrange for an equal exchange of these products on the basis of their value. The economic motive which drive nations to war will have ceased to exist with the end of exploitation.

Why should the workers of any country wish to ship the goods they produce to foreign countries? Don't they need them? Can't the workers of the United States use the goods they produce in raising the standard of living in this country? Don't we need these goods to abolish poverty? Don't we need more comfortable homes? Can't we take more of the workers from the work of producing commodities and train them to improve our educational system?

The danger of war will exist as long as capitalism exists. The end of war will come with the end of insecurity, exploitation and industrial conflicts when capitalism is abolished. Not a League of Nations but Industrial Democracy is the way to permanent peace.

DRAWING THE MAGIC CIRCLE

The small town editors of the country are having the time of their young and useless lives. Serving in the capacity of lackeys for the big and little business interests of their local communities and receiving their ideas, ideals and inspirations from the same source as their meager incomes, they are emitting most pitiful squeals of late as they view with sympathetic alarm the plight of their masters at the march of the world's proletariat toward Industrial Democracy.

Not daring, in the face of certainty of loss of their meal tickets, to express an idea at variance with the interests of the masters they serve, their [illegible] indeed a pitiful one. Compelled to serve as catspaws to attempt to [illegible] the chestnuts of capitalist interests from the fires of revolution they cut capers indeed in their studious servility to the hand that feeds them. Their breadth of vision is limited to the radius of the circulation of their narrow, mediocre sheets. Their life's outlook consists of a perspective the most salient feature of which is the hope of continued patronage of these same big and little exploiters. Their smiles are to them like sunshine, their patronage is as summer showers to thirsting grass, their favors are the light of day and the height and glory of life. To such depths of depravity are the small town editors of this country reduced.

As an instance of this snivilling servility on the part of editors we cite the editorial column of the St. Marys' (O.) Evening Leader of Jan. 27, wherein an account of the breaking up of a Socialist meeting at New Bremen by rowdyies in uniform, led by a preacher, is condoned and pointed to as an example of the impossibility of planting in that city the seeds of Industrial Democracy.

Our answer is that the petty bourgeois of that locality even with the invaluable assistance of the mud slinging press whose policy their hand controls cannot draw a Magic Circle about New Bremen or any other city that will keep beyond its borders the principles and propaganda of Industrial Democracy.

That mass movement which is sweeping into oblivion political and industrial despots of Europe and even now is a potential force in this nation will scarcely stop at the outskirts of New Bremen. How silly is such meaningless twaddle. But what is to be expected from this crumb-gathering tribe of time-servers?

PANICKY PROFITEERS

Daily the panic among the profiteers increases. Each step of the forward bound hosts of the world's workers is marked by a corresponding quivering and palpitation of the vital organs of the buccaneers of industry as they view with consternation the strides and hear the rumblings of the oncoming revolution.

Gone are the dreams of undisputed and unquestioned exploitation of world markets and the world's workers. In their place has arisen the grim vision of an enraged working class determined to put an end to exploitation by what ever means lie handiest.

The rosy dreams of undisputed control of the world's productive forces by capital which was evident at the time of the signing of the armistice, has in these few short weeks received a rude awakening shock. The very means and source of the power of capital is jeopardized by a new danger that has risen up over night and has compelled the attention of the pirates of finance. All the resources of capital and the capitalist state are being marshalled, not for the furthering of "democracy," but for its stoppage. The great danger that threatens now is not the danger of competitive capitalist nations, but that of an awakened working class of the world. That the financiers are cognizant of the new danger is evident. Every spokesman for capitalist interests voices the rising fear that eats at the heart of capitalism. The fear of extermination as a ruling class is gripping them as they see the revolution developing.

The German revolution added to that of Russia and the growing strength of the Soviet government has given tremendous impetus to the proletarian movement. "Every social system carries within itself the seeds of its own destruction." Capitalism has kindled the fires that shall destroy itself. They have broken forth. From continent to continent they spread. To the workers they mean the light of a new day. To the exploiters they mean oblivion.

How foolish then are the attempts of the hireling press to stand in the path of progress with their panicky cry of "Halt Bolsheviki!" Labor halts not. It has learned its power and is using it to further its own aims, which mean the "expropriation of the expropriators." On with the revolution!

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY

The labor movement in the United States is gagged. It is unable to secure halls for its meetings; hundreds of its speakers are in jail; its papers are denied the mails; its fondest hopes and its noblest ambitions are misrepresented and villified by the capitalist press. The workers of America are kept in ignorance and so far as may be, they are reduced to silence by the masters.

The latest incident in this conspiracy of silence is the police order closing the halls in New York City to Socialists, Internationalists, and radicals.

New York, however, is only an incident. The Non-Partisan League has met with the same treatment inMinnesota, South Dakota and Iowa; the I. W. W. meetings have been broken up all over the country; in many states the Socialists were not even permitted the use of halls during the recent campaign, and last, but by no means least, the American Federation of Labor finds itself unable to secure meeting places in many of the towns around Pittsburg and other great industrial centers. The masters of the United States are determined that the working class shall not be heard.

What shall we do then?

Shall we beg halls from the masters? Shall we petition; protest; demand? What utter nonsense! What silly, idle, trivial waste of energy and time!

When the United States was at war with Germany, did this country beg for German help in order to defeat the German power? Unthinkable! Congress even passed a law forbidding any citizen to trade with the enemy.

The struggle between the masters and the workers is entering upon its final stage. It is a fight to the end, now, between the exploiters and the exploited. THE TIME HAS COME FOR THE AMERICAN WORKERS TO STOP TRADING WITH THE ENEMY. If they want a newspaper, they must own it and support it; if they want a school, they must organize it and control it; IF THEY WANT A MEETING PLACE, THEY MUST BUILD [illegible] The workers of Europe learned this lesson a generation ago. SOMEWHERE IN WEST VIRGINIA

The State Committee, upon being requested to fill the vacancy in the office of State Secretary, elected the writer, H. F. Oberholtzer, by a vote of eleven (all the votes cast). I appreciate the expression of confidence on the part of the committee and promise to discharge the duties of this office as well as my time and ability will enable me to do. As I am not very widely known to the Socialists of the state of West Virginia, my local wished me to announce, through this medium, that my selection was endorsed by unanimous vote of Local Huntington.

I am glad to announce that Comrade Edwin Firth's faithful service to the movement in West Virginia has been recognized by a call to "come up higher." He goes to the National Office, Chicago, to fill a position in the Organization Department. When he gets located, he expects to give his address to the Bulletin and wants his Socialist friends to write to him.

Last week, we had the pleasure of meeting a very sociable Socialist, in the person of Comrade H. W. Crowder M. A. L. of Handley, W. Va. He not only put himself in good standing far into the year 1919, but subscribed for the Ohio Socialist, for a year.

Fairmont local bought seven dollars worth of dues stamps in the month of January and reports nine new members. Its secretary, Jesse Bird, has convinced us by his activities in the movement, that Jesse is not the kind of a "bird" that likes to hover around anything dead. He recently ordered a bundle of Ohio Socialists of the issue of Jan. 15th, containing the Constitution of the Soviet Government of Russia. We hope he organizes a Soviet at Fairmont.

Socialism is great stuff if you don't weaken. What's the matter with Elkins, Beckley, Moundsville, and all the other big buyers of dues stamps in 1918? Well, I will confess that the Huntington locals have nothing to boast of. They were just about dead at the close of the war, but both locals have admitted several new members since that time. Local Elizabeth is having trouble to find a place to meet since Comrade Franklin moved away. A number of the comrades of Local Huntington enjoyed a good dinner after the meeting of the local, three weeks ago Sunday, at Comrade Gillespie's. Comrade Nora Gillespie can prepare a good dinner or write a good article with equal facility. Am sorry to report that Comrade G. W. Gillespie, known over the state as one of the "wheel horses" of the Socialist Party, has not been very robust this winter, being compelled to miss some of the meetings of the local on account of his health.

Comrade Nick Reinhardt of Moundsville thinks we ought to have a state convention, this year sometime, to get ready for a larger part in the political affairs of the country. I do not find any provision in the constitution for a convention in any year except those in which a gubernatorial election is held, but I will welcome a full and free expression from the comrades on this or any other matter.

The State Office has nearly a thousand constitutions of the Socialist Party of West Virginia. Any number you may order will be mailed to you at 5 cents the copy. Comrade Franklin expressed the opinion, some time ago, that a local should be satisfied that a candidate for membership was familiar with the provisions of our State Constitution before being admitted. We also have a good supply of Monthly Report Cards. We have not received a single report from the corresponding secretaries of the locals since we have had charge of this office. We urge that all secretaries begin now and report regularly every month so that we shall be able to let the membership know, through The Bulletin, what is being done in West Virginia for the cause of Socialism.

Did you notice, in the last January issue of the Ohio Socialist, the good work reported from Roncevert in the way of getting subs? Just contemplate, for a moment, what effect it would have on the movement in West Virginia for a good radical paper like the Ohio Socialist to have 50 to 100 subscribers in every county in the state.

How would it strike you, comrades, to ask the Ohio Socialist to give the Socialist Party of West Virginia a column in every issue for West Virginia contributions and news? I am satisfied such a request would be heard if the "call was loud enough." All we would have to do would be to contribute funds, by way of subscriptions, that would merit such concession.

Attend These Meetings Don't Miss Them

Here are meetings scheduled for the next few days. Every comrade who can, should attend the meetings most convenient. Record breaking audiences are greeting our speakers at every point. Attend these meetings and take some one with you.

Niles and Youngstown.

Tom Lewis speaks at Niles Sunday afternoon, Feb. 16, Niles Opera House. Admission free. He will speak at Youngstown same day in the evening. Tom Lewis will teach you more real Socialism in an hour than you ever learned before in a day. Take a crowd with you and hear this proletarian agitator. He'll put fire in your veins. Hear him.

Akron Meetings.

Feb. 16—Frank Midney of Youngstown.

Feb. 23—Dennis E. Batt, Associate Editor, The Proletarian.

March 2—C. E. Ruthenberg, of Cleveland.

These meetings will take place at 50 South Howard St. Each one of these speakers deserves a crowded hall. Be there to help make the meetings successful.

Scott Nearing Dates.

It may be possible that Comrade Scott Nearing will not be able to fill his dates in Ohio owing to his trial not having been concluded by this time. In that case he will be substituted by either Kate Richards O'Hare or John Reed of the Liberator Group. Nearing's dates are: Canton, Feb. 13, Music hall; Dayton, Feb. 14; Cleveland, Feb. 16, 1000 Walnut St., Moose hall, 2:30 afternoon.

Thurber Lewis Dates.

Organization work will be undertaken at these points on the date named. Alliance Feb. 14, 15; Girard, 16, 17. Other dates are being arranged. Comrade Lewis is doing good work and a further routing is being made up.

More Debs Dates.

Comrade Debs will fill the following dates: [illegible] Sunday, Feb. 16. At [illegible] hoped that several locals will be able to make dates upon the short notice they received.

Columbus Meeting.

C. E. Ruthenberg will speak at Columbus, Sunday, Feb. 23, 2:30 p. m., 50 1-2 W. Gay St.

Baker Speaking Dates.

New Bremen, Feb. 14; Convoy, Feb. 16; Indianapolis, Ind., Feb. 16; St. Marys, Feb. 17, 18; Wapakoneta, Feb. 19, 20; Jenera, Feb. 21, 22; Bluffton, Feb. 23; Findlay, Feb. 24, 25; North Baltimore, Feb. 26; Napoleon, Feb. 27, 28; Fremont, March 1, 2; Greenwich, March 3, 4.

Available Speakers.

W. R. Snow will begin organization work in Ohio March 2. He will spend a week in Belmont county. Other dates will be announced later. Locals are requested to write for a date for Comrade Snow as soon a possible in order that there may be no lapse in his work.

H. L. A. Hollman of Texas is ready to fill dates and locals are requested to notify the State Office when they can use him. Make your application NOW.

Dennis E. Batt is ready to fill fourteen dates in Ohio following his Cleveland date on Feb. 23. Terms are ten dollars per lecture and expenses. You will make no mistake in securing a date for Comrade Batt. Make application early.

Reports of Baker's Meetings.

Reports of Comrade Chas. Baker's meetings continue to prove that while capitalism is stricken with a paralytic stroke, Socialism is alive and kicking at an unprecedented rate. Crowded halls greet him at every point, large collections are the rule, great interest is manifested at every point and a general awakening is felt in each locality as a result of his meetings.

Comrade Baker reports a good meeting at Portsmouth and that the comrades are raising an organization fund with which to employ an organizer for several weeks. In all prob[illegible]

COLUMBUS NOTES

The Socialist movement here is improving steadily and surely. The old comrades that stood the test in the critical times of the recent past have taken on new hope, and the new comrades are very enthusiastic and ask the local to order fifty copies a week of the Ohio Socialist to be systematically used among our shopmates, and fellow workers, then after giving copies to persons for a reasonable length of time ask for their subscription, and support of the paper, and in that way we can build up a large subscription list for the Ohio Socialist and arouse the spirit of revolt that appears to be lying dormant in the hearts and minds of the workers in this locality.

Comrade Sharts of Dayton was with us last Sunday and gave us a good educational lecture, and the attendance was good and everybody was attentive, and very enthusiastic, and much good will come from it as it was looked upon as being legal, and Henry Dub thinks anything legal is just the thing whether it is right or not. Just so it is LEGAL.

E. B. EUBANKS.

WATCH THIS BRANCH

We are confidentially informed that the First Ward Branch of Local Columbus will bear watching. Something is going on there that looks mighty bad for the movement—the reactionary movement. This branch, so we are informed bought 60 dues stamps last month and seems determinedly headed for battle. So we pass it on to our readers in a whisper to watch the First Ward Branch of the Capitol City, they're a live bunch and they appear to be growing.

NORWOOD NOTES

Local Norwood is among the locals which have experienced a recent awakening. Now the members are ready to do things in style. Each third Monday evening is set aside for propaganda purposes. They also ask for a speaker for the Sunday before these meetings. Comrade Rummele places an order for a bundle of twenty Ohio Socialists each week. Norwood comrades are starting right and results are sure to come forthwith.

MORE PAYING AHEAD

Local Niles has opened a campaign to get every member paid up for 1919. Campaign closes April 1. Comrade Bernard Kohn writes that he has gotten 13 so far and good prospects for more. To say the least this is a dandy idea. Other locals can start a similar campaign and thus put pep and action in the local membership.

KENMORE MEMBERS PAYING UP

A letter from Comrade Fred W. Seibert of Kenmore states that the members are paying up arrearages and taking a more active part in the movement. This is the news that comes in to the State Office from all parts of the state. Keep after them, comrades—capitalism is with us these days. Take advantage of the opportunities its present paralysis presents us with.

DANCE AT CINCINNATI

Local Cincinnati will hold a dance and general entertainment on Feb. 22 for the benefit of the campaign fund. Every comrade is urged to help make this affair the most successful ever. It promises to be a great affair as great interest is being taken by many comrades. The Sunday lectures, which the local holds weekly are a success though there seems to be proof that the law and order gang would only be too well pleased to break them up.

DOING FINE

Comrade Toohey reports that Local Toledo is in fine financial trim, having taken in over $600 last month at headquarters. This sum is realized from the sale of literature, soft drinks, pool, etc. This is exclusive of receipts from meetings which have also been very successful. Such receipts indicate the strength of the local movement and is a monument to the untiring efforts which the comrades are putting into the work. More power to them.

Canton Organized German Branch.

A new German branch with 13 charter members has been organized at Canton. Richard Schrader is organizer and Albert Mallon secretary. To the comrades of this branch we extend congratulations upon having effected an organization and thus taken a determined step toward the emancipation of the workers.

Belmont county.

Comrade Beery reports Baker's Mansfield meeting an entire success. A number of Ohio Socialist subscriptions were secured, several new members taken into the organization and last but not least a collection of $35.50 was taken. The comrades there are jubilant over the success of the meeting and want more like it.

The Akron meeting was a huge success. The hall was packed long before the time for the meeting and another hall had to be secured for the hundreds who could not get in. As in other instances one hall proved inadequate for the great numbers who wish to hear the message of Socialism [illegible]

The Statistician

Dear Comrades:—In whatever state you may be—Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky, Virginia, Illinois or New Mexico.

The new social order will come in spite of all opposition. It has seen the light of day in Russia and various parts of Germany. The enlightened, emboldened working class cannot be halted on the road to "Industrial Freedom." Social revolutions are, as our Comrade Kirkpatrick states, never noisy or bloody unless the ruling class impudently stands across the path of human progress and commands, Halt!

When all obstacles placed by the desperate bourgeoisie are overcome by class-conscious workers, attempts to sidetrack the movement are made by adopting socialism, which is really state capitalism, and to do this they hide behind the most conservative type of Socialist. Past events bear out this statement, Russia had her Kerensky, Germany has her Scheidemann and Ebert, America her Spargo and Russell, etc.

Throughout the world in so-called political democracies, the election laws are passed by the bourgeoisie to forestall any political uprising on the part of their duped subjective workers. This matter cannot be taken up in any detailed manner for lack of space. Proportionate representation is denied in most all democratic nations. England demonstrated this point, just two weeks ago. The Union party polling 3,700,000 votes seated 259 members to parliament; the Independent Labor Party polling 2,700,000 votes, seated (not 262) but only 65 representatives.

The electorial system is another way of defeating the political revolt of any peoples. Then what is the moral?

Although it appears that the assassination of Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, has made the holding of the elections impossible in some localities of Germany the figures that are available are very interesting, although not conclusive.

The following data scrupulously compiled, gives the reader an idea of the trend of events there. The privileged class hiding behind the Evert-Scheideman group is as yet in power.

Representation of the various German parties in the reichstag during the years 1917 and 1918 are given below, and also the newly gained representation of these parties and the losses of the reactionary bourgeoisie parties.

The following will clear up the situation in Germany, somewhat in the minds of the readers:

German Elections.

	Pct. of Represent.
Party.	1917	1919
Minority Socialist	5	9
Majority Socialist	22	42
Christian Peoples (Centrists)	23	20
Democratic	22	18

Guelf	1	1
Other petty bourgeoisie parties	3	1.6
Polish Party	4	0
Totals	100	100
Socialist groups	27	51
Bourgeoisie	73	49

Other interesting data that can be gleaned from current events, are the figures published by the National Office of the S. P. of U. S. A.

The increase of stamps sold during the month of November, 1918, over the sales of October, 1918, was 7 per cent.

The sales of December, 1918, over November the preceding month was only 28 per cent. and all data obtainable as to sales of January, 1919, point to the fact that it surpassed that of December, 1918, by 35 per cent.

Membership of the Socialist Party of Ohio.

How many members has your local? Your district? The report for Dec., 1918, shows 31 locals have secured 225 new members, have 3,403 members in good standing out of an entire roll of 5,190, a percentage of .656, an increase of .074 over last month's effort.

Just think, comrades, the roll of 31 locals show 5,190 members and these are at least 70 other locals to hear from.

Good Standing Mempership.

Local Mount Vernon gained first place for its activities during last month. It made .912 of its entire membership "pay up" and secured new members equaling 42 per cent. of its previous good standing membership.

Can your local equal this?

Increase in Membership.

225 new members reported. How many members can we bring in next month? As there are 6,000 paid up members in state and average increase 1 to every 20, we should make it 300.

The following locals surpassed the 5 per cent. test:

Name.	New Members.	Pct. of Good Stand.
Mt. Vernon	6	42
Niles	14	22
Portage County	9	17

Let us surpass this record by next month! A revolutionary local never beats a retreat, in volume of propaganda work, increase of membership and other essential work.

Where does your local stand?
Where do you belong?
Comrades! Let us try again.
Yours for the Social Revolution,

OBITUARY

Comrade George Milton, faithful comrade and member of the city council of Byesville, was killed in the mine where he was employed, Jan. 9. Comrade Milton enjoyed the entire confidence of the comrades of Byesville and his passing is a distinct loss to the movement there. He leaves a wife and several children to whom his comrades extend their sincerest sympathy.

THEY WILL STAY NOW

Writing in a letter lately received Comrade H. Wiechers, the prompt and efficient secretary of Local Columbus, says, "New members will, I think, remain in the party in the future, as they are now provided with the right kind of brain food through the medium of the Ohio Socialist." Thus the stand of the party for support of the party press by the membership is approved.

NEWS AND VIEWS—A WEEKLY SURVEY

Edited By C. E. Ruthenberg

Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde

President Wilson seems to be playing the part of that character we owe to the genius of Robert Louis Stevenson, who as Dr. Jekyl was a kind, generous, philonthropic gentlemen, who, on occasions changed himself into the vicions, murderous Mr. Hyde, through the use of a mysterious drug he had discovered.

In the French Chamber of Deputies Mr. Wilson told the assembled members of that body—and history records that the Socialists applauded vigorously, that:

> "The nations of the world are about to consummate a brotherhood which will make unnecessary in the future to maintain those crushing armaments which made the people suffer, almost as much in peace as they suffer in war."

The same newspaper that reported Mr. Wilson's idealistic speech to the assembled Frenchmen carried on the front page this news dispatch:

> Washington, Feb. 4.—The president still adheres to his desire for a large navy and is "insistent and earnest" that a new three-year building program be authorized. Chairman Padgett of the House naval committee told the House today at opening of debate on the new navy bill, providing a $700,000,000 construction program.
> The president cabled urging prompt action by congress.

Dr. Jekyl Wilson preaching the evils of crushing armaments stands in sharp contrast to Mr. Hyde Wilson urging congress to put on the shoulders of the American people the crushing burden of $700,000,000 to be spent for a greater navy. Has the president so little faith in his own program that he insists and urges that these hundreds of millions, which might be used to give better educations to the children of the workers of this country, be wasted in building instruments of destruction? Does he realize that in spite of all his fair words the capitalist system will remain the same murderous, criminal "thing" that it was in August of 1914?

Foreign Trade

A month or two ago the capitalist class of this country was conducting a campaign to educate the workers to an understanding of the advantages of foreign trade. Full page advertisements in the kept press glowingly described the general prosperity which would result from capture of the world markets by the capitalists of this country.

It happens frequently that the supporters of capitalism "let the cat out of the bag" and admit the real facts about a subject when discussing it in relation to a diqerent matter from that in which they have tried to present a certain view to the workers.

In the matter of foreign trade this happened a few days ago. In the educational campaign the workers were told that foreign trade meant a great advantage to them. In discussing how Germany is to meet the big hill which the Allies propose presenting for payment, one of the capitalist newspapers conveyed this interesting piece of information:

> "Germany must not only make money in marks but in the currency of the associated powers. This means that her exports must exceed her imports."

When Germany's exports exceed her imports the balance of foreign trade will be in her favor, the situation which the capitalists of this country have been seeking to bring about, but here we have added the new proposition that only through such a development can Germany pay her debt to the Allies. If that means anything it means that the German people will lose through foreign trade. They will be giving up part of the wealth they produce to someone else. And that is the fact of the matter in every country. Foreign trade means that goods are sent away from a country and insofar as the balance of trade is in favor of any particular country it has lost the opportunity to consume and enjoy that much of the wealth it produced.

The only difference is that when their is no great debt to pay such as the Allied nations propose to compel Germany to pay, the capitalists at home build up credit balances on foreign countries upon which they receive interest which adds to their incomes.

The workers have nothing to gain through a foreign trade balance; they lose the enjoyment of part of the wealth they produce.

Democracy—A Comparison

The two houses of the legislature of Ohio adopted a resolution last week urging the senators from Ohio to vote in favor of the suffrage amendment to the constitution, pending in the senate.

This little incident offers an excellent opportunity for comparison between the kind of democracy which exists in Russia and in the United States.

Under the Russian Soviet plan of government the delegates to the All-Russian Soviet can be withdrawn at any time by the constituency which sent them. It is recorded that at a certain period the character of the Petrograd Soviet changed in a single week from predominantly Bolshevik to a predominant Menshevik majority and then changed back again in a like period.

In the United States we elect senators for a period of six years and after the election they are free to act as they see fit, irrespective of the wishes of their constituency. The best that we can do is to petition them as the legislature petitioned Mr. Pomerene and Mr. Harding.

Which is the most democratic government, the Russian, in which the wishes of the people are quickly registered, or ours, which leaves us at the mercy of our representatives once they are elected?

* * * *

The Berne Conference

The Berne International Socialist and Labor Conference is justifying all that has been said in opposition to it. Thus far the twc momentous questions with which the conference has been considering have been responsibility for the war and recognition of the Soviet government of Russia.

The fact that the delegates to this conference should waste time talking about whether one nation or another was the principal factor in precipitating the war and should hesitate at all about recognizing the first Socialist government which has been established, shows how much they are out of touch with the new spirit of the workers.

The New Internationale, which is coming into being will be built on a different basis and manifest a different spirit than that which is futilely discussing the dead past and refusing to deal with the living present, at Berne.

How The Spy Law Worked

The Espionage Law was named so as to give the impression that it was passed in order to curb the activities of German spies in this country, but under cover of passing a bill, which had to do with spies, congress passed a law which placed in the hands of a single individual more autocratic power over the press of this country than has ever been given a single man anywhere; it also passed a law which made it possible to send men and women to prison for twenty years for stating their conscientious views about the war in speech.

These things had nothing to do with German spies but they are part of the Espionage Law. Possibly they were made part of this law because congress knew that it could get general approval for a law dealing with spies, but that if it endeavored openly to rape the right of free speech and free press, as is done in this law, it would raise a mighty storm of protest.

Now come the National Civil Liberties Bureau to tell us that the Espionage Law in practice has not been used in a single instance to halt the activities of spies. Says the Bureau in a recent bulletin:

> This bureau has had since the beginning of the war a standing order with a newspaper clipping company covering all reference in the press of the United States to disloyalty, sedition, espionage and the Espionage Law. As a result we have the most illuminating record of cases which it has been possible to complete without access to records of the Attorney General. We have no record of a single instance when a spy has been imprisoned under this law.
> Furthermore, in the cases cited in the Attorney General's report, as typical of those prosecuted under the Espionage Law, there is not one case in which the prisoner was convicted of being a paid German spy, or of even trying to find out military secrets.

But several thousand men and women have been imprisoned or are under indictment because they dared voice their views about the war in speech or writing.

In spite of this demonstration that the Espionage Law is an anti-free speech law and a censorship law, the senate the other day refused to permit consideration of Senator Borah's resolution repealing those sections of the law which give the Postmaster General the power to arbitrarily bar newspapers and periodicals from the mails, if, in his opinion, they violate the drastic and wide-reaching provisions of the law.

Toward Revolution

The strikes in Great Britain daily take on more of the appearance of a revolt of the workers against the entire system of capitalist industry than mere strikes to attain some particular concession from the employers.

Breaking the bonds which have held them under the leadership of conservative trade union officials and casting to the winds the safe and sane program of the British Labor party, the workers are resorting to the compulsion of their own power in industry to attain their goal.

What this goal is, is outlined by William Z. Watson, member of the Shop Stewards' Administrative Council:

> The shop stewards hope to establish revolutionary committees like those in Russia. We already represent 50 per cent. of the English laborers. We are "direct-actionists" as opposed to regular unionists, who are constitutionalists. We are against the bourgeoisie. We hope they will submit to the new regime, but if they are obstreperous we intend to be firm. Personally, I would not be surprised to see violence in England; but I hope it won't come. I presume it will be necessary to control the London newspapers. We do not intend to touch the telegraph lines. We intend to use the present controllers of industry as managers under us—when they are good fellows. Our present program includes a forty-hour week, perhaps shorter, if it should be found desirabie.

Another writer gives the causes of the strikes as:

> The failure of the trade unions to defend the rights of the workers against the steady encroachments of the capitalist class and of the capitalist government.
>
> The failure of politics to satisfy the clearly voiced demands of the workers.
> The "trick election."
> The inspiration of the Russian revolution.
> The desire for a radical change in the structure of British society, much further reaching than any trade unions or political parties can offer.
> The conviction that the object of the war can be actually achieved if labor sets out to achieve them.

No wonder Lloyd George, with this volcano bursting under him at home, has adopted a conciliatory attitude at Prais and has agreed to withdraw English soldiers from Russia. Very evidently this action is not the result of any consideration for the Russian workers, but action taken to prevent Lloyd George and his crew from being blown sky high by the volcano of sentiment among the workers of Britain who are preparing to following the Russian example.

More Light on Russia

Evidence piles up daily that the Soviet government of Russia has the support of all but a very small minority of the people and that it is pushing forward far-reaching work of reconstruction, which makes the new regime more stable and secure. No doubt it was a knowledge of these facts, kept from the people of this country, that lead the Supreme Council at Paris to make its proposition for a conference at the Princess Island, which according to the latest dispatches, has been accepted by the Soviet government.

One of the latest descriptions of conditions in Russia is presented "by an educated Russian who holds a responsible position in the United States government" who spent six months in Russia recently. His statement, appearing in the New York Call, follows:

> "The one desire of the Russian people is to establish a stable government which will insure them what is granted by the American Constitution—'life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.' Because the Bolshevik leaders have proved their capacity to provide this trinity of blessings, there is now hardly a Russian with any social consciousness who is not whole-heartedly behind the Soviet government.
> "Whether or not the present form of government is the one best adapted for Russia and her people, time alone will tell. For the present, one thing is certain: After 15 months of control, it is amazingly strong, amazingly popular, and, I dare venture, far more stable than was either our own or the French government fifteen months after their establishment by revolution.
> "The principal factor in bringing this strength about has been the downright stupidity of the Allied governments in supporting every counter-revolutionary move launched by the blackest reactionaries of the czar's regime. The attitude of the Allied powers is incomprehensible to the rank and file of the Russian people, and recent talk of armed intervention in force rouses in them a feeling which it would be well to realize in this country.
> Allies Supported Czar.

> "Talk that the Bolsheyiki are aiming to extend their control over Europe is frankly slanderous and can only be explained by a fear among the western democracies that the Soviet form of government is so righteous and just that the plain people everywhere would support it if they came to know it as it really it.
> "The sole aim of the Russian Soviet government now is internal reconstruction, but it is quite possible that if the Allies persist in military aggression, Lenine and Trotzky will appeal to the workers everywhere to rise in their might and prevent this dreadful crime against humanity. It is the blind policy of imperialistic diplomacy which threatens to make Bolshevism a world force —not anything which the Bolshevises themselves are doing or plan.

> "On one think I fully agree with the newspaper accounts of conditions in Russia; and that is, that the power of the Soviets is growing daily. The Bolsheviki are now in firm possession of Saratov, Kazan, Samara and a large part of the Ukraine. Food conditions are getting better all the time.
> "A new spirit is behind the Soviet armies and the industrial army that will support them to the last ditch, in case the Allies decide on war. Production for the defense of the republic is proceeding at any amazing rate and in the munition factories the workers are turning out artillery and shells, not for a wage pittance, but because they know their utmost efforts are necessary for the defense of a real ideal.
> "If America is anxious to establish Bolshevism as a lasting force, not only in Russia, but in many other parts of the world, no more effective step to bring about this end could be conceived than a war with the lusty young Soviet republic."

Here is a good one from the Christian Science Monitor's Washington correspondent:

> "Bolshevism is recognized here as the anthesis of all that the United States government stands for. It is made up of the skulking, disorganized horde of evil following up the organized forces of evil of the central empires, from which it differs in character in no respect save its lack of organization.
>
> "It is this element to which attacks upon the president furnish ammunition, aid and comfort, for increasing his baneful influence. The following remark was made to the correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor on Wednesday by a Labor Department official:
> "If congress would make an appropriation of $100,000,000 to carry on needed public improvements at once, that body would serve the public interest by providing work for a vast number of men, and give the industries a chance to readjust themselves. If you provide work for everybody, you destroy Bolshevism."

All those awful words about Bolshevism and then the frank admission that Bolshevism is the protest against the evils of the capitalist system, which denies them the opportunity to earn a living! How the poor apologists for things as they are do flounder about!

* * * *

Even the conservative unions of railway employes have caught the infection of Bolshevism. Of course it is a safe and sane and entirely acceptable form of Bolshevism from the standpoint of the capitalist class, but it shows the influence of the Russian Revolution just the same. The union proposed to the senate intersetate commerce committee that the government permanently retain control of the railroads, exchanging government for railroad securities, and turn the operation of the roads over to a corporation to be formed by the railroad employes for that purpose. This corporation would be in effect a great union of railroad employes, for it is to have no other capital than its "operating ability." The corporation would pay the government a rental for the use of the property and split the earnings over a certain figure between the government and the employes. Wipe out the bonds and rentals and this scheme becomes the Russian plan of managing industry. If even the railroad workers unions have caught the fever, there is hope for the workers of this country.

Benjamin Karr, who does the dirty work of capitalism in his column on "Events-Comments" in the Cleveland News, complains that a certain W. D. Childs, representative of the Western Union Telegraph, starved to death in Petrograd and used this incident for the basis of a charge that "the evils of the old autocratic government of the czar seems mild by contrast." We remember, Mr. Karr, that just a few years ago several men and women, during a period of unemployment such as seems to be upon us again, died of starvation in Cleveland, and we did not have the excuse that a ring of foreign bayonets cut us off from the source of our food supplies, as in the case in Russia today. How about it, Mr. Karr?

* * * *

The senate has directed one of its committees to investigate the source of the funds which are being used to carry on Bolshevist propaganda in this country. There is no mystery about it. Everybody but the members of the senate know that these funds are the result of contributions of nickels and dimes and quarters of the workers who are determined to replace the capitalist system by a new industrial order that will give them what they produce and assure them the opportunity to earn a living at all times.

The newspapers are already shouting with glee at the prospect of the United States becoming "mandatory" for Mexico under the new League of Nations. Capitalism hopes to trick the people by carrying on the old game under a new name.

GERMAN SOCIALISTS IN WAR-TIME

By ANISE, Union Record.

(Facts taken from Labor Year Book, issued by Rand School; and "German Social Democracy During the War," by Edwin Bevan, published by George Allen and Unwin Co., London).

VI. TOWARDS THE REVOLUTION.

As we saw in yesterday's account, even a year ago there was a strong urge toward peace among the German people, and this urge was bringing many into the ranks of the more radical Socialist group, the Independent Social Democratic Party. An article in the Neue Zeit for November 9, 1917, tells the story:

"The party controversy, as such, is carried on almost entirely by the leaders. The masses have no interest in theoretical disagreements.

"What the masses want is PEACE; they want peace immediately, and since they largely believe that they can get it only by fighting their own government, and this fight does not seem to them to be carried on energetically enough by the old Social Democratic Party, they either desert the party altogether, grumbling and dissatisfied, or they range themselves with those who, it seems, are carrying on this fight more relentlessly, and who make them the biggest promises—the Independent Social Democratic Party. What brings adherents to the Independents is the general embitterment."

A rather remarkable article, isn't it, for war-times; but the independent organs were publishing many statements like that a year ago.

The Russian Peace.

Then came the November Revolution in Russia, and the "brigand's peace" at Brest-Litovsk, when Trotzky, having behind him a fast-vanish-some of the men who are friendly to the defense on the witness stand and then putting all kinds of personal questions that has nothing to do with the case in point, but the end is gained by Fickert, he dotes on asking these ing army and a starving people, made [illegible] and tried by [illegible] bring about a revolution in Germany.

Much will still remain to be learned about this period both in Germany and in Russia; much that cannot be cleared up now. It is beginning to seem true, as declared by many persons, that Trotzky made a formal offer to the Allies to continue the fight against Germany, if the Allies would supply food and munitions. In any event, the Allies, who had distrusted Russia even under the Kerensky regime, made no effort to save her. The appeal to the German working class failed; no revolution came off; and Russia, beaten to her knees, signed a humiliating peace.

Militarism Revives in Germany.

For a short period it seems evident that this peace gave a new lease of life to militarism in Germany; just as it seems possible, unless Wilson and those supporing him are sufficiently strong, the completeness of the victory over Germany may at the present time give a new lease of life to militarism among the Allies.

The Pan-Germans acclaimed the victory as their own; the people expected bread and perhaps, before too long a time, peace—a military peace. And since it was now the Pan-Germans who seemed able to make good their promise of peace, their popularity grew. In any event, writers in the early part of January indicate a lessening of the strength of the Independent Socialists.

The Majority Socialists swallowed the bitter pill of compromise. They went back on their professional principles; their position may be roughly outlined as follows: "Not a peace which we approve, but still, it is a peace; and if one nation is going to trample on another, better we [illegible] the Russians than the [illegible]" complaining that the power of the Independents is lessening, we on this side of the ocean began to hear from Austria the submerged growls of revolution. What caused the change?

The barriers on the east were broken own, and a stream of propagandists were let loose from Russia. Louis Edgar Browns, correspondent of the Chicago Daily News and in Russia with the American Red Cross, states that 20,000 agents of the Bolshevik government were busy spreading revolutionary agitation in Austria, spreading the terms of the unjust peace, spreading the ideals of the Russians, which they, the German workers, were helping to crush from the face of the earth.

The soldiers, surging back across the country from the Russian front, carried the seeds of the propaganda spread among them by tons of pamphlets by the Russian soldiers and workmen.

Worst of all, the expected food from the Ukraine and Russia did not come. All through this time we hear complains against the lying promises of the government. And when they heard that the peasants of the Ukraine were burning their own food, and starving themselves, to prevent wheat from falling into the hands of Germans, it could hardly have increased their feeling of self-content.

The Battles in the West.

All this time the battle line on the West Front was being hammered. While the number of new American troops were hardly significant until very recently, their fresh enthusiasm was contagious. The war began to seem, not over, but just beginning.

And yet all this time, do you remember how our military men bade us expect no peace until 1920 or later. How strong they said the German military forces were. Taking them at their word in the matter on which they were informed, we must realize that military force alone could not have brought so speedy a peace.

But, even while a new war-weariness was settling upon the German peoples at the sight of the fresh determination of the Allies, all this time the speeches of Wilson, offering just terms of peace, poured into Germany. Some of them printed openly; others smuggled in by the Russians, who maintained a clever and effective propaganda service to the very beginning of the German revolution.

And so it happened that cabinet [illegible]

Spartacans Make Appeal

the 'rights of small nations,' 'self-determination of the peoples,' then these are but the usual lying phrases of the rulers to lull the vigilance of the proletariat.

"Proletarians of all countries! This war must be the last! We owe that to the 12,000,000 of slaughtered victims. We owe it to our children, we owe it to humanity. Europe is ruined by the murder of nations. Twelve million corpses cover the grewsome fields of the imperialistic crimes. The flowers of youth and the best man power of the peoples have been destroyed. Humanity is very near being bled white by the unexampled bloodietting of history. Victor and vanquished alike stand at the brink of the precipice. Humanity is menaced by the most terrible famine stoppage of the whole productive mechanism, by pestilence and degeneration.

Capitalists Impotent.

"The big criminals of this awful anarchy, of this unfettered chaos—the ruling classes—are not capable of controlling their own work. The beast, capital, which conjured up this hell of the world war, is not able to check it again, to re-establish real order, to assure to suffering humanity bread and work, peace and culture, justice and liberty.

"What is prepared by the ruling classes as peace and justice is only a new work of brute force, out of which the hydra of oppression, of hatred and of new bloody wars will raise its thousand heads.

"Socialism alone is able to accomplish the great work of a lasting peace, to heal the thousand bleeding wounds of humanity, to transform the fields of Europe, trampled down by the apocalyptic riders, into blooming gardens, to magically replace ten-fold the destroyed productive forces, to awaken all physical and moral powers of humanity, and to replace hatred and strife by brotherly solidarity, concord and respect for all that bear the countenance of man.

"If the representatives of the proletarians of all countries shake hands under the banner of Socialism, to make peace, then the peace will be made in a few hours. There will be no issues of controversy about the left bank of the Rhine, Mesopotamia, Egypt or the colonies. There will be only one people—the toilers of all races and tongues. Then there will be only one right—the equality of all human beings. There will be only one goal—welfare and progress for all.

"Humanity is confronted by the alternative—dissolution and perishing in the capitalist anarchy, or renaissance through social revolution. The hour of decision has struck. If you believe in Socialism, now is the time to prove it by deeds. If you are Socialists, it now rests with you to act.

World Ripe for Revolt.

"Proletarians of all countries, if we now call upon you for the common fight, it is not for the sake of the firm name 'German nation,' try to escape the consequences of their own crimes. It is for our sake, as well as your own. Remember, your victorious capitalists stand ready to suppress our revolution, which they fear as much as their own. You, yourselves, are not free by the 'victory,' you are only more enslaved, should your ruling classes succeed in strangling the proletarian revolution in Germany and in Russia, then they will turn against you with double force. Your capitalists hope that the victory over us, as over revolutionary Russia, will give them the power to whip you with scorpions and to erect the milennium of exploit upon the grave of Socialism.

"The proletariat of Germany, therefore, at this hour looks up to you. Germany is ripe for the social revolution, but Socialists can only realize by the world proletariat. And, therefore, we appeal to you.

"On to the fight! On to deeds! The time for empty manifestos, platonic resolutions and high-sounding words is gone; the hour for action has come.

"Not Lloyd George and Poincare, not Sonnino, Wilson and Erzberger or Scheidemann must be allowed to conclude peace. The peace must be concluded under the floating banner of the Socialist world revolution.

"Proletarians of all countries! We call upon you to complete the work of Socialist emancipation, to place upon the abused world a new human aspect and to prove true to that word, so often used by us in meeting and in parting: The international party shall be the human race!

New Trial For Socialists

court is in a different atmosphere from that of the jury, and the court may well review the jury's verdict with care and consideration. The intellectual capacity of the jury, in a trial of this kind, is incapable of making the distinctions and discriminations necessary to examine carefully into all the highways and the byways of the evidence of this case.

Attorney Seymour Stedman, chief counsel for the Socialists, opened the arguments for a new trial by attacking the charge of Judge Landis to the jury. He also put emphasis on the fact that much that had happened before the espionage act became a law, and even before the war started, had been admitted as evidence over the protest of the defense. Special stress was put on the fact that Berger's article, "Ballots and Bullets," published in the Milwaukee Social-Democratic Herald, more than ten years ago had been allowed to go before the jury.

"I don't know why that was dragged in here," said Cochems, in his argument, covering the same ground that Stedman had gone over.

Raise Point of Error.

Attorneys for the convicted Socialists raised a number of points of error. These were outlined as follows:

Overruling the defendants' motion to quash the indictment.

Overruling the defendants' demurrer to the indictment.

That the verdict was contrary to the law of the case.

That the verdict was not supported by evidence.

Permitting attorneys for the prosecution to appeal to the political passions and prejudices of the jurors.

Improperly charging the jury.

Refusing to give instructions requested by the defendants.

Irregularities Charged.

Refusing to set aside the verdict upon it being disclosed that there were irregularities in communications prejudicial to the defendants by and between the jurors and a deputy marshal or marshals.

Misconduct of counsel.

In refusing to grant a new trial upon a newly discovered evidence submitted to the court.

In overruling the plea of a former acquittal [illegible] venue.

In refusing competent evidence offered by the defendants.

In refusing to direct a verdict of not guilty at the close of the evidence in behalf of the government.

Decision Tuesday.

After the two-day legal battle over the motion to grant a new trial, Judge Landis announced that he would render a decision Tuesday, Feb. 11.

This would indicate that Judge Londis is not entirely certain what step next to take in the court war against the Socialist Party. There are those optimistic enough even among the Socialist counsel, to believe that he will grant the five convicted Socialists a new trial.

If the motion for a new trial is denied, the next big struggle between the government prosecutors and the Socialist defense forces is due to be over the question of whether Berger, Germer, Engdahl, Tucker and Kruse are to be sent to prison pending an appeal to the higher courts.

The government prosecutors are urging the position that bail ought to be denied and the defendants imprisoned on the ground that they have not ceased their agitation and propaganda; not even since their conviction.

In attacking this position the Socialist defense points out that it was claimed that the five Socialists were tried and convicted for interfering with the government's military machine. Since the war is now over, however, the military machine is now being scrapped, it is pointed out that the defendants can no longer interfere with it, even admitting that they did. If the prosecution presses its claims, it is felt that this would be the best proof possible to show that the government is out to kill the Socialist Party, war or no war, if it is possible to do so.

PROBLEMS FOR BEGINNERS.

Howard Brubaker has a set of problems for beginners in the February Liberator. Among them are:

CAPITALISM HAS FAILED; WORKERS MUST ACT

Nearing Proves Case Against American Capitalists

Army of Unemployed Grows Greater Each Week While Machinery of Production Stands Idle and Raw Materials Pile Up

The army of unemployed grows.

That is the weekly message that is flashed from Washington by the employment division of the Department of Labor.

The industrial centers of the State of Ohio alone showed a hundred thousand workers out of jobs according to the report of the department for last week.

These are the figures:

> Cleveland reports the past week a surplus of 70,000, which is an increase of 5,000. Akron reports a surplus of 2,000, an increase of 500. Four weeks ago, Akron reported a shortage of 1,000. Dayton reports a surplus of 11,000, which is an increase of 3,000. Toledo reports a surplus of 9,000, Youngstown 4,600 and Cincinnati 2,200.

The Cleveland figures have been jumping from week to week. Only four or five weeks ago they were 20,000, the next week 40,000, a week or two later 65,000 and now 70,000, and the end is not yet.

What are the workers going to do?

Although one-fourth of the workers of Cleveland are out of jobs, with like conditions coming into existence in the other industrial centers of the state and the whole country, the real pinch has not come. Some industries are still at work upon war orders; millions of soldiers are still to be demobilized. Part of the workers who are out of jobs have been able to maintain themselves by eating up the small savings they were able to make during the period of hysterical war-time production. But those will not last long.

The pinch is coming. More soldiers are returning. More munition factories will close down. Millions of families in this country will soon be looking at a future which holds nothing but misery, poverty and suffering for them.

What are the workers going to do?

The capitalist class has raked in its billions of profits. It can let the industries shut down for a time. It need not worry about food and clothing and a place to live in. The close to ten thousand new millionaires that the war has produced can smirk and smile and go contentedly along their way. They need not worry about feeding the hungry mouths of their children. But the workers. . . . . . .

What are they going to do about it?

There is no reason who every man and women who desires the work should not have the opportunity to work. There are in existence the same factories in which the hundreds of thousands of workers who are now walking the streets were recently employed. There are piles and piles of raw material and inexhaustible natural resources, so far as the present generation is concerned, to draw upon for more raw material.

Why do not the workers use the raw material and the machinery of production to produce the things they need in order to live?

Why do men, women and children go hundry when there is food in plenty and land and labor power to produce a greater plenty? Why should the workers not be clothed and housed when there is all the raw material needed and these millions of hands and brains ready to turn the raw material into the needed things?

Must millions of people live in poverty and misery and suffer periodically, as they have been living in poverty and misery and suffering periodically in this country, because of some fiction about the right of a few to make profits out of the operation of the system of production which tme many must use in order to make a living.

When long experience teaches us that a machine won't work, when in place of running smoothly and doing the work for which it was designed, it merely spoils the material we feed into and throw out fragments which litter the ground and impede our efforts, we scrap the machine.

The profit system and private ownership has failed. It is throwing out millions of workers to suffer, and if it so happens, to starve. The workers who do not remember that it has done that before have short memories indeed. The men who amass great fortunes through ownership of industry are today trying to justify their right to profit by pointing out the service they render society. Let them look at the long line of unemployed at every factory door. That is their work. That is how their system works. The machine has failed. It is time to scrap it.

The workers can enter into industry tomorrow and begin the work of producing the things they need. The machines are there. Those machines built to produce instruments of destruction can be readily adapted for other purposes by the skill of the workers. The raw material are there. Why should we not produce?

In the war period when its own needs made action imperative the government stepped into industry and organized, managed and directed. It built a great machine to produce instruments of destruction.

It the government was equally interested in giving employment to the workers and enabling them to earn what they need [illegible]d their families it could enter into industry now and organ[illegible] [illegible]rect and manage, and there need be no unemployment. There [illegible] be no starvation.

But the government will not do that for the workers. I[illegible] [illegible]es only one interest and that is not the workers.

There is but one hope for the workers—organized power [illegible]ey have the power to open the industries. They have the power [illegible] compel use of the machines and raw materials that now lie idle. [illegible]t the millions who are already in the ranks of the unemployed, [illegible]gether with the millions, who, though still employed, face the [illegible]me threat, make a united demand and join in a mass movement [illegible]o open the industries so that the workers may earn a living and [illegible]o power can stop them.

Capitalism has failed; it is time for the workers to act.

"Carry On" IVAN, the Sun is Rising in the East

Side Lights on Seattle Strike

By An Observer

The five-day general strike of 70,000 Seattle workmen and working women brought about by the refusal of General Mgr. Piez of the Emergency Fleet Corporation to allow ship yard workers to negotiate directly with their employers and threatening to cut off the supply of steel to the local yards if they negotiated directly with the workers, was the most complete walkout that has ever occurred in America. At the same time it was the most peaceful.

The week's mail has brought us some strike bulletins issued by the strike committee of the workers, and a personal letter from which we quote below. The whole tone of the bulletin is against any interference of the processes of the law or violence of any kind. It repeatedly advises the workers to "keep cool" and to visit the public libraries. The A. F. of L. takes entire responsibility for the strike though of course the I. W. W. and the Socialist Party were active participants.

To quote from the letter:

"This is the second day of our general strike. Since its beginning yesterday at 10 o'clock a. m., each hour has added new glories to the achievements of the Seattle labor movement.

I have just returned to my room in the hotel in its sixth story, made accessible by walking the six flights of stairs. The room is exactly as I left it at noon. With a smile and greatest gratification I fail to discern the soft touch of a painstaking chamber maid upon anything. The bed is as I left it, soiled towels are where I threw them, and I am very glad of it.

Among the many female employes of the hotel the only union girl among them pulled all the others out with her yesterday at ten. Several large posters in the hotel lobby announce to guests that as a result of the strike all the employes had walked out, they are requested to take the inconveniences cheerfully.

I went up town at noon to get a meal in one of the 21 union eating houses, practically the only ones in the city, maintained by the unions themselves in their entirety operating under a three-hour shift. But going there I must pass through the Japanese quarter. What a sight!

The streets are noiseless with the exception of the clatter of feet along the sidewalks, and here and there a private automobile. Every commercial establishment is closed with the exception of two drug stores. Signs on doors and windows tell the season. "Fair to organized labor;" "Closed for duration of strike;" and some simply have it "Closed.". One Japanese restaurant has on the door a permanent sign, "We Never Close," but underneath a temporary one saying "We Believe in Labor's Cause, So We have Closed." The two adjoining stores have the sign "So Do We."

The Jewish quarter tell a similar story.

On Yesler Way a funeral procession passed. On the windshields of the hearse and ten hired automobiles following, there was the sign in red letters, "Exempted by Committee."

Above Yesler Way most of the stores are open for business, but there is no business to do. Restaurants, soft drink places and candy stores are closed.

The sidewalks are not crowded by any means. There are no yelling newsboys and the silk stocking brigade is noticeable for its absence. Store clerks may be seen in the doorways to watch idly the passing crowds; and what there is of it con-

Cleveland Workers Honor Liebknecht

The memorial meeting in honor of Karl Liebknecht held under auspices of the Socialist Party of Cleveland last week Friday, brought out a crowd of workers eager to pay tribute to Liebknecht, that filled every seat in the large auditorium. Every mention of the name of Liebknecht by the speakers who made addresses in German, Russian and English, was greeted by waves of cheers and applause.

The memorial meeting was opened by the Liedertafel Orchestra playing the Marsellaise, the audience standing. The first speaker was Harry Rode of the German branch, who in years gone by had been an active workers in the ranks of the German Social-Democracy, and who recalled from personal knowledge, the services of Liebknecht in the German Socialist movement.

Following rode A. Bilan, who participated in the Russian revolution of 1905, paid tribute to the work and ideals of Liebknecht in Russian. The inspiration of the Russian revolution was brought out clearly by the great bursts of applause which greeted the coupling of the name of Liebknecht with the ideal of the Bolsheviki.

C. E. Ruthenberg was the English speaker. He made a brief survey of the life of Liebknecht and his services to the revolutionary movement, taking occasion to refute the charge that while in Cleveland in 1910 Liebknecht were far better off than those of Germany. What Liebknecht has said at the meeting at the Cleveland theater was, that he had just come from the Pittsburg district and that nowhere in Germany was there to be found such abject poverty and misery and degradation of the workers as he had seen there.

"In honoring the memory of Liebknecht," Ruthenberg continued, "we should do more than recall his services to the working class movement. We should fix clearly in our minds the issue in the struggle in which he died.

"Before the Russian revolution the Socialists the world over talked about the social revolution, but how the workers control of industry was to be established we were very vague about. The Russian revolution has shown us that our ideal can only be realized through a mass movement of the workers in the industries themselves.

"The issue in Germany between the Majority Socialists and the Spartacans is whether the workers shall establish Socialism now, or whether they shall wait another decade or two and have it legislated into existence a step at a time from the top. The Majority Socialists favor the latter plan. They propose that the workers take the long, devious and dangerous path of building up new political institutions and then, as their power makes it possible, to legislate Socialism into existence a step at a time. The Spartacans believe that the time is ripe for Socialism now. They are urging the workers to take control of the government and at the same time [illegible]

Socialist Educator Convicts Plutocracy by Words of Its Supporters

The trial of Professor Scott Nearing, who was indicted under the Espionage Law for writing a pamphlet called "The Great Madness," in which the American capitalist class was charged with responsibility for involving this country in the world war will go down in history, not as the trial of a Socialist, but as the indictment of the plutocracy of this country...Nearing took the witness stand to defend the views expressed in "The Great Madness."..For two days, while under direct examination, he presented quotation after quotation from the lips and pens of representatives of the ruling class substantiating the statements made in his pamphlet and then, for another day, under cross-examination, he continued the defense of his position...The record of his examination and cross-examination contains the complete case against capitalism, as cooly, calmly, but inexorably developed by this able educator.

The following quotations from the testimony are reprinted from the New York Call:

Asked to explain the principles of that book, Nearing said:

"If a community is threatened with an epidemic of typhoid fever the most prudent thing to do is to find the origin of the germs producing the disease. We proceed from the bottom up. I looked upon war as a social disease, the most deadly of all social diseases. If we want to know how to stop war we must go to the bottom.

"I considered the germs of war just as they are considered by Hobson, by Frederick C. Howe, by Professor Brailsford.

Nearing then went on to describe the system of production, showing how a surplus of products is created for which foreign markets must be found and how foreign investments must be found for the capital remaining over what goes back to labor in the form of wages.

"Lord Palmerston stated more than fifty years ago," said Nearing, "that the flag follows the investor.

"When the investors come into conflict," continued Nearing, "the flags come into conflict."

"For instance," he said, "the Standard Oil Co. of America and the Pierce Oil interests of England buy interests in Mexican oil lands. You have then an English pound and an American dollar both looking for the same oil."

DIVIDING ALLIES.

Nearing proceeded to show that already commercial rivalries are threatening to divide the Allies, and referred to recent controversies in congress over the British embargo against some 40 articles of import. He quoted the expressions of congressmen, warning England "not to reawaken the spirit of 1812" and calling for "bloody reprisals" against the embargo.

"These are the germs of war," said Nearing. "As long as you have this policy of dog eat dog, each man for himself and the devil take the hindmost, it is inevitable that wars will result."

Barnes here interposed a suggestion that the witness was including more than was required in his testimony, but Stedman insisted that the theories he was expounding went to show his intent in publishing "The Great Madness," which was to show, he said, as other experts in economics were showing, the basic causes of war.

Barnes said he wished to give the witness the fullest opportunity to explain his theories, but that he objected to bringing in extraneous material and events occurring and statements made after the publication of the book for which he is being tried. Barnes referred particularly to Nearing's quotations from the recent speeches in congress, and said that at present there was no means of knowing that

Fight Deportation of Radicals

A determined fight is being waged by radical organizations in the east to prevent the deportation of fifty-eight alien radicals who are being held at Ellis Island, and are slated to be shipped out of the country as a part of the campaign of the government to deport members of the I. W. W. and other "undesirable" agitators.

Caroline A. Lowe, attorney for the I. W. W. and Charles Recht and Sidney A. Fleisher, representing the Civil Liberties Bureau attempted to halt the deportation through habeas corpus proceedings, but the writ was denied by Judge John C. Knox, federal judge, on the ground that the attorneys were unable to show that they were the authorized representatives of the defendants. The fifty-eight slated for deportation are being held incommunicado.

Meanwhile all the forces of the radical movement are being marshalled to prevent the deportation. Eugene V. Debs has telegraphed a scathing denunciation of the deportation to the New York Call, in which he says:

"This is Lincoln's birthday. It is a day rich with memory and dark with tragedy. Lincoln was and is the sweetest product of American soil. The birthday of the immortal railsplitter is being celebrated in part by the deportation from the land he loved of the men of honest toil, who, like himself, hated the money power and believed in government of and by and for the people. This is one of the beautiful ironies of capitalism. Its vaunted love of freedom is but the velvet cloak which conceals its ironfisted despotism.

These men are charged by the ruling class and its prostitute press with being enemies of the government. Precisely the same charge that is being brought against these men today under capitalist despotism was brought against Abraham Lincoln by the slave power of his day."

National Secretary Germer, of the Socialist Party sums up the situation and plans of the ruling class thus:

"Today it is the I. W. W.; tomorrow the Socialist Party members may be deported, and already threats are made against the American Federation of Labor. This situation involved the whole question of the right to think differently from the powers that be. To be different is to be criminal."

Socialist Party Emblems Barred From Public School

Socialists' Children Denied Access to Public Schools by Kasier-Like Officials. Hand of Persecution Seen in Disgraceful Misconduct of Teacher and County Superintendent, Yawberg.

By ELMER T. ALLISON

If you are a Republican your children may wear the emblems of the Republican party—to school at Royalton Center, Ohio.

If you are a Democrat your children may also wear to school the emblems of your party.

If you are a Socialist and believe in fair play and equal rights, your children are prohibited from wearing Socialist emblems to school in this district.

This is so because Supt. Tuttle says it is. It is so because his superior, County Supt., Yawberg, wishes it to be so. True, there is no legal justification for this arbitrary decision and rank discrimination against Socialists, but such little things as legality are not allowed to clutter the path of those would-be imitators of the late Kaiser in their determination to persecute Socialists.

For wearing Socialist Party emblems to school the five little girls of Alfred Wagenknecht, State Secretary of the Socialist Party of Ohio, who is now at Chicago undertaking his new duties as Director of Propaganda and Organization of the Socialist Party of the United States, were sus- [illegible] coming of the storm that broke over the peaceful countryside of Royalton Center, a little village 12 miles from Cleveland, appeared on Friday last week when Supt. Tuttle took from the dress of one of the little girls a Socialist emblem that she had worn continuously [illegible]

all the sneering impudence of a country gossip. The girl was forbidden to wear the emblem again to school. At noon a note from the child's mother was dispatched to Prof. Tuttle containing the information that Socialist emblems were not prohibited by law and that if he wished to learn further of the families' affairs he should inquire of some grown member. The emblems were continued to be worn.

Is Tuttle Tool of Higher Ups?

This note was the cause of Prof. Tuttle throwing one of those explosive fits that characterize the mentally unbalanced.

In a voice that drew the attention of the entire school on all floors, Prof. Tuttle proceeded to give the girls a lecture during which he let the cat out of the bag to the extent of boasting that the county, state, lawyers and "the judge" were behind him and that the Socialists were of such insignificant numbers as to count for nothing. FACTS ABOUT RUSSIA

(The following news notes are taken from The Northern Commune, a Soviet newspaper published in Petrograd, some December numbers of which have just been received in the United States. The news indicates that the Moderate Social Democratic groups in Russia are now supporting the Soviet government. It gives evidence of the spread of the co-operative movement in Russia under the Soviets. It contains a decree establishing free postage for one-ounce letters and cards, in order that poor people in Russia may have every facility for communication. There are several interesting notes on the constructive activities of the Soviet government, and notes from districts where the counter-revolutionists are in control, showing the repression with which that control is maintained).

THE MENSHEVIK ASSEMBLY

At the meeting of Mensheviki that took place at Moscow, Abramovich points out that the entire democratic element is now fluctuating between two choices: (1) "Let us have anything rather than the Bolsheviki!" (2) "Let us have a united front of all the living forces of the revolution!" Yermanskyi spoke of the German revolution and arrived at very serious conclusions. According to him, if Germany falls, we fall. Martov, at the end of his speech, declared that the entire democracy of the west, even its most right elements, would protest against the plans of the foreign imperialists, not only in the name of the preservation of the accomplishment of the revolution, "whatever may be the result of this Bolshevik experiment on the revolution."—Northern Commune, Dec. 12, 1918.

A VOICE FROM THE RIGHT S.R.S.

The Moscow bureau of the central committee of the Socialist-Revolutionary Party of the Right has come out against a continuation of the allied intervention as "having lost its original significance."—Northern Commune, Dec. 12, 1918.

THIRD CONGRESS OF WORKERS' CO-OPERATORS

The third congress of workers' co-operators was characterized by a success for the communists.

From this standpoint the importance of the third congress of workers' co-operatives will be enormous, both in principle and in practice. The co-operatives are beginning to be "Soviet Co-operatives," are entering into the ranks of the fighting proletariat, and casting aside their so-called "independence" and "neutrality."

In the northern regions (Petrograd and outlying districts) at the present time there are more than 9,000 consumers' leagues in operation, about 300 dairy associations, about 1,000 credit co-operatives, great numbers of lumberers', fishermens', agricultural, home-industrial, and other leagues and unions. In the region there are counted fully 200 large and small co-operative central organizations. The co-operative means of the population, as represented in the turn over of the co-operatives, attains the figure of at least 1,000,000,000 rubles.—Northern Commune, Dec. 15.

FREE LETTER POSTAGE IN RUSSIA.

The Commissaire of the Petropavlovsk Postoffice brings to the attention of the population of Petrograd a decree of the Soviet of People's Commissaires published in the "Izvestya" of the Central Executive Committee of the 24th of November, 1918, No. 257: "The Soviet of People's Commissaires, believing that a more steady and widespread exchange of written communications between the proletarians of the cities and the proper classes of the villages will further serve to strengthen and confirm the union already existing between them, and will in this manner aid in organizing the revolutionary Socialist forces of Russia, considers it essential to simplify and facilitate the exchange of postal communications. With these objects in view, the Soviet of People's Commissaires decrees as follows: (1) After Jan. 1, 1919, there will be free transmission in Russia of all open and sealed written communications, weighing not more than fifteen drams (about one ounce); (2) unregistered letters weighing more than fifteen drams as well as registered letters will be paid for at the full regular rate, in stamps covering charges for weight and for registration; (3) unregistered letters and packages sent out under the name of Soviet institutions, pay no charges; (4) the delivery without charge, of unregistered open communications is extended also to cover the correspondence entering the confines of Soviet Russia from other countries."—Northern Commune, Dec. 10.

MINING OF SALT IN STARA RUSSYA.

Novgorod, Dec. 9, (Rus. Tel. Ag.)—As a result of the salt crisis in the north the Council of National Economy decided to re-establish the mining of salt in Stara Russya and the environs. In the '70s of the last century about 500,000 pud of salt were obtained, but this exploitation gradually abated, and Stara Russya, having thus lost its industrial importance, was entirely devoted to its use as a watering place.—Northern Commune, Dec. 11.

A NEW GENERAL STAFF ACADEMY OPENED.

Moscow, Dec. 9, (Rus. Tel. Ag.)—Comrade Dzeyaltovskyi, Commander-in-Chief of Military Educational Institutions, in a conversation with a representative of the Rus. Tel. Ag. said that until now the organization of the Red Army had been conducted entirely by party men, who were not always conversant with military affairs. To correct this condition, military specialists had been engaged. A dual administration has resulted. The General Staff Academy had been opened with the object of obtaining men who would be inflexibly loyal to Communism and would nevertheless possess a complete knowledge of military affairs. The academy would be run by comrades who had proved their possession of military talents in the capacity of intellectual leadership. The acamedy has a great task before it in the domain of the principles of strategy and the tactics of war. The best military specialists will be invited to the academy as teachers.—Northern Commune, Dec. 11.

DECREE ABOLISHING THE CLASS CAR SYSTEM.

Moscow, Dec. 17, (R. T. A.)—The Central Executive Committee has issued the following decree concerning the division of railway cars into classes, as well as the introduction of a uniform pessenger rate: (1) The present general division of our railroad cars into classes corresponding to their social use, into first, second, third and fourth classes is abolished on all railroads and branch roads; (2) for the present the third-class car now in use is to be considered as the normal type of car for passenger traffic, and the People's Commissaire for Means of Communication is directed to take steps to improve as much as possible the cars of this type as well as increase the number of such cars in the rolling stock; (5) railroad lines are permitted, for the convenience of the passengers, to make up trains running at higher speed (express and curier trains), and also, to include in night trains and long-distance trains, cars that have numbered places for sitting and lying down, and also to charge an excess fee for greater speed as well as for reservation of numbered places.—Northern Commune, Dec. 18.

FRICTION IN THE COUNTER-REVOLUTIONARY ARMY.

Kursk, Dec. 6, (Rus, Tel. Ag.)—In the "volunteer" (Denikines) army, conflicts are arising concerning the future forms of Russian organization. The lower levels of the army express distinct dissatisfaction with the political control from above. This conflict is rendered more bitter by the conduct of guard officers and former courtiers now living at Yekaterinodar, who are indulging in orgies and debauches. At the Bryansk Mine detachments of volunteer officers flogged 52 soldiers to death.—Northern Commune, Dec, 15.

THE SIBERIAN MUDDLE.

Samara, Dec. 16, (R. T. A.)—As a result of the Omsk coup d'etat the arrest of the All-Russian government, and the establishment of the military distatorship of Admiral Kolchak, there is now civil war in the White Guard Camp. The Ufa "Narodnoye Dyelo" prints resolutions of the Right Social-Revolutionaries, demanding the overthrow of Kolchak's power, a struggle against monarchism and the establishment of the authority of the Constituent Assembly. Admiral Kolchak, in turn, issued orders to all the military leaders, printed in the "Ufa Life" of Dec. 10 to put down by the most resolute measures all activities of the Constitutionals, not hesitating to use firearms when necessary. All members of the Constituent Assembly are subject to arrest and court-martial. From the orders it is clear that the S. R. S. have already begun to act; they have broken off communications with Siberia, with the Ural and Orenburg front, have seized sums of money, which had been forwarded to Siberia for Dutov, and hold back Kolchak's orders. All military leaders giving any support to the Constitutionals are declared by Kolchak to be beyond the law.—Northern Commune, Dec. 18.

IN DUTOV'S KINGDOM

(The following dispatch, depicting conditions under the dictatorship of Dutov, head of the Ural Cossacks, explains the subsequent successes of Soviet troops in the South Ural region. The Soviet forces now have Orenburg and the surrounding regions).

Samara, Dec. 13, (Rus. Tel. Ag.)—From the Orenburg front we learn: There is complete harmony between Dutov and the Siberian reactionaries. All political parties, except the Cadets, are subject to persecution at Orenburg. Mensheviki and Social Revolutionist activity has been forced underground. Meetings and assemblies are forbidden under pain of shooting. Evacuation is on at full speed here. Skirmishes are in progress on the Tashkent front. Only Bashkirs and Cossacks are fighting. Cases of mass shootings and persecutions are reported, inflicted on the peasants by Bashkir and Cossack bands. In the Preobrazhensky Works, more than 200 peasants were arrested on denunciation by rich landholders. Many were sentenced to be shot. Not a single village has been spared the most savage lynchings. All this arouses opposition among the peasants. In many villages the peasants have refused to furnish recruits or grain. Then the punitive battalions came; the peasants having no other weapons, fought with pitchforks. This uprising was put down by the Cossacks. Unbearable contributions were imposed upon the peasants. The Cossacks gathered the grain, horses, etc., without paying for them. The slightest infractions were punished by shooting.—Northern Commune, Dec. 15.

ON THE DON

Punitive battalions are employed on the Varonezh sector of the front, who, after any village or town has been captured by Krassnov's bands, shoot all revolutionaries. The battalion is supplied in advance with lists of names of those revolutionaries whom Krassnov's authorities have condemned to death.—Northern Commune, Dec. 15.

Astrakhan, Dec. 18, (R. T. A.)—According to reports received from deserters, enemy artillerists have refused to fire upon our trenches, and in their effort to desert our ranks, 30 men have in total, been shot by Cossack officers.—Northern Commune Dec. 18.

AFTER THE WAR—WHAT?

By C. E. Ruthenberg

X—Servile State or Socialism

The program if reconstruction presented in the preceding articles is the program of Socialism.

The practicality of this program is no longer in doubt. During the nineteen months this country participated in the world war the underlying principle of this program—collectivism—was adopted as a measure of self-preservation by the government. In Russia the establishment of collectivism based upon democracy in industry is under way.

It was possible before the war to scoff at and pooh-pooh the Socialist proposals, but in a great emergency, face to face with the fact that private control of industry meant internal conflict, wastefulness and inefficiency in production, when the most efficient and effective organization of industry was needed by the capitalist class, the government was obliged to cast prejudices to the winds and apply the principle of collective control of industry.

Even the limited application of this principle which was made has shown the tremendous possibilities of the Socialist program.

We can through collectivism—through the organization and co-ordination of our powers of production, eliminate hundreds of millions of waste and make a large increase in our productive ability. The abolition of exploitation through the abolition of rent, interest and profits, will insure to the masses the enjoyment of the wealth produced through our greatly increased productive power and will end the misery and poverty which is such a dark blot upon our civilization. A thorough-going program of collectivism will enable us to bring into existence more than enough wealth to give a high standard of living, which means good food, good clothing, good homes, education and recreation, peace and happiness, to every family in the United States.

Through the establishment of industrial democracy we can eliminate the industrial conflicts which are the constant accompaniment of production under the profit system. We cannot only eliminate strikes, lockouts and unemployment, but we can assure to the workers that joy which comes through creative effort when men are not drudges and slaves, but freemen co-operating with their fellows in producing useful things.

Shall we go one with the development of collectivism and industrial democracy? Shall we go forward to a better world?

The capitalist class says "no."

The Republican party, through the declaration of its leaders, its state platforms and the manifesto it issued during the congressional campaign, has set its face against even the limited bureaucratic collectivism which developed during the war. It stands for the unrestrained exploitation of the workers by the great industrial organization of the country.

The Democratic party has taken a similar position. In his address to congress at the opening of the session in December, 1918, President Wilson declared that the work of reconstruction could be safely left in the hands of the business men of the United States.

The logic of events will likely compel the capitalist class and its political expression, the Republican and Democratic parties, to change its program somewhat. We may expect that in the near future the advanced section of the capitalist class will advocate that certain industries be operated by the government. Certain capitalists have learned that it is more economical to have the government own and operate such industries as the transportation system, the telegraph and telephone system and other basic industries and they will advocate that these industries become the common property of the capitalist class through ownership by a government which it controls, rather than that they be owned by certain groups of the capitalist class. Such an arrangement, they have come to understand, is entirely campatible with the continuance of their right to make profits out of these industries.

Should either of the two capitalist parties change its program to conform with this new view, which is gaining ground, there is no hope that it would attack the profit system. It is entirely possible to apply the principles of collectivism and at the same time maintain the system of exploitation which now exists and even to subject the workers to a more abject form of industrial slavery than they have been obliged to submit to under private ownership. Such an industrial feudalism might well arise if "the masters of the government of the United States are the combined capitalists and bankers of the United States" during the period of reconstruction.

There is no hope for the working class if they continue to support the political parties representing the interest of the capitalist class of the United States.

The war has not only demonstrated the practicality of the Socialist program, but in the experience of the workers of Russia and of Germany we have clearly presented the road which we must follow if we are to reach the goal of industrial democracy and working class freedom.

The idea that Socialism would be established through a series of legislative acts extending possibly over a decade or two, has been shown to be an illusion. Socialism will not be legislated into existence but will be established by a mass movement of the workers in the industries. The legislative acts will merely give the accomplished fact the stamp of approval as the will of the majority.

The struggle of the working class will henceforth be a political struggle for control of the state because it must gain control of the government before it can hope to establish democracy in industry. For the working class to endeavor to take control of industry while all the repressive power of the class state remained in the hands of the capitalist class would be to invite destruction.

The work the workers have to do in this country, the way to freedom, is through building a class conscious political movement which will carry on the work of educating the workers to an understanding of the system of exploitation which now exists and the class character of the government and to organize the workers for the struggle to wrest control of the government out of the hands of the capitalist class. The Socialist Party is the medium through which this work can be done. The workers of this country should give it their undivided support.

At the same time it is an essential part of the work of the workers to build up organizations in the industries themselves, having as their goal to supersede the capitalists in control of industry. In these organizations in the industries are the beginning of the new industrial order that will expand and grow until they become a huge co-operative organization of the workers for control and management of the work of production and of all matters pertaining to their common interest.

Working class reconstruction of our industrial system can only be achieved by the working class itself. In Russia there is already emerging from the blood engulfed debris of capitalism the new industrial order that will be the foundation of a better world, a world of security, peace and happiness. This new society has been achieved through the sacrifice and devotion of millions of Russian workers. The workers of the United States can win the same goal if they prepare themselves and use their power.

snatched off on this occasion. Perhaps this opportunity was overlooked. If so the writer wishes to extend the Prof. a standing invitation to attempt the same on the button he wears whenever the Prof. feels an uncontrollable desire to commit any more skull-duggery of that character.

On Monday following the storm broke over the heads of the five little criminals who had the hardihood to stand up loyally for their rights. At noon the Prof. informed the girls they must remove the Socialist buttons from their dresses before they returned to school. No socialist buttons were to be allowed in the school, he said.

Mrs. Hortense Wagenknecht, mother of the children and Acting State Secretary of the Socialist Party of Ohio, [illegible] the children that each one [illegible] writer, would be up to see him.

Mr. Tuttle is Touchy. Five little Socialists, each wearing a red button, was too much for the Berserker temper of Mr. Tuttle. He completely lost a very bad temper at this sight. "I have no time to talk to your uncle," said Mr. Tuttle, "besides it is too late to do anything. You are all suspended from shcool. I am going to call up the lawyers and you go home and don't put your feet inside this school yard with a Socialist button on." We are wondering if Tuttle also called up the "judge," whom he apparently imagines is going to rule in favor of his impudent and Kaiser-like tactics? A threat to have the mother jailed and the girls sent to a reform school terminated this interview with Tuttle.

Tuttle Slaps School Board in Face. —Though Mr. Tuttle received his present job from the local school board he has probably forgotten it for it may as well not exist, so far as [illegible] ing of Socialist buttons to school. A call upon the clerk of the board, Mr. Dolezl, confirmed this fact. If Mr. Tuttle had expelled the children it had been done without the consent or knowledge of the board, said Dolezl.

These board members are apparently well-to-do farmers, fair minded and congenial people. They exhibited no bitterness against Socialists as such, but maintain an open mind and would talk to you about Socialism the same as any thing else. The same may be said of the other four teachers. Their conduct has been exemplary. Mr. Dolezl stated that the matter would probably be aired at the regular meeting of the board on the 22nd of the month.

News of the State Locals

Local Kenmore is preparing the seed bed for Socialism is that city. Why shouldn't the workers control the city, justly asks Comrade Seibert, since the workers are by far in the majority? The comrades are striving to have the O. S. go into every worker's home. This means success for their efforts as has been proven. Local Kenmore is anxious that the paper grow into even a better and bigger warrior for the workers.

MARTINS FERRY IN ACTION

Local Martins Ferry is making strides toward great things. We are in receipt of a circular letter from Secretary Fred White which was sent to the 20,000 voters of the city. The letter comprises both propaganda and organization matter of great value as well as an invitation to subscribe for the Ohio Socialist.

* * *

The local is also distributing 200 copies of the paper each week. A clipping from the Wheeling (Va.) News states that the comrades are going to build a Social Science School for the workers' children and also establish a branch of the Y. P. S. L. All this, we say, means that the comrades are up to the minute in organization and propaganda methods. We shall have more to say of Local M. F. in the future.

CALL FOR PROTEST MEETINGS

Local Youngstown will hold a monster protest meeting on the 22d of this month against the deportation of radicals, that is being inaugurated by the government. Fifty-three workers from western cities are now being held in New York for deportation on account of activity in the recent Seattle strike.

Local Youngstown feels that this move on the part of the government may lead to even more drastic actions against the workers whose opinions are not in harmony with those of the exploiters and that workers should at once make a strong campaign of protest against the threatened danger. The State Office concurs in this and asks locals to arrange such meetings with as much publicity as possible to the end that the government may understand that deportation of workers on account of their aconomic and political opinions is a dangerous precedent for a "democratic" government to establish. Organize and protest.

DEVELOPING LOCAL TALENT

Local Ravenna is developing in the local the necessary talent to conduct meetings and party activities. It has seen the necessity for this so is not going to remain dependent upon outside help. They are just going ahead and develop the talent which lies dormant in every local. Other locals which think they have not speakers qualified to hold and arrange meetings should follow Ravenna's lead. Develop the talent necessary to carry on the work we must do. Get away from the idea that you "can't do it." You can if you will. Watch Ravenna do it.

FREE ADVERISING

The comrades of Cincinnati claim that the capitalist press of that city most generous. They estimate that it has given them about three hundred dollars worth of free advertising and the end is not yet. Of course our readers will understand the kind of advertising we mean. It's the kind that has so effectively "killed" the Socialist movement in this country. The kind that fills our halls to overflowing at 25c admission. The kind that brings our membership month. The kind that thrive as we never have Thanks, most generous enemies. us some more!

POLITICAL PRISONER IS FREE

Comrade Harry Townsley will be released from Atlanta Federal prison Feb. 21. Comrade Townsley is a member of Local Columbus.

Comrade A. L. Hitchcock, confined at the same institution is reported to be feeling somewhat blue on account of the fact that two good friends he has made there are also being released this month. We wish to suggest that comrades write him a letter and thus help to drive away the lonesomeness. For some time past no Socialist papers have been allowed the comrades there so all the news they get of Socialist work is contained in letters. Write to Comrade Hitchcock and tell him the latest Socialist news.

LEWIS SENDS INTERESTING REPORT

Comrade Thurber Lewis reports to the State Office of his meetings make mighty interesting reading. Writing of his meeting at Coshocton, he says the comrades will reorganize at once. Comrades, he said, claim they would rather do without tobacco than to lose the Ohio Socialist. Well, it is possible to have both and if the comrades will hustle a bit they may induce others to add to the joys of life by becoming regular readers. Try it comrades of Coshocton, and hurry along with organization work. The revolution waits not for any one. Through the hospitality of Comrade Fitch a hotel bill was saved to the party. Thanks comrade.

ON THE TRAIL OF BIG THINGS

Local Springfield is on the trail of big things. Comrade J. Rehm, our champion sub getter in that locality is constantly on the job distributing literature. He is convinced that leaflets and papers are more effective in that district than speakers and less expensive. Reorganization work will be undertaken at an early date. In the meanwhile everybody is given a chance to read the best leaflets.

The Mother of Humanity

By LAURA JIM REYNOLDS

Continued

At an anti-slavery convention she met Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who argued with her that the woman suffrage movement was wider than lecturing in the temperance cause, finally prevailing upon her "that the ballot was the key to the solution." Thus began one of the grandest friendships of co-workers in the woman's cause.

Together they became a firebrand that set ablaze a community of awakening women, kindling anew the dying embers of once hopeful rebellious women, spreading the flame of discontent among the snugly satisfied, casting brands of red-hot logic among discomfited legislatures, assailing the national congress with their demands, flinging that early suffrage paper, "The Revolution," with its motto, 'Principles, not policy; justice, not favor; men, their rights and nothing more; women, their rights and nothing less," into the Arena of Human Rights.

During the long years they worked and the followers grew into a vast array of active workers, Miss Anthony would go out into the world, holding meetings (one year she called or attended fifty-four conventions) plodding through rain and snow, enduring heat and cold as from house to house she went securing signatures for petitions to be sent to legislatures.

When weary and heart sick and in need of encouragement she would hasten like a homesick child to the comfortable counsels and cheering words of Mrs. Stanton. They would review the nation's affairs and plan anew how to make the thick-headed sons of Adam understand that a new era had come—not the era of man-made rulings but a bigger, wider, better era—the human era.

No issue was too small for them to attack, no problem too large for them to boldly investigate as into religious, political, industrial and educational camps they hurled defiances.

There were many who joined the infant movement giving it an impetus that has continued till this day. Matilda Joslyn Gage brought a fund of knowledge about history that was an inestimable asset. Her parents had made it a rule to answer every childish question, never chiding her quest for knowledge. Her book, "Woman, Church and State," gave many women convincing proofs for debates and arguments.

Clarina H. Nichols, living in many states, amid hardships and privations, carried [illegible] once when on a tour, a southerner hearing she also lectured on woman's rights, asked her if she would talk to the women of his city. Of course, he only meant the lecture for white women. He asked her not to mention the abolition of chattel slavery and tried to convince her that the negro having no brains wouldn't know what to do with freedom. (The capitalist tells the same story about the wage slave now). They parted, disagreeing, but later when writing to her that a meeting was arranged he couldn't resist adding a postscript: "Have you tried your experiment of educating any little 'nigger' yet?" Whereupon she added a postscript, "No, I have not tried my educational experiment for the reason that the horrid amalgamationists preceded us, and bleached the 'niggers' that I have been able to find a pure-blood specimen."

So the women fought all evils while seeking their own emancipation.

Cheerful Lucy Stone was drawn into the vortex of the fight for equal rights. Her strong personality and excessive energy led her to tackle all customs that were holding women in subjection.

A lecturer and known to the public as Lucy Stone before her marriage to Henry Blackwell, sh sink her individuality being known as Mrs. Luc husband's ideas being readily agreed, but Mad had one mad, screeching woman dared relegate a cu attic of outworn usages.

Her fighting instinct told fuse to pay taxes on the th "Taxation without repres tyranny."

Together they ably edi "Woman's Journal" and for ye weekly messages to thous readers.

Sometimes they went on tours and as they journeyed over of unbroken Kansas roads, the fo ing incident shows that they met some of the grandparents of the p ple with whom radicals today co tend. TO LEAD OR TO BE LED?

To lead or to be led is the question that confronts the Socialist Party of the United States, the Socialist Party of Ohio, the Socialist Party of every town and city. The changes now occurring at the close of the war have placed the Socialist Party in a position filled to the brim with tremendous possibilities. Opportunities for propaganda and organization along lines never attempted before open on every side with most alluring promise. Our ability and competence as a party to lead the proletarian revolution and to guide it safely past the pitfalls now being dug for it are even now being put to the test. These opportunities for great and sweeping achievements are certain to test the ability of the Socialist Party to lead in the worker's march to victory. The ability, the competence of the Socialist Party to lead are now on trial, on trial in this, the first hour of victory. Our ability to lead the proletarian cause will be measured by one thing. It will be measured by the promptness with which we grasp the opportunities which these economic changes present to us and by the energy with which we exploit the vast field of propaganda and organization opening before us. This thought is worthy the earnest consideration of every comrade.

THE OHIO SITUATION

The Socialist Party of Ohio came out of the trials and persecutions of the war with banners flying. An increase in membership, an organization proven for its fidelity to the principles of Internationalism, a recognized position in the front ranks of militant Socialism in this country and a growing party-controlled weekly paper were among the gains made during the severest test it had ever undergone. The position this state occupies as "the best organized in the Union" is a credit to the integrity and uncompromising character of every Red whose efforts have helped win this renown. But these are the victories of the past.

WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

The Socialist Party of Ohio is at this hour facing the greatest opportunity ever presented to it. Never before were the opportunities for propaganda and organization as great as now. Never were the workers so willing, even anxious to hear our message. Never was our field of activities so broad nor so ready for cultivation. Crowded halls greet our speakers. Our organizers report a general revival in all localities and an intensifying of the movement everywhere. Calls for speakers from all parts of the state far exceeds our ability to supply them. The present is no time for laggards. It is a time when we must push to the utmost our propaganda of Industrial Democracy.

THE RIGHT ARM OF LABOR

The press is the right arm of labor as it is also of capitalism. Through its control of the public press capitalism hypnotizes the workers to do its will and bidding. By controlling the means of publicity its power is enhanced and strengthened. Its hold upon the minds of the workers is at times supreme through its control of their reading and the opportunity for distortion through falsification. Capital's power through its control of the public press is the most sinister and dangerous element in society. And yet it breeds the seeds of its own destruction. It creates a hatred in the worker's mind for it and teaches him the necessity of establishing a labor press.

To combat the lies and distortions of the capitalist press, the workers see the necessity of controlling a press that shall represent them. Powerful weeklies, bi-weeklies and dailies must be established by the workers and be under their control. A nationwide movement for a militant workers' press is now under way. The masses are ready for it and will support it. Capitalism is destroying itself through its lies and deceit.

In Ohio we have the foundation of what must be made a greater party paper. From a monthly of a year ago the Ohio Socialist has become a weekly with a circulation at this time of ten thousand. But we must not stop here, nor think that we have reached the end of possibilities. By no means. The times, the sentiment of the workers, the revolution itself, imposes upon us the obligation to accomplish more, to reach out in a wider field and to extend our scope of usefulness to the workers.

TO STRENGTHEN THE RIGHT ARM

The Ohio Socialist must be made a bi-weekly. Every reader is asked to help. Not in money, but in time and effort. Think what a bi-weekly such as the Ohio Socialist with a circulation of 20,000 will mean to the Socialist movement of this state! The Ohio Socialist has proven its worth as an organ of both propaganda and organization. Let us now enhance its value to the movement by making it a bi-weekly. We MUST do this. To fail to do so is to prove our incapacity to fulfill our mission. Let us not falter at this time. The municipal campaign of this fall will add to our opportunities for propaganda. Hundreds of record breaking meetings will be held. Let us prepare to make the most of these meetings by advertising and establishing at that time the Ohio Socialist as a bi-weekly.

TWENTY THOUSAND READERS NEEDED

Every reader of this paper will receive a subscription blank and a letter. We want every reader to take that subscription blank and his copy of the paper to his friends and shopmates and secure their subscriptions. We want you to give an hour or two to this great work. Take your place in the front ranks of dead-in-earnest socialists and help us make the goal. When we get twenty thousand subscribers the Ohio Socialist can be made a bi-weekly.

Prove that your party has the ability of leadership that is demanded of it at this critical hour. Prove that we are to lead—not to be led! Use that subscription blank.

Constant Vigilance the Price

Constant vigilance is still the price of Liberty. It's the price of Industrial Freedom too. Every act on the part of the ruling class which tends to delay [illegible] back the movement of the Working Class for a better and happier life must be AGITATED AGAINST. The few hard-won liberties such as Free Speech, Free Press and Free Assemblage, must be upheld and when they are threatened we must cry aloud so all the world will hear.

These Three

Free Speech, Free Press and Free Assemblage have had rough sailing during war time. From the Federal government to the town marshall the principle of FREEDOM OF UTTERANCE has had to meet onslaughts. Many people, during war time, had to burden themselves with two diametrically opposed convictions, one for public display and one to use when in conversation with themselves. Were you one of these? And if you were, and if you honestly believe in Free Speech, Free Press and Free Assemblage why not help to agitate for their full restoration by joining in the demand for the immediate repeal of the espionage act? The Socialist Party has determinedly agitated against abridging these rights. You can do your part by buying an INDUSTRIAL FREEDOM CERTIFICATE—$1.00.

Amnesty for Political Prisoners

The prisons contain hundreds of men and women, who are in prison only because they had the courage of their convictions. Pacifists, members of certain religious sects, Industrial Workers, Socialists—hundreds of them have been imprisoned because their opinion about the war and that of the Democratic administration did not agree. These prisoners ARE political prisoners, and now that the war is over should be given their freedom without delay.

Yet, there is but one way to abbreviate the delay already so apparent. That way is to arouse the nation's workers to an understanding of the justice of the demand for amnesty for all political prisoners. The administration will "move" in the matter when the worker's voice is heard. The Socialist Party has, is now and will continue to hold public meetings to agitate for the release of these prisoners. Millions of pieces of literature will be distributed by this political party of the Working Class. You can help, you can do your share by buying an INDUSTRIAL FREEDOM CERTIFICATE—$1.00.

Thomas Mooney

Every square man and woman will agree with Thomas Mooney when he said: "If I am guilty I ought to be hanged. If I am not guilty I must be freed." Thomas Mooney was sentenced to be hanged after having been convicted upon perjured testimony, that he took part in the San Francisco preparedness bomb outrages. Thomas Mooney is as innocent as you are of complicity in this crime. The capitalists of California want to "get him" because he has organized the workers to fight uncompromisingly against the plutocrats. Thomas Mooney was sentenced to be hung. The governor of California commuted the sentence to life imprisonment. To Mooney this is worse than death by hanging. Mooney IS INNOCENT. He must be freed. There is only one way. We must agitate and educate the workers so that they may know the case and help demand his freedom. The Socialist Party has given thousands of dollars, held thousands of meetings, printed millions of pieces of literature to help Mooney regain his liberty. You MUST HELP. Buy an INDUSTRIAL FREEDOM CERTIFICATE—$1.00.

How About Families of Prisoners?

Needy families of Socialists in prison must be given aid. And comforts must be provided for those comrades who are still fighting for us and valiantly, even though behind bars and because of that fact.

The Socialist Party of Ohio has thr rades in the Federal penitentiary at A Ga. We have two in the Warrensville house. Two are awaiting trial in the Cuy county jail. Two are under indictm Cleveland. Thirteen are under indictm Cincinnati, and many of these are the of families. Our responsibility is gre we will all shoulder our part of this the load will be light.

You can do your part in helping to su prisoners' families and in providing com for comrades in prison by buying an INDUSTRIAL FREEDOM CERTIFICATE—$1.00.

Now Listen—

You've probably given before and most generously. The Socialist Party thanks you for this. Now GIVE AGAIN. Eternal vigilance is the price. We must give and give until we attain our aim. Give your dollar. Others will give theirs. Together we will give thousands of dollars with which to hit thousands of blows for FREEDOM.

With a willing dollar in the palm of your hand, wend your way to the next meeting of the local Socialist Party and exchange it for an wearing of the buttons because of the prejudice against Socialism and Socialists. This was the first intimation of such aleged interference that has been made.

In reply to a question if he would prohibit a democrat's child wearing that party's emblem if it was in an unpopular minority, Supt. Yawberg said "No we would find a way to adjust matters." Supt. Yawberg stated at this time that unless the children were in school the folowing day the parents would find themselves before the juvenile court.

Is this entering wedge of persecution?

All indications point that this arbitrary, illegal action of these officials is but the entering wedge that is to act as a means of Socialist persecution. If this is so, the Socialist party will pick up the gauntlet that has been cast before it. No persecutions of Socialist's children in the public schools of this state are to be tolerated. Our children have equal rights with others. These rights will be held against any interference on [illegible]

The entire mater bears the earmarks of a frame-up. Other higher up are using Tuttle and Yawberg as catspaws with which to pull chestnuts from the fire. The expected connivance of the local school board with their schemes for hounding Socialists and persecuting their children will not materialize. These farmer school board members are not concerned with the schemes of those who are at the bottom of this ugly and petty persecution, nor will they allow themselves to be used as tools of oppression.

DISGRACE A NOBLE PROFESSION

Prof. Tutle and Supt. Yawberg have disgraced the noblest profession to which one can be called. They have set an example before the children of this school that is unsurpassed for intolerence, lack of fair play, and have outraged every sense of justice that lies in the bosom of every normal man and woman. They may be either autocrats or "tools" of higher ups. Their actions bear evidence that they are a combination of both.

And because of these five Socialist children are suspended from school until such time as they and their parents will knuckle down and bow the knee to as rare a [illegible] honored a sta [illegible]

Virginia Bulletin

Official Organization News

B. M. DUTTON, State Secretary.

Virginia Comrades: If I should say to you, "every person is, or of right should be, born in bondage—" and if I were to stop here you would pronounce me either a lunatice or a plute hireling, but if I continue—"to their own needs," you would agree with me if you are a Socialist, and denounce me as a dangerous anarchist if you are a plute sympathizer.

We, all of us, are, or of right, should be, in bondage to Old Mother Nature. No amount of rebellion can free the race from the bondage to its material and spiritual needs. It requires a certain amount of labor to maintain every individual, however low their standard of living my be. If the individual does not perform this labor, SOME OTHER INDIVIDUAL MUST. True, the individual need not serve themselves specifically, that is, they need not cook their meals, wash their clothes, make up their beds, etc., but THEY MUST return to society an equivolent in USEFUL service, else they are PARASITES, and a parasite, me lads, is the lowest varmint that exists, be it man or louse.

No, Bo, manipulating the stock market, profiteering, speculating, emitting intellectual mustard gas in plutocracies red light district or selling corner lots in The New Jerusalem is not useful service in the sense in which I mean. Service to be USEFUL must be of such a character as to supply a real need, either physical, intellectual or spiritual. Men's standards of morals and ethics are changing. Pretty soon it will be that folks who do NO LABOR and folks who live by that kind of knavery, hitherto regarded as respectable, or even as an indication of superior ability, will be held in scorn. When that day comes you would no more take off your hat to the fat parasite who rides in his limousine than you would to the lean and dirty specimen who ambles up to your back door and asks for a handout. But when this day comes there will not BE ANY fat parasites, they will all be doing useful work. Neither will there be any lean; society will quit manufacturing them, too.

"Der Tag"—now I've played hell. I've confessed to "Bolshevik" convictions, and that of course means that a fellow is on the war path smeared in red paint, and sworn to destroy religion, break up the home, institute free love and dump his bastard brats into the arms of the state. If a fellow whispers that he thinks everyone should be required to do his per capita part of THE USEFUL work of the world, he at once becomes a dangerous anarchist and a "Bolshevik," and should be interned at once.

The Class Struggle is no because that from the earliest history of the race A PART of mankind have succeeded in dumping the labor of their upkeep on the others. Then, too, the knaves have ALWAYS insisted that they were SUPERIOR to the fellows they robbed, and must live in luxury and splendor.

These fellows have always believed in democracy—for themselves. Among each other they have always practiced democracy. In Feudal England when her highways and byways were adorned by the skeletons of petty thieves clanking their chains as they swayed suspendid in the wind, "The Peers of England" walked to earth, the freest and most democratic of men. For each other they had the uttermost solicitude, but woe betide the underling who transgressed their "laws" in the slightest. Law has always been for the suppression of the "underling" that the superman might live in ease and security without doing the labor necessary to his upkeep.

And now that "the underlings" are seeing the rawness of the game and insisting upon using the structure of government to free themselves from their parasites, the "better closes" are squealing like peeved kins and complaining that we agitators are inciting "class hatred." Poor dears, they never appeal to hate. If you think so, just read the kind of ladylike observations in their kept press about the Russian Bolsheviki.

January has not been a successful month in our movement here in Virginia. Guess the comrades have let loose to spit on their hands. The chronicle for January is almost "nothing doing." However, there are indications that February will make amends for the lag in January. I once asked a materialist who was [illegible] about the Orthodox C [illegible] answered bluntly—"more men." The definition of the chief end of a Socialist should likewise be—"more Socialists." "By the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread." Let's all get busy and help God Almighty to enforce this decree.

TRY THE CARD SELLING PLAN

In conversation with a local physician in regard to the influenza he stated that October the banner flu month netted him an average wage of thirty dollars per day. Now at a recent meeting of the fraternity in Chicago they acknowledged their inability to find a cure for the malady, either had a preventative been discovered.

Which all reminds us of the oft repeated accusation that it had always been more profitable to prolong than to cure diseases. However, it is generally conceded that inefficient nourishment is the advance agent and prime factor in producing and distributing the plague.

Semi-starvation, capitalism's noblest offspring is the chief propaganda used in securing votes and getting business for doctors and undertakers. Papers like the Ohio Socialist explain the underlying causes of diseases both body and politic Socialism being the only known remedy for a sick world. Subscription cards are in demand. Virginia comrades, if you don't believe it just try selling them.

Doings in Davenport

According to the Daily Times of Davenport, Ia., "A Socialist Plot Was Nipped by the City Council."

The plot turned out to be the Socialist Aldermen, Peck and Bracher, had opposed the payment of a bill to cover the expenses of city officials to St. Louis and return, on the ground that only three were authorized to make the trip to inspect paving.

The Kate Richards O'Hare meeting held in Northwest Turner hall, Davenport, Ia., was such a pronounced success it disturbed the peace of the minds of our celebrated? Scott County Council of National Defense. They have just issued an appeal to all good citizens to do all in their power to discourage the holding of these lectures, by refusing to let them use halls and otherwise intimidating the party members. Of course, this appeal, together with the tirade against the two Socialist aldermen, for taking an active part in the meeting, will practically insure us a capacity house at the Turner Grand Opera, where Comrade L. E. Katterfeld will speak Thursday, Feb. 20, at 8 p. m.

We have made it a practice during the past year to ignore any and all charges, the plute press and the paytriot for $ organization has caused to be published broadcast, and it has got their goat to say the least. They cannot understand how we can stage successful meetings when their influence is exercised against them. Well, we are telling them none of our business, but simply going ahead and arranging dater for lectures. We are now endeavoring to secure Comrade George R. Kirkpatrick for the latter part of March.

A COMRADE'S OPINION

Local Columbus hall, 50 1-2 West Gay St., was well filled Sunday p. m., Feb. 9, and Comrade Charles Baker, of Hamilton (Canton) made one of the best speeches I have ever heard in all my twenty years of experience in the Socialist movement. Comrade Baker will long be remembered by the people present on account of the [illegible]

By CHAS. BAKER.

The organization at Sandusky is ready to don its fighting clothes, and get to work. My meeting there was a success in every way. Even the press gave the meeting a column write up.

Holland, Ohio, is the place our howling patriots gave away clothing free, this past month. Three of our comrades received a suit of tar and feathers. But this gang has run for cover, after trampling under foot every semblance of democracy and rapping the ideals the American government was supposed to have been founded upon. The meeting at Holland was a success. Our respects were paid to the Pay-tri-ots, who did such noble work in behalf of democracy.

The fires of the revolution are burning brightly at Lima. With such a fireman as Comrade Blank, why shouldn't they be kept burning? The hall here was too small to hold the vast gathering of workers hungering for our message. Many were turned away. Lima will be heard from, rest assured.

* * *

It is seldom indeed, that a Socialist agitator has a Mayor to play the part of a bell hop, but such was the case when I landed in Piqua. Comrade Hamilton showed me to my room in his beautiful home. Since his, or the mayor, spent several days in the Hoose-gow, I felt at home. Local Piqua is moving into larger quarters and establishing a reading room, which proves that the movement there has been killed. Another such killing as they received will return them to control of the city. We had a splendid and very successful meeting.

Sure, Columbus is on the Socialist map. Anyone attending the meeting there on the 9th would think the revolution was on, and that Columbus was the headquarters. Machinists' hall was filled.

The greatest opportunity the movement of this country ever had to do effective work, is here. Though many are timid and still afraid to show themselves, the workers everywhere are eager for our message.

Nearly every place I go if I have been there before, I meet discharged soldiers who wanted to break up meetings before, now hungry for our message.

The "Heroes of today, will be the hoboes of tomorrow." How true it is. Do I not see it coming true all along the line? My advice to the comrades of Ohio, is strike while the iron is hot. Our hour has arrived.

COLUMBUS GROWING

February 6th the attendance at the local meeting showed an encouraging increase and the financial secretary in making his monthly report stated that the increase in sale of dues stamps for the month of January was more than one hundred per cent more than in January, 1918. And seven applications for membership were favorably acted upon. A motion was passed to put names on the Ohio Socialist subscription list for three months each, to the amount of $10.00 and an order be drawn on the treasurer for that purpose. We had quite a pleasant surprise by Comrade H. L. A. Holman of Texas dropping in and giving a lecture on organic law and he presented the subject in an able manner and was received with much enthusiasm.—E. B. Eubanks.

WOULD YOU LIKE A FARM HOME AND OWN YOUR OWN JOB?

THEN READ THIS: I have been in all the southern states bordering upon the gulf and I believe south-eastern Mississippi is the most desirable location for one with small means to build a farm home. The climate is very healthful, good water, roads and excellent schools, the people are sociable and hospitable; direct lines to market. Good lands for general and special farming and stock raising at $10.00 per acre on easy terms. No swamp lands, but gently rolling and well watered by small streams; plenty of rain, no long winters—can farm all the year. Fruits and early vegetables grown for northern market. This land will triple in value in the next five years. If you would like to join with a dozen or more comrades to form a colony settlement, write for further particulars to J. F. A Few Big Boosts

Here we shall record a few boosts of locals and comrades who are working to spread the message of Socialism. Space alone prevents us from giving notice to the hundreds of comrades who send us subscriptions week after week.

The past month and a half have recorded the highest point we have reached in the number of subscriptions received. Slightly over five hundred a week has been the average. To the comrades who are responsible for this great increase we must content ourselves with a hearty THANK YOU.

Here are instanced a few big lists received lately. Last week we published the fact that Local Galion, O., had sent in a list of 120 subs. Galion is going to occupy a large place on the Socialist map. Just keep your eye on these comrades.

Comrades W. E. Reynolds of Battle Creek, Mich., is sending in some large batches of late. Comrade Reynolds makes it a joint to boost the O. S. at the meetings he addresses. Here is what he has sent us lately. From Grand Rapids and Muskegon meetings, 43; from Kalamazoo meetings, 44, and from Battle Creek, 6. Comrade Reynolds is a result getter when it comes to selling subs or literature. He makes 'em want them.

* * *

Now listen, you comrades who think it can't be done. Here's evidence that it can be. It's already been done consequently it can be done again. Suppose you try it. Here is what has been done. A comrade whose name is kept to himself for reasons send in—guess how many yearlies—no, it isn't ten nor twenty. It's thirty-six. Thirty-six yearlies in one batch. Now that you know it can be done suppose you really try. What say?

* * *

Comrade Katterfeld sent in thirteen subs as a result of his short tour in Ohio.

* * *

Comrade Baker keeps a flock of sub cards flying into the office all the time. Comrade Baker works on the principle that a speaker's work is only half done unless he leaves behind a weekly visitor in the form of an Ohio Socialist. Is he right? He is.

* * *

Short, but to the point, was the letter Comrade H. T. Auckerman of Kalamazoo sent with his list of 44 subscribers. He says they are trial subs. All right, comrades, we will do business on trial or any other way, confident that you will like our ways and renew, especially with a comrade like H. T. A. to watch your expirations.

* * *

Local Columbus is preparing the seed bed from which will spring a crop of future members when it passed a motion to place 40 names of workers upon the O. S. lists for a period of three months. As we have said before, every dollar put into the O. S. comes back to the local in dues—that is, it makes new members. Try the plan, comrades.

* * *

The recent meetings in the state have brought in hundreds of subscriptions. Thurber Lewis is gathering quite a few on his organization trip and other meetings have proven the advisability of making it a special order of business at every meeting to sell Ohio Socialist sub cards.

* * *

We would like to continue for another column telling of the results [illegible] whose good work is not recorded here we will merely add—that there is just one thing better than being a Socialist—that is to be a live one.

The Ohio Socialist just suits me. Before the war I read The Appeal for 20 years. Am not reading it now.—M. L. Springer, Jeromesville, O.

party has just received a copy of the "Labor Leader," the organ of the Independent Labor Party. This is the first copy received for more than two years. It received its news of the trial from Paris.

"The news of this latest outrage against justice and freedom," declares the "Labor Leader," bears out only too powerfully what Mr. Oswald Garrison Villard, the editor of the American "Nation," told us last week in his interview with regard to the state of "war mania" that would seem to be still prevailing in the United States.

"To this is now added Capitalist panic against Bolshevism, a panic which in large measure is born of a guilty conscience and fear of the harvest of past oppressions or the frustrations of present and future plans for world exploitation.

"Labor unrest is working all through the new world of the west as well as in the war tortured plains of Europe. The news from South America suggests efforts at revolution and ruthless suppressions, followed by fresh outbreaks. Who can foretell the end?"

Evidently the Czaristic tactics of American "justice" do not harmonize very well, to the ears of European workers, with the honeyed Wilsonian phrases attuned to the "fourteen points."

NEWS AND VIEWS—A WEEKLY SURVEY

(Edited By C. E. Ruthenberg)

A Silly Lie

Madame Breshkovsky, because of her long years of service in the cause of the Revolution in Ruusia, has been taken up by the capitalist press, and her utterances in regard to the Bolsheviki, to whom she is hostile because they overthrew the government of her favorite Kerensky, have been featured in an effort to discredit the present workers' government of Russia.

The kept press, however, uses only such part of the speeches and interviews of the "grandmother of the revolution" as suit its purpose. There is, for instance, that silly lie which this press has played up so frequently, about women being common property in Russia. Madam Breshkovsky had something to say on this point, but it didn't gibe with the silly story the capitalist press had so assiduously circulated, so it was suppressed. What Madam Breshkovsky said on this point is thus reported by the New York Call:

> Madam Breshkovsky denies emphatically that in Russia women are compelled to accept husbands chosen for them by the Government. She says "in one or two small soviets some such foolishness was proclaimed, but nobody would obey. It was never proposed for all Russia, and it was never carried out."
> She also scouts the story that women have been made "common property" or are subjected to any governmental compulsion in the matter of sex. She says "women have more freedom now in Russia than they ever had before."

On the basis of this statement, there is much better ground for the charge that the United States as a nation practices polygamy, because once upon a time a certain territory sanctioned polygamy—and rumor says it is still clandestinely practiced there—than there ever was for the foolish lie that circulated about Russia.

• • • •

The League of Nations

A reading of the proposed constitution of the League of Nations gives one the impression that this organization would have better been named the "League of Five Nations," for leaving high sounding rhetoric aside the document in question is an alliance between the United States, England, France, Italy and Japan for control of the world.

These five countries, together with Russia, Germany and Austria, were at the beginning of the world war competing with each other in the race for imperialistic development. Germany and Austria are now down and out and Russia is definitely removed from competition in the imperialistic struggle by the character of its industrial organization and the form of its government, which leaves the field to the five remaining powers.

The constitution of the League makes them the dominant force in the world. They are given a majority of the members of the executive council which will wield the power of the League.

This executive council, consisting of one delegate each from the five great powers and four delegates chosen by the other nations, will grant charters for exercise of mandatory power under the jurisdiction of the League. The designation of certain nations as "mandatories" in charge of undeveloped countries is the pretty fiction with which the designers of the League of Nations hope to cover up the essentially imperialistic character of the interest of the great powers in smaller and undeveloped countires.

In place of Great Britain annexing the German colonies in Africa, it, or one of its self-governing dominions, will become "mandatory" for these colonies, and proceed to cary on the work of exploitation just as if the annexation had taken place.

We may expect that as soon as the constitution is definitely adopted that our capitalist press will begin a campaign for the designation of the United States as "mandatory" for Mexico. Then, in place of making an open, imperialistic attack upon Mexico, to safeguard the investments of American capitalists there, as the capitalist press has been recently urging, this country can go into Mexico under the halo and with the blessing of the League of Nations to administer, in the words of the constitution of the League, "a sacred trust of civilization." Will the result be any different?

The five nations that now dominate the League of Nations hold a dominant position in the world. At present they are in a position to divide the world between them for the purposes of capitalist imperialism. But what will happen when a new imperialistic power arises? Would a capitalist Germany be in a different position than that which brought from that country the complaint that it was being denied its place in the sun and led to the precipitation of the world war, in an effort on the part of that country to gain by force what it could not secure otherwise? What will happen when an Argentine, Brazil, or a China in the process of industrial development reaches the point of development now existing in the United States?

The dream of world peace is still far from being realized in the constitution of the League of Nations. It will not be realized until the industrial system of all the great powers are recast after the fashion of the new industrial order in Russia.

More News From Berne

How much out of touch the International Socialist Congress at Berne is with the movement of the masses of workingmen in all countries is indicated in the nature of the question which the congress is discussing.

Last week we reported that the important question up for decision were responsibility for the war and whether the Bolshevik regime in Russia should be condemned. According to later news dispatches published in this country the further deliberations of the congress have covered the question of the treatment of prisoners of war and whether France was releasing German war prisoners quickly enough and the matter of plebiscite to determine whether Alsace-Lorraine should remain German or be restored to France. In addition, which is the nearest the congress has come to discussing the question of direct interest to the workers; it agreed to demands to be presented to the Paris Peace Conference, which call for the establishment of the eight hour day with a 36 hour rest period and prohibit the employment of children under fifteen years of age.

That an International Socialist Congress should devote its time to such questions at a time when the social revolution has been successful in Russia, Germany ready for the same victory, Great Britain seething with uprisings of the workers demanding a new social order and great mass movements arising in all countries, shows how far the old leaders of International Socialism have drifted from the revolutionary ideals of the founders of the workingclass movement.

Frightened and Childish

The fright of the ruling clas of this country over the sweep of the revolutionary movement of the workers has not been better illustrated than in the proposed deportation of alien members of the I. W. W. and other radical organizations.

It is frightened people who do foolish and childish things and surely no more foolish way of dealing with the radical workingclass movement could be devised than the method of deporting these alien workers who have taken part in this movement in this country.

The capitalist class of this country has yet to learn that it is not individuals that bring about a revolution. All the alien radicals in this country might preach a revolution till doomsday without causing even a ripple in the affairs of this country. Revolutions are not made; they grow out of the industrial conditions under which the people gain their living.

While the ruling class of this country is going ahead with its plans of deportation the industries continue to shut down and the workers are thrown out on the streets. Every factory closed is more potential as a breeder of industrial revolt than a hundred radicals urging the overturn of the present rule in industry. For every alien radical it will be able to deport the capitalist class will create a hundred men with similar ideas through unemployment and the oppression and exploitation of the workers in the industries.

And, at the same time, leaving aside the pretensions of democracy and freedom which the proposed deportation is violating so brutally, most of the persons deported will be only too glad to accept free passage to the country of their birth, which they will probably find farther in advance on the road to the social revolution than the United States, and where they will also find ample opportunity to serve the cause of international social revolution.

Verily the masters of the world play a sorry part when they turn from the merry game of amassing wealth to deal with great social movement which is preparing to sweep them out of existence.

Out—Manouvered

The Russian situation continued to present a series of contradictory reports so far as the Allied attitude toward the Soviet Government is concerned. One day recently brought a dispatch from Washington stating on the authority of Secretary of War Baker that the American forces at Archangel might be reinforced, and the next the statement from Paris that all Allied forces would be withdrawn from Russia in the spring.

In the meantime it appears that the Soviet Government has won a diplomatic victory in the negotiations about the Princess Island conference. The latest press dispatches from Paris contain the suggestion that the conference will not be held. If these reports are to be taken at their face value they would seem to indicate that the diplomats who made the proposal for the conference expected the Soviet Government to refuse to participate. They could then go before the people of their country with the statement that they had made every effort to bring about a settlement of the Russian question through negotiations and that the Soviet Government had been the stumbling block to such a settlement. Thus they might have overcome the strong feeling in opposition to Russian intervention.

By promptly accepting the invitation for a conference the Soviet Government blocked this scheme and now the Allies are backing out of the very conference they proposed. That the Soviet Government is taking every advantage of the strong position it has won in the negotiations about the Princess Island conference, is shown in the following quotation from an article in Izvestia, sent out by the Moscow government wireless:

> Hitherto the Russian Government has not received any proposal from the entente, and we do not know if such proposal will be made or not. But if it is made, the Workers' and Peasants' Government will examine it seriously, and will not refuse to enter into pourparlers on the subject. If the proposals made did not contain any impossible stipulations, if they did not force Soviet Russia to commit acts contrary to the principles of its policy, or endeavor to injure or conquer the working classes, the Soviet Government will examine the proposals with great attention, and will not refuse to make certain sacrifices in order to obtain the renunciation, on the Allies' part, of all intervention, in Russian affairs, and of their attempts to establish a pre-revolutionary regime in Russia.
> Our previous experience in our relations with the imperialists of the entente does not allow us to be optimistic on the subject of their intention to renounce intervention, and to make proposals which would be acceptable to the Russian Government. Our apprehensions still exist, and acts alone will be able to shake them. We will therefore await these acts.

"The so-called sympathetic Seattle strike was an attempted revolution," says Mayor Ole Hanson of that city, in a United Press statement. "Their plans exactly followed those of the Russian revolution. Each union was to operate its own industry." Let's hope it was true.

The Swiss Socialists forecast the character of the Berne International Socialist Conference in an article which appeared in the Berner Tagwacht, from which we quote the following:

> What is the value of this conference, and what is its aim? Who will take part in it? It is the conference of the old Socialist parties, the Scheidemanns of Germany, of Thomas, Renaudel and Cachin in France, of Henderson, of Vandervelde, of Troelstra. It will be the conference of the social-patriots of all countries, and these will render absolutely no negative devisions, since after all they have no quarrel with each other, as they have all betrayed the International and sold the Socialist principles in the same way, and, serving imperialism, allowed themselves to be hitched to the wagon of their bourgeoise in the same manner.
> They have nothing to learn from each other and nothing to tell each other that will lead them into new paths. The conference rebuilt upon the same foundation and with the ruins of the old International the same fragments, like preceding conferences, will end in resolutions that say nothing and that above all, will not contain that for which the working class of all countries has vainly been awaiting four years—the call to action.

Representative Mason of Illinois said at a "Truth About Russia" meeting in Washington, at which he made an unexpected appearance: "American soldiers are being kept in Russia for no other purpose than to make sure that interest on our bonds will be paid. I have charged this on the floor of the House, and will repeat it until they put me in prison for it. I can't see any reason why our young men should be made process servers. I represent two million people of this country, and I believe that not more than a half a dozen of them are willing that American troops should remain in Russia."

"Now is not a good time for those who are interested in the preservation of present social institutions to invite a panic," says the Cleveland Press in discussing proposals to cut wages. No, wait until the present industrial unrest subsides, and then swat the workers good and hard. Those are the tactics the capitalists are adopting. But will the unrest subside before it blows capitalism out of existence?

Some twenty-five thousand English soldiers openly mutinied against being returned to France after leave of absence at home, according to the London Herald. Their slogan was "The war is over; we won't fight Russia and we mean to go home." Forming a soldiers' union they took the matter of demobilization in their own hands, and surprising as it may seem, the military authorities were obliged to acquience.

The Seattle Strike

sists of strikers, slowly, but in most cases, smilingly, just like myself, on their way to an eating house or to their strike headquarters.

Looking up Union street on Sixth avenue I noticed an immense crowd of people standing silently on the walks and in portions of the streets as if waiting for something to turn up. It is there I naturally went.

I could not discover anything to satisfy my curiosity or to learn the cause for this unusual gathering I knew was contrary to all rules of the general strike committee and yet many of the labor police were walking up and down to keep walks clear for the traveling public. City police were nowhere in sight. But arriving at the Union Record building and looking at a poster on the office window, I read "Strike Bulletins will be distributed at 2 p. m." However, it was only [illegible]:10 p. m. them.

Going around to Sixth avenue the crowd was still more dense. Six Union Record automobiles were lined up next to the Record basement entrance, and along the wall of the building fifty or more lusty, noisy newsboys, each striving to be nearest to the basement door and eager to get the first bundle of strike bulletins for free distribution. The newsboys union strike committee had commandeered these boys to do this work of distribution without any remuneration, and yet, greater eagerness for work could not have been displayed by these urchins, had five cents and even more been promised for each copy of the bulletin this disposed of.

To be sure—

"SOCIALISM WILL DESTROY ALL INCENTIVE FOR WORK!"

The "Seattle Star" (Scripps paper) is one black away from the Union Record on Seventh avenue. An empty truck came along on Union street with a policeman armed with a sawed-off shotgun, sitting next to the driver and two discharged soldiers similarly armed behind the seat. I asked of bystanders the meaning of it. I learned that it was this truck which had taken copies of the Star to some place down town.

Going up Seventh avenue and passing the alley I saw emergency police of discharged soldiers, three on each end barring entrance. Seventh avenue was roped off. At each end of the block were four mounted police and perhaps 100 people. In front of the Star building two mounted police and a number of soldier police. To each of these two mounted police a bundle of papers was given for distribution to the waiting small crowds at each end of the roped-off block. To another policeman mounted on a combination motorcycle a bundle of Stars was also given which he took away to some unknown place.

How did the Star come from the press? Upon making this inquiry I learned that men in soldier uniforms designating various grades, among them officers, were acting as strike breakers. It was not known though [illegible] Star" got out on the streets and among the people. Going around the streets later, I noticed heaps of copies of the Star in shreds scattered along the walks and streets, but yet, there were no reports of any kind of disturbances.

After receiving my copy of the Strike Bulletin, reading it as I passed leisurely along, I went up First avenue and coming up opposite the armory, I noticed military trucks lined up there. I remembered then of having read in the Bulletin that regular troops were in Seattle. I went down the hill to see the military sights. I learned that the troops there were from Camp Lewis. A few minutes late eight more trucks loaded with soldiers from Fort Lawton fully equipped for field service arrived.

I wondered what possible work has been laid out for these troops which have been drafted to kill Huns and to make the world safe for democracy. There are no more Huns to be killed and those alive today are on the way to full freedom and the fullest enjoyment of democracy.

It seems that even the policemen have gone on a strike. The few to be seen along the streets seem to feel irritated for lack of work. Happy are those assigned to work for the Seattle Star. Moreover, it seems that Seattle's "criminals" have joined the strike also. I mean those designated on the police blotter as holdups, burglars and thiefs, not those who get in their work in the office buildings, commercial institutions or members of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce.

During the first 24 hours of the mass strike two thousand policemen in Seattle arrested 32 persons for minor offences (an unusually low number) and not one of these was in connection with the strike.

The hotel clerk just now informs me that some mail had arrived for me. The mailcarriers are about the only workers remaining at the post of duty. I'll walk down six flights of stairs for my mail and back again.

PENNA. SOCIALISTS LAUNCH PARTY PRESS

The Socialist Party of Pennsylvania will establish a weekly paper of its own starting early in March. The name will be The Pennsylvania Socialist, and will be edited by State Secretary Birch Wilson.

The subscription price is $1.00 a year. Lists are now being circulated throughout the state by the locals. Subscriptions are being received. We urge all our Pennsylvania readers to get behind this paper—their paper—and roll up a big circulation in advance of publication—and to keep busy rolling it up until the last vestige of exploitation is driven from the face of the earth. THE NEARING TRIAL the men mentioned had been correctly quoted, as Nearing had doubtless relied upon newspaper reports of their addresses.

The judge acknowledged the correctness of Barnes' contention, but said that the quotations from the congressman had been made for illustrative purposes only.

It was at this point that Nearing began to quote naval and educational authorities in support of his position.

Reading from an article called "An Economic Interpretation of War," by Professor Seligman, in a book entitled "Problems of Readjustment," issued by the Appleton company, in 1915, Nearing quoted:

"While economic conflicts, indeed, do not by any means explain all national rivalries, they often illumine the dark recesses of history and afford on the while the most weighty and satisfactory interpretation of modern national contests, which are not clearly referable to purely facial antagonism."

Stedman interrupted to ask if the witness did not acknowledge that racial antagonism also had a part in producing wars, and he replied emphatically in the affirmative.

"Racial antagonisms are a factor certainly," he said, "and religious antagonisms are a factor, but the fundamental factors are economic. The economic conditions of life determine all life. All these questions root back in economic life."

Quoting further from Professor Seligman, Nearing said:

QUOTES NAVY LEAGUE'S CREED

"To say, then, that Great Britain or Germany is responsible for the present war, seems to involve a curiously short-sighted view of history. All countries are subject to these great forces over which they have no control."

"That is Professor Seligman's theory also, then, is it?" asked Stedman, "as expressed in 1915?"

"Yes," said Nearing, "that is the theory on which the great madness is based."

Nearing then read from Sea Power, a magazine issued by the Navy League, extracts from an article, entitled, "The Navy League's Creed," appearing in the issue of September, 1916:

"The Navy League believes:

"1. That most modern wars arise largely from commercial rivalries.

"2. That we are now seizing the world's trade.

"3. That following the present war will come the most drastic readjustment and the most dangerous rivalries ever known.

"4. That the United States will be the storm center of this disturbance.

"5. And that, consequently, it is our duty to guard ourselves against these dangers while there is yet time."

Nearing had also brought with him two lists of quotations from recent speeches of President Wilson, but since they were delivered in the [illegible]

HITS SECRET TREATIES.

He then read the quotation already referred to from an article by Bon l Thomason, "Fighting and Trading," in "The Seven Seas," another periodical issued by the Navy League:

"Since the days of the wars in the name of the Prince of Peace, the battles between nations have been waged directly or indirectly on account of commerce."

The witness then took up the matter of secret treaties, speaking particularly of the treaty made in the early part of the summer of 1917 between England and Italy. He said the treaty contained 15 articles, providing for Italy's share of Europe, of Asia and of Africa, and stipulated that Egnland should loan to Italy £50,000,000.

"Ten days later," said Nearing, "Italy entered the war."

THE SECOND DAY

Continuing his testimony on the second day of the trial Nearing step by step, bringing forward facts, figures and authorities, showed how the machinery of the American government had been brought under the control of the business interests.

Quoting from President Wilson's book, "The New Freedom," he said:

"The government which was designed for the people has got into the hands of bosses and their employers, the special interests. An invisible empire has been set up above the forms of democracy."

United States Attorney Barnes interrupted to ask when the book was issued, and Nearing replied, "In 1912." His own counsel, Stedman, added:

"And the President authorized a new edition of the book, which was brought out in 1918."

Supporting his contention that war was fomented by the capitalistic interests, Nearing again brought forward paragraphs from the official organ of the Navy League, the Seven Seas.

Quoting from the November, 1915, issue of this magazine, Nearing said:

"There should be no doubt that even with all possible moral, it is the absolute right of a nation to live to its full intensity, to expand to found colonies, to get richer and richer by any proper means, such as armed conquest, commerce, diplomacy."

From the issue of August, 1915, he read:

"With an adequate force, both naval and military, the United States will be in a position not only to enforce the receipt of a just share of the world's commerce, but also to forward civilization by aiding other nations to attain their share."

READS FROM NAVAL JOURNAL

From the July, 1915 issue, he read:

"Do Americans realize that one of the reasons why we must of necessity be intensely concerned in the submarine and trade warfare now waging between Germany and the Allies is that having no ships of our own with which to carry $4,000,000,000 worth of [illegible] lies are free and able to carry our goods? This question faces every single man, woman and child in this country. Shall we continue to jeopardize our $4,000,000,000 trade with the world by trusting to luck, fate or the good will of the nations who may have the ships in which to carry our goods to safety or destruction?"

From the issue of September, 1915, he read:

"To adopt German standards of militarism would, of course, be impossible among Anglo-Saxons, but this does not minimize the fact that world empire is the only logical and natural aim of a nation that desires to remain in a nation."

An electric thrill was noticeable throughout the court room when he read from the issue of February, 1916:

"Democracy has certain glorious advantages, but in matters relating to foreign policy, and particularly to war, it is extremely incompetent."

WALL STREET DIGEST QUOTED.

Following up his contention that business interests had forced the war upon the American people for their own gains, Nearing read from the March 3 issue of the Wall Street Digest:

"The upward movement in the price of stocks dates from the day that the German ambassador at Washington was handed his passports, and although there have been slight reactions, the movement has been fairly continuous from that day to this."

Backing his contention that the political machinery of the nation is controlled by the united force of capital, Nearing read from President Wilson's book, "The New Freedom":

"The masters of the government of the United States are combined capitalists and manufacturers of the United States. Suppose you go to Washington and try to get at your government you will always find that while you are politely listened to, the men really consulted are the men who have the biggest stake, the big bankers, the big manufacturers, the big masters of commerce, the heads of the railroad corporations and steamship corporations."

Quoting from his own book, "The Germ of War," he read the statement that a leading powder company of the United States was found to have had a contract with the German empire, according to which the American company was bound to inform the German government of every new formula used in the making of explosives.

Telling of the efforts of the bought press to stir up the war fever, he related the circumstances of 1915-16, when certain interests were trying to push the American people into a war with Mexico and went so far with their campaign of falsehood as to call forth an official rebuke from the White House.

THE CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Early in the cross-examination, Barnes produced a card [illegible] signature, but that he had signed one just like it, of which this was a copy.

Stedman objected to the introduction of the card as evidence. Barnes, explaining his purpose in presenting it, read the pledge it contained that the signer would stand by the platform and policies of the Socialist Party. Barnes said he would not insist upon its introduction if Stedman objected, but a moment later asked Nearing if he had voted in favor of the St. Louis resolution in the referendum.

Nearing replied.

"I did not, but if I had been"—

Stedman tried to stop him, since he had given the required answer in the first three words of his reply.

But Nearing insisted on volunteering additional words and said, explaining that he had been away from home at the time the vote was taken:

"I did not vote for the resolution, but if I had had the opportunity I should certainly have done so."

Referring to a passage in the St. Louis resolution, Barnes asked:

"When you indorsed that, did it mean to you that you would not volunteer in the army and would not subscribe to Liberty bonds?"

Nearing answered:

"It meant to me that I would not volunteer in the army and would not subscribe to Liberty bonds."

"That was the thing you were working for in 1917, and still believe," said Nearing.

"PARTY ACTS WITHIN LAW."

Asked to explain the expression, "To use all legal means to bring the war to a speedy conclusion," Nearing said:

"The Socialist Party always takes the position that it acts within the law."

A little later, in reply to a question about President Wilson's preparedness program and policy, Nearing said:

"I have never been able to understand the President's words, nor many of his actions."

After requesting Nearing's definitions to his terms plutocracy, vested interests and kindred expressions, Barnes asked:

"And you mean these financiers wanted to get us into the war for their own selfish reasons?"

"For their own selfish reasons, yes sir," answered the witness.

"OUT FOR PROFITS."

"The financiers are just like other people," explained Nearing, "only they are out primarily to make profits."

And the people in the court room laughed again when he added:

"They are not in business for their health, as they say."

Barnes took up in detail five lines from the first page of "The Great Madness," in which Nearing wrote, referring to the members of the plutocracy:

"They also believe there are some [illegible] The plutocrats would welcome a war that promised salvation from any such calamities."

"I believe the capitalist class as a class," said Nearing, "prefers war to the disestablishment of capitalism."

"What political party advocates the things you specify in this paragraph, which the capitalists think are worse than war?"

"They are the things the Socialist party stands for," said Nearing, with a curious triumphant ring in his voice.

And do you think that is why the capitalists insisted on going into this war?" asked Barnes.

"In Germany, yes," answered Nearing.

"NOT YET."

"It was then that Barnes asked the question:

"You don't think the capitalists in the United States are afraid of the Socialist Party?"

And Nearing snapped radiantly:

"Not yet."

Page by page Barnes went through the defendant's book, asking for explanations and a statement of the author's purpose in writing the words.

The Call came in for a bit of free advertising again at this session of the trial, when Nearing referred to it as an authority for some of the statements he had made in his book.

"You don't consider The New York Call an authority, do you?" asked Barnes, and Nearing replied emphatically:

"I certainly do."

The court and the Assistant District Attorney repeatedly pressed Nearing to say whether he ever thought in writing his book that it might have the effect of restraining any reader from enlisting or might encourage any soldier to be insubordinate.

WITNESS INSISTS

The witness insisted that he at no time had any such thought in his mind.

"I should say," he declared, "that the millions of Socialists who fought in the war in all armies were less insubordinate than many others."

Another of the strange thrills with which the day was filled shot through the court room when he added:

"I had no reason to believe that any man who got these pamphlets would be any less a good soldier, but I did hope they might make him a better brother in the new brotherhood that is coming."

"Do you still feel you were right in the position you took in this pamphlet?" asked Barnes, as he neared the close of his cross-examination.

STANDS BY BELIEFS

"I still believe the American plutocracy wanted the war," replied Nearing, "and they used the war to establish their power."

"And you still believe you were right in trying to spread these teachings?" Barnes added.

"I still believe I was right," said [illegible]

German Workers Gain Victory in Struggle for Industrial Democracy

Destination Withheld From American Soldier's in Expedition to Invade Russia

Bavaria In Control of Workers and Soldiers Council

Dispatches from Germany indicate that the struggle of the workers of that country to establish an industrial republic modeled on the lines of the Russian Soviet government, which was temporarily checked a few weeks ago when the uprising in which Liebknecht and Luxemburg were killed, was put down, is in full swing again.

According to these dispatches the shooting of the Bavarian premier, Kurt Eisner, was followed by the Workers and Soldiers' Council of that state taking over the government and establishing a dictatorship of the proletariat.

The interesting phase of this dispatch is the clause which states that the Spartacans, Independent Socialists and Majority Socialists combined in establishing this dictatorship of the proletariat, indicating that the rank and file of the workers who have been supporting the Majority Socialists, are moving toward the left and making common cause with the Spartacans.

Other reports say that similar movement are underway in all the industrial sections of Germany and that the Spartacans have been successful in taking control of a number of the smaller states.

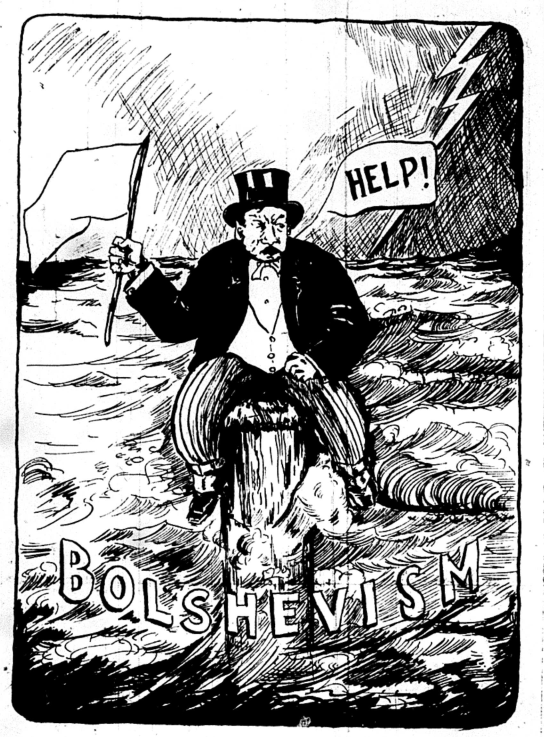
The hopeful sign about the present uprising is the admission which is made even by the capitalist press, that the Spartacans are stronger today than they were at the time of the revolt in Berlin.

The same dispatches that announce the victories of the German workers in the struggle for industrial democracy bring the news that the constituent assembly in session at Weimar has completed the draft of the proposed German constitution. This constitution would make of Germany, not an industrial democracy, but a capitalist democracy. The provisions of this constitution, while throwing a few sops to the workers in the shape of provisions about hours of labor, minimum wages and other similar measures, which have appeared as part of the reform movement in every capitalist country, says nothing about changing the control of industry and the wage and profit system.

During the progress of events in Russia it was bitter experience which disillusioned the workers. They tried a coalition government and found their status was not altered a great deal, they tried the moderate Socialist government of Kerensky and it did nothing to change the status of either the workers or peasants. Then they placed the Bolsheviki in power and because the Bolsheviki have put into practice the measures which the workers and peasants desired, they have remained in firm control of the Soviet government.

The German workers are going through a similar process of disillusionment, only events are moving faster than in Russia.

It is no doubt due to the fact that the masses of the workers, following the decisions of the constituent assembly, see that there was no hope of the workers winning their freedom through the action of this assembly that is bringing these workers to the standard of the Spartacans. As their disillusionment continues the powers of the Spartacans will grow and it should not be long before Germany aligns itself with Russia and becomes the second industrial democracy.



RISING——AND NO SAIL IN SIGHT

Returned Soldier Says People Lived Better Under Bolsheviki and That Latter Avoided Bloodshed

The office of the Russian Socialist Daily, "Novy Mir," in New York, was recently visited by a soldier of the American army, who just had returned from Archangel. His experience no doubt is of interest to every one who has been watching the drama which is being played in far distant North Russia. His story shows that not only is there no necessity for holding Allied troops in Russia, but that their being there is becoming a tragic farce, greatly damaging the reputation of America.

"I am a Russian," began the tale of the soldier. "I found myself in the American army, as many natives of Russia with "first papers" or without them. I lived in the state of Michigan and when the draft came I was taken in. I was placed in the 339th Michigan regiment and with this regiment I went to Europe to fight the 'democracy, freedom and justice.'

"When once you are in the army you become a small part of a machine which works as is prescribed; one loses his will, has to do whatever one is ordered to do. So it was in my case.

"The regiment went abroad. Already before the departure I had a hunch that we would be sent not to France but to Russia. I shared my apprehensions with some other soldiers, but they merely laughed at me.

"On our arrival in England we received our equipment and my fears doubled: the warm winter clothes we got augured nothing good. Again we started, and now my apprehensions proved to be true. We were sent, not to the south, but to the north, to Scotland. There we were put on a ship and departed. We traveled for seven days and when he saw the coast, we discovered that snow was on the mountains (early in September). Now it was clear that our destination was not France but Russia.

"Well, we could not help it. We had to wait and see what the future held in store.

"We landed at Archangel. We found there English and French soldiers. Before we landed we were told that we came to Russia not to fight her, but merely to safeguard the Allied ammunition stores. Yet no ammunition was found there; the Bolsheviki had carried away with them everything to the south—they cleared the place of everything till the last shell and cartridge. Only empty stores have remained.

"'What are we to do here, then?' we began to question ourselves and our officers. The officers were silent. Others said: 'The future will show.'

"The first day passed quietly. The plan was to organize a military parade through the city. Rain torrents caused the parade to be postponed. We scattered around and stood under awnings in order to protect ourselves against the rain.

"I found myself under a cover of a storeroom which was in course of construction and I started a conversation with the workers busy at it. 'How are things going?' I asked them. The workers in astonishment looked at me—a foreigner who speaks Russian. Their faces betrayed apprehension. 'What sort of man is he,' maybe a spy. I calmed them stating that I was a Russian, their countryman. We started a lively conversation. I found out that 'under the Bolsheviki' they had lived much better, they had bread and their earnings had been larger. As soon as the English came—said one of them—everything came to grief; no bread and poor earnings.

"Later I convinced myself of the truth of their words. The English indeed had seized everything there in a dictatorial manner ruled the territory occupied by the Allied troops. The population hates them, as one can hate foreign invaders. Their attitude of the Russians toward the Americans is considerably better.

"But let us return to what followed. A few days after our arrival in Archangel, we received orders to march south. 'Where?' we asked. 'To the front,' was the answer. There you are! So we got a front here too, and we came here to fight and not to safeguard something.

"The order is given and we have to obey. We were loaded into freight trains and then we started. I do not remember how long we were on the way. Days there are short and dark, nothing can be seen from the train. Finally we stopped. We discovered we were at the station Oboserska. We saw no Bolsheviki. Later we found out that the Bolsheviki were retreating to the south and not because they feared our forces, but merely because they wished to avoid slaughter.

"At one place, south of the station Oboserska, we, instead of meeting the bayonets of the Soviet troops, came across a train loaded with proclamations in English, French, Italian and other languages. In these proclamations the Bolsheviki explained the nature of the intervention and advised us to get home. The proclamations were speedily distributed. Later our officers [illegible]wise about it and seized them, burning them immediately.

"During the whole of my stay at the front I observed the new Bolshevist methods of warfare. The Bolsheviki did not harm us, although on several occasions they could have shot us down as so many partridges. Once, while we were crossing a river, a man came forward from the Bolshevist side with a white flag and speaking in English he told us that we were being misled, that we ought to leave the Russian territory and the Russian people at peace. 'You have come here to fight, and not we to fight you; we have done no harm to you; so go back to your homes.'

"There were also such instances; we are surrounded on all sides by the Bolsheviki, so that there is no way out of it. We are doomed, we think. But it is not so. They would keep us thus a day or two and then let us go free, unharmed. Only once they treated us to a machine gun and field gun fire—and indeed, at that time, there was no way out of it. There are no trenches, because one cannot dig in the frozen ground. Everywhere are marshes, and one stands almost waist line in water. We hid behind barricades made of logs. But, of course, it is a poor defense. When a shell strikes such a barricade nothing but splinters remain.

"During this 'meeting' I was wounded. I was sent to England and thence I came here."

Chicago Paper Declares Archangel Expedition Failure

The Chicago Tribune of February 10 publishes a letter from its correspondent who has been in North Russia, dated Vard, Norway, Feb. 1 (by cable from Norvik, Feb. 8). The following excerpts from his letter are of great interest.

"After two months spent in investigating the conditions in North Russia, where American troops are serving under allied dictatorship, I can state the following facts:

"First—The North Russia allied expedition has developed into a pitiful failure. It has failed to inspire confidence and loyalty and give real assistance to Russia. It has become a cesspool of jealousy, hatred, mistakes and shattered illusions. The different allies distrust one another and the Russians distrust the entire expedition.

"Second—The American troops were put under an absolute imperialistic command, being handled in a way that was against every tradition of the army and country. They were put to doing a king's business and to do whatever task was assigned to them by the British. American men and their ideals of right and fairness were entirely submerged through the un-American leadership.

"Third—The entire expedition suffered from a complete lack of spiritual leadership. Instead of being an ordinary soldier's job, this expedition required sympathetic understanding. It always has been more political than military. The original leaders thought themselves to be great soldiers and great diplomats, but they proved to be neither.

"Fourth—The expedition has lacked spiritual significance. Europe's war-tired men, sent here from the French battle fields, failed to appreciate the great revolution or sympathize with the unrest and the new birth that Russia is going through. Most of the allied soldiers, especially since the signing of the armistice, hated the job, despite the Russians, and have no concern with the future of the country. The expedition, lacking this spiritual significance in men's minds, has become a mere fighting job to collect Russia's debt to Europe.

"Fifth—There is no enthusiasm even among the intelligent Russians in the north to assist the allies and fight the Bolsheviki. Everywhere there is a growing disgust against the expedition, especially against the British.

"Sixth—The beautiful faith of the Russians for America is breaking under the manhandling by our forces under the foreign command. The American forces have been led by an American colonel when they should have had a major general. Within our own forces we lacked the right leadership, permitting the Americans to be placed under the limited control of foreigners.

"I have come out of Russia to write this. The censorship that has crowled back into its hole in most of the world still wears the iron heel of war days in the north. The American public has been fed pretty stories of the gentle glories of this 'help Russia' expedition, but the facts are that a mess has been stewed and has been kept for the cooks themselves.

Swedish Toilers in Protest for American Political Prisoners

Politiken, the chief organ of the Swedish left wing Socialists, publishes a half-page manifesto calling on the party membership throughout the land to organize protest meetings against America's treatment of political and industrial prisoners. Through its underground channels Politiken has procured a mass of details of specific cases of imprisonment of American workers, according to a cabled article by Bassett Digby in the Chicago Daily News.

The Swedish left Socialists are exhorted to do their utmost to cause the release of "American political prisoners."

Scott Nearing Free

After two days of deliberation the jury in the case of Scott Nearing brought in a verdict of "Not Guilty" so far as Nearing was concerned. At the same time the jury found the American Socialist Society, which controls the Rand School, guilty on two counts. The judge set aside the verdict so far as one of the counts was concerned and reserved decision on the other point. Attorneys for the society claim that the verdict against the society cannot stand in view of the verdict acquitting Nearing.

The victory in this case is particularly noteworthy, inasmuch as Nearing did not endeavor to hide his views or apologize for the statements made in "The Great Madness" for writing which he was indicted. On the stand, as shown by the evidence printed in the last issues of the "Socialist News" he did not only not retract what he said in his pamphlet, but he reasserted his views and proved the truth of his charges by evidence from the writings of the supporters of the present social system.

Nearing boldly challenged capitalism; the jury declared him not guilty of violating any law. It is the bold course that wins.

Biased Senate Committee Intent Upon Making Case Against Russia

The Senate Judiciary Committee, which is conducting the investigation of the Russian workers' government, after giving many days to opponents of the Bolshevik government, who were permitted to freely pronounce their criticism, called as witnesses John Reed and Louise Bryant, who were in Russia during the great part of the revolutionary period. In place of permitting these witnesses to discuss Russian affairs with the same freedom that was granted the opponents of the Soviet government, they were hedged about with instructions and rules and often limited to "yes" and "no" answers, when explanation was necessary for a complete understanding of the subject matter under discussion.

The flagrant injustice of the hearing took two forms: First, Miss Bryant was allowed to offer no testimony of her own, a privilege heretofore allowed to and over-encouraged in witnesses, and was silenced every time [illegible] to speak [illegible] her mind that, answer 'Yes' or 'No' to the question," was the phrase continually repeated throughout the proceedings. Second, the senators made every effort to trap Miss Bryant into unguarded replies. They skipped with astonishing briskness from point to point, throwing the attention of the audience into confusion.

Almost from the beginning senators King, Nelson and Wolcott dropped the mask of common courtesy. They forced out the words, "Miss Bryant," with evident distasste. To them the witness was not a woman, but a prey; and they fell upon her with hungry teeth. The bovine Major Holm put his awkwardly phrased questions in roars. Even the stenographer joined in the badgering.

"Turn your face toward me when you speak," he rapped, "I got to take this down, you know."

He was seated alongside Miss Bryant, and her words were clearly audible to [illegible] back of the room. From time to time a lukewarm vestige of Senator Overman's southern chivalry asserted itself. He put his questions mildly and, now and again, he permitted her to make explanations.

Considering the circumstances, Miss Bryant maintained her poise remarkably. At times, however, she gave evidence of extreme confusion. The heightened color which came to her cheeks after the first onslaught, remained throughout the hearing.

The inquisitors repeatedly attempted to force Miss Bryant into the admission that Col. Raymond Robbins of the American Red Cross had been in the employ of the Bolshevist government.

"Didn't he maintain an information bureau for the Bolsheviki?"

"No. He maintained a Russian information bureau for the Red Cross."

France Enslaves Russian Troops That Refuse to Fight Soviet Government

The correspondent of the New York Call, Paul Wallace Hanna, sends this interesting story of the treatment accorded Russian troops by the French government in the "war for democracy":

Between 30,000 and 40,000 Russian soldiers are held today in slavery by the Republic of France.

The crime of these slaves is that they refuse to make war against the Soviet Republic of Russia.

Every known method of coercion has been used by the Clemenceau government to break the will of these "obstinate" Russians whose steady reply to their persecutors is:

"We cannot make war on the Bolsheviki without knowing whether they are good or bad for Russia. Let us first return home and judge for ourselves."

These Russian slaves of France are at present engaged at hard work, and without compensation, under the tropic sun of French Africa. Late reports show they are dying in great numbers of hardship, privation and the diseases caused by the unaccustomed Africal climate.

Some 25 leaders of the "rebellious" Russian soldiers are held in miserable confinement on an island near Bordeaux.

Friends of the Russians have made repeated appeals to Clemenceau for mercy, saying:

"Can't you see that this cruel policy will make Russia the eternal enemy of France?" Such [illegible] have been contemptuously ignored.

Before the overthrow of the czar there were 25,000 Russian soldiers fighting against Germany on the French front. When news of the revolution reached them they joined in the general rejoicing of free men everywhere. They even committed the further offense of attempting to form soldiers' councils among themselves.

This conduct made them the objects of suspicion and hatred of the French authorities, by whom they were forthwith placed in virtual internment.

With the fall of Kerenski, the sympathy of the Russian soldiers in France went over to the Soviet regime, and when the peace of Brest-Litovsk was concluded they immediately declared themselves neutrals in the world war and demanded that they be allowed to return home.

This demand the French government met with machine gun fire, in which large numbers of the Russians were killed or wounded.

Labor Begins Campaign To Repudiate Alliance

(Special Correspondence)

Chicago.—Radical elements in the American Federation of Labor have started a campaign to repudiate the Gompers-Hussell "American Alliance for Labor and Democracy," organized for the purpose of putting the Socialist Party out of business under cover of the war mania.

This anti-alliance movement has received its most recent impetus by the resignation of Frank P. Walsh from "The Alliance."

It now comes to light that this "Alliance of reactionary labor officials, and renegade and outcast Socialists, was subsidized directly by the Democratic administration through George Creel's bureau of public in- [illegible] Gompers, and its secretary Frank Morrison, mouthpieces of the tottering officialdom of the American Federation of Labor.

Its avowed purpose was to chloroform the revolutionary aspiration of America's toilers, through carrying on a "poison gas" attack on the Socialist Party with the slogan, "Fight Bolshevism."

Walsh's friends announce that he quit this government inspired labor-chloroforming organization, because he disagreed with its policies, especially its close co-operation with the National Civic Federation in its anti-labor agitation, the incitement of imperialistic sentiment against Russia and [illegible] to the Tom Mooney [illegible]

Savage Sentence Passed Upon National Officials

After several weeks of consideration Judge K. M. Landis denied the motion made by the defense in the case of Victor L. Berger, Adolph Germer, J. L. Engdahls, Irving St. John Tucker and William Kruse. Following his usual course Judge Landis assumed a position of fairness during the trial and then imposed extreme sentences by giving each of the defendants twenty years on each count on which they were convicted.

It was evidently the intent of the prosecution to railroad the five men to prison at once, for the judge refused to permit the defendants to remain free on bail while the papers were prepared for the appeal to the higher court, and it was only by filing these papers at once that bail was permitted, and then it was made almost prohibitive. In order to temporary free the five prisoners it was necessary to schedule a half million dollars worth of property. The necessary amount of bail was secured, however, and the defendants will continue their work, limited, however, by the condition made by the judge of the appellate court, that they must not engage in such activities as those for which they were convicted. Manifesto and Program of the Left Wing of the American Socialist Movement

EDITOR'S NOTE: The world war has changed many things, among them the tactics of the working class movement of various countries. New ideas have come to the front and new tactics are being practiced. In printing this manifestor of the Left Wing Socialists we do so in the hope that it will stimulate discussion in the locals of the party and lead to the formation of clear-cut opinion as the future tactics of the Socialist Party of the United States. Such discussion and clarification of opinion must necessarily precede any possibility of building in this country a militant and effective Socialist movement.

INTRODUCTION

The members of the Socialist Party of America are entitled to an explanation for the issuance of this pamphlet by the Left Wing Group.

First of all, be it understood, we are not a secessionist movement, nor do we contemplate splitting the party. We are a very active and growing section of the Socialist Party which is attempting to reach the rank and file with our urgent message over the heads of the powers that be, who, through inertia or a lack of vision, cannot see the necessity for a critical analysis of the party's policies and tactics.

The daily press is closed to us; therefore we cannot adequately present our side of the case.

In the various discussions that arise wherever party members or delegates assemble, both sides grow too heated for calm, dispassionate judgment.

Therefore we have decided to issue our Manifesto and Program in pamphlet form, so that the rank and file may read and judge our case on its merits.

Comrades—and this is addressed exclusively to members of the party—the situation is such that a careful study of our position is absolutely imperative.

We come to you, the court of last resort, for judgment.

MANIFESTO

Prior to August, 1914, the nations of the world lived on a volcano. Violent eruptions from time to time gave warning of the cataclysm to come, but the diplomats and statesmen managed to localize the outbreaks, and the masses, slightly aroused, sank back into their accustomed lethargy with doubts and misgivings, and the subterranean fires continued to smoulder. Surely, the people reasoned, no one would be so mad as to precipitate a world war!

Besides, they trusted blindly—some in their statesmen, some in the cohesive power of Christianity, their common religion, and some in the growing strength of the International Socialist movement. Had not the German Social Democracy exchanged dramatic telegrams with the French Socialist Party, each pledging itself not to fight in case their governments declared war on each other? A general strike of workers led by these determined Socialists would quickly bring the governments to their senses!

So the workers reasoned, until the thunder-clap of Sarajevo and Austria's ultimatum to Serbia. Then, suddenly, the storm broke. Mobilization everywhere. Declarations of war. In three or four days Europe was in arms.

The present structure of society—Capitalism—with its pretensions to democracy on the one hand, and its commercial rivalries, armament rings and standing armies on the other, all based on the exploitation of the working class and the division of the loot, was cast into the furnace of the war. Two things only could issue from the flames; either international capitalist control, through a League of Nations, or Social Revolution and the dictatorship of the proletariat. Both of these forms are today contending for world power.

The Social Democracies of Europe, unable to meet the crisis, were themselves hurled into the conflagration, to be tempered or consumed by it.

THE COLLAPSE OF THE SECOND INTERNATIONAL

At first the question which agitated Socialists' minds all over the world was: Why have they failed? All sorts of extenuating circumstances were pleaded in their behalf—"defensive war," and "a low type of civilization menaces a higher type" and "Socialism must fight on the side of democracy," and "Socialism is not free from the virus of nationalism." All these excuses equally begged the question.

We know that great mass demonstrations were held in every European country by Socialists protesting against their governments' declarations of war, and mobilization for war. And we know too that these demonstrations were suddenly rendered impotent by the complete surrender of the Socialist parliamentary leaders and the official Socialist press. Why the sudden change of front? Why did the Socialist leaders in the parliaments of the future belligerents vote the war credits? Why did the official Socialist press in Germany, France, Italy, Belgium, etc., suddenly reverse its position and call for resistance to the invader? In short, why did the dominant Socialists support their governments?

We shall attempt to answer these questions.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF "MODERN SOCIALISM"

In the latter part of the nineteenth century, the Social Democracies of Europe set out to "legislate Capitalism out of office." The class struggle was to be won in the capitalist legislatures. Step by step concessions were to be wrested from the state; the working class and the Socialist parties were to be strengthened by means of "constructive" reforms and social legislation; each concession would act as a rung in the ladder of Social Revolution, upon which the workers could climb step by step, until finally, some bright sunny morning, the peoples would awake to find the Co-Operative Commonwealth functioning without disorder, confusion or hitch on the ruins of the capitalist state.

But what happened? When a few legislative seats had been captured, the thunderous denunciations of the Socialist legislators suddenly ceased. No more were the parliaments used as platforms from which the challenge of militant Socialism was flung to all corners of Europe. Another era had set in, the era of "constructive" social reform legislation. All powers to shape the policies and tactics of the Socialist parties were entrusted to the parliamentary leaders. And these lost sight of Socialism's original purpose; their goal became two-fold—"constructive reforms" and Cabinet portfolios, of the means to an end they made an end in itself. Moderate Socialism, in the hands of these parliamentary leaders, was now ready to share responsibility with the bourgeoisie in the control of the capitalist state, even to the extent of defending the bourgeoisie against the working class—as for instance during the first Briand Ministry in France, when the official party press was opened to a defense of the shooting of striking railway workers at the order of the Socialist-Bourgeois Coalition Cabinet.

"SAUSAGE SOCIALISM"

This situation was brought about by mixing pure scientific Socialism with bourgeois reforms and the democratic cant of the eighteenth century. The result was what Rosa Luxemburg called "Sausage Socialism." The Socialist parliamentarians forgot that a chain is no stronger than its weakest link. They emphasized petty bourgeois social reformism in order to attract tradesmen, shop-keepers and members of the professions, and of course the latter flocked to the Socialist movement in great numbers, seeking relief from the constant grinding between corporate capital and awakening labor.

The Socialist organizations actively competed for votes, on the basis of social reforms, with the bourgeois liberal political parties. And so they catered to the ignorance and prejudices of the workers, trading promises of immediate reforms for votes.

Dominant "moderate Socialism" forgot the teachings of the founders of scientific Socialism, forgot its function as a proletarian movement—"the most resolute and advanced section of the working class parties"—and permitted the bourgeois and self-seeking trade-union element to shape its policies and tactics.

This was the condition in which the Social Democracies of Europe found themselves at the outbreak of war in 1914. Demoralized and confused by the cross-currents within their own parties, vacillating and compromising with the bourgeois state, they fell an easy prey to social-patriotism and nationalism.

This is the explanation of the failure of the Socialist movements of Europe in the crisis of 1914.

SPARTACIDES AND BOLSHEVIKI.

But revolutionary Socialism was not destined to lie inert for long. In Germany, Karl Liebknecht, Franz Mehring, Rosa Luxemburg and Clara Zetkin organized the Spartacus group. But their voices were drowned in the roar of cannon and the shrieks of the dying and the maimed.

Russia, however, was to be the first battle ground where "moderate" and revolutionary Socialism came to grips for the mastery of the state. The breakdown of the corrupt, bureaucratic czarist regime opened the flood-gates of revolution. Centuries of oppression had paved the way.

Three main contending parties attempted to ride into power on the revolutionary tide: the Cadets, the "moderate Socialists"—Mensheviki and Social Revolutionists—and the revolutionary Socialists—the Bolsheviki. The Cadets were first to be swept into power; but they tried to stem the still rising flood with a few abstract political ideals, and were soon carried away. The soldiers, workers and peasants could no longer be fooled by phrases. The Mensheviki and Social Revolutionaries succeeded the Cadets. And now came the crucial test; would they, in accord with Marxian teachings make themselves the ruling class and sweep away the old conditions of production, and thus prepare the way for the Co-Operative Commonwealth? Or would they tinker with the old machinery and try to foist it on the masses as something just as good?

They did the latter, and proved for all time that "moderate Socialism" cannot be trusted.

The Socialists began to understand why dominant "moderate Socialism" had broken down. "Moderate Socialism" was not prepared to seize the power for the workers during a revolution. "Moderate Socialism" had a rigid formula—"'Constructive' social-reform legislation within the capitalist state;" and to that formula it clung. It believed that bourgeois democracy could be used as a means of constructing the Socailist order; therefore it must wait until the people, through a Constituent Assembly, should vote Socialism into existence. And in the meantime, it held that there must be established a government of coalition with the enemy, the bourgeoisie. As if, with all the means of controlling public opinion in the hands of the bourgeoisie, a Constituent Assembly could or would ever vote the Socialists into power!

Revolutionary Socialists hold, with the founders of scientific Socialism, that there are two dominant classes in society—the bourgeoisie and the proletariat; that between these two classes a struggle must go on until the working class, through the seizure of the instruments of production and distribution, the abolution of the capitalist state, and the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat, creates a Socialist order. Revolutionary Socialists do not propose to wait until the vast majority of the people vote them into power; but, "if the proletariat during its struggle with the bourgeoisie is compelled, by force of circumstances, to organize itself as a class; if, by means of a revolution, it makes itself the ruling class, and as such sweeps away by force the old conditions of production; then it will, along with these conditions, have swept away the conditions for the existence of class antagonisms, and of classes generally, and will thereby have abolished its own supremacy as a class."

Marx and Engels clearly explain the function of the Socialist movement. It is the "moderate Socialists," through intellectual gymnastics, evasions, misquotations and the tearing of sentences and phrases from their context, who make Marx and Engels sponsors for their perverted version of Socialism.

PROBLEMS OF AMERICAN SOCIALISM.

At the present moment the Socialist Party of America is agitated by several cross-currents, some local in their character, and some a reflex of cleavages within the European Socialist movements. Many see in this internal dissension merely an unimportant difference of opinion, or at most, dissatisfaction with the control of the party, and the desire to replace those who have misused it with better men.

We, however, maintain that there is a fundamental distinction in views concerning party policies and tactics. And we believe that this difference is so vast that from our standpoint a radical change in party policies and tactics is necessary.

This essential task is being shirked by our party leaders and officials generally. In view of the impending change in the tactics of organized labor in this country, we must hurry to readjust the Socialist movement to the new conditions or find ourselves left behind by the march of events.

Already there is formidable industrial unrest, a seething ferment of discontent, evidenced by inarticulate rumblings which presage striking occurrences. The transformation of industry from a war to a peace basis has thoroughly disorganized the economic structure. Thousands upon thousands of workers are being thrown out of work. Demobilized sailors and soldiers find themselves a drug on the labor market, unless they act as scabs and strikebreakers. Skilled mechanics, fighting desperately to maintain their war-wage and their industrial status, are forced to strike. Women, who during the war have been welcomed into industries hitherto closed to them, are struggling to keep their jobs. And to cap the climax, the capitalists, through their Chambers of Commerce and their Merchants' and Manufacturers' Associations, have resolved to take advantage of the situation to break down even the inadequate organizations labor has built up through generations of painful struggle.

The temper of the workers and the soldiers, after the sacrifices they have made in the war, is such that they will not endure the reactionary labor conditions so openly advocated by the master class. A series of labor struggles is bound to follow—indeed, is beginning now. Shall the Socialist Party continue to feed the workers with social reform legislation at this critical period? Shall it approach the whole question from the standpoint of votes and the election of representatives to the legislature? Shall it emphasize the consumer's point of view, when Socialist principles teach that the worker is robbed at the point of production? Shall it talk about Cost of Living and taxation, when it should be explaining how the worker is robbed at his job?

There are many signs of the awakening of labor. The organized trade unions, against the definite commands of their leaders, are resorting to independent political action, in an effort to conserve what they have won and wrest new concessions from the master class. What shall be our attitude toward the awakening workers?

On the basis of the class struggle we shall go among them, impregnating them with revolutionary Socialism; we shall teach them solidarity; we shall teach them class-consciousness; we shall teach them the hopelessness of social reform; we shall teach them the meaning of Revolution. And the industrial unrest, the ferment of discontent, will compel them to listen!

CAPITALIST IMPERIALISM.

Among the many problems immediately confronting us are those new questions springing from Capitalist-Imperialism, the final and decisive stage of Capitalism. How shall the Socialist Party meet these problems?

Imperialism is that stage of Capitalism in which the accumulated capital or surplus of a nation is too great for the home market to reinvest or absorb. The increased productivity of the working class, due to improved machinery and efficiency methods, and the mere subsistence wage which permits the worker to buy back only a small portion of what he produces, causes an ever-increasing accumulation of commodities, which in turn become capital and must be invested in further production. "When Capitalism has reached the stage in which it imports raw materials from undeveloped countries and exports them again in the shape of manufactured products, it has reached its highest development.

This process is universal. Foreign markets, spheres of influence and protectorates, under the intensive development of capitalist industry and finance in turn become highly developed. They, too, seek the markets. National capitalist control, to save itself from ruin, breaks its national bonds and emerges full-grown as a capitalist League of Nations, with international armies and navies to maintain its supremacy.

The new situation the Socialist Party must meet. From now on the United States will no longer hold itself aloof, isolated and provincial. It is reaching out for new markets, new zones of influence, new protectorates; not alone, and not in competition with other capitalist nations, but in co-operation with them. They will divide the world among them. And the League of Nations will be the instrument through which they will work.

The master class of America will soon attempt to use organized labor for its imperialistic purposes. But a restless and discontented working class cannot pile up profits. Therefore in this country we may soon expect the master class, in true Bismarkian fashion, to grant factory laws, medical laws, old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, sick benefits, and the whole category of bourgeois reforms, so that the workers may be kept physically and mentally fit to produce the greatest profits at the greatest speed.

DANGER TO AMERICAN SOCIALISM

There is danger that the Socialist Party of America might make use of these purely bourgeois reforms to attract the workers' votes, by claiming that they have been won by Socialist political action when, as a matter of fact, the object of these master class measures is to prevent the growing class consciousness of the workers, and to divert them from their revolutionary aim. By agitating for these reforms, therefore, the Socialist Party would be playing into the hands of our American imperialists.

On the basis of the class struggle, then, the Socialist Party of America must reorganize itself—must prepare to come to grips with the master class during the difficult period of capitalist readjustment now going on. This it can do only by teaching the working class the truth about present-day conditions; it must preach revolutionary industrial unionism, and urge the workers to turn their craft unions into industrial unions, the only form of labor organization which can cope with the power of great modern aggregations of capital. It must carry on its political campaigns, not merely as means of electing officials to political office, as in the past, but as a year-around educational campaign to arouse the workers to class conscious economic and political action, and to keep alive the burning ideal of revolution in the hearts of the people.

FOR NEW POLICIES AND TACTICS.

We believe that the time has come for the Socialist Party of America to adopt the following course of action: To throw off its parliamentary opportunism and to stand squarely behind the Soviet Republic of Russia, the Spartacus group in Germany and the revolutionary working class movement in Europe. Thus it will be ready when the hour strikes in this country—and it will strike soon—to take the leadership of the revolutionary proletariat in its struggle with the capitalist class, instead of obstructing its path with the palliative of parliamentary reforms and lead the workers forward to the dictatorship of the proletariat, the final phase of the class struggle necessary to the ushering in of the Co-Operative Commonwealth.

POLITICAL ACTION.

Realizing that the vital difference between revolutionary Socialism and "moderate Socialism" lies in their varying conceptions of political action, and realizing too that on this point revolutionary Socialists are most misunderstood and misrepresented, we append a detailed explanation of the scientific Socialist conception of political action.

Since we assert with Marx, that "the class struggle is essentially a political struggle," we can only accept his own oft repeated interpretation of that phrase. The class struggle, whether it manifest itself on the industrial field or in the direct struggle for government control, is essentially a struggle for the capture and destruction of the capitalist political state. This is a political act. In this broader view of the term "political," Marx includes revolutionary industrial action. In other words, the objective of Socialist industrial action is also "political," in the sense that it aims to undermine the state, which "is nothing less than a machine for the oppression of one class by another and that no less so in a democratic republic than under a monarchy."

PARTICIPATION IN ELECTIONS.

Political action is also and more generally used to refer to participation in election campaigns for the immediate purpose of capturing legislative seats. In this sense also we urge the use of political action as a revolutionary weapon.

But both in the nature and the purpose of this form of political action, revolutionary Socialism and "moderate Socialism" are completely at odds.

We contend that such political action is a valuable means of propaganda; and further, that the capturing the political state, but—and here is the vital point for the "moderate Socialist" goes no further—we hold that this capture of the political state is merely for the purpose of destroying it. The nature of Socialist parliamentary activity should be purely destructive.

"Moderate Socialism" aims to "simply lay hold of the ready-made machinery and wield it for its own purposes"—the attainment of Socialism. And so the "moderate" falls into the error of believing that parliamentary activity is constructive—that he can eventually legislate Socialism into existence.

This error leads to two dangerous practices: (1) making parliamentary activity an end in itself, and (2) making essentially destructive political action the instrument for constructing the Socialist order. To avoid these dangers, and to strengthen labor's political arm, the Socialist ballot must be supported by the might of "the industrial organization of the working class." Only the economic organization of the working class can build the new society within the frame of the old.

REVOLUTIONARY INDUSTRIAL UNIONISM

"Moderate Socialism" constantly overlooks this fact. We must continually remind the working class that Labor's economic organizations are naturally the school for Socialism. All political parties, and without exception, whatever their complexion may be, warm up the working class only for a season, transitorily.

Only through his industrial organization can the worker receive training in the control of production. It is by means of this weapon that the working class will eventually take over and hold the mines, mills and factories, not for the purpose of destroying them but for their permanent control and development. Thus, the only thing worth taking from capitalist society and keeping is the highly developed means of production and distribution—will be won for the working class by its Revolutionary Economic Organization.

Because of its constructive nature, our Economic Arm, unlike our Political Arm, may take "a little at a time." Our economic movement is not unlike a military movement. All means are used to win a war—infantry attacks, heavy and light artillery, bombardments, sieges, and guerilla fighting. In the industrial struggle the working class employs strikes, boycotts and the like. The political movement, however, has for its object only the storming of the political citadel of capitalist tyranny; therefore the Political Arm cannot compromise. Our political movement should be the essence and incarnation of our revolutionary aim. With Liebknecht we say, "To parliamentarize is to compromise, to log-roll, to sell out."

SYNDICALISM AND PARLIAMENTARISM

In characteristic utopian fashion the Syndicalists forget that the Social Revolution must in part grow "within the capitalist shell." They forget that the state, the engine of oppression employed by the capitalist class, must be destroyed through capture by the working class.

In equally characteristic utopian fashion, the "moderate Socialist," with his pure and simple parliamentarism forgets that "because of its destructive object and because of its structure, which is arbitrary and determined by geographical lines, the Political Arm of Labor cannot be used as a means of taking away from the capitalists and holding for the working men the means of production."

Thus the utopian Syndicalist fails to utilize the political weapon; and the 20th Century Utopian Socialist misuses the political weapon and fails altogether to utilize the industrial weapon.

A combination of these two methods is necessary to the revolutionary Socialist movement, and this combination the Left Wing intends to effect.

PROGRAM

1. We stand for a uniform declaration of principles in all party platforms both local and national and the abolition of all social reform planks now contained in them.
2. The party must teach, propagate and agitate exclusively for the overthrow of capitalism, and the establishment of Socialism through a proletarian dictatorship.
3. The Socialist candidates elected to office shall adhere strictly to the above provisions.
4. Realizing that a political party cannot reorganize and reconstruct the industrial organizations of the working class and that that is the task of the economic organizations themselves, we demand that the party assist this process of reorganization by a propaganda for revolutionary and industrial unionism as part of its general activities. We believe it is the mission of the Socialist movement to encourage and assist the proletariat to adopt newer and more effective forms of organization and to stir it into newer and more revolutionary modes of action.
5. We demand that the official party press be party owned and controlled.
6. We demand that officially recognized educational institutions be party owned and controlled.
7. We demand that the party discard its obsolete literature and publish new literature in keeping with the politics and tactics above mentioned.

IMMEDIATE DEMANDS

1. We demand that the National Executive Committee call an immediate emergency national convention for the purpose of reorganizing party policies and tactics to meet the present crisis.
2. We demand that the American Socialist Party shall not participate in the proposed Lauzanne Conference engineered by "moderate Socialists" and social patriots.
3. We demand that the Socialist Party of America issue a call for an international congress of those groups of the Socialist movement that participated both in the Zimmerwald Conference in September, 1915, and the Kienthal Conference in 1916, and those groups that are in agreement with them today.
4. We demand the unequivocal endorsement of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.
5. We demand the unequivocal endorsement of the Spartacus Group of Germany.
6. We demand the unequivocal endorsement of the Left Wing movements of Europe.

Hungarian Socialist to Withdraw from Cabinet

Budapest, Hungary.—The Socialist Party of Hungary has asked the Council of Workingmen's Deputies to convene, because the Socialist members of the Hungarian cabinet declare themselves unwilling any longer to share the responsibility for the policy of the government. Among the [illegible] advanced by the Socialists for their present position is the fact that the government seems determined to suppress Bolshevism. The Socialist members declare themselves unwilling to support this move. It is regarded likely that the workingmen's [illegible] decide to request the Socialist [illegible]

CHICAGO PAPER DECLARES ARCHANGEL EXPEDITION FAILURE

"America, whose ideals of honor are at stake and whose sons are being sacrificed, has the right to know the facts. In North Russia the expedition has become a dismal comic opera. Here in the north, in a district that never was violently Bolshevist, where the allies had many friends at the start, and where, since the first days there have been unlimited opportunities to advance confidence and [illegible] here with everything their own way, the allies have failed utterly.

"Today, in Archangel, Murmansk, and the other cities of the district, there is growing dissatisfaction against the way the expedition has [illegible] Every phase of life within the district is controlled by the allies and dominated by them.

"The Russians frankly resent this. They will tell you openly that they, and not the outsiders, should determine the exact form of government and pick the leaders. Today if a Russian fails to follow his ideas and opinions of the allied leaders he is classed as a Bolshevik, with the possibilities of jail to keep him silent. Only such men as conform with the foreigners' ideas last in the local government.

"The foreign military are actually and undeniably interfering in local affairs. They are dominating every department, forcing their own ideas and judgments against the wishes of the North Russians [illegible] ment. Martial law has been established, placing the foreign military above the local authorities. All this reflected against the avowed motives of the allies.

"It is difficult to understand the question until the facts are grasped that the whole country is seeking with unrest. In this land there are a hundred and one pet theories, ideas and beliefs, all of the adherents striving to put forward their remedies. Then, into this boiling mass, is stuck a bayonet instead of a spoon, and this new outside foreign cook, whose receipts are not wanted, whose ability is questioned, whose sincerity is doubted, shouts, 'Try my brand of cooking you need it. Try it, or I'll stick you with [illegible]

"This is exactly what has happened in North Russia. One particular outside nation forced their ideas of life, liberty, happiness, government, justice, censorship and everything, on the Russians and they have been imperialistic, old-fashioned, old-world ideas.

"Recently one of the sincerest Russian Revolutionists in Archangel, who gave years of his life to bring about the original revolution, said:

"'The thousands of honest anti-Bolshevist radicals throughout Russia are fearing the course that the intervention may take more than they fear the Bolsheviki. We prefer the present Moscow government to the return of terrible reaction.'

"The Americans were doing their fighting in small groups with, at the most their own platoon or company commanders over them, in certain instances, the tiny groups of Americans actually were under the British sergeants. It simply didn't go. [illegible] feeling [illegible] The same conditions prevailed with all the other members of the expedition and before long hatreds, jealousies, and distrusts were engendered, which is was impossible to correct.

"All the time the Americans felt they were doing a job for certain nations, helping to collect their debts and re-establish their commercial supremacy. Part of this trying condition was brought about through a lack of proper spiritual leadership in the high allied command and part through the lack of proper leadership within the American forces themselves. This put the whole expedition on a false basis and it was reflected through the leaders down to the lowliest private.

"Vague rumors came to them of a great British-Russian deal at stake. Other rumors told of tremendous debts which Russia owed to Europe that must be collected. The avowed reason for the original entrance at Murmansk was the [illegible] turn the ice free ports of Murmansk and Petchinga, on the Murman coast, into German submarine bases.

"This was outlived when the expedition started to Archangel under the slogan of guarding the great war supplies about to fall into the German hands. Reaching Archangel, the foreign soldiers found no supplies. This old, hard ridden theory of guarding the supplies at Archangel lasted through hundreds of columns of propaganda, even long after the American troops had landed a month later.

"From the start the expedition lacked the thrill of the drive that a great, honest, stated purpose would have given. The majority hated the job and transferred their hate to the Russians. They had no concern for them and did not try to understand the tremendous question the country was facing to discover the solution. They carried on in a half-hearted way riding roughshod over the feelings of the natives, and [illegible]

KILLING THE SOCIALIST PARTY

Do you remember the repeated assurances we received a few months ago that the Socialist Party was on its last legs; that members were deserting it by the thousands; that its principles were being repudiated; that we were but a corpse awaiting burial?

Well, we've been buried—under an avalanche of orders for dues stamps, supplies and literature, though, and not by the venal capitalist press and the masters it serves. A very lively corpse we are, comrades. A corpse that places orders for 12,616 dues stamps in one month in Ohio alone, must be very red of cheek, sturdy and kicking.

Mind you—12,616 dues stamps sold in one month in Ohio to the membership. This constitutes the largest dues stamp sale to our knowledge, for any one month in the history of the Ohio Socialist Party.

Here are sales per month in comparison:

	1917		1918
October	6,514	October	3,205
November	6,523	November	4,610
December	6,815	December	6,757
	1918		1919
January	3,479	January	12,616

Other states show equally encouraging increases. During the month of January, 1919, New York sold 17,066 dues stamps; Wisconsin, 13,277; Illinois, 10,202; Pennsylvania, 8,362.. Ohio ranking third in sales.

To the comrade still "bringing up the rear" this article is especially addressed. Get into line. March abreast the rest. Keep step. Pay up!

FIRST FRUITS OF DEMOCRACY

The war against the central powers having been won and democracy thus enthroned, the world has been made absolutely safe for her without further doings or ado! She may wonder at will and where she listeth without fear of vile attack or assault. That's what the war was about. If you don't believe it, ask Mr. Wilson. He will give you an answer in the affirmative a mile long and as smooth as soap.

Take America. Gee, Whiz, no one would say that America was unsafe for the fair lady. Why, folks, she was born here, grew up here, has never been out of our sight. We have all known her since the day of her birth. She's the patron saint of every city and village. Everybody's her friend and her photo is enshrined in the hearts of all.

True, it is at times just a bit hard to lay ones finger on any particular spot where Democracy is perfectly safe (unless it would be in Mr. Wilson's pocket) yet we know she is safe because we are told so and if we are not to believe what we are told, what in the world are we to believe, we'd like to know!

But even though we try to believe all we are told, doubts will arise. They keep cropping up in spite of a most abiding faith in "what the papers say." Take the unemployment problem. One would think that with a world spilling over with democracy a bit might be spared for the industrial field and thus put people to work and allow them to retain the value of their products. The only reason we can think of why this isn't done is that it would interfere with special privilege. And you know privilege and democracy don't mix.

The present state of the unemployed makes us hazzard a guess that democracy as related to industry is a myth.

Then there's the question of deportation. Who are being deported? Billionaires made by the war? Profiteers made corpulent by preying upon the slaves of the shops and through over fat contracts with a needy government? Corrupters of public officials? Not much. Who do you think owns this country anyway? Workers, union men, creators of wealth are the victims of deportation. And for the reason that they attempt to create a speaking acquaintance between democracy and industry.

Democracy is a great thing—until workers seek to apply it to industry. A great thing to howl and holler about but never to trust in the hands of the masses! And for a mighty good reason. The moment democracy enters the door of industry, Mr. Capitalist will have to sneak.

Yet if any worker believes that he will willingly do so let him read the following taken from capital's mouthpiece, the Wall Street Journal. Capital has no intentions of allowing democracy to pass the threshhold of industry.

WALL STREET SPEAKS ITS MIND.

"Our laws are all too inadequate to deal with that public enemy, the labor agitator. We have a flabby public opinion which would wring its hands in anguish if we TOOK THE LABOR LEADER BY THE SCRUFF OF HIS NECK, BACKED HIM UP AGAINST A WALL AND FILLED HIM WITH LEAD. Countries which consider themselves every bit as civilized as we are, do not hesitate about such matters for a moment."—Wall Street Journal.

Some Objections

Dear Comrades: At our last business meeting a motion was made instructing me to write to the State Office protesting against the exemption of Local Cuyahoga County from taking the Ohio Socialist as was stated at the meeting. Other locals might start a paper and they ask exemption from taking our paper, too.

Another motion was made that we ask for exemption of the wives and daughters of comrades who do take the paper as it forces them to send the paper to some one who is as able to pay for the paper as we are ourselves.

They ask that a copy of these motions be printed in the Ohio Socialist.

Yours fraternally,
FRANK STIDD,
Secretary Local Bellaire.

We believe that if the comrades of Bellaire understood that the Socialist News and the Ohio Socialist now contain practically the same matter with such changes as adapt each to its particular field and that the saving thus made is fully equal to the amount that would be received through the sale of press stamps, they would not have any objection to the plan.

As to their second motion. Comrades should remember that the present plan of having each member support the party press is the first experiment in this state. Such faults as the plan contains may be remedied at a later date. For the present let's all give a bit to its support and work for the next step in its progress—that of making the Ohio Socialist a bi-weekly.

ASHTABULA WANTS SOCIALIST PAPER

The State Office is in receipt of a letter from Comrade E. J. Hewit of Local Ashtabula Harbor inquiring into the possibilities of starting a local paper in conjunction with the O. S. Comrade Hewit also inquires the price of one thousand O. S. for distribution weekly. Other locals are also considering the possibilities of starting local papers. And to each and all, we say—wait a bit. Let's do one thing at a time, especially when it comes to establishing Socialist papers. We have a state, party-owned paper. Let's make a real paper of it before dissipating our finances and energies in starting other papers which will at this time most assuredly sap the vitality of the locals. That's our advice, comrades. If you have funds for publicity, use leaflet method or order a bundle of Ohio Socialists and train a distribution squad for future work.

We Invite You

You are invited to the meetings listed below. If you live within reaching distance you will never regret having attended them. Take your family with you. Don't go alone. You will reap more satisfaction from the meeting if you can say afterward: "WE enjoyed the lecture."

* * *

Cincinnati Meeting.

Meetings held every Sunday evening at 1314 Vine St. Thurber Lewis will fill the date of March 2. Subject "Socialism—The Inevitable".

* * *

Youngstown Meeting.

Dennis E. Batt will fill a date here on March 2.

Sandusky Meeting.

C. E. Ruthenberg of Cleveland will speak at Sandusky on March 5.

Columbus Meeting.

H. L. A. Holman will fill four dates on March 6, 7, 8, 9.

* * *

Opperman Meeting.

H. L. A. Holman will speak at Opperman March 1.

* * *

Kenmore Meeting.

C. E. Ruthenberg will speak at Rittikoffer hall, evening of March 2.

* * *

Another Speaker for Your Local.

Comrade A. L. Sugarman, former State Secretary of the Socialist Party of Minnesota, is available for meetings in Ohio between the 15th and 26th of March. His subjects are: "Socialism From Utopia to Science," "Revolutionary Aspects of Modern Literature," and "[illegible] Versus Wilson."

RESULTS OF KATTERFELD MEETINGS

Comrade L. E. Katterfeld's meetings in the early part of February were excellent in the results obtained. Here is how Comrade Herbert Knecht sums up the results at Byesville.

"More members. More readers for the O. S. More knowledge of the fundamentals of Socialism. More determination among the members to organize the unorganized. A better understanding of organization work. Greatly increased interest in Socialism among the women of Cambridge. More light, more knowledge and another stride toward the finanl goal in Industrial Democracy."

At this meeting a social with eats and music were among the good things to be had. Comrades Harry Wilson, Comrade Conway and Comrade Beulah Evans, are the recipients of much appreciation from the local comrades for their excellent music.

At Derwent Comrade Katterfeld spoke to the diggers of coal. And as a tribute to these miners who are now working about half time or less it must be said that they were generous in their support of the meeting. The Cambridge plute press refused advertising space to the comrades even when double price was offered. O, very well. "We are going to stop trading with the enemy."

At Troy the mayor helped make the world safe for capitalism by influencing the county commissioners to refuse the hall to Socialists. He offered the excuse that there were 400 workers unemployed in that city and a meeting where they might discuss their grievances would be UNWISE. The meeting was held at the home of Comrade Geo. W. Louthan. The comrades organized with a membership of five. These five now have the opportunity to make socialism bum in Troy.

SOME JAIL NEWS

Comrade Perley Doe sends up his change of address. For the next 18 months it will be the State Penn at Canyon City, Colo. We are not aware of the particular manner in which Comrade Doe has offended the state.

* * *

Comrade E. Curtis Ilkenhans of Youngstown was tried at Cleveland last week. He pleaded guilty on the understanding that he was to receive a six months' sentence and to have the time allowed which he had spent in jail awaiting trial. This left him just 24 hours to serve. Comrade Pearce of Canton got the same sentence. He is now free, having then but a few days more to serve.

* * *

Comrade Harry Wagenknecht of Cleveland is now released from Warrensville after serving ten months of a year's sentence.

Comrade J. F. Critchfield of Boise, Idaho, is free after waiting in jail nine months for trial. He was found not guilty of the alleged offense.

Comrade Critchfield refused the services of a lawyer and pleaded his own case. He was indicted for violation of the espionage act, and was alleged to have said, in reference to the flag, that it was "a damned old rag, not worth any more than any other damned old rag."

GOAL SET AT 1000

The comrades of Guernsey county have set the goal for one thousand members. They are making every effort to reach it. Comrade Knecht reports that a splendid meeting was held on the 14th, when eight members were admitted and plans laid for a social in the near future. The local also endorsed motion for an emergency national convention.

INDIANA PARTY BULLETIN IS NOW A WEEKLY

The Socialist Party of Indiana will make a weekly paper of the Monthly Bulletin, beginning April 15. $1 per and 50c for six months. This again is the principal of a party-owned press vindicated. From now on the slogan of every comrade must be up with the party press, down with individual control of party propaganda. This is the new age, the old is dead.

A NOTE OF THANKS

The State Office wishes to express for the Party the thanks which are due the comrades for their hospitality to the State Organizers, comrades Baker and Lewis. The organizers have spoken highly of the comrades hospitality in furnishing them the necessary 'eats' and a comfortable place to sleep that is so necessary and acceptable to one while on the road. Therefore, comrades we extend thanks.

A constant worker for a bigger and better O. S. is Comrade S. M. Kerte of Wadsworth. Comrade Kerte keeps his eye on our subscribers in that city and he certainly keeps steady on the job as his record of about two subs a week proves.

WOULD YOU LIKE A FARM HOME AND OWN YOUR OWN JOB?

THEN READ THIS: I have been in all the southern states bordering upon the gulf and I believe south-eastern Mississippi is the most desirable location for one with small means to build a farm home. The climate is very healthful, good water, roads and excellent schools, the people are sociable and hospitable; direct lines to market. Good lands for general and special farming and stock raising at $10.00 per acre on easy terms. No swamp lands, but gently rolling and well watered by small streams; plenty of rain, no long winters—can farm all the year. Fruits and early vegetables grown for northern market. This land will triple in value in the next five years. If you would like to join with a dozen or more comrades to form a colony settlement, write for further particulars to J. F. DENISON, 416 1-2 Washington Ave., Warren, Ohio.—Adv.

Piqua, Ohio News Notes

By ROBERT JOHNSON.

The Piqua Chamber of Commerce is a most unselfish organization. We have its own word to that effect. According to full page ads in city papers it is Piqua's guardian angel; the author of all progress and advancement.

* * *

Listen to this fellow workers:

"The Piqua Chamber of Commerce is the one big, strong organization in our city that is working tirelessly and continuously for the civic and industrial benefit of the community."

Sh-h, sit down! Imagine if you can, dear reader, this delectable bunch of financial freebooters working for the "benefit of the community." Whenever the working class of this town want to get a raise in wages they run along to the Chamber of Commerce and have it attended to at once. Sure! They would rather help the workers get more money than revel at the banquet. Are you dissatisfied with the scandallous prices of the necessities of life? Just tell the Chamber of Commerce and then watch the prices drop. Try it.

A bond issue for a new water works system was submitted to the voters of Piqua last August. It was defeated by a few votes. The campaign against the bond issue was directed by the Chamber of Commerce and its camp followers. Many infamous tricks were pulled off, the most despicable being the following: A fake emergency appropriation of $30,000 to repair the present water works was rushed through council just before the election. This ordinance was later declared worthless by the attorney general of Ohio, but it was too late; election day was past and the voters fooled once more. How long! How long!! will the Dubbs put faith in this brazen bunch of political blatherskites who have the effrontery to state publicly that "they stand for the best and most feasible solution of the water works problem."

* * *

The "kaiser" of Troy, Clay Harmon by name, issued a ukase last week against free speech in that city. This pinhead autocrat deliberately set aside the constitution of Ohio and the United States upon a supposition that trouble might possibly arise, because—well, because there are 400 unemployed in his little burg and that returned soldiers would likely get riled up, etc., etc. Comrade Katterfeld inquired when the unemployed should get together and discuss their unemployment—when they had jobs, or when they had none? The czar of Troy could give no answer. The capitalists and politicians of Troy have given their hireling to understand that he must keep the jobless workers quiet or lose his political head. Now the question is up to the workers of Troy, jobless and otherwise, to forever remove this arrogant boob and his masters from the political life of the town and place therein working man who will recognize human rights and not property rights.

COLUMBUS NOTES.

The Socialist movement in Columbus is on the upward trend. The local members have been so well pleased with Comrade H. L. A. Holman and his presentations of his subjects that he has been engaged to fill the following dates: March 6, 8 and 9, at Machinists' hall, 50 1-2 Gay St.; March 7, First Ward, corner Jenkins and Parsons Ave.

We feel confident that those interested in the subject of Socialism will feel well pleased to keep these dates in mind and hear these lectures presented in an able and scientific manner.—E. B. Eubanks.

MANSFIELD ENTERTAINS.

Local Mansfield, English branch, held a public entertainment on Jan. 16, which was a better success than expected.

The program consisted of singing, games, speaking (in English, Bulgarian and German), and dancing. The famous Y. P. S. L. "Red Orchestra" furnished the music.

Luncheon was served by the women of the English branch and pies at 5 cents a quarter made one think of the good old times.

A cake decorated with red flags and a picture of Debs was awarded to comrades writing the best poem on Comrade Debs. Willa Beery, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M J. Beery, won first prize.

A good collection was taken which will be used to pay for our "war prisoners' stamps."—L. L. Anliker.

Espionage Act—An act designed to imprison all members of the working class who try to tell the truth to the people.

Devine's Inspirations

Local Toledo, O., besides packing Memorial hall, Sunday evening, Feb. 9, at 25 cents per seat, took up a collection of $80 and sold $51 worth of literature. This proves how effectively Socialism has been stamped out.

During the last presidential campaign some clever manager suggested the old parties adopt the plan of the Socialists and charge admission, sell literature and take up a collection. He was quietly tipped off by the eminent statesmen that they were not only willing to bear this share of the working man's burden but were also willing to pay for their vote.

Up spoke another whose duty it was to provide red fire, advertising and brass bands. "Whadda ya mean," he says, "literature? This yere's no educational party, this is a booby hatch, we ain't running no moving library or university extension course. Feed 'em on promises. They'll fall."

I wonder how long they'll fall? And that reminds us. What good book on Republicanism or Democracy as they are today would you recommend?

Local Toledo intends holding Sunday night meetings in Memorial hall until summer. Sunday, 8 a. m., Margaret Prevy of Akron, O., has the floor. No brass band. No red fire. No hall large enough to seat the crowds.

Someone's hand must be itching. Someone is being talked about. Someone is very much alarmed. Monday night, Feb. 10, a communication from the Rotarians, a bunch of capitalistic apologists and retainers, protesting against the renting of Memorial hall to those who might insult our brave boys who sacrificed so much for democracy, was read before the city council.

Shades of Thomas Jefferson arise and observe the generous scattering of soldiers in khaki attending these meetings and participating as ushers. Why they are even soapboxing on the corners.

Many of the master class belong to the Rotarians. They call themselves that "Good Fellows Club of America."

Well! Good fellows and dear good masters, why not put your idle time and money in an endeavor to provide jobs for these boys in khaki who rush back to us when you loosen their chains. These boys have been doing some serious thinking in the cantonment, in the trench and on the bloody battle field. You promised them so much when they returned. Many are here. More are coming. What are you going to do about it. A man out of work is a dangerous man. Know that? They fought for freedom. They have it. They are free to choose their master. The masters own the tools. These boys must have access to these tools. If you cannot open your factory doors to the returning soldiers then be democratic, don't be autocratic. They fought against that "Over There." Do you think they'll stand for it over here?

You and your kind had denied us every hall in the city during the war.

You censured and seized our press and jailed our editors and speakers.

You thought you had dulled our pen, padded our lips and padded our ears, didn't you?

But masters, you seem to have forgotten the future. Seemed to have forgotten that oppression has a language peculiarly its own. A language never understood by the oppressor, but readily grasped by the oppressed.

This language is now finding expression in the numerous manifestations and rumblings that are growing louder daily. The strikes at Seattle and Lawrence.

The unemployed demonstrations in New York, Chicago and other large cities are evidences.

We may seem deaf and dumb to you, but you appear blind to us when you fail to see the handwriting on the wall. Blind you are indeed if you can't see the dawn of a new day and age.

You have changed the command, "Work or Fight" to "Fight for Work." We accepted the former command. We now accept the latter challenge. If you will not permit us to discuss our grievances publicly we will proceed accordingly.

A Cure for Henry.

A comrade in Michigan prescribes this remedy for the ills which afflict the working man. "The Ohio Socialist is one of the best cures for the working jackass. It works on his dome, touches his heart, works through his veins and back to his brain. If the Ohio Socialist is taken according to directions once a week and read with care, in a year's time Henry will be a sound man and be able to tell his fellow men how he became a real man."

Senate Investigates Soviet Government

the room were turned toward them and whispered comments were made repeatedly. Words like "anarchists," "vulgarians" and "splendid young idealists" were caught.

At the start of the hearing, Reed refused to be sworn, preferring, he said, to make affirmation.

"Are you a Quaker?" demanded Senator Wollcott.

"No," replied Reed.

He explained, he considered his word worth no more under oath than otherwise. He was permitted to make affirmation. Later on, he admitted he had made certain obligations under oath to the State Department, when engaging passports.

"Thenn, I guess you can swear here," decided Wolcott.

Reed permitted himself to be sworn, Major Lowry E. Home, counsel for the committee and former U. S. district attorney for Western Pennsylvania, reputed a clever prosecutor, attempted to prove that Reed had violated his oath by accepting commission from the Soviet government.

"I did nothing without the advice of the U. S. consul," Reed explained. "I didn't, however, regard my oath as inflexible. For example, I considered that it permitted me to accept a commission from the United States government.

Reed's testimony was virtually the same as given by his wife the day before. He described the failure of the Kerensky government to provide food for the [illegible] people [illegible] cities and its effort to stem the popular insurrection.

Food conditions were almost immediately relieved by the Bolsheviki, who shut off passenger traffic on the Trans-Siberian Railroad for 21 days in order to bring foodstuffs into Petrograd. Russian industry, he said, has not been paralyzed.

"It is running," he said, "at something like 60 per cent. of its capacity and gaining all the time."

He explained the Soviet theory to the committee, who in their interest forgot to interrupt. Wolcott raised a laugh by remarking at one point:

"Our government provides that private property should not be confiscated except by the state, and then just compensation must always be made."

"Will it be made to the distillers?" asked Reed.

At the conclusion of the session Wolcott asked if the witness would like to read any further testimony into the record.

"Only this: I would like to ask that men who would give what I think is a fair statement of facts be heard by the committee. I don't mean Socialists, but men like Colonel Raymond Robbins and Colonel Thompson of the Red Cross and Mr. Meyers of the New York Y. M. C. A."

Wolcott asked for addresses and scribbled them on a pad. Albert Rhys Williams, whose recent address in Washington is said to have provoked the Overman investigation, will tes-

"May your paper receive the circulation of the now defunct and infamous Appeal to "T" Reason. Goodness knows how badly we need a paper like yours to keep the membership informed and interested in our work. Go to it. Best wishes for success." In behalf of our membership, I send fraternal greetings of Local Bergen, N. J., to the comrades of Ohio and Kentucky." Hy Lucht, Secretary.

"Finding the Ohio Socialist such a very good paper, one naturally wants ones friends to become acquainted with it." These are the sentiments of Comrade Sarah A. Rohrer, Canton. Comrade Rohrer sends two subscriptions.

"No higher recommendation of the Ohio Socialist's standing is required than that the great hero of human liberty, Eugene V. Debs, is a contributor and the further fact that he is surrounded by such brilliant intellectual stars as Kate Richards O'Hare and Marguerite Prevey and others, who dare to do right at the sacrifice of life, liberty and property." M. S. Holt, Weston, W. Va. Comrade Holt sends us ten subscriptions.

Editor The Ohio Socialist,

Dear Friend and Comrade: I have the good fortune to be able to subscribe once more for a real Socialist paper, The Ohio Socialist. Thanks to the courage, honesty and fidelity of its editorial staff. After all it does one good to realize that our American Socialist Party remained loyal to the interests of International Socialism: now therefore all those who stood the test of the war can hold their heads erect and enjoy the confidence of the workers.

This war, among other things has especially proven the fallacy of freedom under the political state. Congress, spurred on by the moneyed interests violated the national constitution and every free institution of our land. As time goes on the utterances of Marx become more easily understood. The hour has struck, the psychological moment has arrived, it is up to the workers to break their chains and establish the Industrial Democracy of the world and erase from over the portals of life the words, "Hope abandon, all ye who enter here," and in its place inscribe, "Hope all ye who enter here, opportunity abounds for all." This class war must not cease and peace must not be concluded until the whole world is really free! J. A. KEGLER, Canton, O.

The Parting Of The ways

However, comrade, there is a time rapidly drawing near when we will ALL reach the parting of the ways. A turn to the right takes you surely back to the fleshpots of capitalism, where you MUST stand shoulder to shoulder with the harlots, cut throats and pimps of plutocracy and do battle for your lord. A turn to the left takes you surely into the camps of the embattled reds where you MUST stand up and do battle under the crimson banner of revolt, no matter what your previous shade of belief may have been. Sooner or later all men must and all men WILL be found in one or other of these camps. There can be no evading the issue, for plutocracy is GOING TO FORCE THIS ISSUE and don't forget it. B. M. Dutton, State Sec. of Virginia.

STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MOTION

Motion by Comrade Clifford: That Comrade Mrs. Steven Lescho of Cleveland, whose husband is a prisoner at Warrensville, be allowed $25 from the Prisoners' Sustaining Fund. This motion was made on account of sickness on the part of Mrs. Lescho. The Executive Committee vote was unanimous in favor of the motion. H. [illegible]

THERE'S MUSIC IN THE AIR

Tramp—Tramp—Tramp—Do you hear them marching? Millions now are on the way!

And Comrade—how about YOU?

Are you at the curb watching the parade pass? Are you a straggler at the rear? Are you wandering about aimlessly? Are you parading by yourself, with General Apathy and a long face as silent company?

How about YOU—COMRADE?

Tell us—why it is that your voice has not joined the chorus of millions of toiling men and women who, with beaming faces are greeting the NEW DAY?

As history goes, JUST A MINUTE IN TIME—and a band of RED encircled the earth. Here, there—everywhere, the strong arm of LABOR is smashing the forts of capitalism. And the triumphant march continues, day and night, steady, determined!

And you, comrade? We miss your face in the line of march? Where are you? What are you doing?

Do you know that YOU ARE THE EXCEPTION?

Whether you are of the rank and file or an officer of a Local—do you know that YOU ARE the exception? Can't you realize that MILLIONS ARE UP AND DOING and that you alone are attending your funeral?

Listen! There's Music in the Air!

Atune your ear to the sweetest song you ever heard!

Every worker rejoices at the victories in foreign lands. But how about these United States of America?

LISTEN! More dues stamps were sold by the National Office last month than during any month since April, 1914. Isn't that a dandy tune? Overflow meetings are reported by all speakers on tour. In many places Locals have had to rent two and three halls for an evening and then thousands had to be turned away. Is not that INSPIRING? At the recent meeting of the Central Committee of Chicago Socialists, 769 applications for membership were proposed. Isn't that a soul-stirring stanza?

Eugene V. Debs, Kate Richards O'Hare, George R. Kirkpatrick, Scott Nearing, C. E. Ruthenberg, Dennis E. Batt, L. E. Katterfeld and many, many other speakers who have toured various states just recently report more enthusiasm, a greater demand for knowledge of Socialism, for Socialist literature, for more speakers than at ANY TIME in the history of the Socialist Party. Can we send you gladder tidings than that. Of course not.

Then Step Lively and Fall in Line.

Join the Forward March of Labor.

Tramp—Tramp—Tramp—Do you hear them marching?

Mother of Humanity

she was usually requested to sit in the smoking car, so she "smoked in self-defense. She would rather swallow her own smoke than another's."

So was added to woman's "rights," the "right" to enjoy the nicotine weed.

* * * * * * *

Those early fighters for woman's emancipation found themselves at variance with every custom dear to the hearts of the standpats of their time. Could the overall-clad women, who had stilled the purr of the oily black monster in the machine shops to join in the "Votes for Women" procession have seen the Unseen Workers among them, their eyes would have seen the genial eyes and smiling mouth of one who watched with amusement the nonchalent bearing of the wearers of overalls. She cast a knowing smile to several companions who triumphantly returned the smile.

Why smile at something so commonplace as a woman wearing overalls? Amelia Bloomer knew why. Could she not remember when "ladies" turned up their noses and small boys hooted at her from behind barrels? She could remember when people felt [illegible] eyes to gaze upon a woman [illegible] "Truly," thought [illegible] changes."

When she edited the snappy rebel paper, "The Lily," she denounced the ruination of the health of women the fashions then in vogue that required the pinching in of the waist, forcing the vital organs in all directions except their normal places, and remaining slaves to the long, bulky, fashionable skirts that trailed in the filth of the streets. She advocated sensible and comfortable clothing. She braved the ridicule of the non-thinking public and wore a bifurcated costume, known now as bloomers.

Elizabeth Miller smith recalled how she had shocked fashionable Washington society by appearing in a neat bloomer dress during her father's term in congress.

Mrs. Stanton had found the bloomers ideal wearing appatel when attending to her house work. What a delight not to be bothered with long skirts to trip one while going up stairs!

Lucy Stone availed herself of this convenient style while journeying over rough country.

Freed from heavy mud hems all water soaked and flapping around her feet, Susan Anthony adapted the bloomer dress. As she carried her petitions from door to door, what a relief not to have to use both hands to hold up befrilled ruffles out of the rain and mud, the snow and slush.

Fathers, brothers, and husbands had for years jeered at their women for being slaves to a fashion that decreed unwholesome clothes but when a few independent women freed themselves from the tyranny of fashion, a hue and cry arose against them.

The boots of "well balanced" conservations was such that one after another the women who had dared to get out of the rut gave up the convenience of wearing the clothes that they liked. "One reform at a time," wearily spoke Susan Anthony as she gave up the dress reform and applied herself to strive for woman's political quality.

The conservative people could not stand too many jolts at one time.

Industry was in its childhood and the need for cheap labor was supplied by immigration.

Woman's "place" was still in the home because the work was there.

The factory took over the spinning an the women with hand and foot power spindles could not compete with the water or steam power looms. The woman with her small loom lost in the race against mechanical power looms.

The seamstress who prided herself on the eveness of the stitches she had learned to sew bowed before the sewing machine and followed it to the factory to join the army of makers of ready to wear clothes.

The women saw the soap factory turning out soap in such immense quantities and so cheap that it did not pay to scrimp and save grease.

Oil, gas and electricity erased the home occupation of candle making. Even the Christmas candles deserted the home and were taken over by the factories.

Man's inventive genius reared mammoth bakeries that eclipse the little home oven and women went into the factory to folow her own art.

Drying fruits, canning foods, salting and smoking meats and fish, gathering willow leaves for tea, grinding meal, preserving and jellying fruits, boiling the sap of the maple, churning butter, making cheese, all these and many more were the tasks of women. As the machines of industry grew larger, the factory system invaded the home, taking away one task after another until woman to earn her livlihood had to follow thru the factory door the tasks that once were hers, but now belongs to the industrial life of the country.

It was only when woman's altered condition caused her to demand the right to organize in unions and fight for political freedom that the master's voice is heard crying, "Woman's place is in the home." Then he straightway turns around and discharges some men with families and replaces them with women at a lower wage.

In the youthful days of Capitalism it was "wrong" to wear bloomers. It was immodest and unbecoming a "lady." But, when the machines became so improved that man's physical strength was no longer necessary, women whose work thru industrial progress had vanished from the home, were "invited" to replace men earning a family wage.

Now it suits capitalism to have women reform her dress. A lady doll in tight stays and trailing laces could not well bend over oily machines and the flowing draperies might get caught in the machinery and the lady fair would be minus an arm or a leg. The capitalist would be called upon to pay a "compensation."

Dame Fashion almost fainted about 1852 when self-reliant women wore bloomers because they were convenient and desired to discard corsets which are injurious to health and the capitalist press of their day taunted them with remarks like "free love," "strong-minded," "easy divorce," but in 1918 when the capitalist wants cheap labor the capitalist press of today advocates overalls as dresses may get caught in the machinery putting the capitalist liable to pay "compensation."

Millions are in Chains

Millions of workers are wearing the mental chains forged by the master class. Millions of workers are held in mental and physical slavery because they know nothing of the gospel of emancipation. Through the blight of the capitalist-controlled press upon their minds millions of workers are wandering in the quagmire of false reasoning and contradictions, their vision blurred, their prejudices played upon to their undoing; they are made the tools and playthings of those who exploit them.

The press of the industrial kaisers of the modern world has a two-fold purpose, to pay profits to its owners and to keep the workers in ignorance and slavery to them. These are its sole objects, it has no others.

To combat the lies of the masters, to lift from the minds of the workers the cloud of economic ignorance, to tear from their eyes the veil of deceit must be the object of the Socialist press. And to do it, it must be made more effective. It must be enlarged and made powerful. It must be made to reach into the hands of millions where it now only reaches thousands. The Socialist press is the greatest weapon the workers have. It must be made mighty to serve the high purpose of its mission.

The Ohio Socialist has entered upon a campaign to increase its subscription lists to 20,000 and to be enabled by this increase in subscriptions to publish twice a week. This is our goal. Can we reach it in time to enter the next municipal campaigns with a twice-a-week Ohio Socialist in the field? We can—you answer—and we know that it is true. We can reach that goal and can even surpass it if every comrade will do even a little toward increasing our list of readers.

Every reader has been mailed a letter and subscription blank. Comrade, use that blank. Don't waste it. Don't say you can't do your share. We know that you can. The workers are hungry for the message of Socialism. Give them the chance to become readers and to become thrilled with the message of emancipation.

Comrads, let's quit trading with the enemy! Let's build our own press.

Late Books and Pamphlets

Our Literature Department has been reorganized. The State Office will now handle a greater variety of literature on Socialism and allied subjects than ever before. The latest books and pamphlets will always be found on our lists. Watch the Ohio Socialist for future announcements of new books, leaflets and pamphlets. We desire that all comrades and readers patronize this office when in need of literature. We shall make a specialty of lower rates than can be obtained elsewhere.

Aside from all standard works on Socialism we offer the following:

Industrial Autocracy

By MARY MARCEY.

Here is a brand new booklet ready for delivery March 15th. No writer on present day economics is better qualified to write of world industrial conditions than is Mary Marcey. Her past works on the application of Marx's teachings to present day industry has made a place for her among the scientific writers of the day. This booklet is up to the minute and should be read by every worker. Get a grasp on present day problems by reading this book. 10c. Reduction will be given in quantities of 25 and over.

THE GREAT AND GROWING FEAR-NO WORK!

That is the name of a powerful propaganda leaflet just issued by the National Office of the Socialist Party.

It contains an awakening article on the subject now uppermost in the minds of the people, "Unemployment." This article is illustrated by cartoons.

It also contains the Constitution of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic in full, as published recently in the Ohio Socialist. This is the greatest living document produced by the mind of man and should be read by the workers everywhere, irrespective of race, nationality or creed. Give it publicity. Combat the lies of the capitalist press with this authentic document.

And last, but hardly least, this leaflet, which is four pages, 11x17 inches, also includes an appeal for membership. It shows that 109,589 working men and women paid their dues into the Socialist Party during the month of January, 1919, the greatest record for any month since the war began in August, 1914.

The distribution of this leaflet in your neighborhood, in your city, will help swell the Socialist Party membership, will increase the Socialist sentiment and strength in your city, and bring victory of Socialism that much nearer. You have been wanting a leaflet for distribution. Here it is.

How We Know

Why do we know that we can have 20,000 subscribers by September 1st? Read these notes culled from letters from comrades sending in subscriptions and you will, we think, agree with us that the matter is easy enough. Right now we wish to state that we are now 400 nearer the goal than we were last week. What story will we be able to tell you next week? We hope to say that we are 500 nearer the goal. Read these letters, imbibe from them some of the enthusiasm wheih animates the writers and makes them feel more fit for the big fight we are in. Read what others are doing to increase our list of readers—then go out with that sub blank you received this week and get it full of names. What others can do you can do as well.

"Send me an order blank and a few copies of the paper. I want to get 10 or 12 subscriptions." J. P. McCullough, West Virginia. While some apply for a job getting subs it would seem that others ought to be doing their share. What do you think?

"Am herewith sending money order for for $2.00 for stubs. Have been giving them my paper each week, now they come and give me two dollars and say it is the best paper on the market. I am on the job every day with your paper in my pocket". Louis Wohin. W. Va. These letters ought to make some Ohio comrades wake up, eh?

• • •

Well, here's one who woke up without being told. He is comrade Knisley of Findlay. He sends a list of ten yearlies and one half year and asks for more sub blanks. And further he sends a message to you; Here it is—"If the socialists would get busy it would be an easy matter to boost the list to one hundred thousand within thenext six months. All the is necessary is to see the people". Use that sub blank comrade.

• • •

Thurber Lewis wrote from Dover "How does the State Office expect me to get subs when in places like Dover you have representatives that will go to hell for them"? He refers to comrade A. L. Ricker. Of course we don't expect even a good organizer to compete with a livewire like comrade Ricker.

• • •

"Your paper is a 'hum dinger' writes comrade M. A. Rundle ofCraig, Mo. He orders a bundle.

• • •

With hopes of sending more and to keep theball a roling one yearlie comes in from comrade Van Gundy of Wyo.

• • •

Three dollars for subs from comrade W. F. Werner of Canton. He is one of the comrades who keeps at it.

• • •

Local Moline, Ill., sends $3.50 for bundles for Feb. and one sub. Moline comrades know good propaganda when they see it. Suppose your local tries the distribution plan. Talk it over, a bundle and watchresults.

"For the enclosed $8.00 send me subscription cards. A hustler for Ohio Socialist". Anton Soukup. Neffs, O. He's going to help get that 20,000 readers!

• • •

Thirty seven more comrades W. E. Reynolds of Battle Crek, Mich., brings the goal a bit nearer.

• • •

Comrade H. M. Kohr sends in 6, 5 of which are yearlies.

• • •

Four from E. Liverpool proves comrade Larimore is on the job.

• • •

Two from our booster, comrade B. Kush of Canton of the Slavic Branch.

• • •

New Philla., list is boosted three more by comrade Glatfelter. New Phila., means to have its share of the 20,000 readers.

• • •

W. H. Tilley of Kansas sends in one sub.

• • •

Secretary Scheifler of Marion sends us two.

• • •

Chalane of Hamilton sends us 5 more.

Our 'Red' friend comrade Sprinkle of McAllester N. M. sends two half yearlies. Th esame number come from comrade Collins of Akron, O.

Corade V. Popov, of St Louis, Mo., sends in five.

• • •

Comrade C. H. Werber of Barberton adds four to the list in his town.

• • •

Chs. D. Hirst, claims responsibility for three from Salineville.

• • •

Mayor Hamilton of Piqua passes in four this week.

• • •

Five half yearlies from comrade Jesse Bird of W. Va., proves his continued activity.

• • •

Local Tiffin sends in six as its weekly adition.

• • •

Local Niles adds six and renews three this week.

• • •

Comrade Hinkle of Hamilton mails us two half yearlies.

• • •

Comrade J. Le Pamre of Zanesville stpes back in the ring with a list of four.

• • •

Twelve is on the list sent by comrade O. Ruchtaeschel of Cinti.

• • •

Thirteen is the lucky number local Toledo sends thru secretary Boyd.

• • •

Executive Committeeman Baker of Columbus adds two to Columbus' listt

Liebknecht and Luxemburg Brutally Beaten to Death by Guards

Story About Attempted Escape Branded As Lie By London Correspondent

The story sent out of Germany and spread broadcast by the press of this country in regard to the death of Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg said that the former had been shot while trying to escape from his guards and that Rosa Luxemburg had been beaten to death by an angry mob of people. This story is branded as a lie by the correspondent of the London Daily News, who says that both these champions of the workers were beaten to death by the military officers and guards who arrested them.

The story as printed in the London paper follows:

"When in my last message describing the scene at Liebknecht's grave I tried to give you a hint of some deeper horror which was accountable for the extreme nervous tension among the mourners, and which had a close connection with the death of Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, I had only the thinnest thread on which to found my suspicion that behind these two deaths there was being deliberately hidden a terrible truth which must ultimately come out.

"An hour ago I chanced on some one who has given me what in all solemnity he assures me is the story of what actually took place. Apart from the fate of the two victims, it has a very grave bearing on the wider condition of Germany and the relative power of the old military regime and the present government

"My informant claims to have been an eye-witness to the incident which he describes. He was staying, he says, at the Eden hotel, where the horrible affair took place, and he returned there on the night of the tragedy at 10:30, to find an armed guard at the door. The sentry told him that Liebknecht had been arrested and that it was intended to beat him to death.

"In the immediate neighborhood of the hotel nobody was to be seen. Thus the story circulated in the official report about the 'infuriated crowd' was false, and the crowds existed only in the imagination of the military authorities who spread the report.

"When he entered the hotel he found a group of eight military officers and half a dozen civilions. There was an air of expectancy about them, and in about 15 minutes Rosa Luxemburg appeared, accompanied by the 'Kriminal Wachmeister.' A few minutes later Liebknecht came down the stairs, after having been questioned by the military. He was guarded by armed soldiers.

"At the moment Liebknecht was passing the narrator of this aair, an officer of the guards cavalry suddenly sprang toward him, shouting, 'Is that fellow still alive?'

"The officer then joined the military escort, which left the hotel with both prisoners. In about 15 minutes he returned and said Liebknecht had been beaten to death with the butt ends of rifles. The blows were struck from behind, and at the second blow Liebknecht collapsed.

"Again, the story circulated about Liebknecht's attempt to escape appears to have been invented by the authorities concerned and to have been sheer falsehood. According to a statement made by one of the sentries Liebknecht was deliberately murdered by the soldiers, who were encouraged to this deed by their officers.

"The next step was to compel all civilians to leave the hall of the hotel, while the military and hotel employes were assembled alone. These employes afterward declared, quite independently of each other, that Rosa Luxemburg had also been beaten down at the entrance of the hotel by officers and soldiers. There was no sign of any enraged crowd.

"My informant states that the official declaration of the guards cavalry Schutzen division was one complete untruth from beginning to end. A major who was present at the hotel could have easily investigated the affair, but caused a false statement to be issued, instead of the truth. Later on, the manager of the hotel was ordered to assemble all the employes and to read the false report aloud to them. In this way, the employes were intimidated by the militarism which is by some supposed to have been thrust forever out of Germany.

"The soldiers declared that they threw the body of Rosa Luxemburg in the canal. On the day following these terrible events, all the officers who knew about them had disappeared from the hotel. The whole affair has now been placed in the hands of an impartial committee, which is working in conjunction with members of the Independent Socialist committee.

"My informant is of opinion that, while Liebknecht's body was being carried away in a car, some revolver shots—probably blank cartridges—were fired toward the car, in order to give some sort of reality to the story of Liebknecht's flight.

"The struggle of the old military officers for the maintenance of their positions is becoming daily more determined and is assuming the shape of a movement for removing the soldiers' councils and restoring the old system of subordination.

"The majority of the officers are professional soldiers who, since the breakdown of military force, have lacked occupation, and in some cases even the wherewithal to live. To them the revival of militarism means the possibility of gaining a living again, and since many of the returned soldiers are unable to find employment in trade or industry, they are only too willing to join the army and again become professionals."

Williams Denies Charge of Wholesale Killing in Russia

Washington.—Albert Rhys Williams, who testified before the Overman committee which is investigating the Soviet government of Russia, presented quite a different picture of conditions in that country from that which the committee received from various agents of capitalism who had testified before the committee. He told the committee that the men at head of the Russian government abhored murder and blood shed and were sincere idealists who were striving with all their strength to erect a new sort of social organization in that country.

Taking up the question of bloodshed and wholesale killing during the progress of the revolution, Williams flatly denied the statements circulated by the capitalist press. He pointed out that there were one hundred and eighty million people in Russia and that in proportion to the population few people were killed in comparison to the number who have died in civil wars, which did not go as deep as the Russian revolution, in other countries.

Williams' Testimony.

"How many people were killed in Russia up to the time you left?" Senator Wolcott asked.

"According to my own careful estimate, and the estimate is generous, I would say between 40,000 and 50,000."

"Other witnesses have testified of great numbers dying of starvation, many of them in the streets; of hundreds being led to prisons to be killed, and of great numbers who were killed in other ways. These statements do not harmonize with what you say," Senator Wolcott said.

"I am sure that you can call many reliable witnesses to verify all I have said. Major Wardwell of the Red Cross, Mr. Humphreys of the Y. M. C. A., Miss Beatty, and many others I can name if you wish to call them."

Mr. Williams added that in judging the Bolsheviki people should remember what the Russian masses had suffered under the czar, how there was hardly a family whose men had not been among those killed at the front, of the graft under the old regime, and of the failure of the czar's government to give the soldiers under the grand duke and under Brusiloff the munitions they had to have in order to make a good fight. He said that trains under the old regime were sent to Archangel to get guns and ammunition and would be sent back with wine and fine clothes for the rich people of Moscow and other cities, leaving the soldiers at the front "to fight it out with sticks and clubs." With such conditions as that to remember, he said, "It was possible to understand why great numbers of them do not now look with any great affection on those they consider as having been among the supporters of their one-time opressors."

"The first decree issued by the Bolsheviki after they gained control," said Mr. Williams, "was one abolishing capital punishment."

"Did they later restore that form of punishment?" asked Major Humes.

"Yes, after a long time they restored capital punishment."

"And speaking of atrocities," said Mr. Williams, "have you read that Carl Ackerman cabled to the New York Times from Siberia? In one of his stories he told of a trainload of 2,100 Bolshevik prisoners, 800 of whom were missing when the train reached its destination, and these 800 had died of starvation, been killed, or in other ways disposed of." The witness told of a Cossack advance ahead of the allied forces, and how those Cossacks murdered the people and left their bodies in the streets.

"Now when the Bolsheviki came into power they gained control of Petrograd with a loss of life that totaled only twenty people. In Kiev some 2,000 were killed. In Moscow, 1,000; in Rostoff, 2,000, and in Irkutsk, not more than 1,000. Taking all these figures into consideration, I repeat that all casualties due to civil war or other causes since the overthrow

A Safe Mount—

"BOLSHEVISM IS TREASON"

"Bolshevism is treason."

A flaring headline and a full-page advertisement published by the Educational Welfare Association in one of the Cleveland newspapers conveys this startling information.

This association is carrying on a campaign to make the workers believe that all is well with them while they go wearily from place to place hunting for jobs.

But this time it is right.

Bolshevism IS treason.

It is bold, unashamed, stark, glaring treason.

It is treason against that conception of industry which means that the few amass great fortunes and the many get just enough to live.

It is treason against an industrial system that periodically sends millions out on the streets to starve or get a living as best they may, because the few are unable, momentarily, to make profits for themselves.

It is treason to an industrial organization that means long hours, low wages and constant industrial conflict.

It is treason against the idea that the government of nations exists for the purpose of struggling for economic advantages so that the few who own the industries of the nation may make more profits or secure the opportunity for investment of the profits made at home in foreign countries.

It is treason against the idea that a few great landlords should own millions of acres of land and exploit the workers thereupon, or that the bankers should take from the producers of the soil the bulk of what they produce through their mortgages.

It is treason to the industrial order that makes the capitalists and their managers the czars and kaisers of industry, who hire and fire as they see fit.

It is treason against an industrial system that produces ten thousand new millionaires in a war in which the workers bear the brunt of sacrifice and suffering.

It is treason against all that the capitalist class and the capitalist system stands for.

In war time we do not call using our weapons against the enemy treason, but the capitalists have become so accustomed to loyalty to themselves and their system on the party of the workers they exploit and rob that naturally they look upon an attack upon them by these workers as treason. They consider it their God-given right to grind down and oppress the workers, and hence their hysterical cries of "treason," now that the workers are turning against them.

The capitalists are the enemy of the workers. We cannot commit treason against the enemy. Treason for workers is disloyalty to the working class. It is the worker who supports the capitalist class and the capitalist system that is the traitor, for he is supporting the masters in the struggle to prevent the workers from achieving their freedom.

The Bolshevists are traitors to capitalism—and proud of it.

The worker who is not a traitor to capitalism confesses himself a willing slave.

Wilson "Plot" Story Exploded

New York.—The widely heralded story that an organization of Spanish anarchists had planned to kill President Wilson when he landed in Boston has been proven to be the product of the imagination of officials who are trying to stir up sentiment against the working class movement.

Seven of the fourteen Spaniards arrested, and held illegally without a warrant or charges of any character, were released after a few days, and the remaining seven were released last Thursday.

They were immediately rearrested on a warrant issued by the Department if Immigration. This warrent alleges that the seven men are "undesirable aliens," their undesirability consisting, it is believed, in that they believe in sabotage.

Following a heated parley between Harry Weinberger, the attorney for the men, and Judge Knox, on the constitutionality of the further detention of the men and on their being examined without the privilege of attorney, the Spaniards were taken in custody by a squad of men from the Department of Immigration on Ellis Island.

The men were examined during the day in order to determine whether in the minds of the Department of Immigration officials, they should be deported or permitted to remain in this country.

A hearing on that point will be held this morning before Judge Knox in the Federal Court building.

Weinberger protested a second time against what he termed the illegality of the Spaniards. He declared the men were being forced to give evidence against themselves, without having the opportunity to be informed of their rights.

He asked to be permitted to go with the men to Ellis Island, so that he might cou[illegible] them during their examination i[illegible] Department of Immigration officials, but that privilege was denied him. He seriously questioned whether these officials, under the Constitution, had the right to obtain information under such circumstances.

John Reed "Not Guilty"

Philadelphia.—John Reed and William Kogirman, who were indicted for "inciting to riot," in connection with a meeting held here last summer, were declared "not guilty" after three hours' deliberation on the part of the jury.

The case grew out of a meeting arranged by Philadelphia Socialists, at which Reed was to speak. The meeting was to be held in Moose hall. When the crowd arrived they found the building locked and a cordon of police around the door. Barred from the hall the Socialists tried to hold the meeting on a near-by street corner. It was while speaking on the corner that Reed was arrested.

Russian Workers Unite

Social revolutionaries have joined forces with the Bolsheviki, their former opponents, to oppose allied interference in Russian internal affairs, it was reported in a wireless dispatch received from Moscow.

The dispatch said that social revolutionary members of the old Constituent Assembly had arrived in Moscow for the purpose of negotiating with Premier Lenine. They issued a manifesto admitting the charge that the Bolsheviki had accepted money from Germany was false. The manifesto concluded:

"Allied interference in internal Russia is becoming more definite. Although we do not agree with the Bolsheviki on many points, it is our duty to call all citizens, workmen and peasants to cease civil war and unite against the common enemy."

Italian Workers Prepare For Dictatorship of The Proletariat

Caroti Tells of Preparation of Workers to Take Control of That Country

Arthur Caroti, Socialist member of the Italian parliament, who some years ago made a tour of this country and made a speech before the Italian workers here, gives the following picture of conditions in Italy in a letter to the New York Call:

The echo of the applause to President Wilson has already died away. Wilson and the reception accorded him are almost forgotten. Too many events have happened since his coming to Italy; many events and important ones. It is not a large section of the country that is alive to politics. Nevertheless, the reception to Wilson was warm. Many they were who looked to Wilson as to a savior—a savior from beastly imperialism, war and reaction; many others cheered because they had to. The Socialists—not the Socialists of the tamed or corrupted variety—the Socialists of the Partito Socialista Italiano, stood apart for many reasons; mainly as an act of solidarity with the persecuted comrades of the United States Socialist Party. Wilson is the symbol of the United States government, the true representative of the United States' capitalist class, the enemy of our comrades.

The Socialist city administration of Milan, the great metropolis of northern Italy, gave a reception to Wilson, receiving him as a guest. But the rank and file of Milan was not particularly desirous of a formal reception, and the Milan branch of the Socialist Party has by no means indorsed the action of the mayor and his councillors.

Events are moving rapidly in Italy. One must understand our national situation.

Italy Economically Defeated.

Italy has won a military victory but it comes out of the war economically defeated. Against a national wealth of about twenty billion dollars, there is a total indebtedness of about eighteen billions; two-thirds of the creditors are foreigners.

Italy has no raw materials to export; the materials for the basic industries of modern civilization—iron and coal—have to be imported. So must cotton. Wool is inadequate to the need. Agriculture in so sunny a climate as that of Italy does not yield as much as it should. War and poor transportation have played their part to cripple Italy's horticultural and agrumarian trade. The big market of middle Europe has been closed for years on account of the war and will be closed for years to come. France has shifted her trading with Italy to Spain.

The only wealth of Italy is labor. We have many millions more of working people than we need. But this wealth is wealth that eats. How shall they be fed? How shall they be employed?

The working class, owing to the high cost of living, was little spared during the war. Workers have a small buying power. The industrial class fears to produce commodities for market which may not buy a fair amount; it also fears the grip of taxation. There is a tendency among the industrials to stop working and to close the factories.

Overproduced War Material.

Sections of our industrial class have overproduced war commodities or commodities of war time. The sudden end of the war has left them with a superabundance of war materials. They hoped that the government would adopt a policy of free exportation, while the government did its best to sabotage it, either because of the pressure of the industrial countries allied to it—which tend to favor their own industries—or because it feared a lack of commodities in that domestic market and a consequent skyrocketing of prices. And the industrials react by closing factories or by the reduction of hours all work and wages.

And all this while millions of soldiers are leaving the army and preparing to return home.

Gloom hovers over Italy

What should be a sensible policy, for a bourgeois government to follow? Our bourgeois divide themselves into two distinct classes.

Launch League for Release of Political Prisoners

Chicago, Ill.—"National League for the Release of Political Prisoners," is the name chosen for the organization launched here to carry on a national campaign until all war prisoners now incarcerated or in danger of incarceration in the nation's bastiles, for principles sake, are unconditionally released.

The name was chosen at the first meeting of the immediate action committee organized as the result of a call sent out by the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party. The committee endorsed the suggestion of holding a national convention on May 1, in Chicago.

Credentials were handed in at the first meeting of the committee from the People's Council of America, New York Bureau of Legal Advice, National Jewish Workmen's Committee, Western District; Fellowship of Reconciliation; Workers' Defense Union of New York City; National Civil Liberties Union; 27 state organizations and eight foreign language federations of the Socialist Party; the Socialist Labor Party, Poale Zion, and the Industrial Workers of the World.

William Bross Lloyd was chosen chairman and Alfred Wagenknecht, secretary. Invitations will be sent to the National Nonpartisan League, the various organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, as well as a large number of other bodies of forward thinking citizens who will take an interest in the great struggle to restore democracy to America.

A sub-committee chosen to arrange details of representation and other matters connected with speeding up the arrangements for the conferences, has taken action as follows:

"That the basis of representation shall be one delegate for every 300 members, each organization, however, entitled to at least one delegate.

"That all delegate bodies, such as Central Labor Unions, Trades Councils, Socialist Party Central Committee, each be allowed one delegate.

"That the immediate need was for affiliation of sympathetic organizations; election of delegates to the May 1st convention by these organizations, call for finances, publicity for rank and file of all these organizations, and the convention details.

"That we suggest to the immediate action committee that representative of the league be sent to all the large industrial centers, to stimulate effect of correspondence by personal appeal, and to secure affiliations."

Lima Socialists Win Memorial Hall Case

On the 13th day of January, 1919, application was made to the county commissioners of Allen county for the use of Memorial hall for a Socialist meeting.

That was the third application for its use and for a third time its use was refused on the sole ground that it was to be used for a Socialist meeting.

Our State Constitution says, "All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for their EQUAL protection and benefit." Some people forget that we have a constitution.

Mandamus proceedings were brought after the second application had been turned down and Judge Klinger of the Common Pleas Court decided in favor of the applicants but declined to issue a peremptory writ owing to the "flu" ban being on at the time.

After the third refusal the county commissioners were again mandamused. This time the alternative writ was made peremptory by Judge Klinger and the county commissioners were ordered to grant the use of the Memorial hall to the relator for a Socialist meeting.

The county commissioners filed a petition in error in the Court of Appeals of Allen county, Ohio, and the case was argued in that court, Jan. 17, 1919.

The scene in the court room was one never to be forgotten. The county commissioners, one of whom was a member of the spy system of the Chamber of Commerce, known as the American Protective League, called upon their masters for support. The invisible government of Lima at last became visible.

The hidden power, the Chamber of Commerce, that body that during the war organized white collared thugs into vigilance corps to intimidate and terrorize the workers, came in full force to the hearing, looking sleek and well fed, and with that important air which was intended to say to the court, look at us. We are the "best people." We are the sinew and backbone of the government. We are of better clay than the workers. We have a monopoly of brains as well as of the money. We do not want Socialist speeches. The workers might become enlightened. If they do, then we will be compelled to become useful.

The court evidently ignored their self-assumed importance for, on the 18th day of February they handed down the following opinion affirming the order of Judge Klinger, requiring the county commissioners to permit the Socialists to use Memorial hall:

Decision of the Court of Appeals for Allen County, Ohio.

Before Judges Kinder, Crow and Hughes.

By the court:

The board of county commissioners refused to permit the relator the use

The Capitalist System is Eas[illegible] Ended Than M

BABSON WARNS WALL STREET

We are sitting on a keg of powder. It is well enough for prominent men to give out optimistic interviews, but such talk is largely for effect. The statistics which they give may be true but they don't tell the whole story. Fundamental economic conditions are bad and it is useless to deny it. We could give many reasons for this statement, but shall mention only two basic reasons:

1. This composit plot shows clearly that a period of trouble and depression is ahead. It cannot be sidetracked. We can prepare for the reaction and prevent it from becoming disastrous but to stop it is impossible.

2. The industrial classes in many parts of the world are at the point of revolution. Insiders well know that the uprising of the masses in Germany was a vital factor in ending the war, and the disturbances in that country are likely to become worse when peace terms are imposed. We know something of the terrible conditions in Russia, but little is being told us about the bad industrial conditions in Italy, France, Spain, Japan, Holland and Great Britain. In all these countries strikes are numerous, as outlined more in detail on a later page. On account of the law of equal and opposite reaction, things are not as bad in America as in Europe. There has been less suppression in America. The idea, however, that these convulsions can take place in Europe without some reaction in America is absolutely foolish. The United States is destined to have great labor troubles unless employers immediately adopt different methods. These troubles will start with the textile industry, the copper industry or possibly the steel industry. The coal and electrical industries will also be affected. America may see the darkest period of its history in the coming days.

What does this mean to clients? It means that business will be jolted, the earnings of the masses will be cut down and their purchasing power will be greatly curtailed. As people cease to buy, manufacturers will cease to produce, and many workers who have not quit voluntarily will be laid off for lack of orders. The vicious circle will again be in evidence. The prices of certain basic commodities, such as steel, copper, and other metals, will continue to decline. There may not be such an extended decline in the manufactured goods, which so largely enter into the cost of living. Owing to interference with production through industrial unrest, the shortening of hours and general efficiency, prices of manufactured goods may for a while continue relatively high.

During the past years the influence of the farmers in this country has been mostly on the side of conservatism. Although the farmer doesn't know it he really is a capitalist and his interests should be allied with the conservative group. When, however, the trade routes of the world are again freely opened, American farmers are going to get a decided shock. Wheat will drop to a dollar a bushel, while corn and other cereals will fall correspondingly. The prices of farm products will drop much more rapidly than the farmer's expenses. This is going to make him ugly, and socialism will appear mild compared with some of the propositions which farmers will be making a year or two from now. The farmers of the western states will unite with the industrial workers of the eastern cities in attempting most dangerous legislation.

The foregoing illustrates in a marked way the reason for our attitude on securities (we omit this and one other paragraph on advice of investors).

Our mercantile and labor services are constantly advising clients how to shape their business to prepare for these startling events. Different lines of industry must use different methods of insurance. Those who recognize conditions and prepare an outlet for their people's desires may get by. Those who try to dam the flood will be washed away. Our government has said so much about democracy that the masses are now determined to have it, and to have it apply to industry as well as to politics. Far-sighted employers and merchants, instead of attempting to block the masses in their endeavors will at once get busy to devise means whereby they can reach their goal without bloodshed and the destruction of property.

A Word on the Building Situation.

As above suggested, the coming industrial unrest must be prepared and made less harmful. We indorse the government's campaign for the stimulation of public works, the building of homes and construction of all kinds. Reaction must come, and the only hope in the situation is to give the masses as much help as possible so that the reaction will not be so severe. The building industry may become such a buffer. Construction work, both public and private, should be encouraged by every employer. It is a check to anarchy, Bolshevism and I. W. W.ism in this country. Every client should use his influence with his local community, his representatives to the state legislature and congress to push public works with all possible speed. Clients also have an opportunity to perform personal patriotic service by building at this time.

Prices will be lower later but it is a good deal better to build now and head off anarchy than to wait until too late for the sake of saving 20 per cent. Spend the money now and then charge 20 per cent for insurance, good will or something else. Clients who already have plans for building and who have suspended the same on account of high prices should again ask for bids. Clients who in any way contemplate building should at least have plans drawn. Mind you, we are not pretending that now is the cheap time to build. On the contrary, it is an expensive time to build and we frankly say so. But it is much better to build now at a high cost and save business than it is to wait for lower prices and run the risk of anarchy.

What is Happening Abroad.

The war of nations in Europe is over, but the great class war apparently has just begun. Because of the strict censorship of news the real social conditions in Europe and elsewhere are not generally known. Working class unrest has expressed itself in revolutionary form throughout all European nations. The statesmen at the peace conference in Paris are really more deeply concerned over the outcome of the labor and Socialist conferences at Berne, Switzerland, than they are in their own activities in Paris. While the peace conference is discussing formulas for a League of Nations, the labor conference at Berne, is discussing the possibility of having their working class constituents at home take over the ownership and control of industries. Strikes are rife throughout England, Ireland, France, Italy, Spain, Portugal and Sweden. They all show symptoms of economic rather than political revolutions. In Argentina and Chile, violent labor uprisings have recently occurred. Given below are some specific instances which serve to show the trend of the times.

In England at least 250,000 of various trades have recently been on strike. These strikes are not over isolated disputes, but have as their base the fundamental principles of privileges which working classes are to receive henceforth. All of this has occurred notwithstanding the fact that only a portion of England's military forces has been demobilized. What will be the situation when some 4,000,000 more men return to look for jobs? The strike at Belfast, Ireland, is a direct repudiation of parliamentary action and is quite in sympathy with the Sinn Fein government recently elected.

Reports from Italy indicate that an explosion may take place at any time. The labor leaders of Italy are calling for the abolition of monarchy and for a Soviet government. The sudden return of the Italian delegate, Orlando, to Rome, because of the resignation of the Italian cabinet is significant of serious trouble in Italy. When President Wilson recently conferred with the Vatican, he was afterward rebuked by the Italian workers for refusing to address one of their labor conferences. They retaliated by darkening the city and cutting off transportation for two days. Here we see the weapon of direct action is being used in Italy.

In Portugal the recent attempted overthrow of the republic of the monarchist party, indicates that the working classes of Portugal are demanding power and have broken with the present regime. Seeing this dissension, the monarchists took the opportunity and attempted the restoration of the Portuguese royalty. In Spain the working class labor riots are frequent. While no recent reports have been received, there is bitter class feeling in that country which may burst into flame at any moment. In Japan trouble is imminent, as is further indicated by the rapid withdrawal of Japanese troops from Russia. The rice riots of a few months ago show the temper of the people, who are beginning to revolt against the imperialistic designs of their leaders.

At this moment the allies are confronted with the very serious and pressing problem of demobilizing their armies. French labor groups are demanding that their members be immediately released from army service. British labor groups are also persistently demanding the demobilizing of the workers. The reason that this demand is not complied with is not because they need any longer fear the German army, but because of the more genuine fear of sending back these millions of soldiers to the homes, factories and workshops from which they were conscripted during the war, to find panics and unemployment.

On the other hand to keep millions of soldiers resting on their arms with no immediate prospect of using them, tends to disrupt army discipline and precipitate mutiny. The longer they remain resting on their arms, the worse this situation becomes. If they are released and sent back to civilian life and do not find conditions and opportunities such as all the promises of war guaranteed, then there is going to be trouble on a scale such as we have never known before! People in the United States have little conception of what is really going on. The conditions which exist abroad may not be duplicated here, but we cannot hope entirely to escape from the suffering which they produce. We cannot hope to have prosperity in America while there is revolution and anarchy in Europe. Babson's Report.

The International Delegates

By JAMES ONEAL.

The resolution being adopted by some locals regarding the three delegates elected to attend the Berne conference, reveal a general misunderstanding of the situation. It is feared that they may commit the party to policies upon which it is not agreed or compromise it in some way.

It may be pointed out that this conference has adjourned and the National Executive Committee decided that if the three delegates could not get to the conference in time but one should go abroad. Another conference may be held while this representative is in Europe, but it should be borne in mind that he has neither the power nor the inclination to commit the party to any policies in conflict with those declared by the party if he should attend a conference while abroad.

His mission is mainly one of establishing contact with the movement abroad, to impart information to European comrades regarding the Socialist Party of the United States, to acquire all information possible regarding the various divisions in the European movement, and to make a report of his findings upon his return.

It may be pointed out here that the party frequently protested against the refusal of passports to American delegates to attend the proposed Stockholm conference. Now that the war is over and passports have been granted to two delegates, there are comrades who protest that passports should not be used. Our first protest was directed against the discrimination of the State Department and now that the government has lifted the ban, some of us erect one of our own.

Party members will concede that the Stockholm conference would probably have not been any more satisfactory to these members than the recent Berne conference, yet no one thought at the time that we should not try to send delegates. But sending delegates did not necessarily mean that we would permit them to commit the party to policies which the party opposed. On the contrary, the fact that the American party has become an important section of the International would have a good influence in any tendency toward uniting all groups into a new International with which we would be glad to affiliate.

The mission of the one delegate to go abroad is more informative than anything else. We are in need of information more than anything else. We certainly do not have an abundance of it on hand. We who live in New York have better sources of information than the comrades who live inland. Yet what we have is of a fragmentary character despite the fact that occasionally some comrade arrives from Europe with some first-hand news. Even the actions of the Berne conference are unknown to us except for a few meager items that have been sent back by correspondents.

The main factor to be kept in mind is that the coming of peace restrictions on travel abroad are to some extent being lifted and the special embargo against representatives of the Socialist Party has at least been modified. The writer has spent weeks since the receipt of passports in getting them vised by the British, French and Swiss consuls. He has the first two and has engaged passage on a steamer for England and expects to have the Swiss vise before sailing. The opportunity to re-establish relations with European comrades is available and there is no particular reason why we should not avail ourselves of it. If the writer should in any way attempt to commit the party to policies to which it is opposed he can be held amenable for his actions when he returns.

A Letter Not Published

Cleveland, O., Jan. 27, 1919.

Editor Plain Dealer,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Sir:

Noting that you are devoting considerable editorial comment to what appears to you to be "the specter of anarchy and all that is evil in society," namely Bolshevism, I should like to say a few words as to my conception of what Bolshevism really is. First, Bolshevism denotes maximum socialism as distinguished from Menshevism or moderate socialism. That we are and have been steadily evolving toward that form of society pointed out by Karl Marx's scientific ex[illegible] knows as socialism cannot be denied by any one. Then [illegible] Bolshevism are but [illegible] social develop- [illegible] process of education that has been carried on by different socialistic groups throughout the world but unfortunately, due to the persecution that has been the lot of those who have been the forerunners and torch-bearers of the new and inevitable order of society, they have at times been driven to the position of having to appeal for the support of the masses, and have been forced to set forth immediate practical demands calculated to attract these masses to their standard.

All Socialists, whether you term them "Bolshevists," "Spartacus," or what not, have in their campaigns pointed out the inevitableness of the downfall of the capitalist system, a system based upon profits, a system which denies to the workers the right to work—regardless of the need for the things which [illegible] produced, and for [illegible] about its own downfall, for with the development of capitalism the world market into which the surplus products, or that part of labor's production over and above which he receives in the form of wages, becomes ever smaller due to the nation's which before have been buyers becoming themselves sellers, necessitates the disposition of this surplus product in the home markets. This is impossible because the workers receive in wages only an equivalent of part of their production, and in general are able to purchase back only this relative part of their products. The surplus then constitutes what bourgeoisie economists term "over production." When this state exists there ensues a period of economic and social stagnation which necessitates a readjustment of the whole structure and fabric of society. Depending upon the sharpness of this period, depends the nature of the readjustment it amounting to, at certain periods, complete revolution of our economic, and with this our social structures.

During these periods intense and bitter suffering is caused to millions of workers and their families and they will occur with ever recurring frequency until the system of capitalism has been replaced by Socialism, a system of society in which the workers shall own and democratically manage the means of production and distribution thereby insuring the worker the full social product of his labor abolishing the system of profits.

Realizing and guided by a philosophy which teaches the ultimate collapse of capitalism in favor of the new order, socialism, the Maximilists or Bolshevists have inaugurated the new order of maximum socialism without temporizing with the reforms of the moderates or Menshevists who, in their program, would attempt to patch up or find a compromising ground upon which the upholders of the present capitalist system could harmonize with the coming order of socialism. The Maximilists say this is impossible and will only drag the conflict with its inherent ills over a period of years while the establishment of maximum socialism now while causing much intensity and bitterness between the old order and the new, will, as soon as it is realized that the new order has come to stay, work unforseen blessings upon all humanity. There can be no compromise, say the Bolshevists.

The persecuted of the past become the dictators of today, but unlike their persecutors, they do not persecute their opponents physically. All they insist upon is "law and order." The workers are the Bolshevists. They control. They have established a new order of society. They have formulated their constitution, made their laws and set up the authority of the majority. Those who of the old order, now in a hopeless minority, attempt to defeat this majority by espionage and disobedience of the laws of the constituted government must suffer the discipline of a most lenient and humane government and so learn the [illegible] the world [illegible]

That the upholders of the old order realize the hopelessness of again saddling their bondage on to the patient and formerly-unreasoning peasant is evinced by their appeal to the capitalistic government to lend them aid in forcefully suppressing what is unmistakable terms the people of Russia and Socialists the world over have [illegible] as their will and desire, the [illegible]

HELP! HELP! HELP!

SOCIALIST PARTY DECIDES TO PURCHASE NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS AND CALLS UPON ALL MEMBERS TO AID—INITIAL PAYMENT MADE—OWNERSHIP CERTIFICATES TO BE ISSUED—ENDORSEMENT UNANIMOUS

We say—endorsed unanimously. We mean that every Socialist to whom we have spoken about the purchase of a headquarters for the National Socialist Party has, with extra emphasis, endorsed the move.

We must have a home of our own. We must cease paying rent. Landlord capitalists have fed upon our national party treasury for years, and are now feeding upon it to the extent of $3,000 a year. This must stop! And it will stop we hope, upon International Labor Day, when we expect to move into our new national headquarters where, in security and in a more satisfactory environment, the Socialist work will be carried on with more efficiency than ever before.

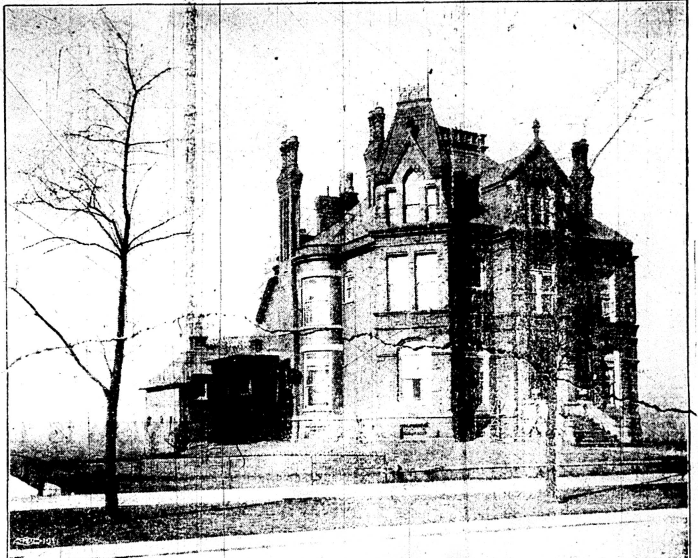
The sum needed to make the purchase, to pay for alterations and for moving is $40,000. A call is to be issued to the Socialist Party membership within a week or ten days, to invest in ownership certificates in any amount they can afford. Every party member can afford to invest one dollar. But many can give five dollars, ten dollars and more. Every comrade will be asked to be as generous as possible in his investment, so that our new national headquarters, the home we'll own, may be paid for in full in the shortest possible time.

An initial payment of one thousand dollars has already been made. It now becomes the duty of every party member to forward his "I'm with you, comrade," in the shape of an order for an ownership certificate in as large an amount as he can afford.

The new national headquarters will house all of the National Offie Departments and room to spare. The translator-secretaries of all foreign Socialist federations will occupy nearly the entire second floor of the building. The administration offices of the National Party will occupy the first floor. The literature shipping rooms will be located in two well-lighted rooms in the basement. Negotiations are now under way to have a printing establishment in the large building in the rear of the main structure.

Comrades who have seen the property agree that it is a splendid investment. The price being paid by the Socialist Party canstitutes about half its original cost. The loyal co-operation of all party members will "swing the deal" in a hurry, and this former rich man's palace will then be used to enrich workers' lives.

Every party member, every local of the party, a part owner of our national headquarters—this is the call which will go forward from the Department of Organization and Propaganda, Socialist Party, to all the comrades within a very few days.



New National Headquarters of the Socialist Party to be Bought for the Party by its Members

This property is in the heart of Chicago and is located at 220 Ashland boulevard. It is a typical brown stone mansion, magnificent in architecture and substantial in construction. It is well adapted for an administration building for the National Office, Socialist Party. The main building contains 17 large rooms; six on the first floor, nine on the second floor, and a hall that will seat 200 people and an ante-room on the third floor.

The lot has a frontage of 112 feet and is 200 feet deep. This gives plenty of room for expansion. The grounds not now occupied will permit the erection of buildings 90 by 112 feet and 50 by 110 feet. The building in the rear is spacious and can be used for a printing plant until we can construct a larger building for this purpose.

KENMORE HOLDS GOOD LEWIS MEETING

Word received from Comrade Seibert reports a good Thurber Lewis meeting in spite of the fact that it received little advertising. Six dollars worth of literature was sold. Collection was good and the comrades well pleased. And, comrades are going right ahead working up another good meeting.

MORE ROOM FOR LIMA SOCIALISTS

Just as Judge Klinger said in his verdict in favor of the Socialist using Memorial hall, persecution makes a cause grow. So we find that after a few weeks of persecution by the county commissioners, the Socialists of Lima have grown to such numbers that larger quarters are necessary. This is the word received from Local Lima this week. So, again we say, "kill us some more."

LEWIS WAKES UP DOVER

Local Dover is wide awake thanks to Comrade Thurber Lewis' visit there. We should judge that Comrade Lewis used hot water to wake the comrades. Comrade Secretary H. L. Ricker sends an application for a charter containing eight names, an order for dues and initiation stamps and says that another speaker will be desirable in a short time. He refers to Comrade Lewis as "the boy wonder," which he truly is.

GREEN COUNTY GOING 'RED'

Comrades of Green County are becoming affected by the activities in other parts of the state and will now show that they too are in the race for a bigger and better party of the workers. The matter of forming a county organization is under way, being pushed by several wheel horses of the movement there. One part of the new activities is to have each applicant for membership pay three months' dues or a dollar, which also gives them three months' subscription to the Ohio Socialist. This method, it is thought, will supply needed funds to push the work. All power to them.

RUTHENBERG AT COLUMBUS

The sentiment in favor of Socialism is fast growing in and about Columbus. We had Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg with us Feb. 23 with the largest crowd we have had for several years, and as he spoke and made the following points he was applauded by almost everyone in the house. He first spoke on amnesty for the political prisoners in this country, and among other things, said that "Liebknecht in autocratic Germany got four years for treason, but Debs in democratic America, charged with the same offense, got ten years," then he asked if a member of the working class differs with the capitalist class to the extent that they may call it treason, how much better off is he in DEMOCRATIC America than in autocratic Germany?"

The speaker stated that if the working class of this country expect to free their political prisoners they must organize on the industrial field. He entered a plea for support of the Soviet government as they were only giving the capitalists some of their own [illegible] and compared the revo- [illegible] of lives lost was not so great. Comrade Ruthenberg stated it appeared to be evident that the reason the allied troops are not withdrawn from Russia is because the capitalists of France, loaned the czar of Russia a large sum of money and now the workers in the Soviet government are inclined to think they should not pay that back, as it was used to pay Cossacks to murder the workers on bloody Sunday in 1905, and now they need that money to help to establish a government by and for the workers, a real industrial democracy. The workers of this country should organize both politically and industrially and get the industrial kaisers off their backs so as to be able to help the German comrades if they called on them as the Russian comrades did on the German workers, he said.

The applause was frequent and general. The literature sales and collection were good, and that in itself is [illegible] indication of [illegible] renewed in- [illegible]

Resolution of Soldiers, Sailors, and Workmen's Council of Dayton Ohio, Feb. 24, 1919

Whereas, the problem of the unemployed Soldiers, Sailors and Workmen has become of such vital importance, and has reached a stage where concerted action by the people of the State of Ohio is necessary, it is resolved by the members of the above named council:

That a conference for the purpose of considering the means to be adopted for the relief of the unemployed Soldiers, Sailors and Workers now in idleness, and to obtain such legislation from the law making bodies of the state and nation as will regulate the hours of labor, so as to divide equitably among all, the work now being done by a few, in both private and public works; shall be held in Columbus, Ohio, on Sunday, March 9, at 10 a. m., at such hall as may be secured.

All labor, organized and unorganized, all working class movements, whether political or industrial, and every association of the unemployed are invited and urged to send their delegates, to the end that a general effort be made to bring before the public the truth concerning the unfortunate state of hundreds of thousands of the real American people.

We ask the aid of the press in spreading before the people of Ohio, the place, date and purpose of this conference.

JAMES J. BUTLER, President.
E. R. ESLER, Secretary.

A communication from Comrade Julius Zorn states that the LaSalle Club of Cincinnati is growing in numbers and making progress in many ways. Interesting educational meetings are held regularly.

GIRARD REORGANIZES

Another local that has been rejuvenated through the efforts of Comrade Thurber Lewis is Local Girard. After many moons of silence the comrades are making their voices heard in the growing chorus of live and happy Socialists. Comrade Secretary Fred Wilson remits $18 for charter dues and supplies including $10 worth of Ohio Socialist sub cards. Fifty subscribers is the goal Comrade Wilson sets for himself. Not that he intends to stop then, not at all. Fifty will just be the first half of 100. So it goes, local after local is falling in line for the final battle against capi- [illegible]

Let Every Worker's Voice be Heard in Nation Wide Demand for Free Speech, Free Press, Freedom for Mooney and Political Prisoners

The Socialist Party is waging a war for the restoration of our constitutional rights of free speech, free press, free assemblage, the release of our unjustly convicted fellow worker, Tom Mooney, and for freedom for all political prisoners.

The world war is over. Those who are imprisoned for principle's sake should be free. To longer confine them is to commit a travesty upon our boasted democracy that was to make the world safe for democracy.

Let "free them" be the demand of every lover of freedom and democracy.

To carry on the fight for the return of these rights, the Socialist Party of Ohio has issued "Industrial Freedom Certificates." They sell for one dollar each. The funds thus raised will be used to carry on meetings, print literature and agitate for these until they are granted. All local secretaries have received a number of these certificates. If you are a member of the Socialist Party go to your local scretary and hand him a dollar and get your certificate. When the battle is won you'll be mighty proud of that certificate, memorable of the greatest year in history—1919. If you are not a party member, you may get a certificate by addressing the Socialist Party of Ohio, R. D. 2, Brecksville, Ohio.

Germany freed her political prisoners months ago. Italy, France, England have released thousands—shall America be the last to grant amnesty to political offenders?

CAPITALISM ON THE DEFENSIVE

The Socialist Party of the United States is no longer on the defensive. The attitude of defending Socialism against the attacks of the cohorts of capitalism is no longer ours. Rather is capitalism put to it to defend itself against Socialism. A hundred instances might be cited to prove this. The vain shoutings of pulpiteers and politicians; the savage attacks of the capitalist press, the caution advised by the more far-seeing among the upholders of capitalism all show plainly that fear and panic are in the camp of the enemy.

But first among the multitude of indications that capitalism is on the defensive is that of the terrific sentences imposed upon the officials of the party in the recent trials. No better proof is needed to show that it is capitalism that is on the defensive and not Socialism. A system sure of its justness can afford to be lenient to an opposing one.

American capitalism is but repeating the history of ruling classes of the past in the hour of their death struggle. Panic, savagery born of fear, a reliance upon force, and an absolute lack of vision, grip capitalism today as it has gripped ruling systems of the past in the hour of their swift decay, when they sought to retain in their palsied hands the scepter of power.

The Russian revolution sounded to ears that can hear, the swift passing of the capitalist system of production. Today, the skies of Europe are aflame with the holy fires of revolution. Continents have passed from darkness of capitalist exploitation into the light of Industrial Democracy.

"The hour of the people has come." It is coming in America and the savage attacks of American capitalism upon the Socialist Party but hasten its appearance. Fill the jails with Socialists and protestants against a decaying industrial system—what will it profit you, masters? A thousand will rise where but one stood before. For every year of sentence imposed upon us a thousand shall rise because of it.

American capitalism is fighting with its back to—oblivion!

LET'S OWN IT

The day the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party paid the first thousand dollars on the purchase of a National Headquarters marked the birth of a new era in American Socialism. It marked the hour of the fruition of an idea that has been growing these last few months and years in the minds of the rank and file as well as in the minds of party officials—the idea of party ownership and control of all our means of organization and propaganda. The purchase of a National Headquarters pressages the acquirement of better facilities and equipment for carrying on the work we must do. It is the beginning of a more systematic order and economical means of carrying on the fast increasing work of the party.

By purchasing these headquarters the Socialist Party flings in the face of the capitalist press the lies it has been so freely printing of our demise and burial. Let every comrade prove by adding his bit to the purchase price that the Socialist Party of the United States is the liveliest corpse the lick spittles of capitalism ever attempted to put under ground.

Fred S. Wertz, government attorney for the northern district of Ohio, has just been named for another term by President Wilson. Here is what Wertz said of Socialist School Board Member A. L. Hitchcock, before any charges were placed against him: "Means can be found to remove him from the board. This is no time to dilly dally over the niceties of legal technicalities." Cleve-Plain Dealer, April 11, 1918. Means were found. Hitchcock is now serving ten years in prison. No comment is necessary.

A League of Capitalist Nations formed to maintain capitalism, or a League of Nations of the World's Workers for the purpose of advancing the interests of Labor—which will you have, worker?

"It was new, strange, irresistibly becoming and stirred the hearts of onlookers with a desire to have one exactly like it." Mrs. Wilson's new Paris hat. Some lid! Aside from that, it is just the old story of pomp and show of differentiation that parades in these times of misery, pestilence and world suffering.

"If we have any large amount of unemployment, we will have a period of industrial unrest and there is no one who can tell where the social uppheaval would land us, whether we would have a repetition of the French revolution or of the Russian Bolsheviki or whether good or evil will come out of the struggle."

SECRETARY OF LABOR WILSON.

BUNDLE BRIGADE GROWING

Among the group of "Jimmie Higginses" in the Socialist movement, there are none more deserving of praise and credit for the great work they do than the comrades who make up the bundle brigade. These inconspicuous workers who give of their Sundays and evenings to the distribution of papers and leaflets are doing a work that is absolutely necessary to the further spread of Socialism. Publicity is the great need of the hour. The minds of the workers are ready now for the seed to fall. Comrades everywhere should at once take up the problems of distribution of leaflets and papers.

That more comrades are realizing the good that flows from a house to house distribution of Ohio Socialists is evidenced in the increasing number of orders for bundles. Here are a few of the latest.

Local Columbus is taking 50 or 100 a week. Local Toledo increases its order to 200 copies. Local Warren taken 200 copies weekly. Comrade Fred Huckery is waking up the workers in Richmand, Ind., with a hundred a week. Comrade Dr. M. S. Holt of Weston, W. Va., ordert 300 copies of the last edition and he hits the nail on the head when he writes, "The only way to combat the damnable lies of the capitalist owned papers is to distribute Socialist papers."

Local Battle Creek, Mich., takes a bundle of 100 weekly. Comrade Wm. Catton of Covington, Ky., orders a weekly bundle of 15 and so does Comrade Geo. M. Crocker of Sheridan, Ind. So, comrades, again we say organize a distribution squad in your local and order a bundle for weekly distribution. Results in Socialist sentiment, Socialist votes and working class consciousness will result. Try it.

I think the Ohio Socialist is the best Socialist paper published since the [illegible] of the American Socialist. Please send me a bundle to hand out. I find it easy work taking subs after a fellow has read a copy.—J. S. Faubus, Combs, Ark.

Please find inclosed a list of nine names and addresses for which send the Ohio Socialist. Please send me a few extra and sub blanks. I may be able to send more names by and by. LOCAL WARREN APPROVES

Motion by Edward A. Smith.

That Local Warren approves and endorses the resolution adopted Feb. 3 by the County Central Committee of Local Cuyahoga County, relating to the international affiliations of the Socialist Party of the United States of America, and that the secretary of Local Warren be instructed to notify the State Secretary with regard to this action.

Motion duly seconded and carried unanimously. Fifteen members present.

SEVEN CERTIFICATES FOR LEETONIA

Local Leetonia is the first local to remit for Industrial Freedom Certificates. A remittance of seven dollars shows that this local is among the live ones. Other comrades are remitting in every mail. A number from out of state are among the first.

A CORRECTION.

On the subscription lists sent out to readers of the Ohio Socialist with the letter entitled, "A Call for Ten Thousand More," the word bi-weekly was used. Semi-weekly should have been the word used as we are endeavoring to make the Ohio Socialist a "twice-a-week" paper. We are quite sure, however, that no one was misled as to our meaning.

ORGANIZATION MEETINGS

State Organizer Baker's Meetings.

Comrade Baker will make the following routing: March 6, Barberton; 7, Cuyahoga Falls; 8, Massillon, meeting to be held at 20 W. Main St.; 9, Canton; 10, Salem; 11, Leetonia; 12, East Liverpool; 13, Hubbard; 14, Warren; 15, Girard.

Organizer Lewis' Meetings.

State Organizer Thurber Lewis' tour will include the following points: March 5, Loveland; 6, 7 and 8, Hamilton; 9, open; 10, Miamisburg; 11, Benerton; 12, Carmonti; 12, Belmont; 14, Mad River; 15-16, Xenia.

Debs Will Speak For You

Comrade Debs will fill dates in the northern judicial district of Ohio. Locals desiring a Debs' date should notify the State Office at once. Several locals that have not been able to accept a Debs date heretofore should now accept the opportunity presented. Apply for a Debs date and revive Socialist sentiment in your city.

Local Ashtabula has applied for a Debs date some time between the 11th and the 23d. He will speak at Cleveland March 12. 3919 Lorain Ave., Evening.

Please note: Comrade Debs will not be able to speak at overflow meetings.

GEORGE KIRKPATRICK SPEAKS

George R. Kirkpatrick will fill these dates in Ohio in March: Dayton, March 24; Columbus, 25; Bellaire, 26; Toledo, 27. Comrade Kirkpatrick's recent meetings in Ohio were among the most effective propaganda meetings ever held in this state. Comrades are urged to make it a special order of business to attend these meetings.

OBITUARY

Local Hamilton mourns the death of Comrade Carl F. Wentz, who died Feb. 22. Besides many friends and loving comrades the deceased leaves a father, two brothers and a sister.

Comrade Wentz was several times a candidate for public office on the Socialist ticket and served as secretary to the Civil Service Commission during 1914-15 when Socialists controlled Hamilton City affairs.

The funeral was held at Socialist Party headquarters and an address was delivered by Comrade Henry Henry Hinkel. The hall and casket were trimmed in the international colors. Comrade Wentz' active service to the party in Hamilton have been much appreciated and great regret is felt at his early death, he being but 28 years of age. The Ohio Socialist extends sympathy to the bereaved.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

The month of January was the biggest month for dues stamp sales in the history of the party in this state. But it stands to be outclassed in the near future. We say this because of the large orders of supplies the locals are sending in. Martins Ferry, for instance, orders five hundred application cards and an equal number of membership books. Looks like they were going after them, doesn't it?

MIDDLETOWN TOO

Local Middeltown is back on the firing line also. Comrade Baker's meeting there was fruitful in effected reorganization work. Secretary Earl Otterbein is on the job with a subscription blank and a book of dues stamps ready to convert a new comrade or to keep the old ones on the "paid up list." He remits $3.75 for sustaining stamps.

WHAT HAPPENED AT FINDALY!

State Organizer Chas. Baker's routing took him to Findlay on the 24th and 25th of February. Local Findlay is one of the places where the mob law superceeded civil rights during the late war. Advocates of law and order paraded the streets under the leadership of the sheriff with ropes in their endeavor to make the world safe for democracy. Anyone differing so much as a hair's breadth in opinion with the gang was promptly threatened and intimidated. Result—democracy died a sudden death, or what looked like death, until Charley Baker hit town. Finding no preparations for a meeting he at once started the ball rolling by engaging the city hall, ordering hand bills printed which he as promptly distributed. And they are some hand bills too, believe us! If any one had doubts as to what Charley came for they received a quick disillusionment by reading the display type.

Results were great. A local of eleven members was organized and nine more applications were received. Local Findlay is again on the Socialist map and ready to do its full share in the upbuilding of the international solidarity of the workers.

HOLMAN AT YOUNGSOWN

Comrade H. L. A. Holman held a most successful meeting at Youngstown on Feb. 23. The Youngstown comrades were very much pleased with the manner in which Comrade Holman handled his subject "Organic Law."

JENERA SOCIALISTS READY FOR WORK

Comrade Baker found the comrades at Jenera ready to take up the fight. Jenera is another place where mob law was enforced. Comrade Baker had a good meeting, however, and says that another meeting will start the ball rolling in great shape.

At Bluffton a number of subscriptions were received and one member at large secured. Another speaker routed that way will prove effective in lining up the comrades for good.

HE'LL HELP GET THE 20,000.

You will find enclosed $5 for the Ohio Socialist subscriptions. Everybody that takes the paper says it is the right thing. Keep the good work up and you will find no trouble in getting them circulated. Will try to get a few subs with every report.—Rex Wolfe, Midvale, O.

State Executive Committee Meeting.

State Executive Committee met on Feb. 13, 1919. Members present, Bosmer, Stevens, Goodman, Rasmussen and Stark. Absent, none.

Minutes of last meeting approved.

The Acting State Secretary reported that no ballots were cast on Committee Referendum No. 1, and that therefore the dues remained unchanged.

R. M. Rasmussen was elected state chairman.

E. B. Austin, jr., was elected assistant state secretary.

On the counting of the state ballots the following were found elected: Fred E. Stevens, State Secretary-Treasurer; A. H. Lee, S. C.; M. L. Ament, S. C.; R. M. Rasmussen, S. C.; H. Plaggenburg, S. C.

Comrade J. L. Stark was authorized to sell a desk, belonging to the State Office, to the Consolidatd Organization of Expressmen for $18.

The applications for membership-at-large of Arthur W. Calhoun, Lexington, Ky.; G. V. Meek, Henrietta, Ky., and Mary Miller, Henrietta, Ky., were read and accepted.

A resolution was adopted offering support and encouragement to the Louisville American of the Union Press Association. This paper is owned and controlled by organized labor and only representatives of a labor union can become a member of the board of directors. This paper will eventually become a daily and is an excellent opportunity for the working class to express itself.

The resolution adopted by the City Central Committee of Local Boston, Socialist Party of Massachusetts, Jan. 14, 1919, was indorsed and the assistant state secretary was instructed to write the above mentioned, C. C. C., and also the National Executive Committee, informing them of said action. The above mentioned resolution was also ordered printed with the January report of the State Office in the Ohio Socialist.

The meeting then adjourned.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolutions adopted by the City Central Committee of Local Boston, Socialist Party of Massachusetts, on January 14, 1919:

Whereas the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party has decided to send delegates to represent the party at a gathering of degenerate ex-Socialists, to be held in Lausanne, Switzerland.

Whereas the organizers of said gathering and the delegates invited to it are mostly men well known as traitors to International Socialism, who, having concluded a holy alliance with the capitalist monarchists and reactionaries of their respective countries have sacrificed in the world war millions and millions of proletarian lives on the altars of capitalism, and have helped to jail and execute International Socialists, who remained true to the principles of socialism.

Whereas the purpose of their convention is to make the world safe for capitalism—by organizing more backward elements of the working class to act as hangmen of the International Proletarian Revolution—as we have seen it already in Russia, and see it now in Germany;

Be it resolved, To demand from the National Executive Committee the immediate recall of delegates appointed to a conference of traitors without the consent of the membership;

That a national convention of the Socialist Party should be called without delay, to decide on steps to be taken for laying a foundation of a conference of the Third International, where no room should be left for traitors to the working class;

To call upon all true Socialists in the Socialist Party to join in our protest against this betrayal of Socialism by our National Executive Committee, and to take steps for a thorough house-cleaning in our party as there should be no place in it for traitors to the working class;

To give this resolution the widest possible publicity in party circles and the Socialist press.

Persecution Follows Resurection of A.P.L. at Cincinnati

At last we have succeeded in making the Ku Klux gang, otherwise known as the Credit Men's Association show their hands. Their tool Mr. Richey has made himself so ridiculous by accusing school girls of Bolshevist activity dragging them before the school board, and then backing down on his proof of their guilt, that the members of the organization had to make known in the press that the character of their organizations was altogether different from that which Mr. Richey had given out.

So great was the indignation against Mr. Richey that even the conservative craft union shoeworkers passed resolutions denouncing his tactics.

The members of this patriotic society now inform us that Mr. Richey is just one little atom in the body, and while their purpose is to stamp out Bolshevism and I. W. W.ism, they are not going to do it in an underhand secret way but really as gentlemen like themselves should stamp it out. What their method will be remains to be seen. Last Tuesday in the Central Labor Council, a resolution was presented dealing with the unemployed question. It was signed by Julian, a business man, by a Catholic priest, and by the secretary of the Women's City Club, and two some craft unionists. The resolution was what our red members would term bourgeoisic, nothing in it but proposals that had time and again been indorsed by Central Labor Council. Mr. Thomas Mugavin, who represents the Sam Gompers element of the craft union here objected to its indorsement or consideration on the ground that it was Bolsheviki. Joseph Haering our comrade, who is business agent of the Machinists union, retaliated by showing how very un-Bolshevik it was and incidentally remarked that only paid agitators would make such an assertion. This precipitated a fight which would have ended in a riot only for the calmness of the few. This was preliminary to another incident which I want you to tell our Ohio Socialist readers about.

On Wednesday evenings the machinists meet in our hall, and on last Wednesday one of the members of the union was standing outside when the lieutenant on our beat, together with two policemen, came along and stationed themselves in front of the headquarters. Several more machinists came along and the policemen and lieutenant engaged them in conversation. The members of the union who was standing on the outside, then came in and told Comrade Haering that the policemen were outside watching. Haering naturally thought they were looking for him because of the fight the night before in Central Labor Council and immediately walked out. Just as he closed the street door to approach them he heard the lieutenant say to the machinists, "What do you meet in there for anyway? Don't you know that you are apt to be raided by the Department of Justice any time." They turned on their heels and went away before Haering got close to them, but it all shows how enxious and vicious the Credit Men's Association is. We thought we paid our lieutenant to protect us, but we think now the Ku Klux gang, which is the A. P. L. resurrected, is using the lieutenant on our beat, instead of the disreputable Mr. Richey.

The Mother of Humanity

By LAURA JIM REYNOLDS

PART VI.

An atmosphere of conservatism pervaded the very air about the Law Givers of the aging capitalist regime. The pitiful efforts of these haughty dispensers of law, tinkering with a progressive amendment to a constitution about the intricate meaning of which they quarreled among themselves, brought supercilious smiles on the faces of the progressive daughters of men. Poor bombastic Law Givers!

In 1918 the insignificant puppets of a master class had not learned the materialist conception of history as written by Marx and Engels in 1848, in the Communist Manifesto, "that in every historical epoch, the prevailing mode of economic production and exchange, and the social organization necessarily following from it, form the basis upon which is built up, and from which alone can be explained, the political and intellectual history of that epoch."

The social urge for freedom, created by the economic conditions, had brought the women to battle for their political freedom, against the fogified dispensers of laws who were ridiculously ignorant what the social forces are that bring about a demand for certain legislation.

The memory of the pioneer toil of the Unseen Workers came over the spectators and it seemed that they felt their co-workers of the past were among them bidding today's progressive women to continue the work of woman's emancipation. In the growing days of the nation Frances Gage carried to backwoods places the tidings of woman's awakening from an age long lethargy to the consciousness that woman, too, must work for humanity's freedom. When school houses and churches were shut against the delivery of her message, she mounted oxcarts in the streets or held gatherings of willing listeners in the barns of friendly folks.

* * * *

In the midst of the Unseen Workers was a dark hued sister, gaunt and tall, whom all regarded with loving kindness. She had risen from the economic degradation to be a herald-er of human freedom—old Sojourner Truth! "Forty years a slave and forty years free."

The recollection of her slavery in New York, the hard toil in the fields of her master, the bite of the lash on her body paled into nothingness as the memory of anguish she suffered when seeing her thirteen children sold on the slave block. This mother's terrible sorrows in a land of the free taught her sympathy for suffering woman. Before the Civil War she agitated for the abolition of chattle slavery and afterward for the franchise for women.

When the church argument was advanced that "women had seven devils in her," and, therefore, was not fit to vote, Sojourner, not worrying over a few devils, replied, "Seven devils ain't no account, a man has a legion in him."

She became highly provoked with the notion that women with property might be permitted to vote. "There's that property qualification!" she exclaimed so vigorously that even the kinks in her gray hair straightened in indignation, "as if men and women themselves, who made money, were not of more value than the thing they made."

LIMA SOCIALISTS WIN

of the Memorial hall for a political meeting. The record discloses that the commissioners had in the past, determined upon a policy of renting the Memorial building for public meetings. It had been rented for political meetings of various kinds, as well as social gatherings.

There had been rules adopted whereby charges for the hall were made, depending on the nature of the meeting, and to some extent on whether or not admission charges were made.

The refusal of the hall to the relator was based solely upon the fact that it was to be a Socialist meeting. There was no evidence to show that the relator had in the past conducted disorderly meetings. In fact there was no reason given for the refusal except that it was to be a Socialist meeting.

We as a people pride ourselves that the blessings of civilization are secured to men under a reign of just and equal laws, and within these blessings are those individual possessions; those fundamental rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness and the progress of our race is marked by those maxims of constitutional law, which stand as mile posts along the path of progress.

The evidence shows no reason why the relator should not be granted the use of the hall, except that it is the will and desire of the commissioners, and their consent is withheld solely because of the reasons heretofore stated.

It is not questioned but that the commissioners have acted in the best of faith, but notwithstanding this it is a clear discrimination against the relator and those whom he represents and it results in a denial of the equal protection of the laws. See, 58 O. S., 599 at 610. 55 O. S., 232. 81 O. S., 156.

The judgment must therefore be affirmed.

An amusing feature of the trial in Common Pleas Court was the ignorance of the County Commissioners on the subject of socialism. When asked if they had ever read Socialist books, or read Socialist newspapers, or heard Socialist speeches, or whether they knew anything of the doctrines taught by Socialists, each one answered that he had not.

Here were three men representing the people of Allen county in responsible positions, men supposed to be, at least, of average intelligence, who had not read a Socialist book or newspaper, nor heard a Socialist speaker, and at a time when Socialism is the most vital question before the people of the entire world. They are fit persons for public service under capitalism. We will not comment on their ignorance. Our readers may do that.

The prosecuting attorney says that he will take the case to the Supreme Court on error. Two drubbings do not satisfy him. He evidently is courting another. Let us hope he gets it.

NEWS AND VIEWS—A WEEKLY SURVEY

(Edited By C. E. Ruthenberg)

The Next Industrial Republic

The Constituent Assembly of Russia, which met after the workers and peasants had seized the reigns of power and established the Soviet government, was allowed to debate until the sleepy guards told the delegates that they were tired and told them to go home. The German Constituent Assembly has had a longer lease of life, but there is every indication that its work will be of no greater importance than that of the assembly of Russia.

While the constituent assembly is still debating the movement of the workers to establish an industrial democracy in Germany is gaining strength and power. Already Bavaria is in control of the workers and soldiers council and the latest dispatches state that Saxony has followed Germany. Most significant of all, President Ebert has announced that he favors creation of a National Workers and Soldiers' Council as the lower house of the German government.

This suggestion is noteworthy, not because there is any likelihood of it being carried out, for there can be no compromise between the political government which the constituent assembly is shaping and the industrial government which is rising out of industry itself, but because it is an admission of the strength of the movement toward the same kind of industrial democracy that Russia has established.

"Germany, the next republic," is being amended to read, Germany, the next industrial republic.

A Ghastly Joke

The struggle over the League of Nations is under way. The president has thrown down the gauntlet. The opposition in the senate has unlimbered its big guns.

For the next six months or possibly a year we will be favored with the wonderfully polished speeches of President Wilson in support of his League and the thunderous opposition of Senators Lodge, Knox, Borah and others.

The newspapers will devote columns and columns of news and editorial space to the matter and the people of this country will be divided into two camps on the question. The League of Nations or no League of Nations! That will be the cry. All the instruments of publicity on both sides will be brought to bear to arouse the people to decide the issue. All else will be forgotten in the struggle over the question. "A League of Nations" will succeed "Free Silver," "No Imperialism" "A Full Dinner pail," "Down With the Trusts," as the means of hypnotizing the workers.

What is it all about? The Nation sums up the situation in a recent editorial. Read it and learn what President Wilson's League of Nations really means:

> But the League of Nations, we are told, is a reality—a reality that wins President Wilson handsome praise from the New York Times. The most pestilent and exacting liberal ought perhaps to be satisfied with this sanction. Yet despite the chorus of praise in the press, we venture to assert that what has been planned at Versailles is no League of Nations at all. What we have all along consented to call a League of Nations is in reality, of course, a League of governments, which is a very different thing from a League of Nations or peoples. But, waiving that point, what we have offered us at present as the magnum opus of the peace conference is not even a League of Governments. The document read by President Wilson on Friday last is primarily the draft of a treaty among five governments, the memorandum of a working arrangement having in view the organization and apportionment of the material results of victory. There is nothing new in this; it is what was to be expected as the outcome of the war, no matter which side won the military victory. We see nothing, however, that essentially differentiates this particular distribution of the exploitating power from other alliances of the same kind. It may be competent for the Times to say how the course of France in Morocco, for instance, or of Austria in Bosnia and the Herzegovina, would have been moralized and improved under a "mandatory" system rather than under a quiet gentleman's agreement, but we frankly decline the attempt.
> In speaking thus plainly of the so-called League, we wish expressly to dissociate ourselves from all criticism based on grounds of narrow and exclusive nationalism. We are aware of the high hopes kindled in many liberal minds by the announcement of the League, and we admit that an overruling Providence may conceivably in course of time transform it into something widely different from what now appears about to be set up. But to admit the possibility of miracles is one thing and to reckon on them is quite another. Scrutiny of the proposed constitution fails to show that as now planned the league will incorporate a single new principle beyond those already tried and found wanting. Five great powers form their alliance, allowing four other un-hamed states to join them on sufferance. They enter into engagements not to make war except on certain specified conditions; and they declare that armaments shall be reduced "to the lowest point consistent with national safety." (What armament ever exceeded this limit?) They undertake to "respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of the states members of the league," and they provide certain machinery for the adjustment of disputes by means short of war. All this has been tried over and over again, and each time it has failed lamentably. Apparently we are simply to create more machinery to keep states in order, making no provision for removal of the political-economic causes of strife. If governments are to remain organs of economic exploitation, then the adding of machinery means little more than the strengthening of their hold over the peoples, and the fears of those who see in the proposed league only a new instrumentality for the maintenance of the economic and political status quo appear well founded.

This is the result of the war "to make the world safe for democracy." "A treaty among five governments, the morandum of a working arrangement having in view the organization and apportionment of the material results of victory," is the constitution of what is called "A League of Nations."

Capitalism is perpetrating another of its ghastly jokes on the workers.

For Debs or Mooney

A vivid impression of the new alignment of the forces in the world is given by the dispatch which states that the Soviet government of Russia has offered to exchange an American citizen named Kolomatiana, condemned to death by that government, for either Eugene V. Debs or Thomas J. Mooney.

The workers of Russia do not consider nationality of any importance. Their enemies are not designated by national names, but are the capitalists of every nation. Their friends are the workers, no matter what their nationality.

That the capitalists are conscious of this new alignment has already been shown. The White Guard government of Finland received the support of the capitalists of the allied countries, although it was upheld by German bayonets and England and France were making loans to the Ukraine at a time when the Rada was selling out to German imperialism.

The future struggle in the world will not be between national governments but between the workers and the capitalists.

The Russian workers are the advance section of the working class who are forming and developing the new lines of demarcation. In their offer to rescue either Debs and Mooney from the clutches of the capitalist class of the United States they have given a pointed example of the new class loyalty which is developing among the workers of the world.

Well, Start!

The capitalists are growing hysterical about the danger of Bolshevism in this country. Thus Charles Piez, director-general of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, delivered himself of the following tirade, taking the Seattle strike for his subject:

> That was not a strike in Seattle, that was a revolution. The men who fathered that attempt to set up a soviet republic had only one native born man among them. They meant to seize the government and to take over the industries of the city. They made no pretense of hiding this revolution either.
> Since that time we have had our intelligence department busy. We have received reports from them and we have reports and rumors from other sources that lead me to believe this is the time to start fighting the radicals.
>
> I don't know where a Bolshevist begins and an I. W. W. leaves off or vice versa, but I do know we are menaced and that while it is not a serious problem now, this is the time to take matters in hand and stop it from becoming one.
>
> I shall ask that money be spent to fight this thing all over the country and in every shipyard.
>
> We must scotch the snake now, before it strikes. Action is imperative and we have found that advertising is the one way in which to combat this propaganda. All you need do is to appeal to the reasonable working men.
> They are sensible and will heed your reasoning. It is a shame that these sneaks and polecats should be permitted to contaminate the rest of the labor in the yards, for 85 or 90 per cent. of the men are absolutely as square as a brick and as fine as any men in the country.

"Action is imperative," "we must fight," is the constant cry of the capitalists. But how are they going to fight? The industrial conditions which yield them their profits are breeding the spirit of revolt. They do not propose changing those conditions. To do so would be to commit suicide as an exploiting class. The workers will not be satisfied with less than the abolition of the existing industrial conditions. What are the poor capitalists to do? They may adopt a definite policy of suppression. But that won't help. It will merely mean that when the revolt of the workers bursts, its sweep will be stronger and the capitalists will receive less mercy.

What can they do but cry, "we must do something?" Well, start. We're ready.

The Agent of Capitalism

The character of the government of the modern industrial countries has nowhere been so clearly revealed as in the Chino-Japanese treaty, made public during the past week. The provisions of this treaty reveal the government of Japan as the agent of the capitalists of that country. In order to further the interests of these capitalists the government sets out to wring from the Chinese concessions permitting the investment of Japanese capital in building certain railroads. While the matter is phrased in diplomatic language it is plain that the Japanese government acted as the broker for Japanese capitalism and through the threat of the armed power it controls, compelled China to accept loans, on which, of course, the latter is bound to pay heavy interest.

The government of Japan is not alone in playing this part. The government of every capitalistically developed country acts as the agent of its capitalists. For several decades the great powers have been engaged in the struggle to gain advantage, each for its own capitalist class, through a game just such as Japan is playing in China.

As the great powers complete their economic development and the problems of markets and foreign investment grow more acute because of the increased productivity of their industrial system and closing up of the possibility of lucrative investment at home, the imperialistic struggle of the governments acting as the agents of capitalism will grow more bitter.

The League of Nations is the attempt of a group of the great powers to control and divide the world between them for just such purposes as that brought to light in the Chino-Japanese treaty. Temporarily the league may prove successful in preventing a new war from arising from the conflict of interests because of the overwhelming power of the five great powers that control it. But new groups will form. New alignments will take place and when such a new group believes itself powerful enough to challenge the control of the Big Five, we will have a repetition of what happened in Europe during the past four years.

That the capitalist class has little respect for the mental development of the workers is indicated in the kind of slush with which it tries to keep them contented industrial slaves. A full-page advertisement in one of the Cleveland newspapers headed "Americanism" and "Bolshevism," shows on one side, under "Americanism," workingmen leisurely watching machines in a factory and under "Bolshevism" a street riot. This, at a time when seventy thousand workers in Cleveland, according to the estimate of the official lackeys of the ruling class itself, are denied the right to enter a factory and earn a living. The capitalist class knows that in the argument with facts and reason it is beaten and cannot stand up before its adversary, the enlightened workers, so it endeavors to dope the masses with pretty pictures on one side, the reality, which never existed, and with vile misrepresentation of the workers of Russia, who have achieved their emancipation, on the other.

Says the bulletin of the National City Bank: "Business always hesitates in the face of fundamental change. It came nearly to a dead halt when the war broke out, although all experience had shown that war invariable causes great industrial activity and high prices. The transition period from war to peace is inevatibly one of uncertainty." Isn't it about time that we get rid of a system of business that makes the masses dependent upon the fears of business men looking for profit for the opportunity to gain a livelihood and produce goods for service.

"Every boy, now, it seems, is imbued with the spirit of destruction. To fight, to destroy, to shoot something or somebody, to kill—those seem to be the desires of the boy of today, whether he is aged five or fifteen," says a local writer in discussing military training in the high schools. She continues to say that this is the result of the education we have been handing out to the children. It is undoubtedly true. And capitalism will yet find that the training it is giving the children will bring about the destruction of those responsible for it.

In the testimony of Madam Breshkovskaya before the Committee on Judiciary of the senate, we find these two statements made under cross-examination: "Every day train loads of supplies and valuable things leave for Germany and Moscow" and "Transportation is paralyzed." Every day train loads of supplies and valuables are leaving for Germany and Moscow, although transportation is paralyzed. It seems that in trying to make a case against the Bolsheviki it is impossible to make the facts jibe even in discussing the simplest matters.

* * * *

The American Defense Society is out with a hysterical appeal for $50,000 for the fight against Socialism and Bolshevism. How modest! But fifty times fifty thousand would be equally effective in stopping the sweep of the workers' movement to wipe out capitalism. Money won't stop, but, unfortunately for the capitalists, that's the only weapon they have.

Speaking about the future in the United States Secretary of Labor Wilson said recently, "If there is any serious unemployment, there will be a period of industrial unrest which may lead us to a repetition of the French or the Russian revolution." And the serious unemployment is here.

According to the latest advices from Bohemia that country, which has furnished the soldiers to do the dirty work of capitalism in Russia, is now on the bring of a Bolshevist revolution. Maybe by the time the Czecho-Slovaks get out of Russia they will have no where to go.

A Proletarian Dictatorship Vs Parliamentarism

By A. BILAN.

It is very evident that not only is the capitalist class convinced that parliamentarianism is the highest expression of democracy, but also a large part of the working class has accepted this view and his great doubts whether a proletarian dictatorship is the way toward democracy. These workers believe that the capture of the state power is possible through parliamentarism.

Let us see whether this can be done.

It is customary to recognize as a parliamentary form of government a government in which a majority of the people's representatives rule, having not only all legislative power but the right to make final decisions which cannot be revoked—only their execution can be delayed.

Parliamentarism can exist as well in a democracy as under a monarchy; in an autocracy as in a plutocracy. Parliamentarism is a typical form of class government. As Frederick Engels says:

"The state is the result of the desire to keep down class conflict. But having arisen made these conflicts, it is as a rule the state of the most powerful economic class that by force of its economic supremacy becomes also the ruling political class and thus acquires new means of subduing and exploitating the oppressed classes. The modern representative state is the tool of the capitalist exploiters of wage labor."

The parliament in the modern state is not only the highest legislative, but also the executive power, as the executive department heads are nothing else but mere tools of the parliamentary majority. As soon as the ministry loses the support of the majority it has to go. This is not true of the United States, in which the ministry (cabinet) is not responsible to congress, but such is the case in every country of Europe in which parliamentary government is established.

With the majority rule of parliament there is established a dictatorship of its ministry, but this dictatorship ceases with the change of the parliamentary majority. So we see that parliamentarism places all state power—legislative, judicial and executive—in the hands of the majority in parliament. Karl Kautsky says. "Parliamentarism by itself is an empty form whose content is determined through the class that fills it."

Parliamentary government was the result of the struggle between the bourgeoisie and feudalism, in which the bourgeoisie were victorious. The bourgeoisie dictated the terms and set the limits of the power of the people's representatives, for at the time of the formation of the constitutions the weight of power was on their side. The bourgeoisie saw to it that real political power remained in its hands while the rest of the people were given only the smallest part in the government. As long as the bourgeoisie parliamentary government remains in existence it will, as a result, be a dictatorship of the capitalist class.

It is a mistake to believe that parliamentarism is a synonyn for democracy. On the contrary, we find that where the parliamentary majority rules it is not democratic, and where it is approaching democracy parliamentary government becomes a weak institution.

Working class victories in parliamentary elections does not place power in the hands of the workers nor do such victories establish democracy. Such victories serve only to bring to a head the clash of class interests, in which the dominant issue is not the number of votes but the real power of each class. The opposing force the workers will have to meet will be militarism, the arch-enemy of democracy. So we that there is no hope of reaching true democracy, through parliamentarism.

The point of view which advocates the exploitation of parliamentary elections as a method of agitation and propaganda is correct where there is no free speech, free press and free assemblage outside of parliament.. It must be admitted that even debates in parliament may serve as a means of agitation and propaganda to a limited extent, when there are no other channels to reach the masses but if we rely upon parliamentary activity as the only source of agitation, it often happens that the agitation outside of such activity ceases or is hindered. If important topics are discussed from the proletarian standpoint in a parliament such a discussion has a world importance, but if the same discussion is repeated over and over again outside of parliament it loses its weight from the standpoint of agitation and proves a waste of time and energy. In parliament we have not to deal with common people but with shrewd politicians whose views are determined and who are representing certain political parties. No oratory can convince them for the other party. It does not matter what is laid down in the program of these different parties, their principles are based on their class interests. Even when several parties exists, with different programs (if they are in earnest), it is only because they understand their common interests in a different way. But these differences cannot last long. They cease to exist as soon as working class representatives arrive in parliament to fight for their own demands irrespective of what the bosses say about it.

As long as the working class representatives are few in number they are merely disturbers of the peace of the gay bourgeois company, to whom nobody is willing to listen unless compelled to. If the bourgeois have enough confidence in their strength and the support of the trouble-makers is weak, they simply throw them out of the parliamentary bodies.

Things are different when the working class representatives appear in legislative bodies in larger numbers. Their votes in such cases are often decisive upon certain legislative measures. This is the stage when the class struggle in parliament begins in real earnest. It is the time when all working class parties recognize participation in parliament to gain some certain reforms, to gain a larger share in state power. At this point there arises the question as to the limits of working class participation.

The working class is denied the possibility of gaining a majority of the seats in parliament as long as the constitutions drawn by the ruling class exist. Even if in spite of these instruments they should manage to capture a majority of the seats, that would mean that they would be in a position to take over the power of the state, to which the capitalist class would never consent. To try to convince the representatives of the capitalist class of the necessity of changing constitutions, is to try to convince them to turn over the power of government. Therefore, the importance of electing able speakers to seats in parliament loses its significance.

Parliaments, day by day, are growing more tedious for the outside masses. They are becoming uninteresting "business institutions" and it is not the business of the working class representatives to make the parliamentary "swamps" interesting.

Where free press, free speech and freedom of assemblage exists parliamentarism has played its part, just the same as has the capitalist system on the economic field. The best agitation and propaganda forces of the working class have to be employed outside of parliament in great mass meetings.

With the further development of democracy the people seek a direct expression and this opens a broad field for mass agitation. The discussions are transferred from parliaments to the peoples' forums. These are no longer dry and uninteresting parliamentary discussions, but full of life and the people's will, which make parliaments unnecessary institutions that lay like a corpse across the road that leads to democracy. It is necessary to bury this corpse. Who is going to be the undertakes?

It is necessary that the rising power, the working class, organize as a class politically, but with the firm conviction that parliaments represent the dictatorship of the capitalist class, which must be replaced by the dictatorship of the working class. This dictatorship of the proletariat arouses the ire of the capitalist class because it abolishes all privileges and puts everybody in one class. But this dictatorship means that the power which up to now was used by one class for the oppression and exploitation of the other now become the means of abolishing socially unnecessary and outlived class distinction, and thus transforms the dictatorship of the proletariat into the rule of the great majority, which means true democracy.

"The proletarian dictatorship will have to be exercised as a class dictatorship until all class distinctions have disappeared and all production has been concentrated into the hands of an associations of the whole people. The state power will lose its political character. Political power, properly called, is merely the organized power of one class for oppressing another. The proletarian during its contest with the bourgeoisie is compelled, by force of circumstances, to organize itself as a class and by means of revolution to make itself the ruling class, ans as such, to sweep away by force the old conditions of production. Along with these conditions it will have swept the conditions for existence of class antagonism. and of classes generally, and it will thereby abolish its own supremacy as a class."—Communist Manifesto.

Therefore, in our political struggle for capture of the state power, the supreme issue must be preparation of the proletarian minds for the conscious expression of their will, by criticising parliamentary actions outside of parliamentary walls, preparing the workers for the "tutte finale."

Regardless of the fact that parliaments are "stinking swamps" we cannot cast them aside until we have gone through the various stages of their development and proved by their deeds to the working class that the most important battles of the political struggle are fought outside of the walls of parliament and that the expression of the people's will is made through mass action and that the capture of state power is the long march under the red flag of the international Socialist republic, through the dictatorship of the proletariat.

Some are for a policy of reduction of all expenses unnecessary to civil life, such as military expenses, and for a concentration of effort in the promotion of public works, restoring the transportation facilities and for the construction of artificial lakes for electric power, in order to free the country from its need for coal. They believe that by employing the workers, unrest would be avoided and a consistent buying power given to the larger part of the population.

Imperialists Want Annexation.

The other section thinks that Italy should further the policy of "sacred egoism." They believe that Italy should annex Dalmatia, reconquer the hinterland of Tripoli, hold the Greek islands of the Dedecanneso and insist on zones of influence in Asia Minor and Abyssinia. Their's is a true imperialistic policy, which would cause greater expenditures for the army and navy; a new war at this time and new wars to follow at short notice. (In face, war has begun again in Tripolitania).

The government favors the second policy, and this has caused the resignation of two figureheads in the cabinet, bringing on the crisis, one on the heels of the other.

At the time of Wilson's visit, Bissolati, a reformist and an old comrade who was expelled from the party in 1912, when he stood for the conquest of Tripoli (he also stood for Italy's participation in the war) had been selected as a member of the cabinet as a representative of the war-mad radicals, resigned, refusing to indorse the policy of expansion in Dalmatia.

Signor Orlando, the premier, patched up affairs when another and more important crisis occurred with the resignation of Signor Nitti, the "Ministro del Tesoro," the strongest brain in the cabinet, a modern, and probably the most astute statesman that Italy has had since Cavour.

Crisis Patched Up.

This crisis was patched up with unusual speed. However, if it is an easy thing to dress wounds of a petty political nature, it is not so very easy to heal deep gashes through which the very economic blood of a country is flowing away.

Signor Bissolati and the bunch of self-styled Socialists that follow him (you had a sample of them in De Ambris and the others who toured the United States only to meet the physical opposition of the Italian Socialists of that country) and a few radicals and republicans are indorsing Wilson's policy, arousing the rabid opposition of the imperialist bloc. Many a lecture has ended in turmoil here.

Bissolati and those associated with him hope that, by indorsing the views of the American idealist, they will be able to catch the sympathy of the masses. But they are deeply mistaken. The masses are looking to the straight path pointed out to them by the Socialist Party.

The "Lirezione del Partito Socialista" has resolved to agitate for a complete and quick demobilization, for complete amnesty for political and military prisoners, for the return of the free press (the censorship still muzzles the press), for freedom of speech and of association and against any interference in the internal affairs of Russia.

Masses Getting Together.

This agitation is intended to strengthen the tie between the party and the masses, the ties that were loosened when the millions went to the front and fundamental liberties were suppressed.

For the party knows that there is no possibility of a bourgeois solution of the mighty problems that war has created, and feels that a movement of a revolutionary character may arise at any moment. In such an event the party will not be caught slumbering.

The Direzione has proclaimed that the Italian laboring class shall prepare for the "proletarian dictatorship."

The rank and file is enthusiastically answering; and all branches are holding meetings in halls packed by the people, proclaiming the coming dictatorship. Only a few intellectuals under the leadership of Comrade Filippo Turati do not indorse the views of the Direzione. But they have no following, and a split is apprehended.

The Catholics are organizing a Popular party. They are merely copying the minimum program of the Socialist party, adding a request for a greater freedom for the church, though the church in Italy is as free as it is in the United States, but is so well entrenched that the parish priests are regularly salaried by the government.

The Catholics have quite a following in the rural communities, and it is expected that they will receive a big vote at the next election.

Parties Prepare for Elections.

All parties are preprainig for the elections. When will the balloting be held? The sooner, the better for the government and for the reactionaries. The later, the better for the Socialist party. But will they be held? May not something else happen?

While the trial of Cavillini is proving that the lure of gold underlies what is called patriotism, many a big city is in the grip of scandals brought about by the discovery of corruption in their administration. Among these cities are Florence, Turin, Naples and Rome.

Only Milan, Bologna and other cities administered by the Socialists are above criticism. Moreover, only there have the populations less keenly felt the lack of food and heat.

Events follow each other with magnificent speed.

of the czar probably won't exceed 45,000."

Blames Allies for Starvation.

"How about the systematic starvation of people?" Senator Wolcott asked.

"I admit that food conditions did not improve to any extent under the Bolshevists. It is certain that rations were cut down. They had to be. The present starvation is due to the allies, who have cut off from European Russia the food supply of the great Siberian granaries."

"What about looting?"

"It would be a miracle if in a great upheaval like this there had not been looting and a great deal of it."

"Well, was there looting?"

"Yes, most of those who have told these stories of what happened in that way came out of Russia on international sleepers. Why, there are hundreds of thousands of Americans in Russia, and so far as I have heard none of them have been killed."

"Hundreds of thousands still there, do you mean that?" Senator Wolcott asked.

"Hundreds then, perhaps thousands."

"Were some of these Americans thrown into jail?"

"Yes, some were."

"What of anarchy?"

"That is due to the plotting of the capitalists of the bourgeoisie. One of them has said that they would let 'the bony fingers of hunger' crush the revolt."

Baker Appreciated.

Little late, but I just want to state that if you have any more in Ohio like Baker, better send them out into other states. for there is lots of room for just such live workers. Comrade Baker spoke here in Indianapolis about one week ago, and he faced a good crowd of workers, five of them plain clothes men from the city police department. These same police are back every Sunday and they seem to be much interested in the talks. All our comrades are in love with Baker since his visit and whenever he can drop in on us again, [illegible] W. H. Henry, [illegible]

ALLIED INTERVENTION CAUSED "RED TERROR" IN RUSSIA

Insult Added to Injury

The reported reduction of the sentence of A. L. Hitchcock, former Cleveland School Board member, from ten years to two years, on the recommendation of former Attorney General Gregory, is a confession that Hitchcock was unjustly dealt with.

The facts in the Hitchcock case show this conclusively.

Hitchcock was elected a member of the Cleveland School Board in November, 1917. As a member of that body he made an aggressive fight against the reactionaries and reactionary ideas that controlled that body.

His first resolution called for rescinding of the rule which barred teachers from organizing a union for their own protection. He followed this up with other working class measures and injected the working class viewpoint in all the debates on measures which came before the board.

Through these and similar activities Hitchcock became a thorn in the flesh of the school board reactionaries and the business interests which they served. Again and again the two men who are particularly active in serving the ruling class of Cleveland in shaping the work of the schools to its liking—the pompous president of the board, Mark Thompson, and the slick Mr. Williams—tried to squelch Hitchcock, but without success.

When in the spring of 1918 the board took up the question of assisting in the Liberty Loan Campaign then under way, Hitchcock in a pointed and outspoken speech protested against any coercion to compel underpaid school teachers to purchase Liberty Bonds.

Hitchcock had been elected a member of the Cleveland School Board to represent the workers of the city. He personally knew of scores of instances in which working men had lost their jobs because they had refused to purchase Liberty Bonds. As a representative of the workers he refused to commit himself to similar treatment of workers toward whom he, as a member of the school board, stood in the position of employer. Hence his outspoken protest.

This protest, which hit the entire employing class of the city as well as the capitalist representatives on the school board, brought down upon him the anger and enmity of the entire capitalist class of the city and through the tools of this class in public places and newspaper offices the hue and cry against him was raised and the plan to oust him from the school board got under way.

As has been pointed out before, Assistant District Attorney Breitenstein said, after Hitchcock's protest before the school board and before his arrest:

"Means can be found to remove him from the board. This is no time to dilly dally over the niceties of legal technicalities," Cleveland Plain Dealer, April 11, 1918.

There was nothing in Hitchcock's protest before the school board that was illegal, or otherwise the district attorney's office would have proceeded against him on the basis of that speech, and yet because he made that protest he was threatened with removal from the school board.

Later Hitchcock was indicted for some chance remark made in a conversation with an old friend—a renegade Socialist—at Sandusky. For making this remark, which had to do with the use of the money derived from the sale of Liberty Bonds, Hitchcock was sentenced to serve ten years in the Atlanta federal prison AND WAS REMOVED FROM THE SCHOOL BOARD.

It is not to be wondered at that the attorney general's office is ashamed of this record and recommended the reduction of Hitchcock's sentence from ten years to two years. But reduction of the sentence will not wipe out the infamy of action against Hitchcock.

In our opinion and the facts bear out this view—the prosecution against Hitchcock was begun for the sole purpose of removing him from the school board. It was the brutal use of its power by a class dominating the machinery of prosecution to rid itself of a workers' representative whose criticisms was making things unpleasant for that class.

Reduction of Hitchcock's sentence will not wipe out the disgrace of this persecution. What is due Hitchcock is immediate freedom and reparation for the financial loss and suffering which has been his lot while in prison.

The attorney general has confessed that Hitchcock was unjustly treated by his recommendation for reduction of his sentence. It is for the workers whose fight he made to win freedom for him by making a united demand that not only Hitchcock, but every man and woman imprisoned under the anti-free speech and free press section of the Espionage law, be released at once.

British Workers Firm In Making Demands

London.—Failure to grant the miners' demands will result in a general strike of the "triple alliance," which would paralyze British industries and probably force a change in the government, Robert Williams, general secretary of the Transport Workers' Federation, declared today.

The "triple alliance" is the common term for the transport workers, railway men and miners. Williams' organization alone numbers close to 300,000.

Williams, who, next to J. H. Thomas and Robert Smillie, is the most influential Laborite in Great Britain, is not optimistic regarding the result of the inquiry being conducted into the mining situation by the government. He does not believe the miners will accept a compromise. He is optimistic, however, regarding negotiations now under way between the transport workers and employers regarding a 44-hour week with no decrease in present wages.

"Nationalization of all natural monopolies, with the workers participating in the management, is the only solution to the present labor unrest," said Williams. "It would go a long way toward preventing profiteering and decreasing the cost of living.

"I do not see any possibility of averting a strike of the triple alliance (the alliance is pledged to act together), unless the parliamentary committee investigating the miners' demands recommends nationalization of the mines, a 6-hour day and a 30 per cent. wage increase.

"As long as the workers read newspaper stories of discharged soldiers and sailors returning to their old jobs as footmen and butlers, as long as they see carriages equipped with two coachmen and two footmen, as long as they read of Lady So-and-So's

To Meet Socialists Of Other Countries

Chicago.—James Oneal, member of the Socialist Party National Executive Committe, leaves for Europe this month, to re-establish relations between the organized Socialists af the United States and those on the other side of the Atlantic.

Oneal secured passports to attend the International Socialist and Labor Conference at Berne, Switzerland, after the conference had adjourned. He will make use of these passports, however, to visit Europe and get in touch with the officials of the various National Socialist Parties and with the International Socialist Bureau.

Dan Hogan, member of the party executive, has made application for passports to attend the Pan-American Socialist Conference to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, April 26.

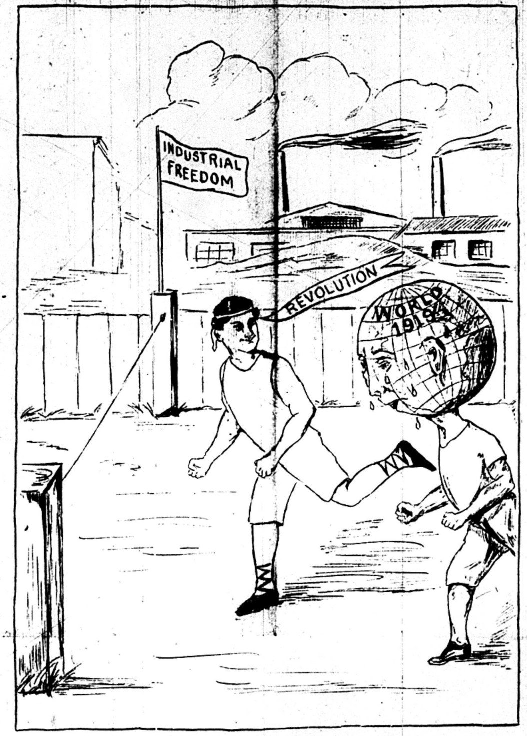
James H. Maurer, president of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, was originally selected for this service, but pressing duties will keep him at home. Hogan will therefore act as [illegible]

Kate O'Hare To Go To Prison

According to a Washington dispatch of last wek the Supreme Court upheld the conviction of Kate Richard O'Hare sentenced to serve five years in a federal prison for alleged violation to the Espionage act in a speech delivered in North Dakota last year.

The court did not pass directly on the case, but simply denied the petition for a review. At the same time the conviction of Charles T. Schenck and Elizabeth Baer, of Philadelphia and A. L. Sugarman, of Minnesota, all Socialists, were upheld.

In passing upon these cases the court did not express any opinion in regard to the [illegible]



SETTING THE PACE

DEBS GOES TO PRISON

The machinery of capitalism has completed its work and ground out the decision that Eugene V. Debs must go to prison.

No one who has studied the class character of the governmental institutions of this country expected a different verdict than that which has just been rendered by the United States Supreme Court.

It was inconceivable that the Supreme Court would declare the Espionage law unconstitutional.

The interpretation of the constitution follows the needs of the ruling class. Only unsophisticated persons with a ludicrously naive belief in the "democracy" of modern capitalist government could imagine such a contingency as the Supreme Court declaring a law in the interest of the capitalist class unconstitutional in the hour of capitalism's greatest need.

But if there was no hope for Debs, even though, as many people believe, the Espionage law violates clearly expressed provisions of the national constitution in regard to the right of free speech and free press, it did seem that the selfish interests of the ruling class of this country might save Debs from prison.

Capitalism in this country is resting upon a slumbering volcano—the volcano of a suppressed, oppressed and exploited working class.

In Russia and Germany the volcano has burst and is flinging the debris of capitalism to the four winds.

In England, France and Italy the rumbling which forecasts a similar activity can be distinctly heard.

Even here the warning signals are not wanting Unemployment, strikes, discontent, Seattle's and Lawrence's, all suggest a growing bitterness that is the sign of a coming eruption.

Well might the ruling class hesitate before adding another grievance, a grievance that will deepen and make more bitter the hatred of the working class of the system that holds them under its iron heel.

That is what the [illegible] class of this country know Debs. For thirty years he has fought for better things for the workers. For thirty years his voice has been constantly raised in appeal for the workers. Millions have heard his speeches; millions have read his writings; a million men cast their ballots for him for the high office of president of the United States.

These millions know that there is not a man with a cleaner heart or a greater purpose in the United States than Eugene V. Debs. They know that he has given his all and sacrificed all in order to make this country a better place to live in for those who are now condemned to empty lives of misery, poverty and suffering.

Now the ruling class puts this man in jail. At the age of sixty-three there is laid upon him the savage sentence of ten years in prison—the death sentence.

And for what?

For publicly stating the truth as he saw it. For voicing his conscientious beliefs. For this he is condemned to ten years behind iron walls and iron bars; ten years behind the walls of a prison where everything that is cruel and dark and gruesome grows, where humankind is warped out of all recognition as human beings, where foul words fill the air and fouler deeds are committed. This for Debs who desired nothing but to make the world a brighter place to live in for those who toil!

Will the American workers permit this?

There is still time to call a halt. A united protest, a united demand for Debs' freedom and the powers that be will change their minds before Debs goes to prison. Let the capitalist class hear the rumbling of the volcano and Debs will not go to jail.

Are the minds of the American workers enslaved as well as their bodies? Are they such craven cowards that nothing will arouse their resentment? Is there none of that rebellious spirit which is ridding Europe, not only of czars and kaisers, but of the plutocrats who rob and [illegible]

Note to President Wilson Kept From American People Made Peace Offer and Gives Facts About Violence

The Allied governments and the United States, by sending troops into Russia compelled the Soviet government to use force against the counter-revolution. This is the charge made by Maxim Litvinoff, former representative of the Russian Federated Soviet Republic in England, in a note offering to enter into peace negotiations, addressed to President Wilson.

The fact that this note, which throws much light on the actions of the Soviet government, although an official communication from the Soviet government of Russia to the President of the United States, has been, up to this time, kept from the people of the United States, indicates the kind of tactics that are being used to discredit the workers government of Russia.

The note, which reached this country through the Bureau of Information on Soviet Russia, conducted by Santeri Nuorteva, who is the representative of the Finnish Workers Republic in this country, say that "for eight months the Soviets endeavored to realize their aims by peaceful methods without resorting to violence, adhereing to the abolition of capital punishment which abolition had been part of their program," and that "it was only when their adversaries, the minority of the Russian people, took to terroristic acts against the popular members of the government and invoked the help of foreign troops, that the laboring masses were driven to acts of exasperation and gave vent to their wrath and bitter feelings, against their former oppressors."

Note Sent Dec. 24.

The note was transmitted to President Wilson at London from Stockholm, on Dec. 24. The full text follows:

Mr. Woodrow Wilson,
President of the United States,
American Embassy, London.

Mr. President: In addition to general peace offer recently addressed by the Soviet government to the allies I formally informed today the Stockholm ministers of the United States and of allied countries that I am authorized to enter into negotiations for a peaceful settlement of all questions making for hostilities against Russia.

The principles proclaimed by you as possible basis for settling European questions, and your avowed efforts and intentions of making settlement conform to demands of justice and humanity, induce and justify me to send you this statement, inasmuch as most points of your peace program are included into the more extensive aspirations of the Russian workers and peasants now rulers of their country. It was they who first proclaimed and actually granted to nations right of self-determination, who suffered most sacrifices in fighting imperialism and militarism both at home and abroad who dealt severest blow to secret diplomacy and inaugurated open diplomacy. And it was partly for these innovations in politics that they have been fiercely attacked by the former ruling classes of Russia and their counterparts in other countries.

SOVIET LIED ABOUT.

To justify this attack a network of lies and calumnies has been woven round the activities of the Soviets and forged documents put into circulation. Unfortunately allied statesmen accept all monstrous accusations against Soviets at face value without taking trouble to check them. While agents of anti-Soviet parties are allowed and encouraged to move freely in allied countries and disseminate untruth representatives of the accused side have never been allowed to put fully their case and to answer charges made against them.

In fact the chief aim of the Soviets is to secure for the toiling majority of Russian people economic liberty without which political liberty is of no avail to them. For eight months the Soviets endeavored to realize their aims by peaceful methods without resorting to violence, adhering to the abolition of capital punishment which abolition had been part of their program. It was only when their adversaries, the minority of the Russian people, took to terroristic acts against popular members of the government and invoked the help of foreign troops that the laboring masses were driven to acts of exasperation and gave vent to their wrath and bitter feelings against their former oppressors. For allied invasion of Russian territory not only compelled the Soviets against their own will to militarize the country anew and to divert their energies and resources so necessary to the economic reconstruction of Russia, exhausted by four years of war, to the defense of the country, but also cut off the vital sources of foodstuffs and raw material exposing the population to most terrible privation bordering on starvation.

"RED TERROR" EXAGGERATED.

I wish to emphasize that the so-called red terror, which is grossly exaggerated and misrepresented abroad, was not the cause but the direct outcome and result of allied intervention. The Russian workers and peasants fail to understand how foreign countries, which never dreamed of interfering with Russian affairs when czarist barbarism and militarism ruled supreme, and which even supported that regime, feel justified in intervening in Russia now when the working people itself after decades of strenuous struggling and countless sacrifices succeeded in taking power and destiny of their country into their own hands, aiming at nothing but

Deported for Holding Opinion Contrary To Interest of Ruling Class

In spite of the protests from labor in all parts of the country, the government is going ahead with the deportation of the aliens held at Ellis Island for shipment abroad as undesirables. According to a letter from one of the victims of the action of the government, five men were shipped to England last week, and others are to follow soon.

This letter clearly presents the issue involved in the action of the government and the danger which threatens the workers of this country. The letter in full follows:

Immigration Station,
Ellis Island, New York Harbor,
New York, Feb. 27, 1919

Editor of The Call:

Five men were shipped to England yesterday.

This was the first contingent to be deported of the forty-odd members of the I. W. W. held here for deportation. However, they were not shipped in opposition to their wishes.

With the editor's permission, I should like to express a few of my opinions regarding the law under which these men were arrested, and under which I was arrested, and may be deported. I have been in direct contact with its influence for nine months, and so should be fairly well familiar with all its features of injustice.

It occurs to me that the Espionage act, with all its oppressive features, is no more dangerous to the traditionally liberal institutions of America than this typically Russian deportation law.

To govern is an art; if the acts of a governing body cannot stand the acid test of honest criticism, regardless of whom its critic may be—alien or native—that governing body is dishonest in its policies and purposes.

A true artist welcomes criticism even from a novice, because he knows that there is a latent spark of genius in the dullest of men; but the artist who [illegible] to those held by men who have the governing power.

Seven Spanish radicals were brought here from the city yesterday. They probably will be followed by hundreds of other aliens who have enough backbone to hold an opinion believed to be undesirable.

In Russia, in the palmiest days of the Czar, imprisonment or exile did not result from holding an opinion, but from expressing an opinion intended to incite to certain unlawful acts.

The law under which we are held for deportation, and under which hundreds of other radicals and union men may be deported, prohibits the individual, or a group or organization, from holding opinions opposed to what is believed to be the best interests of the ruling class. However, it does not specifically mention the capitalist class; it does prove by its wording that it is aimed only at the worker and his class opinions.

It is up to every liberty-loving person, especially of the working class, in America to uphold his right, both to hold an opinion and to express that opinion.

Only through criticism of the acts of those men who represent the people in public office can good government, justice for all and the greatest possible amount of liberty consistent with justice be obtained and maintained.

It is for trying to extend and maintain American liberty and justice that many will be deported, unless this law is repealed.

It is possible under this law to "frame up" on any alien, or even an American who does not know his birthplace, and through the connivance of a corrupt official, obtain his or her deportation.

THE ONLY ALIEN WHO—IN MY OPINION, SHOULD BE DEPORTED FROM ANY COUNTRY IS THE ALIEN WHO WILL NOT TRY TO EXTEND THE LIBERTY [illegible]

DARROW'S VIEW on BOLSHEVSIM

What is "Bolshevism"? Is it as horrible as it is pictures in the capitalist press? This is a question that is agitating the minds of many people. Here are Clarence Darrow's views on the matter. While Mr. Darrow is not in complete accord with the Bolsheviki nor the Socialists of America either this article tends to clarify in a broad-minded manner some mooted questions concerning this new force in the world affairs.

It is quite evident that Bolshevism has alarmed and terrified the world. There is Bolshevism everywhere, we are told, and even the United States senate is to investigate its alleged activities in this country. Irish strikes of an unusual character have been ascribed to Russian Bolshevik agitators. Ministers of state are sitting up nights ruminating over the new phenomenon.

But what is Bolshevism? What is the meaning of the word, to begin with, and what the nature, essence, and quality of the thing so named—and certain idealistic, radical Americans are known to say that unfortunately the term itself has a sinister, dark, forbidding sound.

Well, as to the name, the story is simple and prosaic. Bolshevik means an adherent of a majority wing of a party or school. The Russian Social Democratic Party is divided into two factions, as is the German Social Democracy, as is the French Socialist Party, and as is the British. In Germany we hear of the Majority Socitlists and the Minority, or Independent, Socialists. The word majority alarms none. Bolsheviki means the majority party—neither more nor less. Mensheviki means the minority party. We have Republican Bolsheviki and Republican Mensheviki—and at one time the standpatters were the Bolsheviki—and perhaps they are even now, despite insurgency.

At any rate the word Bolshevik has no terrors for any one who has a smattering of Russian or of radical and reform literature. As to the thing—that's another story.

To complehend the phenomenon of Bolshevism it is necessary to know something about Russian political and revolutionary history. There are, or there were at the last general election, eighteen political parties in Russia. The Social Democrats are one of the few major and really important parties. They are, for Russia, an "old" party. To this party, roughly speaking, belong all those who follow Karl Marx and his so-called scientific—and revolutionary—Socialism, and who regard "Das Kapital" as their Bible. There are other Socialist factions and schools of thought in Russia, these holding, again roughly, that Marxism does not apply to the Slav empire—backward, undeveloped, dark, and with traditions of its own—or, as some Russians say, a lack of binding and galling traditions. The Socialist Revolutionists (to whom "Grandmother" Catherine Breshkovsky, Tschaikovsky, Bourtseff, and many other famous Russian radicals belong) are not Marxians, but mild, national Socialists, "peasantists," so to speak, who believe in gradually establishing a form of Socialism based on certain supposed typical Russian institutions, the Village Mir, or Commune, the Artel, or Workers' Industrial Union, and the like.

Perhaps it is well to explain that in Russia the radical or revolutionary is usually a Socialist of one kind or another. Even non-Socialist writers have said that "in Russia one is born a Socialist," and in Prof. Paul Milyoukov's book on "Russia and Her Crisis"—a standard work, I am told—there is a long chapter of Russia's Socialistic tendencies and Socialistic seed, as it were, that is planted in a favorable soil. In Russia the non-Socialist radical is a rare bird. He is sneered and scoffed at. He is dubbed a reactionary. This has been the case for forty years or more. Individualism or philosophical anarchism as a philosophy has never flourished in Russia, although communistic anarchism had a considerable following at one time.

If, then, the great majority of Russian radicals are, and long have been, Socialists, nothing is more natural—for Russia—than a split in each of the major Socialist parties. Russians are theoretical, academic, garrulous, disputatious, uncompromising. They have not had sufficient contact with real affairs to learn to practice give and take. They split when they cannot agree on points of theory or of method. They do not feel bound by decisions of majorities at conventions or other gatherings.

Years ago, then, the Social Democrats, or Marxists, of Russia disagreed and parted company. The differences were not very important. They concerned questions of method, of control of the party and its organ. After the split the majority called themselves Bolsheviki and the minority Mensheviki. Nothing serious happened after the split, for neither faction had much chance under the czar. It was indeed a crime to belong to the Social Democratic Party. Members of the duma were again and again indicted for that offense, tried, and exiled to Siberia.

After the revolution of March, 1917, the conditions in Russia, economic, political, moral, were such the the purely academic differences among Russian Socilists, at home or abroad, were inevitably precipitated into burning practical differences. The autocracy was gone and dead. The people of Russia were sick of the war and determined to have peace. They could not and would not fight for territory, money, prestige, or honor. They needed peace and expected the free government to secure it for them.

The Lvov or bourgeois government could not secure peace. They were too gentlemanly and diplomatic and honorable to talk of a separate peace. The Kerensky government was more "leftist," and had several Socialists in the leading departments, but it, too, hesitated, waited, argued, pleaded, and counseled patience and moderation. The masses were in no mood to wait and suffer, to starve and die. The Soviets, spantaneously formed all over Russia, because the old governmental bodies lacked authority and were not democratic or representative, insistently demanded peace and fundamental reforms. In Russia the most fundamental of all reforms was that of the tenure of land. The peasants—80 or more per cent of the population—wanted land; they had wanted it for generations and had hoped the czar would break away from the barons and landlords and give them the land. To them the revolution, freedom, the new life, meant primarily the land and secondarily plenty of home rule, village autonomy, plus light taxation and the abolition of conscription.

The Kerensky stop-gap government could not give the masses, the peasants and wage workers, the few basic things they wanted and demanded. It had to go. It went. It fell just as czarism fell, without a struggle. The only party that was ready to promise the people the reforms and blessings they demanded—the land, peace, self-government, etc.—were the Majority Social Democrats, led by Lenine and Trotzky. Those men had audacity, faith, courage, fanaticism and revolutionary fervor. They were not diplomats and cared nothing for conventions and manners. They seized the reins of power with the acquiescence of the masses. There were no effective opposition to them. Then they proceeded to make peace—the best peace they could get from Germany. They sacrificed much, they gave up much, they most reluctantly yielded to the German militarists.

This is not the place to discuss their mistakes or their fallacies. They got the peace they had promised to the masses, and the fighting stopped. The soldiers and sailors could go home—they had already been deserting by the thousand.

But peace was not enough. What of bread? What of the land question? What of liberty and self-government? The Bolshevik cabinet turned at once to these internal questions and issued their famous decrees—the land decree, the nationalization of industry decree, the constitution of free Russia, etc. They knew they had numerous and strong enemies in and out of Russia. They expected serious opposition to their Socialistic reforms, so sweeping, so uncompromising, so unheard of except in books, from the nobles, the landlords, the manufacturers, the merchants, the bankers, the non-Socialist professional groups, the richer peasant proprietors, and the conservative workmen. So they boldly proclaimed "a second revolution," a social revolution.

In other words, they made it quite plain that they were not mere revolutionary reformers, but unterrified, resolute revolutionists. They had, they said, a great, a historic opportunity to establish Marxian social democracy in Russia. They had the right and the duty, they contended, to make the effort and to make it at any cost. They were prepared to resist opposition and to give it no quarter. He who was not with them was against them. They had to act quickly and decisively, they said, or else fritter away their chance and prove themselves weaklings and cowards.

They established a dictatorship of the proletariat. They made their appeal, not to the "dark masses," the peasants, but the class conscious, advanced, and literate or half-literate wage workers. They abolished everything of the old, or new-old, Lvov-Kerensky order that stood in their way. They repealed the universal and democratic suffrage act. They declared themselves enemies of "bourgeois democracy" and all its machinery and works. They were not democrats, or liberals, or evolutionists. The familiar tests and yardsticks of the "free countries" they laughed at as stage tricks designed to delude and fool the average person.

They were revolutionary, international Socialists. They knew exactly what they wanted. They had their own philosophy of history. The argued that revolution was as legitimate as evolution. Why shrink from a little violence, tyranny, bloodshed? Why make a fuss about free speech and free assembly? If political revolution is justifiable, and if dictatorship might be created in time of such revolutions to prevent reaction and treachery, why were not strong measures, a dictatorship, disfranchisement of counter revolutionists, fully justified at a critical time of social and economic upheaval?

The Bolshevik leaders asked and are still asking these questions, and their answers are given in deeds and in words. Their task is colossal—to establish Socialism after Karl Marx in Russia, or in such parts as they now control. They believe that they can succeed in spite of the bourgeoisie, the nobility, the mild revolutionaries, the non-Socialist reformer, the richer peasants, the "reactionary" workmen. They believe that the masses, though ignorant and "unconscious" politically, feel instinctively that the Bolshevik program alone can give Russia freedom, prosperity, local self-government, culture and human brotherhood. To educate the peasants is a task of decades and generations. Meantime the few really class-conscious, intelligent supporters of the Bolshevik leaders must rule Russia and introduce Socialist changes as fast as possible.

After Russia, the leaders say, will come Germany, France, Italy, England and at last even the United States, the fast, sleek, bourgeois, individualistic United States. The social revolution "is coming" they cry. Marx proves this. History proves it. Russia is merely, owing to the war and a combination of amazing circumstances the pioneer and pathfinder in this glorious movement. Russia, as it happened, is fresh, unspoiled, democratic at heart, and her plutocracy and bourgeoisie are not powerful enough to prevent the great adventure or gravely to endanger its success.

Elsewhere the struggle will be bloodier, sharper, longer, but capitalism and the wage system are doomed and discredited and Russia would be criminal if she were to allow these evil things to take root. Hence, at any cost, Socialism must be saved, defended, and given a trial in Russia. Compared with what it offers to mankind, the violence, disorder, graft, oppression, suffering complained of by the various opponents of Bolshevism are said to be trifles hardly worth mentioning. What of the French terror? What of the American revolutionary war and the war over slavery and secession? asks Lenine.

"Let the allies evacuate Russia," he continues in effect, "and we shall rehabilitate and reconstruct her whole fabric and set an example to the world. We are seeking to establish permanently the highest form of democracy. We are seeking to abolish slavery, exploitation, poverty, provate monopoly, and flagrant, unwarranted, unnatural inequality. Give us time and a chance to go to work and to revive commerce and trade, and our experiment will astonish humanity. After a while we may re-enfranchise the disfranchised aristocrats and bourgeoisie, the clergy and investors and bring the distatorship to a close. Our tyrannical measures are temporary—a necessary evil. We stand for equality and liberty and fraternity. We are fighting counter-revolution and are adopting war measures—that is all."

RESOLUTIONS FROM CANTON

Canton, O., Feb. 27, 1919.

The following resolutions were adopted by Local Canton of the Socialist Party, at their regular session, Thursday, Feb. 27, 1919.

Whereas, Numerous resolutions have been formulated by Socialist Party members throughout the country, demanding that a National Emergency Convention be arranged for by the National Executive Committee, and the committee declines to call such convention, and

Whereas, To initiate a referendum under constitutional provisions would defer the holding of such a convention for at least several months, and further that the American Socialist being no longer published, the provisions of the constitution in regard to calling a convention by a referendum cannot be adhered to, therefore,

Be It Resolved, That the National Executive Committee be hereby instructed to arrange for the holding of a National Emergency Convention, in the City of Chicago, on May 1, 1919, and that all Socialist locals throughout the country be hereby requested to endorse this resolution, and to at once notify the National Executive Secretary of the results of their actions.

Be It Further Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to all State Secretaries, who are hereby requested to lay the matter before the members of their respective states, and that copies also be sent to all Socialist publications.

China and Social Revolution

By KIANG KANG HU.

Secretary Socialist Party in China.

The idea of collectivism or Socialism is very old in China. It can be traced back to the very beginning of Chinese civilization, over 4,000 years ago.

When, about a decade ago, modern Socialist thought began to be propagated in China, it met with two sets of critics, each holding opposite views, yet each equally severe in their criticism of the new doctrine. One set said: "Socialism—why, that is nothing new. We have had that for ages." The other set said: "Socialism is an importation. It is foreign to our soil. It may fit European conditions, but it certainly does not fit Chinese conditions."

Both of these critics were partially correct, and yet, because of their narrow view, both were wrong. True, the traces of communistic thought are to be found in Chinese life and history for centuries. But their ideas are distinctly utopian in their character and cannot be identified with modern scientific Socialism. True, likewise, was it, at that time (a decade ago) that scientific of Marxian Socialism was an imported plant which could not flourish in Chinese soil. But China is changing. Machine production is rapidly displacing handicraft. Where yesterday stood the little cobbler shop, today the great shoe factory rears its ugly form. Where yesterday the collie porter trotted with his burden, the automobile truck rushes on its way. Railroads have come, and power looms. This is the soil in which scientific Socialism will grow. Nothing can stop it.

The Chinese, like the whole human race, have natural collectivist leanings. If we mine into the mountain of Chinese philosophy, we will soon find a rich vein of collectivism running throughout, persisting throughout its entire length and breadth. Material enough is at hand to fill a bulky valume.

In the last decade, here and there, were to be found individuals and small groups scattered throughout the empire of China who studied and advocated humanitarianism, communism and Socialism. But these groups had no connection with one another, and their ideas, for the most part, were vague and misty.

Kiang Kang Hu, a professor at the University of Peking, was publishing a radical newspaper which had for its aim the introduction of new ideas into China. This paper translated and published portions of the works of Balzac, of Victor Hugo, Byron and Shelley, Goethe and Heine, and toward the end of its career some of the works of Peter Kropotkin, Karl Marx, and August Bebel.

Kiang Kang Hu, thus coming into contact with Socialism, became interested and, finally, was converted to the new doctrine. He began an agitation for the freedom of woman immediately, and went on many lecture tours in the interest of Socialism.

In Shanghai, on July 10, 1911, at the Chang Shu Ho Gardens, Kiang Kang Hu organized a Socialist club, and on the same day the first Socialist paper in China, "The Socialist Star," made its first appearance.

The Shih Hui Tong, or Socialist Party, was the first political party as such in China. The Socialist Party, although not being composed of clear-cut Marxians, was nevertheless earnest and enthusiastic in its desire for the establishment of a Socialist Republic. On November 5, 1911, the Socialist Party of China met in its first annual convention at Shanghai and adopted a preamble and a platform.

The subsequent revolutions in China played havoc with the Socialists. The secretary of the party, Chen Ye Long, was beheaded on August 8, 1917. The party headquarters at Peking were raided by the government authorities and a decree of dissolution was issued against the Socialist Party. A similar decree was issued later.

After these decrees had been issued, the Socialist Party branches everywhere were forcibly dissolved. Many of the comrades were thrown into jail and a number were executed. The party, as a unit, ceased to exist, although individuals secretly kept up a sporadic agitation.

But the Socialist movement in China will reassemble its forces, and will fall in step with the great Red International and march with it to victory.

The Dead Hand

By SCOTT NEARING

A little group of old men, spokesmen for the five great powers, is assembled about a green table at Versailles. All but one of these men were born before the Franco-Prussian War. Most of them had grown to middle life before the capitalist world entered its present stage of financial imperialism. These old men meet four or five times a week for a few hours. Most of their days are spent in offices, in private committee rooms, and in secret sessions where they seek to re-establish the world as they knew it in their youth and early manhood. They resemble children, trying to re-clothe a tree with dry leaves blown about by autumn winds.

The representatives of the great powers who meet around the Peace Table are very, very old. Five of them were born before 1850. Ten were born between 1850 and 1859. Six were born between 1860 to 1869. Only one, a Frenchman, Andre Tardieu, was born since 1870. The oldest man in the delegation is Clemenceau. He is seventy-eight. Four of his confreres are over seventy. Fifteen are over sixty. Twenty-one out of twenty-two are over fifty. The Peace Conference is a conference of old men.

The modern economic world was born between 1870 and 1880. The latest phase of capitalism, financial imperialism, has come into being during the years when these men, educated in a previous age, were so busy with the many details of public life, that they could not see and understand the changes that were taking place about them. They speak the language and think the thoughts of the Nineteenth century.

Today these old men sit around the green table—spokesmen of a dead epoch; representatives of a by-gone era. About their heads the lightning of revolution is playing. Russia, Germany, Austria, Argentina, Chile, Peru, Italy, England, Luxemburg and Poland are in open revolt against the capitalism and imperialism for which they speak. The old men fidget, gesticulate, grow excited, make propositions and counter propositions. They talk and act as though they were still directing the world. They do not know that their day has passed, and that the darkness is settling around them. With childish simplicity they speak to one another as though it were the dawn.

The dawn is breaking, but not around the Peace Table.

The Michigan Convention

By W. E. REYNOLDS

The Socialist Party of Michigan held its convention in Grand Rapids February 24th, with 51 delegates present.

State-Secretary Bloomenberg resigned. John Keracher of Detroit was elected at the convention to serve the unexpired term of the former secretary or until such time as the locals can elect a new State Secretary.

The convention was a harmonious gathering of boosters, the utopian element being either absent or without spokesmen.

Convention repudiated the National Office delegates to the Lausanne International.

A constitutional amendment was proposed to be sent to referendum, calling for the abolition of all social reform planks in the Socialist Party platform.

A platform was adopted without any immediate demands and calling for the abolition of the wages system. As first drafted it called for the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat but when it was pointed out on the floor of the convention that the dictatorship of the proletariat was a transitory measure and not an ultimate end the wording was changed to mean the overthrow of Capitalism and the establishment of an Industrial Republic.

A resolution on religion was adopted to the effect that religion was a social phenomena and as such required explanation, and all speakers and [illegible] themselves of the opportunity to make such explanation "on the basis of the materialist conception of history."

A resolution endorsing the study class idea was unanimously adopted. The work of the Proletarian University of Detroit endorsed and all locals and individuals were urged to work for circulation for the Proletarian, Ohio Socialist, Revolutionary Age.

The convention adopted a part of the Left Wing program in its centering the attention of the abolition of Capitalism instead of working for petty reform—but it did not adopt the Left Wing program of urging economic organization amongst the workers.

The ladies of Local Grand Rapids served an exceptionally well prepared banquet which was enjoyed by all during the noon recess.

Convention finished its labors and adjourned at six o'clock.

RUSSIA'S CO-OPERATIVE EMBASY

"The All-Russian Central Co-Operative Committee on Atrocities in America," is the inscription which is now being lettered on the door of a suite of offices, covering the whole floor of a downtown modern office building in New York City, to be open after March 1. Nothing that ever went under the name in Washington came so near to being a Russian embassy in the United States, for in this New York office will be found the representatives of the Russian Co-Operative movement, a democratic organization which includes over half of the people of all of Russia. As for this American committee, it has been appointed by the All-Russian Central Executive Committee, elected by the last All-Russian Co-Operative Congress, held in Moscow two years ago.

The Russian Co-Operators have been sending representatives abroad during the past year or more, hoping to have the blockade raised and to establish trade relations. The Narodni Co-Operative Bank of Moscow, the financial center of the whole Russian co-operative movement, which did over a billion dollar business in 1917, opened an office in London, where it [illegible] monthly magazine in Eng- [illegible] a branch office was opened in New York.

Later came Vladmir Kolesnikov, representing the Siberian Agricultural Central Union, to purchase agricultural machinery. A month ago he purchased and shipped to Siberia an order of several hundred thousand pairs of shoes. He is executive secretary of the new Co-Operative Committee to America.

"We ask no charity, not even credit," he told a gathering in the office of the Co-Operative League of America. "Russia is a rich country, and we have the labor to create wealth from our natural resources. We are not bankrupt. We are only starving because of the dislocation of transportation and because of the blockade."

Within ten days another member of the committee will arrive from Moscow, representing on it the Central Union of Russian Consumers' Co-Operative Socialists; the federation of the Russian co-operative store societies. This is the organization which, beginning with open hostility toward the Soviet government, has now signed a treaty with it, whereby the two are now working together, the economic supremacy of the co-opera- [illegible] they can't agree on the running of their factory, they turn it over to the Consumers' Co-Operative Union, which is taking over industrial plants as fast as it can organize their working forces. Between the two there is not much left of Russian capitalism. As Trotzky remarked, they are being left only their slippers.

Taking an Inventory

(From The Nation)

The Seattle strike is over, and negotiations are under way to placate the shipyard workers whose demands were the ostensible cause of that dramatic four-day demonstration. The Butte miners, apparently defeated, have again taken up pick and shovel. The textile workers of the East are on the whole ready to accept the forty-eight hour week with forty-eight hours' pay, and many mills have begun operation, through there is still unrest in Paterson and Lawrence. Throughout the garment industry of New York the shorter day is being generally accepted. The building trades are in conference with employers and Government officials in a serious effort to avoid a strike. With these peaceful negotiationsinprogress, it is a good time to note certain tendencies that have been displayed with astonishing regularity in recent disputes.

Apparently labor is becoming increasingly interested in organization on industrial rather than trade lines, and is moving toward the onne big union. In England the latter stage has been all but reached in the triple alliance of miners, railway men and transport workers, in the United States, the tendency is clearly visible in the Northwest, where barbers and stage hands join a strike in favor of boilermakers. F. G. Biedenkapp, secretary of the Brotherhood of Metal Workers, says: "The old form of craft unionism, with its 'boss-benefiting' tactics of labor separation, is a thing of the past, and the national leaders of the A. F. of L. know this to be so." The American Federation of Labor, in its determined efforts to organize the steel industry, has found it necessary to combine twenty-four different trades. The threatened strike of building trades began with dissatisfaction among a handful of carpenters on a Brooklyn Government job, but the negotiations for the avoidance of sympathetic walkouts now involve thirty trades.

More conclusive evidence of this trend toward a new type of organization is found in the inability of the old international union heads to hold the allegiance of their followers. No A. F. of L. leader approved the Seattle and Tacoma demonstrations. In Lawrence, the United Textile Workers (A. F. of L.) admitted that the situation was beyond their control. A marine fireman has addressed the Lawrence weavers, cautioning them against disorder; a Socialist boilermaker is one of their spokesmen. Labor is united by a bond stronger than indentity of craft.

Morever, in these late disturbances the workers have exhibited a cool courage that can be born only of quiet confidence. Labor in most cases refuses to be frightened by the appear- [illegible] ment of its demand. So confid is it of obtaining its end, indeed, t violence, the weapon of the weak, been everywhere avoided. The rec strikes have exhibited the most usual phenomenon of a high deg of order. In Seattle, Mayor Han has boasted, "Not an arrest for vi ence in a city of 400,000 people; a piece of property destroyed"— which excellent exhibit probably on credit cannot be accorded him or forces at his disposal. Troops w dispatched to Seattle and Butte. theformer city they were idle; in latter the Boston Transcript repor "Congregating was forbidden, those slow in moving at the comm of the soldiers were made to feel sting of the bayonet's point." thereis no report of retaliation.

What is this quiet determinat which animates our industrial work turn a city's life upside down? was a "Soviet" formed in Butte of a demand for increased wa Why does specific dissatisf among carpenters flame in a ge outbreak throughout thewholebui industry? Thus far labor as a wh has advanced no complete progra it is still expending energy in dem tratoins of a more or less neg character. Here and there, howe has come the explanation that l is ready to assume the captaincy its own fate; it seeks control of dustry—not omnipotence, but part ship. Undoubtedly, it is as tir the strikes as is the employed; as tired as he of higgling over and time-clocks; it seeks a real, tion.

Keen observers alredy recog these facts. Mr. C. V. Corles cently declared in an address the American Institution of Min Engineers:

NEWS AND VIEWS—A WEEKLY SURVEY

(Edited By C. E. Ruthenberg)

The Senate and the League

Opposition to the League of Nations plan on the part of the reactionary Republican senators should deceive no one as to the character of the proposed league.

The League of Nations, as outlined in the constitution tentatively adopted at Paris, is an organization of the capitalists of the five great powers to conduct the exploitation of the rest of the world through international capitalism rather than through national capitalism.

It may be well asked, if this is true, why do the senators who are the representatives of the great capitalists of the United States oppose this international organization?

The usual explanation given in answer to this question is that it is the desire to gain a partisan advantage that determines their attitude.

This explanation overlooks the fact that party politics are determined by the economic interests of the class the partisans represent, and it is necessary to go deeper to find the real reason for the attitude of Senator Lodge and those who support him.

It is generally acknowledged that the United States has gained a dominant position in the world as a result of the war. It has not suffered at all economically. Whereas the countries of Europe have sacrificed their man-power by the hundreds of thousands and their industries have been disorganized, the United States has improved and made its productive machinery more efficient during the last four years. In comparison with the mountain of debt accumulated by the European countries the United States owes very little. Its resources are intact and are many times greater than those of any other country.

The senators of the Ladge variety are for taking advantage of the dominant economic position of the United States to the limit. They want the United States to enter the world arena unfettered by any ties and to grab everything that its present position will enable it to take. They stand for the selfish policy of economic nationalism. The chairman of the Republican National Committee said in a speech in Chicago a few days ago that the issue of the next campaign would be nationalism and by nationalism, it is to be understood, of course, he means economic nationalism.

These senators represent that section of the capitalist class which has learned nothing from the world war. They see a great opportunity and they propose to take advantage of it to the limit.

The Wilson program is the program of the capitalists who see that their only hope of saving the capitalist system is an international organization of capitalism. They realize that the whole structure of capitalism has been shaken and is ready to topple to the ground. They are not sure that they can save it now, but they are going to try. They are certain that another shock such as capitalism received will shatter it forever, and hence their effort to replace the economic nationalism of the Lodge variety with an international organization, which they hope will at least minimize the danger of the recurrence of what happened during the past four years.

The contest which is agitating Washington and the capitalist press is the contest between national capitalism and international capitalism. The workers can afford to look on and smile while the capitalists fight, and—continue to build the organization of working class that will wipe out all of the capitalist system.

Raymond Robbins Speaks Out

Colonel Raymond Robbins, American Red Cross representative in Russia, appeared before the senate committee which is investigating Bolshevism the other day, and in two days knocked into a cocked hat all the lies that the capitalist press have been spreading about the Soviet government.

Colonel Robbins said:

> That the Soviet government offered not to ratify the Brest Litovsk treaty if the United States and England would furnish certain assistance in the war against Germany, but that neither the government of the United States or that of England made any reply to this offer.
> That the Bolshevik propaganda undermined the morale of the German soldiers and that Germany financed anarchist campaigns to hamper the Bolsheviki.
>
> That until Allied intervention took place there was more disorder reported in the average American newspaper than there was in Russia.
>
> That Czecho-Slowaks were the agents of French Imperialism with designs that had not been laid upon the table and that they committed many atrocities against the Bolsheviki and people of Russia.
>
> That there had not been any general suppression of opposition newspapers under the Bolsheviki and added, "during the war many papers in this country were suppressed without apparent reason."
> He said that the Russian masses were in control and could get rid of Lenine and Trotzky and the Bolsheviki in general whenever they desired.

Colonel Robins has personal knowledge. He was in intimate contact with the affairs of Russia. His statements are in direct contradiction to the stories given to the American people by the capitalist press and stamp these stories as lies. Will the capitalist press stop lying about Russia now that a man who was an official representative of capitalism in Russia has told them that they lie? Nothing of the kind. Tomorrow they will repeat the same old lies or newly invented lies to slander the workers' government of Russia.

The history of the world does not contain a record of degradation and prostitution to equal that of the men and women who write the capitalist lies about Russia.

Solving the Problem

Coatesville, Pa., has discovered a new method of solving the problem of unemployment.

During the four years of mass murder in Europe, northern manufacturers, in need of labor to enable them to reap the big profits of war-time production, induced tens of thousands of southern Negroes to come north and go to work in the war industries. Glowing promises describing "a land of milk and honey" were held out to these Negroes to get them to leave their homes. When they reached their destination they found, as a rule, that they were condemned to live in squalor and misery, because, although they received higher wages, it cost them much more to live.

Now that the war is over, and the employing class has an over supply of labor on its hands it finds these southern Negroes a serious burden. This was the situation in Coatsville, but Coatsville found a way to solve the problem a way that will undoubtedly commend itself to the employers elsewhere. Coatsville rounded up all the unemployed southern Negroes in the city, escorted them to the city limits under armed guard, and told them to "head south and keep on going."

That is a fair example of capitalism. The capitalist class use the workers as part of the machinery of production which yields them big profits. It pays them just enough to keep them working. Some times it wrecks their bodies and threws them into the discard. When it cannot use them profitably it washes its hands of them and tells them to go—"south and keep on going."

The workers will remain slaves until they follow the example of the workers of Russia and establish an industrial republic in which the capitalists will have to go to work and all the workers will control the industries and enjoy the product of those industries.

In an article reprinted by the Civil Federation, Samuel Gompers endeavors to draw a damning indictment against the French Socialist Party. Among the evidence he submits is the following resolution, adopted by the French Socialists three days after the signing of the armistice:

> The French Socialist Party welcomes the German Republic and the taking over of the power in Prussia and the Confederated States by the working class.
> As in the Russia of the Soviets, Socialism has appeared in all Central Europe as the proper liquidator of the political and social situation left by the war.
>
> The party thus sees justified the confidence which it has always had in the action of the people.
>
> Considering that certain of the conditions of the armistice leave the sharply defined fear that the Allied governments have the intention of further extending the criminal military intervention against revolutionary Russia, the party declares that it will appeal to all the forces of the French proletariat to prevent the Socialism which is being born in Russia, as well as in Germany and Austria, from being crushed by coalitions of foreign capitalism.
> The party urges the French working people most vigorously to rally to the support of their unions and the Socialist groups, to sustain their class journals, and to keep themselves ready to make Socialism triumph in France as it has in the other countries of Europe.

We are not surprised that this declaration of working class solidarity against international capitalism gave "Sammy" the cold shivers. It threatens the thing which he is fighting so hard to protect from the onslaught of the workers that he has so long misled.

The capitalists of Canada are very much aroused over what they call Bolshevist propaganda among the soldiers and workers of that country. One of the manifestos issued by the Provisional Council of Soldiers and Workers' Deputies, makes the following appeal to the workers and soldiers:

> Comrades, Soldiers, in camps and barracks, form your councils at once. Hold secret meetings and appoint your delegates, so that you will be ready when the time comes when you have to conduct the business of society; make an end of the tyranny of your officers; down with your officers; down with the court-martial; you can use the army for your freedom and you must do it now!
> Comrade Workmen in the factories, mines and railroads, form your councils immediately! Organize councils to take over each industry to be run for the benefit of the workers only. You must do this, nobody else will do it for you. Seize each factory, each mine, each railroad for the working class. Your committees can conduct the policy of production and distribution.

The circular goes on to urge the soldiers and workers to demand the withdrawal of troops from Russia and points out that in the latter country the workers and soldiers have swept away the capitalists and set up their own government and their own control of industry.

The Swiss Socialist Democratic party decided by a vote of 238 to 147 not to participate in the Berne International Conference. The following quotations, which typify the dominant spirit of the convention, are taken from a report of the convention which has just reached this country:

> While the cry of the blood of millions of workers is still ringing in our ears, we sit here and consider whether we should attend a conference with those who were responsible for the war. We have damned and cursed the betrayers, because they abandoned the cause of the proletariat. But what has changed since A. Thomas clasped the bloody hand of the czar?
> We refuse to be represented at a conference where those morally responsible for the murder of Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg will sit beside comrades who even in the next few weeks will fall, new sacrifices to the government Socialists.
> We greet the Russian Revolution and take up the battle cry of the Russian and German revolutionists, calling upon the proletariat to the world revolution.

"Why compose a new formula of principles, when our own constitution of the United States contains every good principle now put forth by the more intelligent among the radical element," asks an apologist for capitalism in a diatribe about the red flag and what it stands for. Among the good principles that the constitution contains is that which forbids the congress of the United States from passing a law forbidding the employment of children of tender age in the factories of the country. It also contains a section guaranteeing the rights of free speech and a free press, but still the writer of this paragraph risks being sent to prison for twenty years if he expresses his conscientious opinion about the quotation above. What this writer has to learn is that constitutions may contain fine phrases and provisions, but these constitutions are interpreted to suit the interest of the dominant economic class.

A Washington dispatch from the correspondent of The Cleveland Plain Dealer states that the woman suffrage amendment to the national constitution will pass the next congress because the support of the southern senators has been secured for the amendment. The southern senators have agreed to support the amendment on condition that "a slight change in the text of the resolution" is made, which slight change will permit them to debar Negro women from voting in the south. We suppose these same senators are among those who are shouting loudest for the blood of the Russian workers because they have debarred their enemies, the capitalists, from voting in Russia. Verily the hypocrisy of the ruling class representatives smells to high heavens.

The National Association of City Editors, affiliated with 14,000 newspapers, are behind a movement to organize an American Anti-Anarchy Association, for the purpose of killing Bolshevism in this country. The slogan of the organization is "kill it on sight—even the name," For this work it asks the modest sum of $300,000. One of the phases of the campaign is to be a full-page newspaper advertisements. That looks rather as if the A. A. A. is to be an organization to boost the business of the employers of the city editors rather than to kill Bolshevism. That's about all the result will be, anyway.

According to Washington advices, foreign exchange transactions between the United States and Russia have been stopped in order to prevent the financing of Bolshevik propaganda in this country. But how will that prevent the workers here who have caught a vision of the new world for which the Bolshevists are fighting from financing the same propaganda through their nickels and dimes and dollars. It is not the money of the Bolsheviki that capitalism here need fear; it is the Bolshevik ideas that are causing them trouble, and there are no bars that will keep these ideas from spreading.

The Paris conference has found a reason for calling the Prinkipo conference off. Andre Tardieu, one of the French delegates to the peace conference, states that the Bolsheviki have failed to comply with the conditions laid down, because they have not stopped in their effort to drive the invaders out of Russia, and therefore the conference will not be held. He added that new methods would have to be devised by the peace conference to deal with Russia. Everybody knows the kind of methods the French holders of Russian bonds would like to employ.

Mother of Humanity

By LAURA JIM REYNOLDS.

During the darkening days of civil strife, while the women were immersed in merciful errands to relieve the suffering, the politicians, who then as now, represented the business interests, seized the opportunity to rescind all legislation favorable to progress. Consternation, despair and horror went thru the little camp of suffrage workers. The results of the almost superhuman labors of Miss Anthony were wiped out.

The little Quaker woman showed an indomitable courage in the winter of 1854-5 as she tramped in New York from house to house, gathering recruits to help get ten thousand signatures to petitions demanding equal property rights and suffrage for women, organized clubs, and held innumerable lectures. Added to all this work she helped organize and attended fifty-four conventions that winter.

Heatless rooms, buckboard wagons, frozen roads, all manner of food, bearing her own expenses, relying on collections to finance the suffrage cause, figuring ways and means to keep out of debt so as to be on with the next venture, arousing the unthinking women to the danger of one set of people making regulations for another, were all part of the hardships and work that she encountered in the task she had voluntarily undertaken.

When the north and south clashed a small band of women, including Miss Anthony, refused to be swayed from their self-appointed task of advocating woman suffrage. The politicians crying, "This is the negro's hour," induced many women to relax their efforts.

"The negro's hour." The republican party needed votes and was it not logical if they passed a law giving the male negro the vote that in gratitude the negro would vote the republican ticket.

The negro woman's right to suffrage was eliminated as that meant that the white woman would demand political recognition and there was no telling what these women would do with the vote. At home the politician did not always succeed in getting his wife and daughters to see things his way, so how could he hope to line up the woman vote and keep it in line?

When the northern politicians needed help they thankfully accepted the services of women orators. It was the eloquence of Anna Dickenson that turned the tide in favor of the union that gave the republican party the election of 1862. Her gift of words the logic and plea for the union and abolition of slavery brot forth such enthusiasm that wherever she went men listened and joined the party whose spokesman she was. The [illegible] politicians led the women to [illegible] that when the negro question [illegible] settled, they would champion woman suffrage.

[illegible] Anthony warned the women [illegible]

she tried to hold conventions, she met with vacant seats. The women allowed their cause to be shoved in the background while they worked for the union and the slaves.

The social forces drove the northern manufacturer to demand "free labor." This meant to him the labor he could hire by the day: wage labor.

The southern slave holders were large land owners. The cost of the slave's maintenance was a negligible factor. The slaves were housed in a sort of primitive communism, raised their own corn, ground their own meal, raised sugar cane and made their own sorghum and the warm climate necessitated few clothes.

The northern manufacturere were not land owners. The slave owners of the north had to rent the shelter for their slaves because they did not own land upon which to build shelter. They had to buy food for the slaves. The colder climate of the north made it necessary for the slaves to have far more clothing.

The slaves of the south were directly engaged in producing food stuffs and the slaves of the north were engaged in factory work.

It was thus economically easy for the southern slave-holders to maintain their slaves. The economic burden was too heavy for the northern slave-holder who had learned that it was cheaper to hire a slave by the day, turning him loose at the end of the day's labor, to shift for himself under the guise of a so-called freedom, than to claim ownership of his person.

A chattel slave had to be fed, clothed and housed during the dull season, the same as the farmer cares for a horse during the winter. In slack seasons the employer can turn the "free laborer" out of the industry. When left to his "freedom," if he cannot get a job, he may partake of "free soup" at ten cents a bowl, and the charity lodgings of missions and the police stations.

A chattel slave, the same as a horse if he died was a distinct money loss. A wage-slave's death was no concern of his employer who had no money invested in his body.

Herein lay the economic basis of the civil conflict.

Three years of shedding of brothers' blood had resolved itself into the question of the union versus the state rights. The negro was almost forgotten. The abolitionists saw thirty years of work fade into nothingness. They decided to arouse public opinion so that out of the bloody war would come freedom from chattel-slavery.

The economic demand of the changing order was ripe for the abolition of chattel slavery so the capitalist interest taking advantage of the humanitarian abolitionists, helped them instead of as they did a few years previously, drag them thru the streets and break up their meetings. So a league was formed in New York city of the "loyal women" to [illegible]

Who could do this work? All agreed that Miss Anthony, who for nearly three decades had been petitioning. Tho born an American, because she was a female, all she had been able to do was to petition.

Heartsick at seeing her former coworkers forget the woman problem, she helped them petition for the negro. When they assured her that after the war, they would get the franchise because of their services, she sadly shook her head because she knew that the woman question would be lost sight of in the problems of reconstruction. So it came about that Miss Anthony planned getting the greatest petition that any congress up to her time had ever received.

Without a cent she opened headquarters in Cooper Institute. Thousands of dollars were needed for sending out the petitions. She sent a call to the former workers for the franchise and sent out the petitions. Each signer was requested to give a penny. In those days a penny was a considerable coin. In this way over three hundred thousand dollars was gathered. Lectures were given to arouse the people's interest.

Every mail brot huge petitions to encourage statesmen to take up the negro's cause. Public opinion was tangibly known and the women were showered with praises but when they later petitioned for themselves they were jeered.

The civil strife was over. Congress was debating the MALE negro suffrage question.

Worn, wearied and worried Miss Anthony went to Kansas to rest. Tired little woman! She had fought to keep the organization together. It had dissolved before the fair promises of the politicians that "after the war" they would get justice.

There was no rest for her as the newspaper brot her tidings that the word "male" was to be inserted in the Fourteenth amendment. The old vitality, the old fighting strength returned to her as she read. She must go. She must warn the women. The danger must be met.

Eastward she speeded, stopping to hold meetings, gathering the forces of suffrage for the battle. She hastened to see Elizabeth Cady Stanton and they planned how to avert the writing of the word "male" in the constitution She hastened to get Lucy Stone and Lucretia Mott. They went to various cities to communicate personally with all the other suffrage workers.

The women at last conscious that they had been used as tools by the politicians to further the schemes of the business interests, rallied their forces and declared war on congress.

Mrs. Stanton again appeared before the public and demanded that the word "persons" be used. The women held conventions and got ready for the fray. Lecturers were sent out to urge all people to work against the word "male" being in the amendment. With fiery words they attacked the obnoxious wording of the proposed [illegible] would [illegible]

Congress of 1865, like the congress of 1918-19, was obstinate and fossilized in ideas. They could not see the trend of events and insisted on trying to stay the stride of Progress.

In Kansas, where the legislature decided to submit the amendment to the white male voters, the republican party fought the women. Having learned the bitter lesson of deviating from her cause, Anna Dickenson's voice was again heard in the woman's cause. In spite of the underhanded work of the republicans the women almost won in Kansas.

The politicians had said that this is "the negro's hour." A mere catch phrase. They meant that it was the negro man's hour. Northern politicians catering to the southern officeholders who feared the "southern wenches" vote connived to amend the constitution so that women were barred from participating in the affairs of a nation, that is "of the people, by the people and for the people."

In the battle with the statesmen of a "free nation" the women lost.

NO COMPROMISE!

The new labor party will again separate the wheat from the chaff within our midst and it will be the test of the development of our class-consciousness.

The new party may temporarily mislead some workers, now led up a blind alley from time to time by the two capitalist parties.

There is but one labor party—the Socialist Party, and we, as uncompromisers, must assert our position to the bitter end.

Our party has stood the test of war and what's more, we shall survive the new attempt of the capitalist class to split the forces of the workers, by giving birth to this reformistic labor party, which is led by those same minions, who hired by the plute class, have been endeavoring to steer the good ship labor onto the rocks.

But the strong current, education of the working class along lines of the class struggle, will guide this, yet crude vessel, into the port of Industrial Freedom.

Land is now in sight; let us avoid the treacherous rocks! Let our slogan be, "No Compromise! No Political Trading!" Yours for the cause.—Felix J. Catlin.

Government Ownership Will Curb Packers, Says Heney.

Declaring that the entire food supply of the country would be under control of the "Big Five" packers within ten and possibly five years, Francis J. Heney, former counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, testifying before the House Interstate Commerce committee at Washington last week, came out flat-footed for government control of refrigerator cars and stockyards as the only remedy in sight. The activities of the packers, Mr. Heney stated, had been enlarged until they control the butter, oleomargarine and cheese markets and had become a menace [illegible]

Great Bolshevik Conspiracy

"Secret Bolshevik Organization Has Net-Work of Agents All Over Country," screams our morning newspaper. "Lenin Sends Four Hundred Thousand Dollars to Spread Bolshevik Propaganda in the U. S." bellows our evening newspaper. "Large Quantities of Dynamite Concealed in This City," Department of Justice Says," howls the 23d Edition of the Evening-Cablegram, which is published at 8 o'clock in the morning.

Honest to God, everybody's scared to death of us Bolsheviki!

The papers of today, Jan. 7, are full of menaces from Special Attorney General Alfred L. Becker and the Department of Justice, to the general effect that there is going to be a "clean-up" of Bolsheviki and "sympathizers" in this country. Those of us who happen to have been born abroad are going to be deported; and the rest of us are going to jail.

"The propaganda," says the Evening Sun, evidently on the authority of the Department of Justice, "is directed against the use of American soldiers in Russia" (Oswald Garrison Villard, twenty years for you; how about deporting Senator Hiram Johnson?) "It also attacks the Mooney prosecution—" (What shall we do to Bourke Cochran and the commission appointed by President Wilson, both of whom are guilty of the same offense?) "—and demands the release of political prisoners." (Good gracious, are Jane Addams and Lillian Wald criminals, too?)

Even yet, New York newspaper editors and Department of Justice officials haven't taken the trouble to read up and find out what "Bolshevism" is. Let me tell them. It is not Anarchism, it is not Vegetarianism, it has no connection either with Free Love or the New Republic; in a word, it is Applied Socialism, and that is all there is to it. It is therefore a useless waste of time to send operatives to cover the Russian Workers' Convention, they not being Bolsheviki—or to send operatives to me, as one was sent recently, to ask, "Say, what is this here Non-Partisan League? Where's their New York office at?"

"Immediate action will be taken," says the Evening Sun, "to efface these rascals."

I understand the Department of Justice. The armistice and the coming Peace will reduce the staff, and a lot of perfectly good detectives will have to go back to the ribbon-counter. But the Evening Sun puzzles me. Why print that stuff when there is such a wealth of good lies to print about Russia?—John Reed, in the February Liberator.

Solidarity Will Win

(From a Miner)

I doubt if you have heard from this locality before. I mention this to show that a little work was necessary to secure these four yearly subs. Keep on with the work. Since we made the world safe for democracy we miners have been working but two or three days a week, owing to the manner in which we were betrayed by our leaders about eighteen months ago when the last agreement was made.

The probabilities are that the miners will strike next summer when it is hoped that they will act according to the knowledge gained in past experiences which is that it is useless to strike one district at a time, while the other districts work. We know the result of Colorado and have not forgotten our own five months that we had. Past policies seem to have been to keep one district starving and striking and the rest working and paying as though we could ever beat the operators in a financial game!

There's only one way that we can win fellow workers, and that is summed up in the word "solidarity."

Yours for the International,
D. COCKLIN, Bergholz, O.

their own happiness, and international brotherhood, constituting no menace to other nations.

The Russian workers and peasants are determined to defend their dearly won power and liberties against invaders with all the means their vast country puts at the inevitable. But mindful of the inevitable wanton loss of life and treasure on both sides and washing to avert the further ruining of Russia, which must result from the continuation of internal and external fighting, they are prepared to go to any length of concessions as far as real interests of other countries are concerned, if they can secure thereby conditions enabling them to work out peacefully their social schemes.

TWO ROADS OPEN.

I understand that the question of relations with Russia is now engaging the attention of allied statesmen. I venture then to submit to you, Mr. President, that there are now only two courses open to them. One is continued open or disguised intervention on the present or on a still larger scale, which means prolongation of war, further embitterment of the Russian masses, intensification of internal strife, unexampled bloodshed and perhaps total extermination of the Russian bourgeoisie by the exasperated masses, final devastation of the country and in case of the interventionists, after a long struggle, obtaining their end, a white terror eclipsing the atrocities of the Finnish white guardists, inevitable introduction of military dictatorship and restoration of monarchy, leading to interminable revolutions and upheavals and paralyzing the economic development of the country for long decades.

The other alternative, which I trust may commend itself to you, is impartially to weigh and investigate into the one-sided accusations against Soviet Russia, to come to an understanding with the Soviet government, to withdraw the foreign troops from Russian territory and to raise the economic blockade, soothing thereby the excited passions of the masses, to help Russia [illegible] own sources [illegible]

The dictatorship of toilers and producers is not an aim in itself but the means of building up a new social system under which useful work and equal rights would be provided for all citizens irrespective of classes to which they had formerly belonged. One may believe in this ideal or not, but it surely gives no justification for sending foreign troops to fight against it or for arming and supporting classes interested in the restoration of the old system of exploitation of man by man.

I venture to appeal to your sense of justice and impartiality. I hope and trust above all that before deciding on any course of action you will give justice to the demand of "audiatur et altera pars." (Let the other side also be heard).

Discussing possible failure of the miners' case, Williams said:

"The triple alliance is pledged not to strike singly. The strike of one of the member elements means the strike of all three. It would paralyze the country. It may mean a change in the government."

Williams said that acceptance of the miners' demands would "do much to help settle other difficulties." Although the miners postponed their strike—which was favored by a large majority in the recent referendum—to allow the government committee an opportunity to investigate, they will meet with the railway men and transport workers next week. At that time the work of the investigating committee will have reached a stage where the miners are likely to know the probably outcome of the strike. If it is unfavorable [illegible]

THE BIGGEST DOLLARS WORTH YOU EVER BOUGHT—AN INDUSTRIAL FREEDOM CERTIFICATE

You have spent many a dollar, but the dollar you are going to spend for an INDUSTRIAL FREEDOM CERTIFICATE will be the best investment you have ever made.

This world and this nation needs doctoring badly. In our mad scramble to make the world safe for democracy, a good deal of that favorite tonic was lost in the shuffle. Free speech now carries with it a penitentiary sentence. Free press and a tyranical thought controller, are not soul mates. Free assemblage went to smash when hundreds of halls were closed to us.

FREE SPEECH—FREE PRESS—FREE ASSEMBLAGE MUST BE RE-ESTABLISHED.

And Your DOLLAR Will Help.

Political prisoners MUST be given their freedom. Already, through pressure brought to bear by a general demand made by Socialist and labor union bodies, President Wilson has granted amnesty to several Socialist and other prisoners. A. L. Hitcheack, formerly Socialist member of the Cleveland school board, and who is now serving sentence in Atlanta, has had his term of imprisonment reduced from ten years to two years. Frederick Krafft, a New Jersey Socialist, and member of the National Executive Committee, has had his five-year sentence reduced and he will walk forth from the Atlanta penitentiary a free man on April 1.

Our constant AGITATION for the release of political prisoners has accomplished this. It has brought the injustice of these extreme sentences to the attention of the chief executive of this nation, and has induced him to act. We want him to ACT again. We want him to release ALL political prisoners.

FREEDOM FOR ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS MUST BE SECURED

Your DOLLAR Will Help

Prisoners' families must be sustained while the bread earners of these families are serving sentences for being true to their convictions. In Ohio the Socialist Party State Office has contributed on an average of $20 a month to families of imprisoned Socialists. We must continue to assist these families—all families of imprisoned Socialists. In many instances the mother can not go out to work, having children to take care of. These children must not want for food.

WE MUST HAVE A SUSTAINING FUND FOR PRISONERS' FAMILIES

Your DOLLAR Will Help

Comforts for Socialists in prison must be provided for. The Socialists of Ohio, through the State Office, have remitted regular sums to Socialists in prison. These sums averaged $2 a week for each prisoner. This money is used by our comrades in jail to buy tobacco, fruit and other eatables. Prison fare is, at best, a poor excuse for a meal. In time, prison fare becomes nauseating. Our comrades in prison must be given an opportunity to secure a variety of food stuffs.

HELP BUY COMFORTS FOR SOCIALISTS IN PRISON

Your DOLLAR Will Help

YOUR DOLLAR—The dollar you are going to invest in an Industrial Freedom Certificate will be most judiciously spent by us. Literature and leaflets must be printed. Meetings must be held. All these cost money. Speakers must be toured. In Ohio from four to six speakers are constantly in the field agitating for free utterance and the release of political prisoners. Your dollar will help place more speakers in the field. Your dollar will help pay for leaflets which will convince others that what we demand is just and right.

SEND YOUR DOLLAR TODAY

BUY AN INDUSTRIAL FREEDOM CERTIFICATE

NOTE: Socialists who hold membership in Ohio locals are requested to buy their Industrial Freedom Certificate direct from their local secretary, who has a supply on hand. Others should address The Socialist Party of Ohio, R. D. 2, Box 55, Brecksville, Ohio.

Hard and Fast the Blows are Falling

Swiftly they fall, the blows for freedom. Hundreds of willing comrades are putting into these death blows to capitalism the energy and spirit that brings victory. The drive for twenty thousand subscribers and a twice-a-week Ohio Socialist is but in the first days of its successful course, but already the comrades have shown a response and a willingness to help reach the goal that is truely astounding. Letters reach the State Office from enthusiastic comrades in all parts of the country encouraging us to keep up the fight until the goal is reached and pledging their support until it is accomplished.

These letters bring the wherewithal to do it, too. Subscriptions, they bring, and many of them. And that is indeed what is needed. Subscriptions alone will make it possible to make the Ohio Socialist fulfill its mission as an aggressive factor in the battle for Industrial Democracy. Therefore, comrades, let our work be to get more and more subscriptions for upon this foundation alone is it possible to fulfill our object.

Below are names of comrades who have this week answered our call for 20,000 subscribers by sending in subscriptions to the number opposite their names. Let every comrade who has not yet joined the Red Army of Ohio Socialist workers follow their example and help boost our subscription list to 20,000 before Sept. 1.

FIRST HONORS

The honors for securing the first subscriptions on the lists sent to readers in the big drive for 20,000 subscribers and a twice-a-week Ohio Socialist go to Comrade Thomas C. Devine, Socialist Councilman of Toledo. Two half yearlies Comrade Thomas Devine sends us and to prove that he lost no time in getting them he has made a notation on the list to wit: Received 2-25-19, returned 2-25-19. Quick work, we say. But we want to remind Comrade Devine that there are still ten vacant lines on his list. Now that he has secured the first honors we shall expect him to keep right on until he has secured a full list.

Piqua News Meetings in Ohio

By ROBERT JOHNSON

A Piquad asks this question, "Who will do the dirty work under Socialism?" We hate to bawl them out publicly but we think that the republican and democratic politicians will get the job. They're used to doing dirty work. See!

• • •

It is surprising to some people how the Socialist movement is growing in Piqua. They rub their glasses and pinch themselves to see if they are awake. Later they will be kicking themselves for letting the other fellow get into the movement ahead of them. Investigate. Subscribe for the Ohio Socialist—there is no better working class paper published. Buy a book on Socialism. The literature agent will supply you with the best.

• • •

Comrade Katterfeld spent five days in Piqua during the second week of February. The meetings were a success from the opening on Monday evening to the closing Friday with a free oyster supper served by the women comrades of the local. All the meetings were held in our newly remodeled headquarters which holds in the neighborhood of 300 people.

• • •

Some workingmen of Piqua are still obsessed with the idea that while Socialism is a very beautiful and desirable thing, yet it is a dream that will never come true. This view is not new, of course. It has been advanced against every good thing we have. The charge against Cyrus Field, who laid the Atlantic cable, was that he was chasing rainbows. Marconi proposed to telegraph without wires and was laughed at as a visionary, yet his dream is a practical reality in the world today. Professor Rontgen (?) announced his discovery of a light ray that would penetrate solid substances and was jeered at for his pains, yet the X-ray is part of the essential equipment of all modern hospitals and up-to-date medical men. It is but a few years ago that people snickered when the Wright brothers announced the invention of a flying machine that would fly, yet the human bird has flown millions of miles since. Everything in human progress that is desirable was once a dream. Thank God for the dreamers. The scriptures declare that "where there is no vision the people perish," and it is true. An Edison dreams, and lo, the electric light turns night into day; a slave of man, but time fails us to tell of all dreams that come true. Now upon the scene steps the Socialist, hard-headed, practical, scientific, able to give a reason for the hope that is in him and the old, old charge is thrown at him; dreamer, visionary, rainbow chaser, idealist, impossibilist, pro-German, etc. Is he daunted? No, indeed. He is filled with the vision, glorious, soul-thrilling vision of the Co-operative Commonwealth, where justice, love and truth abide. And it's coming swiftly, surely. Say can you see?

"The world is gray with morning light."

• • •

The membership drive is on in Local Piqua. Our goal has been set for 500 members by July 1st. High aspiration, you say? Of course, but WE CAN DO IT. Bring in the name of every possible prospect. Hand them to the Secretary and watch the membership grow. Local Piqua means business, every workingman in the city will receive a personal invitation to ally himself with the Party. The time has come to unload the capitalist.

BAKER SPEAKS AT WARREN

Go hear Charles Baker, state organizer of the Socialist Party, at Warren, Thursday evening, March 13, 7:30 p. m. Woodmen hall, So. Main St.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION

"Last month we gained 27 new members, but how to keep them active in Party work still remains to solve". O. Ruchtaeschel, Cin.

A LIVE LITERATURE AGENT

Comrade Jno. M. Cahalane, local Hamilton's live literature agent is looking after the interest of the Ohio Socialist. He orders a bundle of five for his sales table. He reports a good meeting held by comrade Ella Reeves Bloor, on the last Sunday in Feb. Local's literature agents will hear from the State Office in regards to building up the distribution and sale of Socialists literature in a few deys. Great work along this line is in contemplation.

• • •

A SMALL ONE

"Am sending you a small list," says Comrade Carl Maxwell, of Newark, O. Well, there were 18. If that is Comrade Maxwell's idea of 'a small one,' we wonder just what a big one would be. Little ones like this certainly keep up the average. Thanks, Comrade Maxwell.

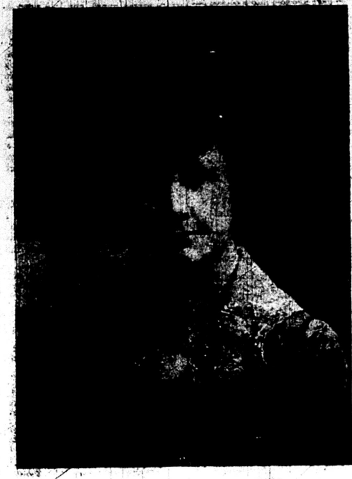
ENCOURAGENMENT

A short but very encouraging letter from Comrade Wm. M. Brown of Galion this week states that Local Galion may be relied upon for the purchase of an Industrial Freedom Certificate for each of its members. Comrade Brown pledges the support of the local to help the Ohio Socialist in its progress toward a twice-a-week paper. The Galion comrades endorse the program of the left wing of the party.



Lilith Martin to Tour Ohio

Another field worker will be toured in Ohio beginning April 1. Lilith Martin, who lectured in this state during the municipal elections of 1917 will be added to our list of organizers. Comrade Martin KNOWS HOW to organize. She has made organization work a special study. Socialist locals under whose direction she will speak are asked to make it a point to invite women to attend the meeting. All men comrades should induce their wives to come to hear this lecturer and organizer.

Many locals in the state have written the State Office that they are preparing to engage special organizers for long periods. If these locals are now in a position to attend to and pay for special organization work we do not know of any one we would rather recommend than Lilith Martin. A routing is now being arranged. Locals desiring Comrade Martin for more than one or two days, should write the State Office at once.

The State Office earnestly requests the full co-operation of all locals in making the Martin tour a success.

TELEGRAM TO HITCHCOCK

Press reports your sentence reduced to two years by President Wilson. Accept congratulations. Wish to express convictions of Socialist Party of Ohio in your innocence and protest against our longer confinement as an act of gross injustice. Will continue fight for your release and that of all political prisoners.

(Signed) HORTENSE WAGENKNECHT,
Acting State Secretary.

A WORD AS TO DUAL STAMPS

Orders for dual stamps to come into the State Office of Ohio. We have decided to again sell them. It seems that some locals find it hard to understand that husband and wife can retain membership by paying one dues per month by use of regular stamps the same as if dual stamps were used.

An amendment to the National Constitution raised the price of dual stamps. One dual stamp now sells for 22c in Ohio. Two regular stamps sell for the same amount. Locals wishing to use dual stamps can purchase them from the State Office for $2.20 a book. A book contains ten husband and ten wife stamps.

NOTICE TO LOCALS.

Get in the local directory. The price has been reduced to $2.50 per year. Locals which have had notices of their meeting places and dates inserted at the rate of $2.50 for six months will have their time extended to one year. Get in the directory. Tell readers where and when your local meets.

ORGANIZER BAKER MEETINGS

Comrade Charles Bakes, state organizer, will speak at the following places the next several days: Hubbard, March 14; Girard, 15; Youngstown, 16. He will probably work in Toledo after this date for a week.

THURBER LEWIS MEETINGS

These dates will be filled by Comrade Thurber Lewis. Comrades in these places should do everything possible to get the comrades together for these meetings and push the work along with the assistance they can render. He will be at Harshman, March 14; Xenia, 15-16; Dayton, 17; Fairview, 17; West Milton, 19; Tippecanoe City, 20; Troy, 21; Osborn, 22; 23d is open.

GREETINGS FROM A RETURNED PRISONER

We are in receipt of a letter from Fellow Worker N. L. Welch, just released from Leavenworth prison after serving an eighteen months' sentence. An article dealing with the cruel conditions under which members of the I. W. W. suffer in that bastile accompanies his letter which we shall publish in next week's issue.

To show how the Ohio Socialist looks to an Industrial Unionist we publish part of Fellow Worker Welch's letter as follows:

"The Ohio Socialist is a fit Socialist publication in every respect and should receive the enthusiastic support of comrades in all localities. I am glad you give equal prominence to the industrial as well as the political end of the movement in your columns which leads us to believe that before long the party will become a factor in the class war and will not stand aside watching the conflict and occasionally offering up-sage advice to the men and women who are in it day after day.

In some localities, at least, it seems the Socialist Party was one thing and the working class quite another thing, but happily that is disappearing and we are falling in line with the harvest hand, bindle stiff, lumberjack and factory hand, which are, after all, the working class in spite of their shortcomings and their seeming inability to grasp an understanding of their class position."

THEY'LL SUBSCRIBE —WHEN ASKED

The way I get subscribers for the Ohio Socialist, says Comrade Perry H. Shipman of Rock Island, Ill., the comrade who holds the record for number of subscriptions secured, is to give two or three copies to a sympathizer and ask for his subscription. They will usually subscribe but don't expect them to sit down and write for the paper. They have to be solicited. Now you know how he does it. And proof that the method pays is seen in the fact that never a week passes but we receive subs from Comrade Shipman. You can do it too. Try. He says the Ohio Socialist is destined to be a great national weekly. What do you think about it, comrade?

MONTANI SEMPER LIBERI.

"Mountaineers are always freemen," such in the motto of our state. It was undoubtedly presumed that West Virginia and earned the right and title to such a motto when she separated herself from the parent state on the issue of slavery, and joined the Union a free state. We mountaineers do love freedom, some more than others; but, just at the present writing, there are not very many mountaineers breaking their neck trying to get into the ranks of the only party that promises freedom—especially the industrial brand.

In response to call for nominations for members of the State Committee and State Secretary, issued February 12, only a few locals have been heard from. Three of these report very little doing, but see some signs of a revival of interest. The Socialists of Cabell county are still mostly "holed up." Let us hope that all of this kind, like Mr. Ground Hog, will feel it safe to come out of their holes very soon.

LET'S FIRE OUR LANDLORD.

I have before me a picture of the handsome, substantial, and commodious Chicago residence, which the National Committee has purchased for National Headquarters of the Socialist Party. I am informed that the National Office has been paying $3,000 per year rent for the present quarters, that the new premises are large enough for all purposes, including a printing establishment, and that the total cost of the property including remodeling and enlarging to suit our purposes and equiping the print[illegible] plant will be $40,000. We are to [illegible] given an opportunity to share in the ownership of our new home and every Socialist contributing as much as [illegible] dollar will receive a certificate of Collective Ownership of such share in the National Socialist building. An organization as large as ours, [illegible] more than 100,000 dues-paying [illegible] bers, should be able to own a home [illegible] our own—I, for one, shall be proud [illegible] possess one of those certificates.

STOP TRADING WITH ENEMY.

This is the idea Comrade Edw[illegible] Firth is trying to impress on us, [illegible] a circular letter, he is about to [illegible] dress to all secretaries of locals. Instead of buying books from capital[illegible] firms whose profits help to maint[illegible] the master class, we are urged to [illegible] our books from the Literature Department, National Headquarters of the Socialist Party, 808 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill., where the profits (though small) will help to support our movement. It is the purpose [illegible] this department to enlarge its sphere of usefulness until it will be able [illegible] furnish, not only the best there is [illegible] radical writings, but any other [illegible] of standard literature. Each Local Secretary is being furnished with [illegible] list of books in stock so that party members may have access to it at any time.

THE DEBT CASE.

The National Secretary has just notified me, as State Secretary, that the National Executive Committee, [illegible] recent meeting, made an order [illegible] "pro rata" the debt of the National Organization for the expenses of [illegible] famous St. Louis convention. The portion of this debt the Socialist Party of West Virginia is expected to pay is $107.40. While our State Legislature is engaged in devis[illegible] ways and means of paying the [illegible] ginia debt, maybe we better get [illegible] and set them a pattern in solv[illegible] the debt problem. By glancing [illegible] the State Secretary's report, comrades, it will be seen that [illegible] plan of raising money will have to be devised, if we expect to [illegible] this debt. I am inclined to await [illegible] proposition from some of the locals before submitting the matter to the state committee.

ON SOCIALIST PUBLICATIONS.

I have lately received from the publishers, 174 Michigan Ave., Detroit, [illegible] copy of The Proletarian, a very interesting Socialist paper, ten copies or issues for 50 cents.

The New York Call writes me that it anticipates having its second-class mailing rights restored and I have promised to send the publishers a list of the local secretaries to enable them to get in touch with the West Virginia comrades.

I am glad, also, to announce that we have a news dealer in Huntington that sells "The Liberator," formerly "The Masses," New York City, [illegible] best Socialist magazine (to my knowledge) in America. Price $2 per [illegible]

We understand we are soon to have a national organ, again, on the [illegible] of the "American Socialist," to [illegible] published at the National Office, Chicago, Ill.

So, comrades, we shall soon [illegible] to get all the Socialist papers [illegible] read, that is, if we have the [illegible] I have never met a Socialist, yet, [illegible] could afford to subscribe for all [illegible] Socialist papers he would like to [illegible] so, those that have them should [illegible] sociable, and pass them [illegible] membering that a Socialist paper [illegible] not fulfilled its mission until [illegible] worn out.

In the matter of subscribing for Socialist papers, I hope the [illegible] will not forget the Ohio Socialist, [illegible] that the local secretaries will [illegible] unteer work to increase the Ohio Socialist subscription list. We have [illegible] surance from the publishers that they will make the paper a bigger [illegible] or a semi-weekly as soon as cash receipts will permit.

Increase Your Bundle Orders

Bundle orders of the Ohio Socialist will be filled in future at 50c per hundred copies. Every local can afford at this low rate to order a weekly bundle for distribtion at meetings, from hose to hose and for sale at meetings. Send in a standing order. Let us put your name down on the list as a dead-in-earnest Ohio Socialist booster. Order a bundle for distribution. Comrades who will use a small bundle for the purpose of securing subscriptions will be mailed the [illegible] postage.

MIDVALE MIGHTY LIVELY

Local Midvale, recently re[illegible] is one of the liveliest locals [illegible] state. The Local is distributing [illegible] hundred copies of the Ohio [illegible] twice a month. The comrades [illegible] arranged for a meeting on [illegible] at Rosewell.

Russian Soviet Government Answers Senator Hitchcock

Another Note Bearing Upon Relations With Russia Withheld From American People

We print below a wireless message from Chicherin, People's Commissaire of Foreign Affairs, to the State Department at Washington. It is dated January 22, and its raison d' etre is as follows:

Senator Hitchcock, the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, delivered a speech on Russian affairs in the United States Senate on January 9, in which he attempted to justify the presence of American troops in Russia, admitting there were 10,200 such troops at Vladivostok, and about 5,000 near Archangel. We do not need here to repeat his arguments in favor of such military intervention, as they seem to have been correctly reported to the Soviet government by the Washington radio-telegram of Jan. 12, which provided the data on which Chicherin based his answer. The remarks of Senator Hitchcock, which called forth a lengthy and spirited debate in the senate, were the result of Senator Johnson's resolution asking for explanations as to the United States' aims in Russia, which was referred to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations in December.

Stockholm, January 22.—The official telegraph bureau of the Russian Soviet government sends out the following information:

The representative of the Russian Soviet government, Maxim Litvinoff, has sent the following note to the State Department in Washington:

On behalf of Mr. Chicherin, People's Commissaire for Foreign Affairs, I am sending you the following statement:

A radio-telegram from Washington, received via Lyons on the 12th of January, relates that a statement has been made by Senator Hitchcock, the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, about the cause for the sending of American troops to Russia. The principal cause is said to have been a desire to prevent the establishment of a German submarine base in Archangel. Whether there ever has been such a cause or not, it does not exist any more.

In respect to the second alleged cause for the invasion, namely, that the intention was to safeguard Allied supplies in Archangel, I beg to remind you that even last year we had started negotiations for this purpose, and we are now still willing to enter into a satisfactory solution of this question. There can no longer be any danger of the supplies falling into German hands.

The third reason for the invasion was stated to be a desire to maintain an open way for diplomatic representatives traveling from and to Russia. I beg to call your attention to the fact that the best method to attain this aim would be to have an understanding with my government. Mr. Francis, the American ambassador, was quite free to return to his homeland unhindered at the time he left Russia. Our only cause in asking him not to remain in Vologda was the great danger threatening his personal security, and we offered him particularly inviting quarters in or around Moscow.

The fourth alleged ground for the invasion is the protection of the Czecho-Slovaks. Yet there has never been any obstacle to reaching an understanding about this issue with my government. We have officially offered the Czecho-Slovaks free passage to their homeland through Russia on the condition that we should protect their safety. We have now reached a full understanding on this matter with Professor Max, the president of the Czecho-Slovak National Council in Russia. He has returned to Bohemia in order to communicate our proposition to the Bohemian government.

Finally, Senator Hitchcock maintains that one reason the formation of any army composed of German and Austrian prisoners. The only now existing obstacle to the return of all war prisoners to their homelands is the presence of the Allied troops, or White Guards, who are under the protection of the Allied troops. We, therefore, cannot understand why this should be a cause for a further maintenance of American troops in Russia.

Eugene V. Debs' Speech At West Side Turn Hall, Cleve

Before a capacity audience of 3,000, which filled West Side Turn hall one hour before his scheduled appearance Debs made his farewell speech.

Debs was calm. His opening words were accorded an instantaneous silence. He said:

"How true it is that there is a divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them how we will! It may seem strange to you, but in my plans, in my dreams, I did not think of going to the penitentiary—and I—I had a thousand times rather go there and spend my remaining days there than to betray this great cause.

"So far as I am concerned it does not matter much. The margin is narrow, the years between now and the sunset are few, and the only care that I have personally is that I may preserve to the last the integrity of my own soul and my loyalty to the only cause worth living for, fighting for, and dying for.

"It is so perfectly fine to me to look into your faces once more, to draw upon you for the only word I have ever had, the only word that I can ever speak for myself. I love mankind, humanity. Can you understand? I am sure you can.

"We are close of kith and kin, we are human and when we get into close touch with each other we come to understand that our good depends upon the good of all humanity.

Opposed to System.

"I am opposed to the system under which we live. I am opposed to the government that compels you, the great body of the American people, to pay your tribute to an insignificant few who enjoy life while the great body of the people suffer, struggle, and agonize without ever having lived. Can you understand? I am sure you can."

"Let me get in touch with you for a while. I am going to speak to you as a Socialist, as a revolutionist, and, if you please, as a Bolshevist.

"And what is the thing that the whole world is talking about? What is it that the ruling class power of the world are denouncing, upon which they are pouring a flood of all their malicious lies—what is it? It is the rise of the workers, the peasants, the soldiers, the common man, who for the first time in history said, 'I have made what there is, I produced the wealth; I want to be heard.'

"Now, for the first time in history, his bowed head lifted, he stands erect and is beginning in his grim strength to shake off the manacles, straighten himself in the sunlight, in his gigantic attitude, opening his eyes, beginning to see for the first time, beginning to ask why it is that he must press his rags closer to his body, that he may not touch the rich man's costly silks, that he himself produced—why it is that that he must walk in alleys, while he is forbidden to enter the great palaces he has erected—why it is that he must support all the banquets of the world that he may not taste.

"He is beginning to think. That is Bolshevism! That is the revolution in Russia! That is the beginning of the end of capitalism and the end of the beginning of socialism!

Earth Beginning to Shake.

"And because we say this they are going to put us in jail. With every drop in my veins I despise their law and I defy them. If the Scriptures are true, Paul was sent to prison, and shortly afterward the prison doors were opened by an earthquake.

"The earth is beginning to shake beneath the feet of the profiteers.

"Have they outlawed the red flag here? The red necktie? The red socks? How perfectly foolish! Have you heard about the pope in the middle ages forbidding the comets to appear? Why, the other day the chaplain in the House of Representatives asked God to give congress wisdom!

"I am appealing to you tonight—the crowd, the mass, the common people—I do not care anything about the Supreme Court, begowned, befettered, bewhiskered old fossils, corporation lawyers; every one of them—they have not decided anything. They never have; they never will.

"Sixty years ago the predecessors of the same body confirmed the validity of the fugitive slave law. They declared that a black man had no rights which his master was bound to respect. They imagined that chattel slavery was secure for all time. And within five years that infamous institution was swept from the land in a torrent of blood.

Did Not Meet Issue.

"They did not dare to meet the issue. They did not decide that the Espionage law was constitutional. They dared not put that decision upon record. Have you read that law? The amendment to that law that makes it a crime for you to criticise crime in the United States? That makes this country take the place of old Russia under the czar?

"Have you ever read it? Know anything about it? Know that it is a gag upon your lips, fetters all your constitutional rights? That law—do I respect it? No!

"How perfectly fine it is to stand straight up and do what Wendell Phillips said: "When they pass that kind of a law, put it under your feet."

"Do not say a word against war—not one. That is treason—to the ruling classes. They make war; you do not. You never did. You paid all the bills, shed your blood, made all the sacrifices. You do not say a word. Have your limbs shot off, your eyes gouged out, gassed, come back, and then hunt for a job.

"The finest thing I know is to carry yourself as a man—face humanity, look up into the sun and not feel ashamed of yourself; walk straight before the world, and live with it on terms of peace; look at yourself without a blush. Have you ever tried it? If you have, you are a Bolshevist.

"The great world is in travail today. A great upheaval is shaking the foundation of capitalist society. The master class are driven to extremities. They are going to establish a League of Nations to preserve the peace, to prevent war. What does it mean?

Master Class Staggers.

"Simply this: That the master class itself is staggered by the cost of modern war. Here are all these modern nations, great and powerful in economic and military ways; straining to harmonize their various conflicting interests. In theory it is perfectly fine; but how ridiculous it is to imagine for a moment that the interests of nations that are innately in conflict can be permanently harmonized."

"What does it mean? It is the last, desperate, temporary expedient of the master class, the commercial interests, the economic interests, to prolong their sovereignty. Have you any views on it?

"Who is it that is making the terms of peace? Is it not strange that the great, common people who shed their blood, fought the war, made the sacrifices, should have no voice in making the terms of peace? The working class—the working class, which for 1,000 years constituted the slaves, the tragedy of history—I recall it as I speak, I can see across all the centuries, the patricians of ancient Rome in the amphitheaters, while they poured their slaves into the Coliseum to destroy them for pastime—and through the middle ages, how the serfs were killed for their profit and glory—through all that I can see the working class, that youth, the victims of the ages, the martyrs of the centuries, you who went to war when it was declared, you who were in the trenches, you who shed your blood like water, you who suffered the agony that human speech can never tell, you who had your limbs torn from your bodies—you have no voice in that peace conference, no representation there.

"Just one second-hand one, Sam Gompers. The other day Sam, four-foot Sam, was banqueted by a seven-foot Russian duke, and the duke was in poor company.

"The world is in turmoil. Where is your representative; where did you elect him? What did you have to say about these terms? Not one real representative, but politicians and diplomats and thieves and liars, the tools of your masters—that is who is there.

"They are going to make the world perfectly safe for democracy, and that is why I am going to the penitentiary.

World Being Remade.

"You can think a bit, and I want to stir you into thought and action. We are on the eve of tremendous developments. The world before your eyes is being destroyed and recreated. Russia is making a beginning; the Soviet is just a sample. They have shed some blood, they have made some mistakes, and I

Locals Co-operate to Buy National Headquarters

Probably never before in its history has the organization machinery of the Socialist Party responded more loyally than in this campaign for a party-owned national headquarters. More than five thousand local and branch secretaries are now at work, addressing and mailing to members of their respective organizations letters containing an appeal to help purchase a national headquarters for the Socialist Party.

More than 100,000 members are being reached by a direct and personal appeal in letter form. Dollars are already rolling in. "Just the very thing to do," writes a comrade. "Right on top of all this persecution we will show them that we are stronger than ever."

The organization department at national headquarters constitutes a very busy scene. This is especially true on Saturday afternoons, when Wm. F. Kruse and wife captain from thirty to fifty Yipsels in the work necessary for this drive for a $40,000 headquarters fund. No more devoted party workers can be found than these Chicago members of the Young People's Socialist will flaunt in the face of capitalism our determination to grow daily more efficient in our efforts at its abolition.

An investment of at least one dollar is asked of every party member. A dollar is, however, by no means the maximum amount members should invest. Many comrades can invest five or ten dollars. Some can invest even more than this. Every member is asked to do his best. Ownership certificates will be issued for all amounts of a dollar or over sent in.

"Let's be as generous with our dollars as Judge Landis was with his years!" is the slogan which will carry the headquarters campaign through to success. Sentencing Kruse, Engdahl, Tucker, Berger and Germer to twenty years each in the Leavenworth penitentiary will but spur the party membership on to greater efforts; will but make the Socialist Party more formidable and invincible.

Third I. W. W. Trial

Wichita, Kan.—Four months after President Wilson said, "and thus the war comes to a close," the trial of 32 members of the Industrial Workers of the World, charged with having hindered the prosecution of the war, began in the Federal court here today.

This is the third and last large trial of Industrial Workers of the World. The two other trials, at Chicago and at Sacramento, resulted in severe sentences being imposed upon 146 who were at the time prominent in the work of the I. W. W. In no case where the men have been tried in large numbers has there been an acquittal.

Finnish Socialists Win Plurality

Washington, D. C.—In spite of the fact that for more than a year the Finnish Socialists have been shot, imprisoned and starved to death by the tens of thousands, by the White Guard representing the propertied interests of that country aided by German armies, they won a splendid victory in the election, which took place in that country a few weeks ago.

The Finnish landtag, the parliament of that country, has two hundred members. Out of this total the Socialists elected eighty members; the Republicans, seventy; Monarchists, 22; Swedes, 22.

The Republicans are divided between the Young Finns and Agrarian, thus the Socialists have twice as many members as any other party, although short of a majority.

Police Meet Buffalo U

Buffalo, N. Y.—Police armed with shot guns guarded Niagara Square here, when some forty thousand unemployed endeavored to hold a demonstration to demand work.

The Soldiers', Sailors', Workers' and Farmers' Council of Buffalo and vicinity, which called the meeting, is a Russian Soviet and its members are possessed with the desire to overthrow the city government and help themselves, in the opinion of Mayor Buck.

That was the reason given by the mayor for the prevention of the assemblage of the unemployed at the McKinley monument on Monday morning of last week at the call of the Workers' Council. The constitutional right of freedom of speech and assemblage apparently did not enter in

"We don't understand such chaos," the other countries say. "Have a revolution and you will," reply the Bolsheviki, who worry more about the therhood of man than about the ency of their own country.

According to communistic theory ch dictates legislation in Russia, object of the revolution is to ge the state into a mere admin rator of production. It doesn't ern, mind you; it merely presides. committee. It is Socialism. Bolsheviki are trying to "cen industrial undertakings. This lready been accomplish the s of the manufactur gar, l, tea, tobacco, and ade in the products of each monopolized by a central o which barters commodities directly with the central offices for other commodities. No money is used. These central offices have two functions: they are offices of statistics and accounts and they control the orders given to manufacturing plants.

Merchants and factory owners are under the double oversight of the "extraordinary commissions to check speculation, sabotage and counter-revolution," and the labor committee. Merchants caught speculating are shot. Engineers and factory managers who fail to report at their places of business are arrested for sabotage.

The substantial owner of a paper mill was captured and cornered by his own workmen. As is usual with the Bolsheviki, a committee was appointed to run the mill. Soon discovering its inability to make progress, it called upon the owner at his spacious country villa, with a request that he return and help them out of the difficulty.

Said the owner: "Very well, but what salary am I to be paid?"

"How much were you earning before the revolution?" asked the committee, nudging each other.

Said the owner: "Ten thousand roubles a year."

"We will give you half of that the first year," said the committee, after a brief consultation, and counting on their fingers; "the second year we will give you four thousand roubles; the third year three thousand and the fourth year twenty-five hundred roubles."

"But," said the owner, "it is impossible for me to live on five thousand roubles, let alone twenty-five hundred. I have my house, my servants, the food bills, my horses and carriages. It is impossible, unthinkable."

Again the peasants put their tousled heads together. "We've got it," they announced at last triumphantly. "The difficulty here is that you are living in the wrong place. You bring your family and things and come to live in one of our huts. Your expenses won't be much there. Besides we've decided that your villa will make a fine restaurant for the people."

This shift was enforced. The whereabouts of the mill owner no one knows; while his villa has become a popular tea-drinking rendezvous for peasants and returned soldiers.

So far as an exchange of commodities with Germany was concerned, so great was the latter country's need of metals, asbestos, lubricants, flax, hemp and textiles, that she promptly accepted the Bolshevist idea of sea trade barter and sent to Petrograd ships laden with coal. Through exorbitant values were placed on the commodities, the trade was effected after much bargaining. In addition to coal, Russia in this manner also procured drugs, dyestuffs and machine parts from Germany. Soviet foreign trade experts therefore believe themselves justified in boasting: "You see, our method works. Nothing succeeds like simplicity!"

A Farmers View of the Ballot

Dear Comrade: I am somewhat a student of the conditions of thinks as they are today. Have been a Socialist for years. We have always advocated the ballot to adjust our troubles. We have also warned the capitalist class that unless they corrected a lot or social evils that there was bound to follow severe troubles. This is not of our making or wishing.

I have tried to pursuade myself that the ballot could and would adjust things. Last year I had to acknowledge to myself that the great social question to be solved could not be done by the ballot.

Now I am getting to the point that affects this part of the country and it will hold good wherever the bonafide farmers exists. From time to time the very best farmers here call on me and gradually I feel them out. Today one of the staunchest farmers, a very religious man, called on me and he was certainly belligerent. He complained bitterly of the way the farmer was getting skinned. Hides selling at $1.35 per green hide and shoes at $6.00 and of the poorest brands. Cotton selling for 10 cents that actually cost him 18 cents to produce. Cattle selling for 6 cents and the packing houses basing the finished product on 18 cents. He claimed that his best cattle graded down to 6 cents. He said that whenever the organized laborers were ready to strike that the farmers would furnish all the eggs, meat and provisions they had. That never before in his life was there so much unrest among the farmers and that they hoped that something would start so they could unload the capitalist that has made fortunes out of this war while they were forced to sell all their crops to keep the soldiers fed and now have nothing. The high prices had drained about all they had. That children could not go to school on account of poverty. They had worked hard all year and nothing to show for it.

I hope you can pass this information along where it is most needed. The mass phy-scology is fast changing. The great organizations of labor are going to find the farming class with them at heart. They even hope that something will happen to stop this exploitation. Their hearts and mind are coming open and they are beginning to see the light. I am leaving off a lot that I could inform you about. There is the greatest unrest among the farmers of our country. I mean the "sure nuff" toiler, not the land lord in the city. The renters compose about 80 per cent. of the farmers. Now I get this information from our best farmers. Not Socialists, but old life long Demos. and Repubs.

It is amusing when I read the ordinary magazine and dailies. They do not know what a volcano they are sitting on. They will not do a thing to relieve the great common working man.

I simply feel that I [illegible] you of the conditions [illegible] ness of it. Your left [illegible] Socialist hits the spot [illegible] truth be [illegible].

PEOPLE DECIDE GREAT ISSUES

By Eugene V. Debs

The decision is perfectly consistent with the character of the supreme court as a ruling class tribunal. It could not have been otherwise.

So far as I am personally concerned the decision is of small consequence. But there is an issue at stake of vital interest to the American people. It involves the fundamental right of free speech. Without this our boasted freedom is a delusion and a farce.

The supreme court has dodged the issue. It has held the Espionage law valid without affirming its constitutionality. The real issue before the court was the constitutionality of the act. This issue the supreme court did not dare to decide.

What the supreme court did decide is that the constitution is another "scrap of paper."

Great issues are not decided by courts but by the people.

I have no concern about what the coterie of begowned corporation lawyers in Washington may decide in my case. The court of final resort is the people and that court will be heard from in due time.

The decision just rendered places the United States where old Russia under the czar left off. It is good for at least a million Bolshevist recruits in this country.

I stand by every word of the Canton speech, the supreme court to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Espionage law is perfectly infamous and a disgrace to even the capitalist despotism at whose behest it was enacted.

Sixty years ago the supreme court affirmed the validity of the Fugitive Slave law to save chattel slavery. Five years later that infamous institution was swept from the land in a torrent of blood.

I despise the Espionage law with every drop in my veins and I defy the supreme court and all the powers of capitalism to do their worst.

All hail to the workers of America—and the world! The day of emancipation is dawning.

The Song of the Wage Slave

ROBERT W. SERVICE

When the long, long day is over, and the big boss gives me my pay,
I hope that it won't be hell-fire as some of the parsons say,
And I hope that it won't be heaven, with some of the parsons I've met—
All I want is just quiet, just to rest and forget.

Look at my face, toil-furrowed, look at my calloused hands;
Master, I've done Thy bidding, wrought in Thy many lands—
Wrought for the little masters, big-bellied they be and rich;
I've done their desire for a daily hire, and I die like a dog in a ditch.

I have used the strength Thou hast given, Thou knowest I did not shirk;
Threescore years of labor—Thine be the long day's work.
And now, big master, I'm broken and bent, and twisted and scarred,
But I've held my job, and Thou knowest, and Thou wilt not judge me hard.
Thou knowest my sins are many, and often I've played the fool—
Whiskey and cards and women, they made me the devil's tool.

I was just like a child with money; I flung it away with a curse,
Feasting a fawning parasite, or glutting a harlot's purse;
Then back to the woods repentant, back to the mill or the mine,
I, the worker of workers, everything in my line.

Everything hard but headwork (I'd no more brains than a kid),
A brute with brute strength to labor, doing as I was bid;
Living in camps with men-folk, a lonely and loveless life;
Never knew kiss of sweetheart, never caress of wife;
A brute with brute strength to labor, and they were so far above—
Yet I'd gladly have gone to the gallows for one little look of love.

I, with the strength of two men, savage and shy and wild—
Yet, how I'd ha' treasured a woman, and the sweet, warm kiss of a child!
Well, 'tis Thy world, and Thou knowest I blaspheme and my ways be rude
But I've lived my life as I found it, and I've done my best to be good.

I, the primitive toiler, half-naked and grimed to the eyes,
Sweating it deep in their ditches, swining it stark in their styles;
Hurling down forest before me, spanning tumultuous streams,
Down in the ditch building o'er me palaces fairer than dreams.

Boring the rock to the ore-bed, driving the road through the fen,
Resolute, dumb, uncomplaining, a man in a world of men.
Master, I've filled my contract, wrought in Thy many lands;
Not by my sins wilt Thou judge me, but by the work of my hands;
Master, I've done Thy bidding, and the light is low in the west,
And the long, long shift is over—Master, I've earned it—Rest.

The remains that nobody was called account for having the guns in possession and Haywood is still ployed in the clothing room and not punished for the offense which is a most serious one as firearms in possession of inmates may lead to the gravest consequences.

Frustrated in their efforts to get "Big Bill" involved in a jail delivery t the officials have not given up pe and are hot on his trail and he under constant surveillance by prisoner stool pigeons working for the officials and some guards seeking promotion. They will resort to any method to cast discredit upon the class war prisoners and there isn't anything so foul and contemptible that they wouldn't resort to in order to win favor in the eyes of the men higher up in the Department of Justice and the I. W. W. have become targets of special abuse at their hands.

I was discharged from Leavenworth [illegible] Saturday, Feb. 15, after completing an 18-month sentence for my Socialist activities in connection with the Michigan Socialist, of which I was editor. And not content with the usual examination of my belongings before I was discharged I was given the benefit of an extra frisk a few minutes before my release by Garvin, a guard at the institution, whose crowning glory is stool pigeon efficiency, hoping to find among my effects something that would involve Bill Haywood, or any of the others. Haywood has the job of packing up a man's belongings prior to his discharge and they hoped to find letters or articles for publication among my things so they could put the blame on Haywood. Much to Garvin's chagrin and evident disappointment I had nothing that didn't belong to me and the Sherlock Holmes is now probably racking his small brain and laying further plans along the line of stool pigeon work.

Radical literature is barred by the officials and publications enjoying mail privileges are wantonly destroyed if sent to a prisoner known as a Socialist or I. W. W. men and that contrary to their own rules, which provide for the admission of any matter handled by the postoffice.

Bobba, a [illegible] serving one year, is also under special surveillance. Some few weeks ago Pietro Pierre was arrested in Cleveland and charged with plotting the life of President Wilson and an attempt is being made to involve Bobba in the affair. Pierre served an 18-month sentence for anti-draft activities and was known to the inmates of Leavenworth as a quiet mannered, well educated man. The attempt to implicate Bobba is thought to be another scheme of the prison officials who still fear that light of day will be turned on their dark doings in the conduct of the affairs of the Penitentiary and that their mismanagement and wanton brutality will be exposed. Bobba was denied permission to issue a public statement to explode the machinations to implicate him in any "plot" to kill Wilson [illegible] McAdoo.

Calm and serene they wait patiently for the day of deliverance and are cheered by the news of working class advancement and solidarity that find its way to the bastile.

The militant workers of America remember Calumet, Homestead, Everett, Colorado and Lawrence. Will they remember Leavenworth?

Shall Debs Go To Prison?

By CHARLES BAKER

Shall Gene Debs go to jail? Will the workers permit this "human flower" to wither and perish, in a foul, prison cell, where the pure air and beautiful sunshine never enter? Where all the beautiful things are shut out of one's life?

Having spent fifteen months behind prison bars, I know what it means. I know what it meant to me in possession of youth, knowing [illegible] I realize what it would mean to Gene Debs, to spend the few remaining years of his life behind prison walls.

Are we [illegible] to say, "It's too bad," and permit this crime to take place, or shall we appeal this case to the court of last resort—the workers? As for me, comrades, I am ready for any action necessary, to prevent the execution and carrying out of this crime. Call on me. I am at your service, no matter what the cost.

I feel like a criminal, to be at large to enjoy liberty, when so many of our comrades are confined behind prison bars. Let us arouse the workers, hold mass meetings, protest and carry on such agitation that they will have to throw open the prison doors. Shall we remain silent, until the enraged workers open the prison doors for them? If so we will not have long to wait, after the portals of prison close behind Our Gene.

In behalf of Gene, and our other imprisoned comrades, the fellow workers I pledge all that I have.

The Red Flag

"THE ANCIENT BANNER

By MARY S. DAUGHERTY

Bills have been introduced in congress to prohibit the display of the "Red Flag" in meetings and parades.

Why suppress the flag of the early Christians?

It is a fact recorded in history that the early Christians carried the red flag and won their triumphal victories under the "Crimson Banner." Even our Christmas red bells are emblems of the Blood of Immanual, and have been used at Christmas ever since the early days of Christiandom. In the Methodist hymn book there is a hymn containing the words, "The Blood Red Banner of Immanuel." The old, old crimson ensign, was an emblem of peace and good will to man, and, of health and the fruits of toil.

The origin of the word "flag" comes from the word-root of "flame" a red color, first borrowed from the crimson sun beams. The red of all modern flags was borrowed from that of the flag of the ancient unions.

The red flag was suppressed before the French revolution, because the unions had become too strong. It was carried again at the time of the French revolution of 1798. It was the flag of the Masonic order for over a thousand years. If we refer to our own time we will see that the Revolutionary War of 1776 was fought under the red flag, for our Stars and Stripes were not invented until later.

We find today that it is the disgraceful ignorance of modern prejudice and censure that has filled the land with misrepresentations and misunderstandings.

The red flag is a flag of hope and protection for the oppressed of all nations at all times, is international in scope, representing the "blood," the brotherhood of humanity; not the cold clotted blood of the battle field, but the warm life's blood flowing in the veins of all humanity.

Let us not suppress the flag of the early Christians.

("Ancient Lowly," by Ward, for reference.)

CINCINNATI PROTESTS

At the last meeting of Local Cincinnati, March 6, 1919, the question of a proposed national headquarters in Chicago, Ill., to be owned by the Socialist Party of the U. S. A., was taken up and discussed. And Local Cincinnati went on record protesting against the method used by the National Executive Committee in spending $40,000 of the party's money without the consent of the members by referendum. We maintain that they have not complied with the national constitution in so doing.

Comrade Baker spoke to a crowd of eager listeners at Canton. The landlord refused to heat the hall, but Baker took care of that. He warmed the atmosphere for an hour and a half to the entire satisfaction and comfort of his audience, so we are told. "Leave it to Baker."

E. LIVERPOOL PLEASED

"Comrade Chas. Baker spoke to a very enthusiastic audience of about 200 March 12. Everyone was more than pleased. Never had a better talk. Collection was $41.82, literature $6.75, and 12 O. S. subs sold. Hope to have him again."—J. R. Larimore, organizer.

My mother tells me not to mind;
She says, "Why, don't you see?
Because you are the littlest one,
You just belong to me!"

Russian Soviet Answers Senate

in the above mentioned radio-telegram, some prominent members of the principal political party in the United States could not quite understand the reasons of Senator Hitchcock. They expressed their wish that American troops in Russia should be withdrawn as soon as possible.

We share their wish to re-establish normal relations between the two countries, and we are ready to eliminate everything which may be an obstacle to such relations.

This is not the first time we are making an offer of this kind. In October we sent an offer of this character through the Norwegian Minister in Russia. A week later we made a similar offer through Mr. Christiansen, an attache of the Norwegian Legation, at the time of his leaving Moscow. On the third of November we invited the representatives of the neutral countries in Moscow and asked them to [illegible] a proposition peace negotiations. On the 23d of December our representative, Mr. Litvinoff, communicated once more with the Allied ambassadors in Stockholm the desire of the Russian government to reach a friendly settlement of all questions at issue. He also sent an appeal to President Wilson in London; thus the responsibility for the fact that no agreement has been thus far reached does not lie with us.

We have had an opportunity to hear various American officers and soldiers express their astonishment at their being held in Russia, especially when we pointed out to such soldiers that the reason for their being in Russia seemed to be to put back on the shoulders of the Russian people the yoke which they have thrown off. The results of these explanations of ours have not been unsatisfactory to our personal relations with these American citizens.

We hope that [illegible] desire for peace expressed by the above-mentioned sen-

The Way The Battle Goes

By CHARLES BAKER.

Excuse me for not writing more often, Minnie is with me now, so you will receive dayly reports from the front line trenches.

At Greenwich I gathered several comrades together and reorganized. We have several good, live, and very red comrades there, so I believe they will remain in line this time.

At Wadsworth, we had a very good meeting, the comrades themselves were surprised, the organization there is in good shape. The meeting paid for itself, and turned money into the local treasury. Comrades well pleased.

At Barberton, believe me, the comrades are on the job. Meeting held in the high school assembly room, a splendid musical program was arranged. The comrades say it was the best meeting ever held in Barberton. Many O. S. subs were sold. Seven new members were admitted. Very successful. Money turned into local treasury.

Who said Cuyahoga Falls was not on the Socialist map. We had a splendid meeting there in the city hall, several O. S. cards were sold. New life to the move elect des

LEWIS MAKES GOOD AT HAMILTON

Comrade Thurber Lewis' meeting at Hamilton on March 6, 7, 8 and 9 proved successful in every way. He made a great hit with the comrades and his audiences, says Comrade John M. Cahalane. A larger hall than the local headquarters had to be secured for the Sunday meeting and it was packed and Comrade Lewis delivered the goods in great shape. Literature sales were good as was the collection. Local Hamilton has ordered 8,000 of the "No-Work" leaflets from the National Office.

In the recent notice of the death of Comrade Wentz at Hamilton appearing in the Ohio Socialist, it was stated that the funeral address was delivered by Comrade Henry Hinkel. This was an error as the address was delivered by Comrade Ex-Mayer Fred Hinkle.

TOOHEY AT FAIRPORT HARBOR

Comrade M. A. Toohey of Toledo speaks at Fairport Harbor, March 23, 8 p. m., at Finnish Socialist hall, on Blum St. This meeting is being arranged by the Finnish comrades and it is hoped that at this time it will be possible to organize an English speaking local. Everybody should lend a hand to make this meeting a success.

THE HANGMAN RELENTS

After devoting, for months past, its pages to the hounding of all Socialists who did not forget their internationalism in the trying hour of war the New Appeal relents. After branding as pro-German every Socialist Party official who remained true to the principles of the party, having deliberately chosen the role of a suppressor of minority opinion, having assisted to the limit of its ability, the persecution, prosecution and jailing of every comrade who dared raise his voice for internationalism, it now proclaims itself the appointed champion of all political prisoners.

We cannot believe that any Socialist or radical who is now in prison or under indictment will find the services of its traducers acceptable. Men and women who have the courage of their convictions will not stoop to accept the proffers of the cowardly.

Every capitalist denouncer of socialism and socialists was far outstripped by the New Appeal in its deliberately lying, vicious and preposterous denunciations.. That the New Appeal was perfectly aware of its forgeries and falsehoods cannot be doubted. It chose deliberately a policy against socialism, it chose deliberately to jail Socialists, to poison with untruth the public mind, it chose deliberately the role of hangman of the Socialist Party as a political party and individual socialists as socialists.

Having witnessed the closing of prison doors upon thousands of dissenters and the stifling of many strong voices within the dungeons of capitalism it should be content to rest upon its distinguished laurels. It might be content to not add insult to injury. It might, but for one thing.

Time was when the Appeal had an ideal. That was in the time of J. A. Wayland and Fred Warren. Wayland is dead. Warren is no more with the Appeal. The younger Waylands are not, we are informed connected with the paper in any way. The New Appeal is a privately owned paper—with large financial obligations. Being such, it must pay dividends. It is not likely to long follow a policy at variance with its financial interests.

The role of hangman of all internationalists may or may not have proven profitable. However, the entire program of the Appeal to combat socialism has fallen to pieces. It's mission to Europe composed of renegade and discredited Socialists returned unhonored, abroad or at home. Its League for Democracy has disappeared from the horizan of human endeavor. Its support of every antagonistic weapon against Socialism failed to bring it the support of the multitude.

The Appeal needs a conveyance to "come back" on. "Freedom for political prisoners" affords the coveted means.

Moral—Support the party controlled press and keep your reputation.

AS USUAL

"As usual," we remark when our attention is called to the formation of a nonpartisan party that is to dispute the right of the workers of Piqua, O., at the next election to control the affairs of the city they have builded. It is not the first time the method has been tried. It is old. So old that it is commonly recognized for what it is—the last line of defense of capitalism and old political gangs against the forward march of the workers and the rising tide of class consciousness.

It is a good sign—the sign of approaching defeat of capitalism. Socialists welcome the coming of the sign as the coming of spring and a new day. We welcome it with renewed activities, with more propaganda, more agitation, better organization. It is the sign of coming victory in Piqua as elsewhere. It is heartily welcome!

THE SPARTACANS

The recent victories of the German Spartacans have yielded them an intrenchment within the government that augurs well for an extension of their power. The Spartacus Soviets are to receive constitutional recognition as economic controllers of labor and production. Extensive socialization of industries is also conceded.

Economic control of industry by the soviets of workers means the attainment of a dictatorial position from which they cannot be removed by any political power. It may mean, in fact, a displacement of the present political government by one more economic in nature functioning through the soviets.

To control the industries is to control the vital organs of a nation. This control the Spartacans have won. Further victories over the Ebert group and acquisition of greater power now becomes possible. These recent victories of the Spartacans are more significant than any world history recently made.

German Spartacans—German productive forces and science. Russian Bolsheviki—Russian natural resources—some combination!

You can keep your old clothes in America now—the returned soldiers need them. Ten calls for every garment so the papers say.

"The Song of the Shirt-less" is the paeon of victory the heroes may sing as they wend their way to the closed job.

It isn't expected, but it would be in good order for District Attorney Wertz to apologize to the convicts now that it has been determined who fired his house.

Two Live Locals Work For Socialism

Here are two plans of better work for socialism which two locals are putting across. They are both good, both will get results. Both will make socialism a factor in the political and industrial life of the cities where they are being carried out. Both are worthy the serious consideration of every comrade. Both are worthy of being patterned after in your own local. Talk these plans over at your next business meeting. Improve upon them if you can but at least give them a tryout in your own local. They are result getters. Try them.—(Editor).

LOCAL NORWOOD'S PLAN.

Ten good reasons why it will work.

A motion was passed at a meeting of Local Norwood, at which the following plan was put into force. At all propaganda meetings a collection should be taken up and that all moneys so collected above the expenses of the said meeting shall be put into subscriptions to the Ohio Socialist, for three months each.

The names of these subscribers to be furnished by the membership; that is, wherever a member knows of some one whom he thinks can be landed by such a trial, this person to be placed on the list, and it is believed the following will result:

1—An indexer was elected to enter the name with the start and ending date of the sub. The indexer is to watch these subs and at their expiration turn the name over to the organizer.

2—The organizer then has a starting point to work on, he pays the subscriber a visit and has a talk with him.

3—This may result in a possible 6 month or 1-year sub.

4—It may also result in securing a new member.

5—By this plan we can find out the sentiment of the person visited, which can be recorded as it is found.

6—If the sentiment at the end of the trial sub. proves favorable and is so recorded, we then have a signature for our nomination petitions for election. We know just where to go and do not have to put in a lot of time looking all over town for signatures.

7—Instead of ordering bundle lots and putting in the time passing out the same we leave that to Uncle Sam and the mail man.

8—We realize that the bundle plan is all right in its way, but we also realize that if the autocrats at Washington wish to put the O. S. out of business with a small sub list this can easily be done but with a paid-in-advance sub. list, which will constantly be growing, the putting out of business proposition will not be so easy. We realize that you may have 10,000 subs, yet you may be putting out 50,000 papers each week in bundle form but the Washington postoffice authorities will only give you credit for the 10,000.

9—After reading the O. S. this will mean a sure Socialist vote.

10—Finally a sure BOLSHEVIK for no one can read the O. S. and carefully consider it's contents without coming to the conclusion that the capitalist papers have lied and that after seeing the light of what the Russian comrades are doing for the poor down-trodden masses, the reader must then realize why it is that 3,000,000 Red Guards are ready and willing to lay down their lives for the sake of defending the government which has done so much for them.

HOW THEY DO IT IN ASHTABULA

Dear Comrades: This is to notify you that Comrade Wm. H. Fox has resigned as financial secretary and that I was duly elected in his place at our last meeting. I also wish to tell you that we are doing team work here now in proper shape. We have elected two captains, they in turn have chosen their crew from among the membership. The object is to compete for subscriptions to the O. S., and membership for the local. The contest will close on May 1. The losing side to pay all expenses of a banquet to be held on or before May 5, in which all members will participate. The new members are to join the side that brings in their application. The captains are Comrade John W. Ellison and E. J. Hewitt. They are both wide awake and on the job, so look out for results from now on.

Savage Sentence of Court Impels Labor to Demand Debs' Release

No single act of the capitalist class, drunk with power that it is, has aroused the workers of this nation so much as the conviction of Eugene V. Debs in the Supreme Court, that highest representative of capitalism in America.

A nation-wide, in fact an international movement has, since his conviction, been inaugurated to awaken an agitation to keep Debs from the maw of a capitalist prison. Every legal agency that the Socialist Party and other radical organizations in this country can grasp will be used to keep him from becoming the victim of that senseless and oppressive intolerance that has set America apart from the rest of the world since the Espionage law became a part of our governmental machinery of persecution.

Every radical, even every sane conservative in this country knows that Eugene V. Debs is innocent of wrong. Millions have heard his voice in protest against the evils of the criminal capitalist class. Millions have read his many writings filled as they are with the spirit of love for the down-trodden and the spirit of revolt against oppression's iron hand. His friends are legion, his admirers are the millions that make up the common masses. Will these millions stand idly by while he who has given his life for them, is sent away to the horrors of a capitalist dungeon?

They will not! They will protest. They will sound a warning to the powers that be to lay hands off of Debs. They will let it be known that they are the court of last resort in this nation. That their decision is for Debs and against his conviction. Their voice is rising now in one tremendous nation-wide protest against this savage sentence imposed upon the most lovable man that has risen from the ranks of labor since Lincoln.

Protest meetings are under way throughout the nation. Let every local organize a protest meeting against the carrying out of this barbarity against Debs. Make every meeting a protest meeting, not only for Debs but for all political prisoners. Organize a protest meeting. Call upon every speaker you can possibly arrange a meeting to address you. Make "Freedom for Debs and ALL Political Prisoners" your rallying cry until this monstrous iniquity is buried deep beneath the foundations of real democracy. Keep Debs from prison. Your protest will do it!

With our Organizers and Speakers

Here are the routings of our state organizers for the next several days. Comrades in these localities are urged to do everything possible toward the success of these meetings. Don't leave everything for the organizer to do after he arrives on the ground. You can help greatly in making each of these meetings a huge success by taking an active part in helping in the advertising, talking up the meeting, making sure that the organizer is looked after when he arrives and doing a comrade's full share in making socialism hum during and after these meetings. Get busy.

fight with all their power, one thing will bring down on the Bolsheviki the armed forces of all the capitalist nations in the world (if, considering the temper of the people at home the capitalists dare risk it) and that is the adoption of a constitution, which, in the words of Mr. Feran, "takes from the owners, whether domestic or alien, all of their lands and everything connected with those lands, including mineral, timber and water right, and reinvests that title in the government."

The essence of Bolshevism is that it is taking the land, the industries and natural resources for the use of the people. It is striking a death blow at capitalism. That is the essential fact. The rest is camouflage intended to obscure the real point at issue.

Mr. Francis Testifies

David R. Francis, ambassador from the United States to Russia, testified before the senate committee which is investigating Bolshevism, the other day. Mr. Francis had been held in reserve by the committee as a star witness, who was to demolish Bolshevism. But the committee must have been seriously disappointed after listening to Mr. Francis' statements. He did not seem to know very much about what happened in Russia. He gave this and that as his "opinion" and he "believed" this or that to be true, but of fact and proof he had none to offer.

Thus for instance, Mr. Francis said:

> "And now, at this point, I wish to state I believe that Lenine was a German agent from the very beginning. Germany would never have permitted him to return to Russia through German territory, had the case been otherwise."

It was easy, of course, for Mr. Francis to believe that, considering his attitude toward the Bolsheviki, but where is the proof? Mr. Francis did not cite any facts to support his "belief," although he stated his further "belief" that:

> "He (Lenine) was a German agent in my opinion, although while acting as such he was also working to foment a world-wide revolution. He would have taken American or British money just as willingly as he did German money."

There you have the whole story. Lenin was a German agent who was fomenting a world wide revolution and incidentally straining every effort to get the world wide revolution under way in Germany before any other country. Does Mr. Francis really "believe" that the former masters of Germany were such a foolish lot as to finance a man who was aiming to undermine their rule, as Mr. Francis admits he was?

The reason for Mr. Francis' "beliefs" was brought out by Senator King, when the latter asked the ambassador:

> "Were you denounced by the Bolsheviki as a capitalist?"
> "Yes," he answered, "and the government of the United States was denounced as a capitalist government. They said we entered the war because German submarines interfered with the sale of supplies to the Allies. That we had to participate in the war at the instance of the New York Stock Exchange in order to find a market for our manufactured products, and so on."

Those awful Bolshevists! To say such things about Mr. Francis' government when it really was fighting to "make the world safe for democracy." Wouldn't you believe most anything about people who would so misrepresent your ideals?

A Little Mixed

The supports of the capitalist system are having a difficult time of it combating "Bolshevism." They do not seem to know just where they are at. They are scared; that is clear. People who are scared are apt to get a little mixed in their logic. They frequently speak truths which they did not intend to mention.

All this is preliminary to comment on an editorial appearing in "Finance and Industry" warning the capitalists of the great danger they are in. The writer of the editorial shows how Bolshevism is growing in this country and how necessary it is for some such organization as the defunct American Protective League to combat it—and makes such a good case that it really should scare the people he is writing for.

Having put his readers in the proper state of mind to seriously consider what is to follow he proceeds to tell them what Bolshevism is and what its source. And in doing that he mixes things up terribly. Just consider these two quotations:

> "Bolshevists are not trying to build a government upon labor and talent, but upon robbery."

And then, speaking of the present economic situation in this country:

> "At this particular time the dissatisfied are likely to seize upon the ideals of the Bolsheviki as a means of ending quickly, AND FOR ALL TIME, the temporary disturbance of economic affairs."

Now isn't that fine! The Bolshevists who are trying to build up a government, not upon labor and talent, but upon robbery, will end economic disturbances for all time!

If the Bolshevist form of organization will accomplish what this writer says it will—end the present industrial crisis with hundreds of thousands of men and women out of jobs, quickly and for all time, it ought to be a pretty good proposition for the workers to support, even though it is built upon robbery, for what this writer calls robbery merely means that the workers who created the factory, shops, railroads and other means of production and distribution, are taking possession of them to stop the capitalists from robbing them, and are using them for the coming welfare of the workers.

What Is Coming?

The Prinkipo conference with representatives of the Russian Soviet government and the comic opera government which exist in Russia because supported by Allied bayonets, is evidently to be called off. The Supreme War Council, it seems, has come to the conclusion that such a conference would give the Bolsheviki too good an opportunity to get the facts about Russia before the people of other countries in spies of the conference being held in one of the most out of the way places that could be found.

What the situation in Russia actually is, is set forth in the following quotation from a statement by Lloyd George before the peacemakers, which is quoted by Paul Wallace Hanna, in an article in the New York Call:

> "Gentlemen," Lloyd George said, "the Soviet government rules over virtually all of European Russia, and enjoys the active or passive allegiance of two-thirds of the Russian people. All of us here know that to be true. The time has come for us to face the facts publicly and prepare to recognize the Soviet government. A general peace which left Russia out would be a farce."

In spite of this admission the Soviet government has not been recognized. Allied troops are still fighting against Russian working men on Russian soil. Recently the volume of lies and misrepresentations of the facts about the Soviet government has been greatly augmented, in seeming preparation for a new attack upon the Soviet government on the part of the representatives of capitalism assembled at Paris.

The British Labor party has passed a resolution viewing with disquiet the recent statement made by Winston Churchill in the House of Commons, while introducing the army estimate. The resolution declares in effect that the government seems to be preparing for a long period of military interference and that its policy is inconsistent with the existence of a democratic League of Nations. It goes on to say that the draft of the constitution of the League of Nations does not fulfill the ideal of the Labor party. The latter phase of the matter is, of course, the explanation of the fact that while the five great powers are talking in fine phrases about the League of Nations, they are at the same time continuing to build their military machines. They have no faith themselves in the league that is being set up to delude the people into believing that the world has really been "made safe for democracy."

"We've gotten on extremely well in this country for more than 140 years of liberty, and if the I. W. W. are not satisfied with conditions here let them go elsewhere," Representative Julius Kahn told a Boston audience a few days ago. Who did Mr. Kahn mean when he said "we?" The Morgans, the Rockefellers, the Astors, the Vanderbilts and Carnegies and the other thirty thousand millionaires and near-billionaires? No doubt they've gotten on "extremely well," for they have been able to make the wealth the American workers produce their private property, amassing great fortunes while millions live in poverty. We've gotten on extremely well and we want no change, that's the slogan of the capitalists.

* * * *

A writer in a Cleveland paper gives us this picture of our future prospects: "Japan is strong, proud and warlike. So are we in America. Both nations are fast expanding. Both have the assurance of a great future. Under such circumstances a rooted sense of antagonism is always to be watched as a possible source of war." There is only one sense in which we are expanding and that is economically. We are reaching out for new markets, new spheres for investments and Japan is doing the same. The rooted sense of antagonism is therefore economic antagonism, "which is always to be watched as a possible source of war." It seems even capitalist writers sometimes carelessly admit the truth.

Here is the answer of the Russian workers of Lawrence, Mass., to the cry for deportation of aliens, "We demand the immediate opening of the frontiers, so that we may return to our homes, to our country, where the glorious sun of freedom shines brightly, where the working class is the master of its own destiny, and where the songs of working class freedom reverberate in the air. We are not afraid to be deported, but would rather welcome the opportunity to leave immediately." Another slap at "the land of the free and the home of the brave!"

* * * *

Arguing for the state constabulary bill before the Ohio legislature, the Cleveland Plain Dealer, says, "The New York general assembly refuses even to listen to the suggestion that this useful agency of law enforcement shall be abolished, because its members recognize the valuable work the state police is performing." A recent example of this "valuable work" is the use of the New York state police to prevent a demonstration of unemployed.

The masses of Europe have already been disillusionized. When Wilson arrived in Europe on his first trip he was greeted everywhere by great demonstrations of the people. Now his greetings come only from the propertied classes. The workers of Europe have quickly learned that all that Wilson had to offer was fair words and fine phrases.

* * * *

"Bolshevism is a reaction against oppression," said Rev. Francis T. Moran, to an audience of Cleveland industrial leaders the other day, "and there hasn't been oppression in America." No, of course not, even though there are a thousand men and women in prison for doing nothing more than expressing their conscientious views.

m class, the lower order? That is the system that you support or help destroy by your vote.

"I appeal to you just once to stand perfectly erect in the majesty of your humanity. You owe it to yourself.

"Washington Was Denounced."

"Look into the eyes of your brother and see the new light that is shining for the working class. We have been oppressed, we have suffered, we have agonized and now let us unite and stand together against capitalism. That is the plea I am making tonight.

"I do not desire to make any glowing periods, I wish I could read your hearts tonight, your attitude of soul.

"Let us unite industrially. If Germany had been organized industrially this great calamity would have never come.

"These crimson flowers that have just been presented to me represent the springtime, the springtime of revolution. I have faith in it and in humanity; I have faith in the Man of Galilee. Twenty centuries ago he spoke to the common people and they heard him gladly. He was brought before the scribes and the Pharisees and the priests and the doctors and the lawyers and the judges. They said 'He is preaching dangerous doctrines. He is a Bolshevist.' They hung him on a cross near Jerusalem as a warning to the centuries.

"But ever since there have been men and women of moral courage who dared to speak the truth as they saw it, who have been maligned and persecuted; they have been stoned and burned at the stake, their ashes scattered to the four winds. These men are remembered and it is to them that we owe our progress.

"Remember that George Washington was denounced as an unprincipled scoundrel; Jefferson was said to be a violent fanatic; Samuel Adams a dangerous character; Patrick Henry was an incendiary.

"A little later there was a group of abolitionists who fought against an institution which had existed for 250 years in this country. Abolitionism was the Bolshevism of that day. Those men were ridiculed. Today they are honored, while the smug, respectable people of their day lie buried and forgotten.

"The great working class movement will similarly triumph. Its emancipation from the ruling class must come soon."

Rush to Shake Debs' Hand.

The conclusion of Debs' speech was dramatic. From the slow, rhythmic, laborious articulation which marks his speeches, he had suddenly wrought himself to a pitch of tumultuous haste. His speech ended sooner than was expected.

The audience took no heed of Chairman Ruthenberg's introductory admonition to remain in their seats. When Debs turned to sit down, a thousand people rushed for the platform with outstretched hands. Debs shook hands with all whose proximity permitted the greeting. Some of the women rushed to kiss him.

During a pause in his speech members of Local Cleveland had presented Debs with a basket of red roses and carnations. Debs regarded the floral tribute with smiling eyes and remarked:

"Is it not timely, however, blasphemous, to ask if an ordinance has been passed to prohibit their color?

"I am richer than John D. Rockefeller. He never enjoyed a gift so pure in loveliness, so deep in meaning. I deplore his poverty."

"We are a party of order and method. We regard socialism as a method of action rather than the plan of a new society to be organized."

"We have read that somewhere," we replied, smiling.

And Dr. Justo modestly admitted that he is the translator of a Spanish edition of Marx's "Capital."

The Tendencies.

"The Argentinian Socialists are united," declared Dr. Justo. "The former deputy, Palacios, left us. Our position on the question of duelling was the cause of the division betw the party and Palacios. The prohibited duelling, and Palaci not wish to abide by the pa tion.

ination of labor exploitation and making all the parasites go to work for their living.

BLAMES AUTOCRACY FOR BREAKDOWN.

As to the breakdown of Russia economically, which the battery of capitalist agents of the American labor exploiters which the committee placed on the stand at the beginning of the prosecution attributed to the Soviet government, Miss Beatty declared that the country was economically broken down even before Kerensky took over the government; due to the three years' war 50 per cent. of the transportation facilities were inoperative.

Relative to the causes that brought about the revolution the witness said that the immediate cause was the war weariness of the people. In June, 1917, about the time of the first test of the strength of the Bolshevist party in the outbreak of Petrograd, the Kerensky government staged a "patriotic" demonstration to inspire the working people to keep on fighting. But the soldiers said: Why do we want to fight our brothers in Germany, who were whipped into the trenches by the kaiser just as we were whipped into them by the czar?"

Senator Sterling here brought out his favorite inquiry relative to the "breakdown of discipline" in the Russian army. Sterling belongs to that school of militarists who believe that the only way the "lower classes" can be kept in subjection to the whims of the labor exploiters is to have the lower classes convinced that it is necessary to show "respect" to their superiors. Especially is this so, he thinks, in regard to the Russian soldiers. To do and die, not to question why, according to Sterling, is the supreme duty of the Russian soldier. And from his point of view when the Russian soldiers made up their minds not to salute their officers any more or suffer the death penalty for infractions of the military law laid down by the uniformed brutes of the ex-czar, then the breakdown of the Russian army began.

"Where did the abolition of the death penalty and the advancement of the extreme view that the soldiers should not salute or pay proper respect to their superior officers spring from?" he asked. "From the Socialists?"

EVERYBODY SOCIALISTS.

"Oh, everyone is a Socialist in Russia," replied Miss Beatty. "It is simply a question of what kind of a Socialist one is."

"Are you a Socialist?" asked Senator Nelson.

Miss Beatty replied that the nearest she came to being one was when she toured California along with other college women in 1916 for Woodrow Wilson.

at are you one at heart?" per

Recurring to the abolition of the death penalty and the order abolishing the necessity of saluting in the army, Miss Beatty stated that those decrees were really made by the soldiers themselves and then promulgated by the Kerensky government to give them a semblance of legal form. The decrees simply recognized the existence of a condition already made effective by the action of the soldiers themselves.

Miss Beatty had her most difficult work in trying to make the committee understand the distribution of the land under the Soviet government's land tenure system. If the restrictions as to land tenure were extreme, they were made so in order to erect a social system in which no ablebodied man shall eat if he does not work. Money has not been abolished, but the use of money to make money out of the oppression of others has been abolished. No person, she said, can make money out of his fellow men. The desire of the Bolshevist party is to equalize opportunity as much as possible. If the peasants and laborers had been put at the top, as suggested by Senator Sterling, it was elevating 90 per cent. of the people and reducing 10 per cent. She would like to see the nationalization of the land tried in Russia.

"What becomes of the loafer who won't till his land?" asked Senator Overman.

"He has to work in order to eat," explained Miss Beatty, adding: "There is no place for loafers in Russia now."

FRANK KEEDIE'S TESTIMONY.

"Ninety per cent. of the people of Russia were hewers of wood and drawers of water prior to the revolution. They had been exploited for three hundred years. This was especially so of the peasants. They were brought up in the villages and without education. Then they were sent off to be made cannon fodder of by the command of the czar. The rich land owners would do for the poor everything but get off their backs. These peasants came back from the war. They returned to the villages to find their families in penury and without food. They went to the rich land owners for food. In many cases it was refused, the rich land owners flashing revolvers and firing on the peasants. The peasants were decorated with iron crosses for having killed a certain number of Germans, and he in turn flashed his rifle and killed the rich land owners. Then the peasants said: 'What's it all about, anyway? Who have I been fighting for? For Russia? Well, it's mine.' And he took the land. Ninety per cent. of these people had been living from time immemorial on the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table, and when they heard of the Soviet decree nationalizing the land they simply rose up and turned over the table.

This was the substance of the story told the senate committee investigat- by Frank Keedie remained there until last October. His work was principally among the peasants. He told the committee that he talked about what he had seen and what he knew, not about what someone else had known and seen. He was familiar with the Soviet government as it affected the peasants, especially in the regions where he had worked. He knew what they wanted and what they should have. "Bolshevism as applied to agriculture has been a success," he said, and said so emphatically.

As to the Bolshevist movement and the Soviet government in general, the witness declared that it is trying to "create a social order where it will be impossible for a rich man or any other man to dominate the people.

In response to an inquiry from Senator Overman, the witness denied that he had been speaking for Bolshevism in the United States. Overman seems to be of the opinion that it would be terrible if anyone should speak for the fundamental principles of the Socialist Soviet government and their application to this "land of the free and the home of the brave." He doesn't seem to know that the fundamental demands of the Socialist Party of the United States and of every Socialist Party throughout the world are identical with the fundamental planks of the Soviet constitution, and that if he wants to find out how many people in the United States openly and frankly support the fundamental principles of the Soviet republic of Russia he can get a starter for his list by summoning the hundred thousand dues paying members of that party before his committee.

OPPOSITION OF PROPERTY OWNERS NATURAL.

The witness said it was perfectly natural for those who had accumulated property either in land or factories through the oppression of the peasants and factory workers should oppose the Bolshevists. He might have directed attention to the fact that the slave holders in Senator Overman's own state of North Carolina in the last generation also opposed the abolitionists who suggested that it was an injustice to the colored people for the white masters of the south to own them as private property and rob them of all the wealth they produced. It was a good thing for the southern slave holders that the colored people along in 1820 to 1850 did not have the vision that the Russian peasants had in 1917 and 1918. And what a sight that would have been! The southern slaveholder compelled to go to work for his living.

SOLDIERS JUST QUIT.

Relative to the "demobilization" of the Russian army, the witness somewhat humorously explained that there was no demobilization. The 15,000,000 soldiers simply quit houses over there. He cannot live in but one of them. What is the matter with asking him to let us live in the rest of them?" No sooner said than done. Some of the land lords acted decently, and the peasants treated them correspondingly. Other land lords resisted, but of course, Socialist peasants can't permit land lords to violate the supreme law of the land, and consequently they made short work of the resistance—and lived happily forever after.

Asked whether the Soviet constitution did not provide for the nationalization of live stock, Keedie stated that the letter of the constitution might provide for the nationalization of the live stock, but in the province of Samara, where he spent a good deal of his time, the live stock taken from the big land lords was given to the peasants according to their necessities. A crippled soldier or a soldier's widow would be given more sheep or more cows than ablebodied persons.

"The Bolshevik government in operation is different from the Bolshevik government as described in its constitution then?" asked Chief Prosecutor Humes.

"Perhaps," admitted the witness. "But the same criticism is applicable to other governments. I believe in the United States there is a court which spends the most of its time interpreting the meaning of your constitution."

NO LANDED PROPRIETORS.

"Now as to the landed proprietors in Russia," began Senator Nelson.

"There are none," interjected Keedie much to the disgust of Nelson, who does not see how a Minnesota labor-exploiting land lord could live and prosper without a lot of poorly-paid farm laborers to roll up his ill-gotten wealth for him.

"How about the mir?" continued Nelson. "Didn't the peasants in the villages control the mir?"

"They did not," came back the witness. "The mir was controlled by the czar's government and the land owning interests."

"Have you seen any terrorism in Russia?" cried one of the committee.

"No Red Terror," replied Keedie. General Dutoff, however, had told him that he had signed the death warrant for 700 Bolsheviki. The committee put the lid down immediately on any further accounts of terror applied against the Bolsheviks.

Keedie stated that he is a Socialist, a pacifist, a conscientious objector, does not believe in the use of force to emancipate society, and hopes and believes the social revolution will be brought about in Great Britain and France, and the United States by peaceable means. He criticised the allies for having sent troops to Siberia and Russia, and said that these troops are the principal props to the [illegible] there

FIGHTING THE AMERICAN BOLSHEVIKI

During the war there arose in this country a cheap imitation of the Black Hundred that disgraced Russia during the regime of the czar.

This organization, calling itself the American Protective League, trampled upon all the dear-bought rights which the American people thought secured to them by the constitution.

Because they were given some sort of semi-official recognition, the members of this organization considered themselves little czars and kaisers who might do whatever they pleased with ordinary persons.

They abridged the right of free assemblage by interference in public meetings.

They arrested hundreds of persons without warrant and without any charges, merely because it suited their whim of the moment.

The Cleveland division of this organization brutally pushed and malled men, women and children at a big meeting at Grays armory, at which the affairs of Russia were being discussed.

An another instance they carted two hundred Socialists to prison for no other reason than that they were present to hear a speech by Eugene V. Debs.

It was great sport for this organization to establish a dead line in the downtown section of the city and to throw into the filthy hole called the local prison every young man caught within the district who did not happen to have his registration card in his pocket.

The American Protective League as it manifested itself in Cleveland, was everything un-American—if Americanism is written in the Declaration of Independence and the constitution. It was an organization of men whose heads had swelled because of the power they were permitted to usurp because of war-time terrorism and who set themselves up as petty despots to rule the actions of ordinary people.

By direction of Attorney General Gregory this organization was dissolved on Feb. 1. Probably Mr. Gregory knew that it had earned the lasting hatred of most people through its brutal, despotic methods and that it would be best to get rid of it through dissolution.

But petty despots do not give up their power easily. Once having experienced the sensation of riding roughshod over the rights of other individuals, brutally malling and beating them and throwing them into prison when the spirit moved them to such action, the desire is strong to continue their power.

The Cleveland branch of the organization has found the excuse for an attempted continuance of its tyranny in the need it has discovered for a fight against what it calls Bolshevism.

The Successor of the American Protective League

Its new name is to be the Loyal American League. Under this name it has issued a lurid appeal to all members of the defunct American Protective League to please join the new organization and make a liberal contribution for the fight against "socialism, anarchy and bolshevism."

Its circular is worthy of examination. It sets forth what "Loyal Americans" have set out to fight—what they mean by "socialism, anarchy and bolshevism." It will open the eyes of some working men to what their masters are really fighting against when they paint their "awful" pictures of bolshevism.

The circular begins with an admission that we are rapidly approaching a crisis in this country. Here are the first two paragraphs:

> Very rapidly we are approaching a grave crisis in the affairs of the American Commonwealth. The hearthstones of the nation are in danger. If the working class once loses its head and takes into its system the poisons that has wrecked and ruined all Russia, all kinds of evil things will hoppen here, on the Russian plan.
> Our one hope is that the restless elements of American life can be enlightened to the evils of socialism, anarchy and bolshevism, and persuaded to keep sane and peaceful while the great industrial problems now worrying the whole nation, can be worked out by competent minds.

Translated into plain English these two paragraphs say, that the American workers have caught some of the spirit of the Russian workers, who are abolishing all oppression and exploitation; unless we can poison their minds against Russia through misrepresentation and lies and force them to remain meek and patient while the opportunity to earn a living is denied them because there are no jobs, they may follow the example of the Russian workers and take the matter of solving the industrial problem in their own hands.

What is Meant by Bolshevism

But the most interesting part of the circular follows. It describes what the "Loyal Americans" call "socialism, anarchy and bolshevism." We quote again:

> The Bolsheviks now are putting forth well-organized, widespread and most vigorous efforts to persuade the real workmen of America to adopt the policy of Lenine and Trotzky, to seize all public utilities, to fully maintain or increase war wages, to reduce working hours, to increase employers' liabilities, and to force the employment of labor on public works. All this is not new to those who read the newspapers carefully.

There is the whole story. "The hearthstones of the nation are in danger" because working men dare ask that war-time wages be maintained as war-time prices are being maintained; they are to be fought by the "Loyal Americans" because they dare ask for reduction of their hours of labor; because they dare demand that employment on public works be provided for those whom the broken down capitalist system cannot give work, they are everything that is evil.

What do you think of this Loyal American League, working man? This league that is branding you as an anarchist and destroyer of the hearthstones of the nation, and, as the circular continues, "wreckers of nations," "pillagers of cities," "destroyers of homes," "murderers of innocent people," because you dare demand wages that will buy food, clothing and a place to live in and dare say that you have a right to the opportunity to earn a living and if the capitalists—the men of "superior brains," as they think—cannot give you that opportunity, it is time that they stepped aside and permitted the industries to be organized on a new basis!

Threaten Deportation

If you believe in better wages, shorter hours and the right to work for those who can only earn a living through working and happen not to be a citizen of the United States, you are a "traitorous alien and anarchist alien" and the "Loyal Americans" threaten you with deportation, for the circular continues:

> Do you want the traitorius alien and anarchist alien deported? We are going to help to do it!

What is your answer, working men of the United States? Your enemy is organizing. If you demand better wages, shorter hours and the right to work you are to be branded as an enemy to the nation, and if you happn to be an alien, deported. The capitalists are organizing to protect their right to rob you and oppress you and to create ten thousand more millionaires and to add to the wealth of those who already own millions.

Are you going to submit to be thus branded? Are you going to submit to have your rights tramp'ed upon?

There is but one answer you can make if you intend to resist the efforts of these oppressors of the workers, and that is organization. Answer the organization of the Loyal American League, the Black Hundred of capitalism, by organizing in your shop or factory, organize in the industry in which you work and organize by joining the workers already organized in the Socialist Party.

You have power—more power than the capitalist if it is organized. The capitalists say that if you demand better wages, shorter hours and the right to work you are disloyal and a traitor and if you are an alien you ought to be deported. Answer them by organizing your power and sweeping them into oblivion.

Soviet Government Opens Trade Bureau In New York

Statement of L. G. A. K. Martens, Consul-General of Socialist Government In Regard to Present Conditions

New York.—On January 2 of this year, Mr. L. A. Martens, now of New York, was appointed official representative of the Soviet government for the United States. He was forwarded his credentials to Washington, and will for the present have temporary offices at 299 Broadway It is Mr. Martens' intention to work for a reopening of trade with Russia.

(Mr. L. C. A. K. Martens, appointed representative of the Russian Soviet government in the United States, is a mechanical engineer and a man of business experience, 44 years old. He was born in Bakhmut, in the province of Yekaterinoslav, Southern Russia, had his school education in the "Gymnasium" (high school) at Kursk, and graduated as a mechanical engineer from the Technological University at Petrograd. For the past few years Mr. Martens has been in the United States as the American representative of the Demidoff Iron and Steel Works, and has purchased here several million dollars worth of machinery for the works. The Demidoff works are the largest steel works in Russia. Before the war they employed 28,000 men. About a year ago the Demidoff plants were nationalized by the Soviet government).

Mr. Martens makes the following statement for publication:

"I have recently received credentials appointing me representative in the United States of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet republic with instructions to negotiate for the opening of trade relations between the United States and Soviet Russia. Soviet Russia wants to arrange the purchase of great quantities of supplies here. As a first step I have forwarded my credentials to the State Department, with a memorandum on conditions in Russia and an outline of the desire of my government to re-establish trade with the United States.

TO SPEND $200,000,000.

"My government, in the event of trade being opened with the United States, is prepared to place at once in banks in Europe and in the United States, gold to the amount of two hundred million dollars ($200,000,000) to cover the price of initial purchases.

"To insure a basis of credits for additional Russian purchases in the United States, my government is ready to submit propositions which I believe will be acceptable to Americans interested in Russian trade.

"The purchases I am empowered to arrange will be commensurate with the needs of the 150,000,000 people of Soviet Russia. These needs are now all the greater because of the disorganization caused by the war and the utter extravagance and incompetence of the Czarist regime; the inevitable waste and disorders attendant on the transition period of the revolution, before a stable government was finally established by the people; and lastly because for the past year and a half Russia has been able to carry on practically no foreign trade.

"Russia is now prepared to purchase in the American market great quantities of commodities such as: Railroad supplies, agricultural implements and machinery, factory machinery, tools, mining machinery and supplies, electrical supplies, printing machinery, textile manufactures, shoes and clothing, fats and canned meats, rubber goods, typewriters and office supplies, automobiles and trucks, chemicals, medical supplies, etc.

TRADE OFFER.

"Russia is prepared to sell: Flax, Hemp, Hides, Bristles, Furs, Lumber, Grain, Platinum, metals and minerals.

Within a short time I shall appoint a commercial attache and open a suite of offices in New York as a headquarters for these large scale purchasing arrangements. For the purpose of organizing trade relations on a proper basis and as a medium through which American trade interested in Russian commerce can secure practical contact, I am planning to organize and incorporate a "Board of Trade of Soviet Russia."

"Under the old regime Germany was the greatest factor in Russian foreign trade, and the bulk of imported manufactures came from Germany. In the year before the war German exports to Russia amounted to nearly four times those of Great Britain, the second factor in Russian imports. Inasmuch as Germany's production for a considerable time will remain subnormal, Russia is all the more an open market for other countries. In a trade sense as well as in a political sense, Russia is starting anew. It is quite obvious that the manufacturing nation that first secures a large amount of the Russian foreign trade at this time, will be in an advantageous position for the future as well.

"I may state that large European manufacturers are already well-informed as to the possibilities of trade with Soviet Russia and are laying their plans for it as soon as the pres-

Abandon Struggle Against Bolsheviki

Mensheviki and Socialist Revolutionists Say Russia Must Unite Against Bourgeoisie of Other Countries Who Are Aiding Russian Reactionaries.

L'Humanite for January 22 prints the following wireless of the Russian Telegraph Agency, which gives details of the reasons underlying the support now given by the "moderate" Socialists to the Soviet.

Some time ago the Red Army took Ufa. It was in that city that a majority of the Deputies of the Constituent Assembly tried to elect a Provisional government, which did not last very long, however. It had to be moved to Omsk and surrendered its power to a so-called directorate, consisting of five members, with Avksentieff as president. After Vologodski had overthrown the directorate, Admiral Kolchak proclaimed his democratic military dictatorship.

Now the Deputies of the Constituent Assembly have forwarded to the Bolshevik committee at Ufa, through their bureau, a communique which was recently addressed to the revolutionary Socialist organizations. Its text is as follows:

"The struggle of the revolutionary Socialists against the Bolsheviki was conducted against a power which was in direct contact with the oppressors of the Russian democracy—namely the Germans.

"But now that Germany has been defeated and the victorious powers

Defense Committee Tells of Persecution of I. W. W.

The New York Defense Committee of the I. W. W. has issued the following statement in regard to the government's activities in persecuting that organization:

With the war-time prosecutions being pushed relentlessly by the U. S. government and with a fresh outburst of capitalist persecution everywhere meeting the increasing activity of the radical labor elements, the I. W. W. is being driven to redoubled efforts to raise the large sum needed to protect its members throughout the country and defend the right of the organization to carry on its work as a labor union.

The New York Defense Committee of the I. W. W. has been reorganized and has mapped out an energetic money-raising and publicity campaign. The labor organizations of New York and vicinity and radical groups and individuals throughout the country are going to be appealed to for help in meeting the financial demands of the situation.

The committee, in its appeal for the support of all friends of the radical labor movement, points to the fact that, in addition to 93 I. W. W.'s convicted in the famous Chicago trial last summer and sentenced to 807 years' imprisonment and fined aggregating $2,570,000, 46 members were convicted last January in the Sacramento bomb frame-up. Besides there, 34 more are to be tried in Wichita this month, while 28 are still awaiting trial in Omaha and 27 in Spokane, in addition to scores of individual cases throughout the western states, either under the Espionage act or under state laws against "criminal syndicalism" enacted within the past year for express purpose of crushing the I. W. W.

Government Plans Deportation.

The government plan for the wholesale deportation of foreign-born workers holding radical economic opinions is aimed particularly at the I. W. W., the committee claims, pointing to the fact that, of the first batch of 58 deportees received at Ellis island, 45 were members of that organization.

Raids on I. W. W. branches and diagnet arrests of members are coming to be almost daily occurrences all over the country, it is stated. Wherever signs of I. W. W. activity crop out, the local authorities resort to any means in their power to try to stamp it out. The Chicago office of the organization has been recently raided three times in quick succession, the members found there being arrested without a warrant and quantities of literature and office supplies confiscated. Similar illegal raids and arrests are reported from Springfield, Mass.; Bridgeport, Conn.; Newark, N. J.; Kansas City Mo.; Portland, Ore.; Seattle and Spokane, Wash., and many other points. Efforts are made by threat of arrest and prosecution, to intimidate new members and get them to renounce their connection with the I. W. W.

The systematic newspaper campaign now under way charging the I. W. W. with complicity in wild plots of assassination, bomb explosions and incendiarism is cited as part of a plan to prepare the public mind to justify any arbitrary acts deemed necessary in the effort to wipe out this militant labor organization. It is pointed out by the I. W. W. that their philosophy in no way endorses wanton destruction or personal violence, but aims solely to educate and organize the workers so that they may be prepared when the time comes, to take over the industries and operate them for the benefit of society at large—what the I. W. W. preamble calls "building the structure of the new society within the shell of the old."

Funds Needed.

With eight or nine hundred of its members confined in jails or deportation pens throughout the country, the I. W. W. finds itself obliged to raise a staggering sum of money for their defense. Between two and three thousand dollars a week, it is estimated, is required to supply these men with the food, clothing, reading matter, tobacco and other "jail comforts" they need to provide for the wives and children many of them have left without support, and meet the cost of legal defense and publicity.

"The fight of the I. W. W." the committee says in closing its appeal for funds, "is the fight of all the workers throughout the country who long for freedom from industrial slavery. It is their fight as well as ours. We cannot win it without them. They must help, or the present opportunity for gaining industrial democracy will be lost and capitalism will be firmly entrenched for years to come."

Contributions to help in the work of defense should be sent to the N. Y. Defense Committee, 27 E. 4th St., New York city.

New York to Abandon Military Training

New York.—After three years of compulsory military training for all boys under eighteen years of age—whether in school or not—New York State seems ready to abandon the unprofitable experiment. Governor-elect Smith has appointed a "Reconstruction Commission" with authority fully to investigate the compulsory military training system installed under the Welsh-Slater acts and to see whether some other sort of training, like vocational training, might not be substituted for it. That Commission has been holding sessions, hearing witnesses and is reported to be ready to recommend that vocational training be substituted for military training.

Among the complaints made against the system was that the secondary schools were losing students,—parents prefering to send their boys outside the state where their studies would not be interrupted by military drill; the hardships inflicted upon the boys, some of whom had to go ten or twelve miles at their own expense, to attend the weekly drills; the fact that in some communities the only buildings large enough for indoor drill were attached to saloons; that the number of "truants" was so large that the state authorities could not round them up; and that the value of the physical training was small compared with what might be secured in more direct physical training.

February "Eye Opener" Held

Chicago.—Now the February issue of "The Eye Opener," weekly publication issued by the National Office, Socialist Party, has been halted on its way to its readers.

This action follows on the heels of the holding up of the January issue for five weeks, after which it was finally released.

The February issue was put into the mails as usual but got no further than the local postoffice. Several copies have been sent to Washington, D. C., where they well be examined by the Censorship Department under Thought Controller William H. LaMar.

Other Socialist publications issued in Chicago report that they are having considerable trouble with the censor. They declare that practically every issue put out is held up several days, if not weeks. This is due, they claim, to the postoffice department's energetic hunt for "Bolshevik propaganda" which seems to include anything that is said at all in favor of the Russian Soviet republic. Although issues are being held up no publication in Chicago has as yet reported the loss or challenge of a second-class mailing privilege. All of the Chicago foreign language Socialist dailies came through the war without the loss of their postal rights.

Japanese Workers Oppose Russian Intervention

Washington.—TThe Socialists of Japan were the strong opponents of Japanese intervention in Russia and persistently antagonized the Japanese government when Moteno decided to send Japanese troops into Sibera in 1918. The government arrested five of the leaders of the Socialist Party for their opposition to the government's interventionist policy, but in spite of this high-handed action the party carried on its work.

At a meeting held in Tokio the Socialists passed a resolution expressing their sympathy with the Russian revolution, as well as their joy over the fact that the workers turned it into a social revolution, and urged the international organization of the working class to fight the common enemy—international capitalism.

The resolution was sent to the Bolshevik government by the executive committee of the organized Socialists of Tokio and Yokohama and appears in a late issue of the Petrogradskola Pravda. The letter and accompanying resolution follow:

"Comrades of Russia:

"Since the beginning of the Russian revolution we have followed with enthusiasm your intrepid activity. Everything accomplished by you has an enormous influence upon the psychology of our people.

"We indignantly protested against sending Japanese troops into Siberia because we feared that their presence there might hinder the free development of your revolution. We are profoundly sorry that our numerical weakness does not permit us to prevent the danger with which you are menaced by the action of our government. Prosecuted as we are we cannot give you material aid. But we assure you that the red flag of the revolution will soon float over Japan.

FRANZ MEHRING

By JOHN [illegible]

At a time when the revolution in Germany needs its guiding spirits, clear thinking and far-sighted leaders then the unseen hand of fate takes them away, one after another.

In the course of the war, the overwhelming majority of the German Genossen went over to the imperialistic German government and declared that the integrity of the capitalistic fatherland is more sacred and stands higher than the struggle of the working class against its exploiters, the instigators of the war which threatened the fatherland. At that time a group of members of the official Social-Democracy broke away from that organization and launched a new one, under the name of "Spartacus." They set to work against the deadly doctrines of class truce (Burgfrieden) advocated by the majority of the German party. For that purpose the Spartacides began to publish a new magazine "The Internationale." The outstanding personalities grouped around that new publication, were, the old veteran of the German party—Franz Mehring and Rosa Luxemburg, H. Strobel, A. Thalheimer and Klara Zetkin. The hatred of the government Socialists against their adversaries went so far that they did not stop short even at spying and denunciations. They pointed out to the gendarmes and military authorities, who were the guilty ones. The group "Internationale" was easily rounded up and put behind prison bars.

Governments with their spy squads always think it possible to subdue any mass movement by the imprisonment of its leading individuals. The German government was not an exception, although it knew by experience, that such measures are ineffective. The severe persecutions by the government, supported by the kaiser's Socialists, resulted in the suppression of the magazine "Die Internationale" after the appearance of its first issue. The German rebels, however, undertook other means of carrying on the combat. Among them was the old veteran, Franz Mehring, who during the exception law period watched the Socialist activities from outside and then, convinced of the justice of their cause, joined them.

A news dispatch, about a month ago, announced the death of Franz Mehring. Through the death of Franz Mehring the Spartacides lost from their ranks the oldest (he was 72 years of age) and brightest head.

The personal history of many of the veterans of the German Socialist movement is closely connected with the whole movement and cannot be described separately, and apart from it, and thus it is true in regard to Mehring. He joined the German Social Democracy, not through economic necessity and pressure, but through fundamental understanding of the Marxian theory of economics, history and philosophy. After his graduation from the university, Mehring become a bourgeois journalist and many times joined issues with Socialists on the theoretical field. Nevertheless, he always sided with the oppressed on the grounds of justice. The horizon of the bourgeois justice is too narrow for a broad-minded man. Mehring strenuously strove to penetrate into the essence of things. Bourgeois philosophy interpreted the historical phenomena insufficiently and unexplicitly to him. To gain inside information about socialism he spent many nights in spirited discussions with the senior Liebknecht and August Bebel. It may be accredited to them that Mehring was converted to socialism and became one of its sincerest exponents and advocates. When joining the Socialist movement he was already a well grounded Marxist. He did not join the movement to study it, but to use his broad and deep knowledge of human society to bring about the realization of the ideal of socialism. To this great ideal he remained faithful all the balance of his life.

To make up for his former attacks on socialism, Mehring set to write and publish on the origin and growth of modern Marxian socialism; he spread the conception of Marxism as a theory of social life.

Mehring's Writings

After the appearance of his first book, "Die Lessing-Legende," a history and critique of Prussian despotism and classical literature, he established a reputation as a Marxian scholar. "Die Lessing-Legende" is a small book of minor importance to the average reader, although it is highly valuable to the student of social development. Mehring's life's work is, "Die Geschichte der Deutschen Sozialdemokratie," (The History of the German Social Democracy) in four large volumes. This is such a wonderfully clear and scholarly work that there is no Socialist movement in the world that has anything to compare with it. All other writers in the Socialist movement are dipping their information from this source, which shows no sign of exhaustion. The first volume of that great work traces the doctrines of Utopian Socialists before Marx, and shows how scientific socialism developed gradually toward its present completeness. It proves that industrial development and the growth of the economic [illegible] creates the necessity of clear comprehension of the task before the newly developing working class. We find the Utopian Socialists elaborating schemes about how to abolish the evils in contemporary society. Some of them go to great extent in working out the economic theory; others work on history and still others on philosophy. New conceptions in the various fields of social science and practice come from various countries. Each one of these falls short in their own special area because they endeavor to separate these experiences from each other and do not take them as a unified whole. The practical schemes of these Utopians, applied to real life's practice, appear to be entirely impractical. Meeting with failure they invent something new, only to fail again at the first trial. At last the working class discovers its real apostle and interpreter of society and its achievements from the economic standpoint, who unites economics, history and philosophy and proves their unity. That is Marx.

But Marx's doctrine is outlined in highly scientific terms and requires much previous training of the mind to understand it. With incomparable clearness Mehring shows the sources from which Marxism originated. It did not come from the blue air, ready made, but took amply from the achievements of the French Socialists and historians, English economists and from the industrial status of that country; it took much, but very critically, from the classical German philosophy of Hegel and Feuerbach. Knowledge of the historical development of modern socialism eliminates the cant saying that socialism is "made in Germany" and therefor will not fit the different conditions of the different countries, and that's why it should be opposed when it appears in other countries. Mehring in his great work proves that socialism is not the inheritance of one country or of the working class of a certain country. Socialism, according to Mehring, is the last word in modern science. Science is not national but international, and so, also, is socialism. Marxism is not a static but a dynamic theory, it interprets social phenomena not as it stands at present but tells how it became what it is. And so we find in the first volume not only the beginnings of socialism in Germany but in all industrial countries in Europe, particularly France and England.

The Exception Laws.

Establishing the Marxian theory and its outcome, Mehring proceeds to show its special application and further development in Germany. The theoretical struggle between Lassaleans and Marxists is thoroughly discussed. Especially interesting is the narrative on the exception laws in Germany against Socialists, invoked by Bismarck, and their utter failure. The growth of the revolutionary spirit was the cause of Bismarck's demanding such laws. With them he expected to destroy the revolutionary movement of the German workers. The impotence of these stringent laws to stop the growth of the German working class movement, forced Bismarck to ask for repeal of these laws. They were in force in Germany for twelve years, from 1878-1890. In spite of the drastic action of the police and gendarmerie, the German workers marched triumphantly on. Mehring shows how the organizations of the German workers multiplied, how education became always more broader and deeper and how the vote for the Socialist candidates to reichstag always increased. When it was impossible to publish Socialist matter inside of Germany it was published outside—in Switzerland, Belgium and England and smuggled across the German border in hundreds of thousands of copies and spread broadcast.

The last volume of Mehring's work has especial interest for us in America, now, that our Republican statesmen are endeavoring to practice in this country those persecutions against Socialists, that monarchial Germany, through Bismarck, tried to do 30 years ago. The monarchy of Germany failed. Will the republic of America succeed?

Industrial Germany of that epoch was in state of its development, the working class, small, numerically inferior to the other classes; the U. S. is at the climax of its industrial development, its working class outnumbers all the rest of its population. The growth of the German working class made ineffective the exception laws in that country; the growth of the working class consciousness in this country will accomplish the same here. The numbers are here already.

Supreme Court Says Congress May Suspend Constitution

Washington.—In the opinion handed down by the United States Supreme Court affirming the judgment of the lower court in sending Eugene V. Debs to the penitentiary for ten years for making a Socialist speech at Canton, O., the court said:

"The chief defenses upon which the defendant (Debs) seemed willing to rely were the denial that we have dealt with and that based upon the First amendment to the constitution, disposed of in Schenck vs. United States."

The "denial" here referred to by the Supreme Court is the denial made by Debs' counsel that the Espionage act under which the indictments were drawn, is constitutional, claiming that the act interfered with freedom of speech contrary to the first amendment, the constitution providing that congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press. The court states that it "disposed" of this objection, namely, the alleged unconstitutionality of the Espionage act, in the Schenck case. The Schenck case was an indictment brought against Charles T. Schenck, secretary of the Socialist Party of Philadelphia, and Elizabeth Baer, a member of the party's executive committee, charging them with having conspired to cause insubordination, etc., in the military and naval forces of the United States, and to obstruct the enlistment and recruiting service of the United States by printing and distributing a certain circular among the men who had been called for military service under the statutes of the United States. The defendants claimed they had a right to distribute the literature in question under the guarantees of freedom of speech and liberty of the press set forth in the constitution. Relative to this contention the court made its decision which practically abolishes these guarantees. The court said:

"We admit that in many places and in ordinary times the defendants in saying all that was said in the circular would have been within their constitutional rights. But the character of every act depends upon the circumstances in which it is done. The most stringent protection of free speech would not protect a man in falsely shouting fire in a theater and causing a panic. It does not even protect a man from an injunction against uttering words that may have all the effect of force.

"The question in every case is whether the words are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that congress has a right to prevent. It is a question of proximity and degree. When a nation is at war many things that might be said in time of peace are such a hindrance to its effort that their utterances will not be endured so long as men fight and that no court could regard them as protected by any constitutional right."

There is no use discussing such a position. If the framers of the constitution and its amendments had intended that congress should have the power to abridge freedom of speech and of the press when the nation is at war, they would have said so. They would have added a proviso to the amendment reading like this: "Provided, however, that this amendment shall have no force or effect during a war duly declared by congress." Inasmuch as there was no such proviso, it must be admitted that the freedom of speech and of the press provisions of the constitution were intended to protect the citizens in times of war as well as in times of peace. But the present Supreme Court declares that Congress can suspend those guarantees of the constitution any time it sees fit to do so, provided congress has declared war. The next step will undoubtedly be to take the position that congress can also suspend these guarantees in times of peace, when the ruling class is confronted with Bolshevik propaganda or something of that sort, which they even now admit is more of a menace than was the kaiser's war.

It will be well to watch the coming congress, which will be the most reactionary one that has ever convened since the days of Mark Banna, and see how much these capitalist legislators leave of the individual's rights under the constitution when the enjoyment of those rights become a serious menace of the rights of the labor exploiters to live on the labor of the working class.

The Soviet Government and the Children

(Editor's Note—The only news about Soviet Russia that reaches this country through the kept press are wild stories about the "red terror" cruelties and oppression. While the kept press slanders and lies, the Soviet government continued its work of reconstructing Russian society on the basis of a workers' industrial republic. Its achievements, in the brief time it has been in power, have been marvelous. The following story of its care for the children of Russia is one instance indicating what is being done and that what is being done is in striking contrast to the current lies of the kept press).

At the congress of medical-sanitation held at Moscow, June 19, 1918, a report from the school-sanitation board attached to the Commissariat of Public Instruction was read and discussed at great length. The Section is entrusted with safeguarding the children's health and application of preventive measures in schools against tuberculosis and neurological disease.

Hitherto in Russia little attention was given to physical education of children and their hygienic conditions. At the present time, the School Sanitation Board does the work of spreading physical education among children and of removing conditions detrimental to the students' health. To accomplish this the board has established an Institute of Physical Education in Russia, experimental institutions (settlements, schools of forestry, schools-sanatoriums, ambulatories, etc.) and has been aiding labor organizations interested in the establishment of such institutions.

The following resolution of the School Sanitary Board was adopted:

1. The object of school sanitation within the boundaries of the Russian Soviet republic is the safeguarding of the health, physical as well as mental, of children of all ages, and a proper organization of physical education.
2. For the realization of this problem a central school-sanitation soviet is established at the Commissariat of Public Instruction, representatives of proletarian organizations and large masses of the population participating in the work.
3. Likewise, similar school-sanitation soviets are established in localities regulating and directing the local school-sanitation activity.
4. The directing organs in the matters of school sanitation are medical boards, elected by medical sanitary organizations such as the Soviet of Medical Boards or the Commissariat of Health, and medical sanitary sections attached to the local soviets of workmen's deputies, and approved by the Commissariat of Public Instruction. All these organizations are working in close contact with the Central Commissariat of Health, as well as with the Commissariat of Public Instructions attached thereto.
5. A school physician is a permanent and competent member of the pedagogic soviet and is actively engaged in school work. He is elected by the school-sanitary sub-section of the medical sanitary board and is approved by the Department of Public Instruction attached to the Soviet.
6. To safeguard the health of children and to render direct mental, moral and physical aid to children of imperfect health, the school-sanitary sections (medical boards) establish special institutions, sanitoriums, schools of forestry for physically weak and sick children, auxiliary treatment and assignment of children to auxiliary dispensaries, sanatoriums and agricultural settlements for exceptional forms of mental and physical deformity. School ambulatories are established for study, medical treatment and assigning children to proper institutions.

GLEANINGS

FROM THE LOG OF AN AGITATOR

Written for the Ohio Socialist by W. E. REYNOLDS.

America had a "Work or Fight" order which created some comment but—Bolshevism's "Work or Starve" order to the bourgeoisie, my, oh my, doesn't that make the bourgeoisie squeal? Isn't it awful Mabel?

"Poverty, starvation, disease and crime; Bolshevism would bring about exictly that condition," says Judge E. H. Gary. Well, well, won't some kind person please inform the judge that "poverty, starvation, disease and crime," are already here and that it would be impossible for Bolshevism to "bring about" something that is already here. Poverty, starvation, disease and crime are here and were "brought about" by the very same capitalism which Judge Gary so frantically seeks to uphold.

Press reports that unemployed union carpenters, who were also unemployed discharged soldiers, are to picket a large plant employing non-union help. It will come as a rude shock to some of our very best people to see labor pickets in the uniforms of the United States army—but army or no army the class antagonisms will crop out.

"What shall we do with the returning soldier?" is worrying the bourgeoisie. They had better worry about what the returning soldier will do to them.

Senate is planning on deporting all Bolshevists. Must be planning on leaving this country to the Indians.

Canadian labor gave the Canadian government sixty days in which to repel all censorship laws and free all political prisoners. Labor in this country? S-h-h-h! Don't wake 'em!

A well known cartoon company recently put out a cartoon reading, "There is more law at the end of a night stick than in all the statute books." How's that for an open advocacy of direct action?

THE SEATTLE GENERAL STRIKE

(HERE IS THE HISTORY OF THE SEATTLE GENERAL STRIKE AS APPEARED IN THE SEATTLE UNION RECORD)

Four days before the strike actually took place, the meetings of the General Strike Committee began. With their first session on Sunday, Feb. 2, 1919, authority over the strike passed from the Central Labor Council, which had sent out the call, and from the Metal Trades Council which had asked it, and was centered in a committee of over 300 members, elected from 110 local unions and the Central Labor Council, for the express purpose of managing the strike.

The first meeting was called in order at 8:35 in the morning and continued in session until 9:30 that evening, with short intermissions for meals. From this time on until the close of the strike, there were meetings daily and at almost all hours of day and night, of either this General strike Committee, or of the Executive Committee of fifteen which it delegated some of its authority. The volume of business transacted was tremendous; practically every aspect of the city's life come before the strike committee for some decision.

A general strike was seen, almost at once, to differ profoundly from any of the particular strikes with which the workers of Seattle were familiar. It was not enough, as some of the hasty enthusiasts declared, to "just walk out." The strikers were at once brought face to face with the way in which the whole community, including their own families, is inextricably tied together. If life was not to be made unbearable for the strikers themselves, problems of management, of selection and exemption had to take the place of the much simpler problem of keeping everyone out of work.

The strikers had no quarrel with the city of Seattle or with its inhabitants, of whom they themselves and their families comprised perhaps half. They had no particular quarrel with the city government, and most of them took pride in the municipally owned light and wager and garbage systems, the municipal car line and the public port. While they were doubtless deeply touched by that spirit of unrest and desire for a new world which is sweeping the earth today, they had no definite revolutionary intentions.

Consequently the problems of what should be done about the water supply, the lighting system, the hospitals, the babies' milk supply, came before a committee of quiet working people whose stake in all these things was as great as that of any persons in the city and who, while they intended to make a tremendous and solid demonstration of sympathy with their brothers in the shipyards, had at the same time no desire to wreck the city's life.

They realized that they were undertaking something new in the American labor movement; they were not quite certain where it would lead; but they felt themselves strong enough to handle whatever problems might arise.

The Committee Organizes.

To make the problem harder, the General Strike Committee was not, like the Central Labor Council, composed of delegates who had had experience in working together. They were a new group, a very large and unwieldly mass of unacquainted individuals, upon whom, almost at once, great and momentous questions descended.

The quantity of business transacted and the business like attention to many aspects of complicated questions is shown in the minutes of the committee, and indicates a much higher level of efficiency and business like methods that could normally be expected from such a large governing group.

The morning session of the first day was taken up with passing on credentials. Eighty unions, in addition to the 21 unions of the metal trades, presented acceptable credentials at this meeting. A few other unions were added later, making 110 in all.

All unions which had voted to strike, or which belonged to a district council which was striking as a unit, were granted three delegates. A few of the officials of the labor movement were granted seats in the meeting by special vote. Several irregular credentials were turned down.

The first appearance of the inevitable problem, of the relation of the strike, to the city authorities occurred when the Garbage Wagon Drivers asked for permission to explain why they had voted against the strike. They stated that Dr. McBride, the health commissioner of Seattle, had told them that they must take care of hospitals and sanitariums, subject to penalty under the law. They had not known whether the strike committee would make any exemption in favor of these emergency needs, and so had voted not to strike. Later the garbage wagon drivers' delegates were seated and certain exemptions were made in the interests of health.

Another fundamental problem which raised its head in this first meeting was the opposition of officers of internationl unions. The stereotypers stated that one of their international officers was in the city and would probably try to force them back to work. They wanted to know what support the unions of Seattle could give them in case their international officers supplied men to fill their places and otherwise disciplined them. The committee declared that the sympathetic strike would not be called off until the stereotypers were reinstated in any positions lost as the result of striking.

The date on which the strike should be called came in for much discussion. It was finally decided to fix the following Thursday, Feb. 6, at 10 a. m., and to ask Tacoma to postpone the general strike, which it had ordered until the time agreed on by Seattle.

An executive committee of fifteen was next appointed to work with the metal trades committees in formulating a plan of action, and to present this to the Central Labor Council on the following Wednesday evening. Almost at once other motions made this committee permanent and instructed it to consider all questions of exemption that might arise in the handling of the strike. The decisions of this committee were at all times subject to repeal by the General Strike Committee, but in practice, repeal was not found necessary.

Committees on publicity, on finance and on tactics were also appointed, and many other minor matters of business were disposed of. Among these were the forwarding of a resolution to Washington, D. C., demanding the removal of Mr. Piez of the shipping board, and the adoption of a resolution that no officer or committeeman should receive any salary during the strike.

Just at the close of the meeting two slogans were suggested. "We have nothing to lose but our chains and a whole world to gain" was rejected in favor of "Together We Win." The unions of Seattle were declaring in favor of labor's solidarity; they were not declaring in favor of the well known phrases of the class war.

Executive Committee Organizes.

Even while the first meeting of the General Strike Committee was going on, the newly appointed Executive Committee of fifteen met and prepared for business. Brothor Nauman, of the Hoisting Engineers, was elected chairman, and Brother Egan of the Barbers, secretary. Three sub-committees were appointed to consider exemptions from the general strike order, under three main heads: Construction, Transportation and Provisions.

Committees on miscellaneous exemptions, on grievances and on general welfare were also appointed.

The Cooks union reported at this time that their arrangements for feeding the strikers and the public were well under way.

The executive committee decided upon daily meetings. As a matter of fact, so many and so important were the matters brought before them that they found themselves compelled to meet more than once a day.

First Exemption Granted.

On the following day, Monday, the committee of fifteen met again. Before them came a delegation from the Firemen's Local 27, whom they had requested to appear. After some discussion the committee requested the firemen to stay on the job. This was the first exemption granted in the strike. It was followed by many more.

The transportation sub-committee was instructed to arrange for the necessary forms of permits and signs to designate the autos and trucks used by organized labor in carrying on the necessary activities of the strike. Here again the necessity of exemption was recognized.

C. R. Case, head of the department of streets of the city of Seattle, was the first department head to appear before the committee to state city needs. He pointed out the fact that the water supply of Queen Anne Hill and West Seattle depended on electrical help from the City Light and Power. He also stated that large quantities of food in cold storage would spoil if the power system did not run, and that without the street lights the city would be a prey to lawlessness and disorder and thuggery. He mentioned the needs of gas in hospitals and laboratories, and the need of transportation for the various city institutions.

The committee of fifteen knew what they were facing, if a strike wr carrid through without exemptions. They appointed a special hour on the following day at which they requested heads of city departments to appear and state their needs, and they expressed as the sense of the committee that they co-operate with these heads in every way possible.

The National Executive Committee Election in The Third District

The Chicago Communist Propaganda League realizes the great importance of the coming election of National Executive Committeemen. The present committeemen from this district do not represent the revolutionary element within the party. The element is very large, in fact it appears to be in the majority. It should have full representation on the National Executive Committee.

We present to the comrades of the third district, who are in harmony with the revolutionary element, the names of those comrades who receive the full support of and are in harmony with the Chicago Communist Propaganda League. They are Dannis E. Batt of Detroit, John Kericher of Detroit, and Wm. Bross Lloyd of Chicago. We urge all revolutionary comrades to keep this list and use it in the election. To split your vote will help to defeat all our men. It is long past time that the party should align itself definitely with the revolutionary forces, such as the Spartacans of Germany, the Bolsheviks of Russia, and the Communists of all countries.

The present National Executive Committee has prevented the expression of clear class-struggle socialism. They refrained from calling an emergency national convention at a time when the party members were generally demanding such a convention. They hide behind the subterfuge of the great expense. But they have [illegible] for an amnesty conference and in calling this conference they expected to quiet the demand for a party convention. Most significant of all, the National Executive Committee committed the party to affiliation with the anti-Bolshevik International held at Bern by attempting to send delegates. Actual participation of our delegates being prevented by the government.

These actions were entirely in line with what should have been expected from a National Executive Committee dominated by such men as Berger, Work and Stedman, with others of their kind. They have known ever since the St. Louis convention that they would not long be able to continue their reactionary domination of the party. But they are doing their best. They call us anarchists and impossibilists. When the state of Michigan, in convention, this year adopted a revolutionary anti-reform platform they were accused of trying to break up the party. But such is not the case.

The Left Wing elements in the east and west, in Michigan and in Chicago, are merely trying to put the party on a sound proletarian basis. The American Proletariat have lost their confidence in the Socialist Party as a revolutionary organization. We must all work to regain their confidence. Now is your opportunity. Put the party on record as a revolutionary, instead of a reformist organization, and elect Comrades Batt, Keracher and Lloyd to the National Executive Committee from this district.

ANOTHER COMRADE ARRESTED

A Russian comrade notifies us of the arrest of Comrade Harry Harbit at New Castle, Pa., recently. Because an I. W. W. song book was found in his pocket and literature printed in Russian, he is held in jail awaiting the pleasure of the department of justice. A newspaper clipping asserts that Comrade Harbit attempted to get to Russia when the revolution broke out but was unable to do so after reaching Japan.

"Absolutely no government in Russia, but a reign of terror" says one press report, and then naively adds, "but liquor prohibition is effective."

Help Make Italy Safe For Democracy

The days of kings, kaisers and czars are waning fast. A goodly number of these despotic rulers have already gone to their political graves. Others are on the verge of political downfall. The day in which the whole world will be rid of all rulers by "Divine Right" is fast approaching and the dawn of a new era will presently gladden the earth with its democratic light.

Italy will be the next nation, we believe, to overthrow monarchy and establish a free democratic republic. The Italian Socialist Party is on the alert. It is on the job. It is doing all in its power to awaken the masses to the new light. To proceed in its work it needs money to spread its propaganda. The workers of America, in their international character, are herewith appealed to for help to finance the political struggle in Italy. Every monarchy overthrown is a step further toward the international brotherhood of men. Everyone who has at heart the best interests of humanity will not fail to help finance political progress in Italy. Next June the general elections throughout Italy will take place. The Italian Socialist Party will be in the fight to capture the reins of government. The outcome of this election will determine the time at which the monarchy will fall. Quick action is necessary. Send all contributions to the editor of L'Avanti, G. Valenti, 803 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. He has been elected director of this special campaign fund "TO MAKE ITALY SAFE FOR DEMOCRACY."

Denounces "Appeal" Amnesty Campaign

(Special Correspondence)

Chicago.—Adolph Germer, National Secretary of the Socialist Party, and one of the Socialist officials convicted and sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment, has issued an open letter to the Appeal to Reason, in which he scorns any efforts that this turncoat publication may make in his behalf. The letter in full is as follows:

Chicago, Ill., March 19.

Editor Appeal to Reason,
Girard, Kans.

Sir: In the issue of the Appeal to Reason, March 15, 1919, you publish an appeal for $30,000 CASH, for an alleged "amnesty and construction fight."

You give yourself credit for having "won" the first skirmish in the amnesty fight and on the basis of this unfounded claim, you justify your appeal for $30,000 cash. To make your appeal seem legitimate, you use such names as Eugene V. Debs, Kate Richards O'Hare, Rose Pastor Stokes and refer to "many of our comrades." I happen to be one of those who is facing a prison sentence and if you have included me in "many of the comrades," I want you to strike my name from your list. I loath to be a "comrade" of yours. You and your paper helped to create a hatred against the Socialist Party and you wilfully and maliciously lied about the National Executive Committee when it refused to follow a course that would put more of our members in prison. In other words, you and your paper must bear a part of the responsibility for the prosecution and persecution of the Socialists and it is rank hypocrisy for you to prate about your fight for amnesty.

Others may speak for themselves, but I scorn any effort that you may make in my behalf. A thousand times would I rather spend the rest of my life behind prison bars than to have one word from you whom I hold responsible for the persecutions of which my colleagues and I are victims.

I look upon your appeal for $30,000 CASH, in the name of "amnesty" as a sinister method of filling your own coffers.

You have lied to us and about us and betrayed us in the past and I resent your hypocritical prattle about amnesty.

Yours without respect.
(Signed) ADOLPH GERMER.

MORE MEETINGS FOR KENMORE

Kenmore comrades are arranging meetings for every Sunday. Comrade Wm. F. Potting had a splendid meeting on the 16th. Comrade J. J. McCue was to hold a meeting on the 23d. The Kenmore comrades are alive to the present situation and are pushing propaganda work to the limit.

SOCIALISM IN THE SOUTH

Comrade S. G. Gregory of So. Tunnel, Tenn., sends some subscriptions and reports good meetings in Tennessee. The audiences, he says, are glad to hear real red lectures and show little appreciation for Menshevik propaganda.

ROSWELL TO THE FORE

As a result of Comrade Beery's visit to Roswell a local of 17 members was organized this last week. Comrade Rex Wolfe of Midvale, effected the organization. The comrades sent in with their application for charter an order for $25.45 worth of supplies. Local Roswell is to be congratulated on the start it has made and the spirit it has shown. Good luck to you comrades.

THE HOPE OF THE WORLD

When the world is particularly charitable toward its unfortunates who swarm the planet, it designates them as "misfits". This is about as charitable as society has grown toward the lives is has wrecked, the bodies and minds it has debauched, the brave spirits is has broken.

However, in this becoming charitableness, is society damned for its hypocrisy, its destruction of life and for the human wreckage that clutters the earth. It is an old saying that society cares nothing for the individual until he breaks its laws. Millions of times over has this been proven.

The world is just beginning to learn that its greatest assets are the individuals who compose it. "Misfit" implies a mal-adjustment of talents and powers to ones work, an unfitness for the job. In a world of sanity where the people are in control of their destiny where the condition of life of the masses are not determined by a class of profit mongers, where human life is above the Almighty Dollar, the vast energy, ambitions and potential powers inherent in man, could and would create in one generation a new world and a new race. Then would all science and resources of the earth and of man's powers be used by and for the development of the masses who are under the capitalist system of industry, mere pawns in the game of profits.

But while the world's resources are witheld from the people by their exploiters, while the vast treasures of earth remain the articles of trade of an exploiting class, no great change for the better can occur.

Only a seizure of the earth and its fulness by the proletariat can guarantee life and opportunity to the masses. When the proletariat does this—and it soon will, then the most stupendous reconstruction program ever inaugurated will become our supreme duty, a reconstruction of human lives; the teaching and training of children; the building of schools; the appliance of every art and science toward developing the powers of the individual.

This program will be a part of the new world's advent. It is a vital part of the new order in Russia and the worker's and peasants' Soviets are solving the problem in an heroic manner.

This is what Lunacharski, the commissioner of education said:

"What ever other budgets are put down, the budget for public education must stay, because it is the honor and glory of the people."

All over the doors of the thousands of schools the Soviets have established runs this motto: "The children are the hope of the world."

Russia is creating a new race as well as a new Russia.

WHAT'S A PROGRAM?

"We shouldn't spend our time quarrelling among ourselves about right and left wing programes, but fight the common enemy." Thus writes a Comrade. And immediately we ask "What's a programe?" and our answer is: that a programe is a weapon, a weapon in the class war against capitalism.

Presumably, the comrade isn't particular about the weapon he uses so long as he's in action. He can't bear to "waste time" deciding upon a choice of weapons, but would seize the first to hand, whether it was an effective one or not—whether it melted in his hand or could be sent ripping into the citadel of the enemy.

Then the thought comes that it's thru the wise choice of weapons and their efficient use we will win. Time spent in carefully, even quarrellingly selecting our weapons at each stage of the development of the class war will be well spent. Weapons must be chosen. Let us choose them well. And remember "the autocrats of industry do not run business at the ballot box." Neither do they rob the worker there.

Everybody Wants One

Wants one what, you ask? Industrial Freedom Certificates, of course. Industrial Freedom Certificates are selling fast. Many comrades from out of sate have sent their dollar to the State Office for one. Beatrice Sedgwick, State Secretary of Delaware, ordered twenty to sell to members. Some locals are selling out entirely and ordering more. Many comrades report fine sales to non-party members. This is what makes us say EVERYBODY WANTE ONE.

Every fair-minded man and woman believes that the political prisoners should be restored to their families. Everyone knows that a crime is being perpetrated against Tom Mooney by keeping him in prison. Everybody knows that Free Speech and Free Press should be restored to the people. Everybody knows that as long as these crimes are allowed to continue we are not free. Everyone feels the pressure of the iron heel as long as these intolerable conditions exist.

To carry on the fight for freedom for political prisoners, for freedom for Tom Mooney, for the restoration of our constitutional rights, to supply our political prisoners and their families with some of the comforts and necessities of life—to do these things requires money. Every comrade who buys an Industrial Freedom Certificate helps to pay these expenses. Every comrade who buys one of these certificates will want to keep it as a memento of this memorable fight for Industrial and Political Democracy. Ask your local secretary for an Industrial Freedom Certificate. Hand him a dollar.

RESOLUTION BY LOCAL WARREN

Motion by Ed. S. Smith.

That Local Warren, Ohio, of the Socialist Party, having 31 members in good standing, seconds the resolutions by the Central Branch of Local Boston, Mass., for the purpose of initiating a national referendum, as published in Revolutionary Age, of March 8, 1919, and expressed in the following language:

1. That the Socialist Party international delegates now being elected, stand instructed to participate only in an international congress or conference called or participated in by the Communist Party of Russia (Bolsheviki), and the Communist Labor Party (Spartacans) of Germany.
2. That the National Executive Committee shall call immediately upon the adoption of this referendum an emergency national convention of the Socialist Party to be convened in Chicago, Minneapolis or some adjacent city.

Motion duly seconded and carried March 16, 1919.

STATE EXECUTIVE MEETING
March 7, 1919.

Present—Rasmussen, Bosemer and Stevens.

Absent—Stark and Goodman.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

It was announced that the State Committee had elected the following as the State Executive Committee: R. M. Rasmussen, W. C. Goodman, J. J. Bosemer, J. L. Stark and F. E. Stevens.

Adjourned.

Another Week's Work of the Red Army Gets Great Results!

Another week of work, another week of effort spent for socialism! Another great stride nearer the goal of a twice-a-week Ohio Socialist. Five hundred and seventy-four new subscriptions is the harvest of last week's work on the part of the Red Army of Ohio Socialist Boosters. Not so great as last week, but still a record which shows the spirit of the comrades and the determination they feel to make socialism hum in this and other states.

For Ohio comrades are not alone in this drive to make the Ohio Socialist a greater power for the emancipation of the toilers and the gaining of the industrial Commonwealth of Workers. Many, many comrades from all parts of the country are giving most loyal support to the Ohio Socialist. From all parts of the nation letters reach the State Office pledging support to ur campaign for 20,000 subscribers and a twice-a-week Ohio Socialist. Comrades realize as never before the power of the press as a weapon in the worker's battle against the despotism of present day social and industrial conditions. They are proving their wisdom by their co-operation in helping to establish the first twice-a-week English socialist paper in America.

New conditions demand new and better weapons. The integrity, the progress and development of the Socialist movement in this country demands the establishment of powerful party controlled papers. The Socialist movement can no longer rely upon privately controlled propaganda to reach its goal. These new and necessary weapons must be forged by the comrades themselves who make up the rank and file of the movement. This is their work—the most important that confronts a willing and wide awake membership. This is their work—a work to which every comrade can contribute a part.

Every comrade can get subscriptions.

Every comrade SHOULD get subscriptions.

Every comrade should lend a hand to the building the chariot of progress; to its completion and perfection. Let every comrade put a few spokes in the wheel of progress during the coming days and weeks that is to determine the possibility of establishing a twice-a-week Ohio Socialist. Every comrade to the job.

MILLION
COMRADES AND FRIENDS OF DEBS

The most gigantic post card campaign ever undertaken will be launched by the Socialist Party on May 1, in connection with the 5,000 meetings to be held throughout the country upon that date. Every local and branch of the party, every member of the party, every sympathizer, every friend of Eugene V. Debs, Kate Richards O'Hare and other convicted and imprisoned comrades will, upon International Labor Day, begin showering the nation with PROTESTS in post card form.

Advance copies of post card, as well as other publicity matter will be sent all local and branch secretaries. Upon receipt of same, orders should be placed AT ONCE. Address—Department of Organization and Propaganda, Socialist Party, 803 West Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

RESOLUTION BY LOCAL HAMILTON

Resolved, That no literature shall be sold, or distributed, by any division of the Socialist Party, that has not been endorsed by the National or State Executive Committee."

The reason for this resolution is the fact that there has been so much literature sold in the past that only represented the individual idea of some Socialist or would-be Socialist, that many times did not in any way conform to the fundamental principles of socialism and in the main were only reformist ideas, and has given rise to the statement that there were 57 different varieties of socialism, much of this literature has been sold by Socialist locals, and consequently the party has been criticized, it being the natural inference that the party endorsed the literature. Local Hamilton has no thought of denying anyone the right to read what they please, but we do not believe the party should be sponsors for some individual ideas unless they are investigated and endorsed by the National or State Executive Committee. Local Hamilton asks the endorsement of the resolution, and requests all locals that may endorse it to notify us.

Yours for socialism,
JOHN M. CAHALANE.

Virginia Comrades: Now that spring it near we should get ready for a lively spring drive. Never in our history has conditions been more propitious for effective work. "The great fear—NO WORK" is already getting this nation in its grim and bony clutch. The wolf of hunger will soon be howling about hundreds of thousands of homes. And it is, the wolf that makes revolutions, not the agitator. Human society is desperately inert and is stirred only by desperate and unusual forces, usually it requires widespread and appealing hunger or ferocious and destructive despotism. Combine the two and the red spectre of revolution is sure to arise.

Although it is the wolf that makes revolutions, it requires the agitator to prepare the forces needful to guide the wild and turbulent forces aroused by the wolf into constructive rather than destructive channels. Capitalism in its heedlessness, intolerance, ruthlessness, greed and desperation, has sprung a crisis that threatens its extermination. When the storm they are drawing down breaks in its fury, were there no constructive idealism to guide and soften it, it would wreak only purposeless destruction and leave in its wake devastation without betterment.

The Socialist Party, alone, is engaged in preparing in the minds of men that constructive idealism, that shall save the world from another of those catastrophic lapses back to savagery that have so often overtaken human civilizations in the past. The present civilization, resting as it does and ever has, upon the back of slaves, has reached its climax and is now tottering to its fall. Ever devoid of humanity and justice, it has now become senile and is hastening its own destruction.

The Socialists, foreseeing that capitalism, imperialism and autocracy were doomed to pass by reason of containing the elements of their own destruction, have endeavored by unparalleled sacrifice and devotion, to save humanity from the horrors of a transition period of violence and bloodshed, by methodically and peacefully substituting the elements of the new order as the old and crumbling structure rotted away.

But in their heedlessness and ruthlessness, capitalism, imperialism and autocracy have hindered and endeavored to thwart our work. In their senility and blindness they have mistaken us for the executioners of their doomed system when we were only its undertakers and grave diggers. They, themselves, are its executioners, and now when the doom they have hastened seems upon them they become demented and strike down the very hand that would soften the rigors of the storm they have invited.

They have sown to the whirlwind, now let them reap to the storm. Our hands are clean. But our mission must be accomplished, and our duty fulfilled. We are to be the custodians of the new order, and it behooves us to get ready for the role. Comrades who thought never to see the big change in their day, and were therefore apathetic, must now arouse. Unless they die pretty soon they will SEE THINGS. So get ready by building up your local or organizing a new one. THIS WORK IS GOING TO BE DONE. ARE YOU GOING TO HELP?

Our showing for February is much better than that of January, but it is not yet what it should be, by far. The Old Dominion, "The Mother of Presidents," and better still, the mother of red revolutionists in the past, should not be content to lag behind.

Local Norfolk has been to the bat twice this month; once with a liberal donation on our mimeograph fund, and once with a nice order for dues stamps. Local Norfolk has adopted the innovation of holding debate meetings, at which the epochal questions of the day are being debated. This is a fine plan. Besides being highly educational it is calculated to catch and hold the interest of visitors, and finally land them, unerringly, into the fold. From the looks of thinks down there, I suspect there is some of the leaven of the East Side at work. According to one Simons, a D. D. who testified before the senate committee investigating the "Bolsheviki." The East Side overturned the benevolent regime of the late (unlamented) Czar Nicholas of Russia. LONG LIVE THE EAST SIDE.

Local Newport News is now getting dug in. When they get their guns trained they will limber up on the plunderers with a barage, that will make them take notice. Newport News contains the elements needful to a large and immensely active local. There is no place in all America where the materials for a great local are better or more abundant. Just keep your eye on Newport News and see things get lively there.

Local Dante is again on the warpath. Soon it will have its belt full of scalps. There are some great old warriors inhabiting these rugged regions. They think liberty and democracy should be something more than a joks. Watch their tribe increase.

Roanoke (The Magic City) is preparing for a grand spring offensive. When they go over the top something is going to happen. No other sector in Virginia has kept their gas masks in such good condition as have the Roanoke warriors. Neither the Wilsonian mustard or the Girard produce have penetrated.

If you know of any unfortunate comrade who has been terribly gassed just send him the Ohio Socialist for a year. This is the finest remedy yet discovered for gassing. Be sure to prescribe it to your unfortunate comrades.

Comrade Lowe of Riverside is engaged in a terrible plot to start one of those frightful Socialist locals in his neighborhood. He should be promptly interned. If this sort of thing continues the result will be that our better classes will be compelled to go to work along side common rough-neck persons—like they do in Russia. Isn't it frightful?

Look out for the Gomperian gas offensive—staged to open in April. Have your gas masks handy and see that they do not leak.

We are going to award a pot of red paint to the local getting in the largest number of members during the month of April. Bet you can't guess who is going to win.

Comrade George C. Lewis of Rosslyn, Va., is hatching one of those terrible plots to destroy religion and break up the home. His braves are even now mixing their war paint and grinding their scalp knives. Watch the outbreak.

Missing in action—that brave old warrior, F. A. Dertinger of Meherrin, Va. Let us hope for the best.

No, comrades, do not send flowers yet. I know there are many, many missing in action, and many casualties reported, but modern surgery does wonders, and "the day that opens with a cloudy dawn, in golden glory at last may wane, and prison doors at last may yawn, and yield their dead into life again."

If you want to lose your scalp in the twinkling of an eye, just you monkey with that dauntless old warrior, D. B. Dale of Wise, Va. Gas him? Hell, no, you can't! He's as impervious to gas as is a duck to water.

When we bury the present system we will want to sing something appropriate over the grave. J. T. Cumbie, a 70-year-old comrade, who has just sung his way into the Leavenworth prison for 15 years, has the goods. Order his song book from Comrade Dan Hogan, Huntington, Ark.

NEWS AND VIEWS—A WEEKLY SURVEY

Edited by C. E. Ruthenberg

Finland

The workers of Finland have just proven that it is impossible to kill the proletarian movement which is sweeping the world.

When the revolution that hurled the czar from his throne took place in Russia the Finnish workers had 103 representatives in the diet out of a total of two hundred members. With the end of the Russian autocracy it fell to the lot of the Socialists to take control of the government. In place of establishing a clear-cut workers' government they formed a coalition cabinet, in which, however, the Socialist controlled. The diet proceeded to enact the working class measures, only to find that the bourgeoisie annulled these measures through influence they brought to bear upon Kerensky. The czar had exercised a veto power over the acts of the diet and Kerensky, then minister-president of Russia, claimed the same right.

In order to free themselves from this check upon their action, the Socialist majority of the diet passed a resolution declaring the independence of Finland. Kerensky refused to recognize this decree and ordered the diet dissolved. The bourgeoisie elements withdrew but the Socialist members continued their legislative work. Kerensky then sent several Polish regiments to end the meetings of the diet. This temporarily stopped the work of the Socialists, but soon these soldiers had to be withdrawn and no others could be found to take their place, and the Socialists resumed their meetings.

Kerensky thereupon ordered a new election. Although protesting against this action the Socialists participated in the election. The bourgeoisie secured a slight majority as the result of this election. How this was done was discovered when the workers revolted and took possession of the government by force. They found tens of thousands of Socialist ballots which had not been counted.

The propertied classes, knowing that they had no chance of winning in an armed struggle with the workers, called in the armies of German imperialism to their aid.

Then the orgy of murder began. Never before in all history has their been such a wholesale destruction of the beaten side in a civil war. Sixty thousand were literally starved to death in concentration camps. The halls and labor temples owned by the workers were destroyed or confiscated; their newspapers were suppressed and their printing plants broken up.

A year of mas murder, destruction and bitter oppression had been the lot of the Finnish workers. The flower of the revolutionary army was dead or in exile. Under these conditions a new election was held and the workers returned to the diet more representatives than any other party.

The Finnsh workers may have made some errors in chosing their tactics. It is more than likely that they would have fared better had they taken the resolute position of the Rusian workers and established a dictatorship of the proletariat when the power was in their hands. In order to participate at all in the recent election they were obliged to make some compromises, publicly at least.

All this, however, does not destroy the splendor of the recent victory. To win what the Finnish workers have won after the "white terror" had done its utmost to destroy their organization, proves the strength of the proletariat movement and that its victory cannot be put off for very long, no matter what brutal measures ore used against it.

The Outlook Brightens

The last few days hve brought news that immensely improves the outlook for the Russian Soviet Republic.

The Soviet Armies are sweeping Ukrania and the French soldiers at Odessa refuse "to fight their brothers." In the north the Italian and Serbian soldiers who are part of the Allied expedition are disaffected and many of them have deserted to the Bolsheviki, Finnaly their comes the dispatch announcing the workers of Hungary have established a Soviet Republic.

As the spirit of international working class solidarity grows the power of imperialism grows weaker. It has become unsafe for the international capitalist class to openly attack the Soviet Republic. The realization of Marx's clarion call "Workers of the world unite" draws nearer and as each new section of the working class aligns itself under the banner of International Socialism the security of the Soviet Republic of Russia increases.

The British Volcano

The British Government has failed to secure the approval of either the miners or the railwaymen for the compromise offer to prevent a strike of these two organizations, and the transport workers, who are alied with them, the strugle may be precipitated any moment.

Both the miners and the railwaymen are demanding the nationalization of the industries in which they are employed, shorter hours and increased pay. The government offer conceded an immediate seven hour day to the miners and promised the six hour day later. The railwaymen were offered a 48 hour week and extra pay for overtime.

What the stike means, if it comes, was thus summed up by one of the leaders of the railway men:

> "We are prepared for the worst. If we strike, we will win. If we win, the government realizes the seriousness of the general strike. It will mean that thousands of people in the great industrial districts will face starvation, as the government would be unable to run enough trains to insure distribution of sufficient food."

While England faces the strike of these three great labor organizations at present other industrial organizations of the workers are preparing to submit and enforce their demands. The agricultural workers union is agitating. There is trouble in the cotton industry and the whole industrial world is in a ferment.

At this distance it seems that it would not take much to set England on the road that Rusia, Germany and Hungary is traveling. If the break comes we may welcome the next Soviet Republic.

The Returned Soldier

Samuel C. Blythe, in an article in the Saturday Evening Post, gave the following interesting view of what the attitude of the returned soldier will be when he returns to the political and industrial life at home:

> The big fact of it is that this war and our entry into it have caused hunderds of thousands of young men who never gave the matter a thought before, to ask themselves—and one another—just what this thing called government is—this power that can seize them, put them in an army, send them to France, make them fight, get them wounded and killed, submit them to rigid limitations as to life and conduct—what is this thing called government anyhow? What makes it? Where does it get its power? Who is responsible for it?
> Finally, and there need to be no misconception on this, the men who fought that war for us, and the men who were ready to fight it, but especially, the two million who were in France, are coming home with this firmly in their minds: They are against war. They know that the so-called glory of it is swallowed up in death and disease and in nameless horrors and hardships. They are against militarism because militarism means war. They are against militarism because they know what militarism means, having had experience of it. They know and, knowing, will be guided by what they know.

It must be the work of a militant Socialist Party to these men, who, because of their experience, are in a receptive state of mind, the cause of militarism and war, and to show them that the way to make an end to both in the future is through the workers taking control of their own destiny and rebuilding society on a new economic basis.

The Progress of Industrial Unionism

The labor unions of four of the western provinces of Canada have voted to break away from the international organizations through which they are affiliated with the A. F. of L. and organize a new organization to be known as "The One Big Union." The conference at which this action was taken also voted in favor of the soviet form of organization, which it believed superior to the present government.

At the same time the news comes from Australia that the workers there are making substantial progress in turning their craft organizations into the Workers' Industrial Union of Australia. That the new Australian organization will be a class organization for the overthrow of Capitalism is indicated by the preamble which has been tentatively adopted, which reads:

> "1. We hold that there is a class struggle in society, and that the struggle is caused by the capitalist class owning the means of production, to which the working class must have access in order to live. The working class produces all value. The greater the share which the capitalist class appropriates, the less remains for the working class; therefore, the interests of these two classes are in constant conflict.
> "2. There can be no peace as long as hunger and want are found among millions of working people and the few who constitute the employing class have all the good things of life.
> "3. Between these two classes the struggle must continue until capitalism is abolished. Capitalism can only be abolished by the workers uniting in one class-conscious organization to take and hold the means of production by revolutionary, industrial and political action.
>
> " 'Revolutionary action' means action to secure a complete change, namely, the abolition of capitalistic class ownership of the means of production—privately or through the state—and the establishment in its place of social ownership by the whole community.
>
> "Long experience has proved the hopeless futility of existing political and industrial methods which aim at mending and rendering tolerable, and thereby perpetuating, capitalism, instead of ending it.
> "4. The rapid accumulation of wealth and the concentration of the ownership of industries into fewer and fewer hands make the trade unions unable to cope with the ever growing power of the employing class, because craft unionism fosters conditions which alow the employers to put one set of workers against another set of workers in the same industry, thereby defeating each in turn.
> "5. These conditions can be changed and the conditions of working class advanced only by an organization so constituted that its members in any one industry, or in all industries, shall take concerted action when deemed necessary, thereby making an injury to one the concern of all.
> "6. We hold that, as the working class creates and operates the socially operated machinery of production, it should direct production and determine working conditions."

How long must we still wait before the members of the A. F. of L. learn that we are living in a new age and begin to adjust themselves to the times?

Raymond Robins, who acted as intermediary between the government of the United States and the Soviet Government in Petrograd and Moscow, said to a New York audience last Saturday, "Were Lenine and Trotzky German traitors? My deliberate statement is that Lenine and Trotzky were international revolutionary Socialists, engaged in a propaganda of world revolution. Had they wanted to they could have left Russia when the leaving was good. But they remained at the risk of their lives to further the aims of the revolutiontion. God Almighty couldn't make a man do the things I saw Nicolain Lenine do if that man had dirty money in his pocket. And he added "I crossed 50 Soviet ujrisdictions. I did not bribe a single officer. Lenine's letter was my safe conduct for the 6,000 miles. Though I had five guns, I didn't have to fire a shot and I didn't hear a shot fired. In Amur I got the freedom of the city on the basis of Lenine's letter. That happens to be history, not hot air."

Forty-eight so-called liberals have issued a call for an organization to fight both the Republican and Democratic party under the title "Revolution or Reconstruction." Let's see, thus far we have the National Party, the Labor Party and now there is to be added the Liberal Party. Meanwhile the waves of revolutionary ideas sweep higher and higher No doubt the liberals, laborites and nationalists are all honest and sincere in their desire to save capitalism from destruction through reforming it a bit, but the capitalist won't listen to them. They will hold their power until it is smashed by the impact of the revolutionary working class movement. The reformers who are just raising their voices have come on the stage too late. We are living in the revolutionary era.

"No one believes" said Senator Pomerene to his City Club audience in Cleveland, "that this league of nations will prevent wars in the future." And a little later he added "Germany will have to be compelled to carry out the provisions of the treaty. Yet a league of nations, or some alliance like it, is the only means by which we can see that the treaty's provisions are carried out by the central powers." The senator is either refreshingly frank in acknowledging what the proposed league really will be,—an alliance to see that peace treaty is made effective, which will not prevent war,—or he is very careless in choosing his words. Mr. Wilson does not make such blunders.

• • • •

The threat of the Italian delegation that it will withdraw from the Peace Conference unless given everything that was alloted to it in the robber's agreement called the secret treaties will show what we may expect of the alliance which is to call itself a league of nations. If Italy can bluff it into consenting to that country getting all the loot agreed upon, then there is no reason why another country may not expect to do the same in the future.

Mother of Humanity

By LAURA JIM REYNOLDS.

The fight for woman suffrage was difficult even before the passing of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the United States constitution. When these two insults to the intelligence were hurled at the American women, the hope that woman would ever be free seemed dubious to any one not familiar with the economic interpretation of history. While the outlook was discouraging, the pioneers of the movement gathered the remnant of their forces and started again along the road trod for ages by those seeking the goal of human happiness.

A paper urging all citizens to register came to Miss Anthony's notice. She decided that it must mean her. A few other women came to the same conclusion and went to register. The clerk demurred but Miss Anthony had not been agitating for years for nothing. She had learned to use convincing arguments. She insisted that since she was born in the United States and was a human being, of mature mind and sane, and that she was a citizen. If not what was she? The clerks were convinced and registered her.

Soon afterward a U. S. deputy marshal timidly informed her that he was sent to arrest her for the crime, "That on the fifth day of November Miss Anthony was a woman." Arresting women, convicting them and treating them to unjust imprisonment in horrible, vile and filthy jails for the crime of demanding the vote was not at this time the Democratic custom that it is today. This deputy felt somewhat abashed that he should have to take to jail one of America's bravest and best loved women.

The resourceful Quakeress set a noble example for the American women who in a later period of American history were to be cast into jails by the thousand for daring to demand that the fine phrases of liberty, democracy and equality be applied to women. She went out immediately and began to hold meetings in the county in which she was to be tried. The politicians at the behest of their economic masters, the business interests, changed the place of trial to another county. Miss Anthony and Matilda Joselyn Gage went over every bit of that county until there were none who were not fully informed about the "terrible" "crime" that Miss Anthony committed by attempting to register.

To Miss Anthony, a judge or a jail were inconsequential. She was a teacher and a propagandist and she had a message for the people and she had no intention of allowing the fear of the judge or jail to deter her from delivering that message. The young capitalist system of that day, exhibited the same stupidity that it does, today, in its babbling second childhood. It thought then and still thinks now, that it can bar progress by throwing into jail all who oppose it.

The public press of the time, like ours of today, true to its master's interests, screamed about the shamelessness of Miss Anthony in registering or trying to vote. It tried and convicted her in its pages before ever the trial was called. The editor of that most sedate and respectable of New York papers, "The Law Journal" wrote that "if Miss Anthony is dissatisfied with our laws," meaning those approved by The Law Journal, "she would better adopt the methods of reform that men use, or better emigrate." We have many editors of like mental capacity today. Miss Anthony's "crime" was attempting to "use the methods of reform that men use"—the ballot.

Mrs. Joselyn Gage answered the editor by saying, "He might as well have said in so many words, 'this country and its government is for us males alone; you women are part and parcel of our property; if you are not suited with all things as they are, then get out from our country.'" The same old story is often repeated today, "if you don't like the laws of our country get out," followed by threats of deportation in many instances but those striving for human betterment today, like their ancestors before them, have no intention of being frightened with a phrase. Elections are held for the sole purpose of allowing those who are dissatisfied to vote for a change, even in the law itself.

There was a jury at Miss Anthony's trial. It was there and that was all. The judge summarily dismissed the jury, saying that they did not understand the case. He read from a paper prepared before ever the trial was held. He then solemnly and pompously found Miss Anthony "guilty." Fourteen other women were also "criminals," all because they had insisted that they were citizens with the rights of citizens.

Miss Anthony was fined, whereupon she informed "the dispenser of justice" that she would die before she would pay that fine. She went out of that court room to do more propaganda work, and—the judge discreetly forgot to collect that fine!

Jailing women in 1872!
Jailing women in 1919!

HOLMAN AT COLUMBUS

On March 6 to 9, under the auspices of Local Columbus, Ohio, Comrade H. L. A. Holman, formerly of Texas, delivered a series of instructive lectures on "The World's Revolutions," "Industrial Democracy," "Organized Society" and "Woman and the Home—Past, Present and Future."

The comrades were so well pleased with the manner in which he dealt with these subjects, they being of such vital importance to the working class, most particularly at this time, arrangements were immediately made for another series of lectures. These meetings were held March 20, 21 and 23.

Abandon Struggle Against Bolsheviki

are intervening in Russia, this struggle assumes more and more the character of a support rendered, as it were, by the bourgeoisie of those countries to the reactionary Russian bourgeoisie.

"It has become necessary for us to abandon our struggle against the Bolsheviki. Kolchak's coup d'etat at Omsk has finally thrown a clear light on the actualities of the situation. After this coup d'etat the members of the Constituent Assembly secretly formed an executive committee and in accord with the resolutions of the congress this committee has begun to organize a struggle against Kolchak.

"It was, decided, to, abandon, the struggle against the Bolsheviki and to unite all forces in a common struggle against Kolchak and the Siberian reaction.

"Under the present circumstances the struggle against the Bolsheviki is in reality altered to a bloody civil war and a struggle against a party of workers and peasants. We are, therefore, making efforts to call all the troops attached to the Constituent Assembly away from the present front in order to direct them against Kolchak and to open preparatory negotiations with the Commander of the Bolshevik troops with the object of terminating the struggle and uniting all our strength against Kolchak."

Then the communication proposes a general union with the Russian Social-Democracy, in order to offer resistance to foreign intervention. Likewise, a Coalition Government is proposed, to consist of Bolsheviki and Revolutionary Socialists, responsible to the Constituent Assembly.

The First Negotiations.

The Ufa Committee at once forwarded the document to the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet Republic in Moscow. In answer, the committee has received a telegram signed by Lenin and Sverdloff, in which the Ufa committee is requested at once to open negotiations with the Revolutionary Socialists. But any proposal aiming at an alteration of the Constitution of the Soviet Republic must be rejected. The Soviet power has sufficiently proved that it is a necessary factor in the struggle with the bourgoise. On this basis, the Ufa Committee has opened negotiations with the representatives of the Constituent Assembly, President Volski and Secretary Sviatitski.

Another party has, therefore, gone over to the Bolsheviki. Both the Mensheviki and the Revolutionary Socialists have now joined them. The Socialist union in Russia is therefore complete. They have taken up the struggle in a common body against their enemies.

NERVE

By SCOTT NEARING.

Certain workers in the textile, mining, building and clothing industries have been striking for more wages. Some of them asked for 20 per cent. some for 30 per cent. and some had the nerve to demand as much as 40 per cent. increase.

Forty per cent. increase!

How does 40 per cent. increase look to the other side? The profits of one meat packing concern were 300 per cent. higher in 1918 than in 1914; a great textile trust reports earnings of 700 per cent. more in 1918 than in 1913. The number of millionaires is 300 per cent. greater in 1918 than it was in 1914. The business world takes a hundred per cent. increase as a matter of course.

Imagine a union demanding 100 per cent. increase in wages! The members would look sheepishly at one another; the officers would advise and exhort. "How can you have the nerve?" they would ask.

But think a moment! The net income of the United States was 35 billions in 1915 and 73 billions in 1918—an increase of over 100 per cent. The workers produced all of this increase and if they should not get it, who should?

Do you think it would take nerve for a worker to ask for 100 per cent. increase in wages? How much more nerve would it take for an exploiter to refuse the hundred per cent. to the worker while he slipped two hundred into his own pocket!

Japanese Workers Oppose Russian Intervention

"We inclose a copy of a resolution recently adopted by us.

"Fraternally yours,

"The Executive Committee of the Socialists of Tokio and Yokohoma."

The text of the resolution follows:

"We, the Socialists of Japan in session in Tokio, express our deep sympathy with the Russian revolution. We recognize that the Russian revolution, which was at first a political revolution of the bourgeoisie against absolutism, has become a revolution of the proletariat against the capitalist regime.

"The transformation of the Russian revolution from a political revolution into a social revolution interests the workers the world over. In every country capitalism has reached its highest development under the form of unrestrained imperialism.

"The Socialists of every country should energetically undertake to bring about a resumption of international relations, and all the forces of the international proletariat must be mobilized and directed against the common enemy—international capitalism.

"The Socialists of Russia and of all other countries should do everything in their power to assist the workers in the belligerent countries to direct their energies against the dominant class in their respective countries rather than against other workers.

"We have faith in the heroism of the Russian Socialists. We are convinced that their revolutionary spirit will spread to other countries."

It is interesting to note in this connection that the Socialists of Japan opposed the Russo-Japanese war of 1905 just as emphatically as they now oppose a war between Japan and the present Soviet government.

Soviet Government Opens Trade Bureau in New York

ent impossible blockade conditions are relieved. In this connection I wish to quote a significant London dispatch printed in the N. Y. Journal of Commerce, March 14. The dispatch stated:

" 'It is realized that in view of the disturbed state of the country it is not possible at present to transact business in more than a comparatively small area, but firms who know Russia need no reminder of the advantage of having representatives on the spot.

" 'It is felt that when normal conditions return to Russia it should be possible for Britain's traders to obtain a far larger share of Russian trade than in pre-war days, and it is hoped that this possibility will encourage firms who have not previously dealt with Russia to investigate the great potentialities of this market. It will be remembered that in the last year before the war Germany's exports to Russia amounted to 643 millions of rubles. Britain came second with 170 millians, and an exceptional opportunity exists now, owing to the temporary elimination of German competition from the South Russian market.'

DESIRE TO END HOSTILITIES.

"In regard to the blockade, and the invasion of Russia, I am empowered to state that my government is willing and sincerely anxious to have hostilities cease in Russia and to enter into agreements with the American government to facilitate the peaceful withdrawal of American troops from Russia.

"On the part of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic there thus exists no obstacles to the establishment of proper relations with other countries, especially with the United States. The Soviet government of Russia is willing to open its doors to citizens of other countries for peaceful pursuit of opportunity, and it invites any scrutiny and investigation of its conditions, which investigation certainly will prove that peace and prosperity in Russia will follow on the cessation of the present allied policy of non-intercourse with Soviet Russia, and by the establishment of material and intellectual intercourse.

"The Russian Socialist Federal Soviet republic has now been in existence for over sixteen months. Its government, the Council of People's Commissaires, is a government controlled by and responsible to all members of the population who perform useful work, physical or mental. Only those who refuse to exercise their productive abilities, choosing to live on the fruits of the labor of other people, are eliminated from participation in the control of the government. Every person engaged in useful productive activities participates directly in the management of society in Russia today.

PROGRESS OF SOVIETS.

"Within the past few months vast territories wrested from the control of the Soviet government during the past year have been regained with the aid of the laboring population of those districts. This includes much of the territory torn from Russia by Germany when she forced the peace of Brest-Litovsk upon the Soviet government. Internally the position of the Soviet government has been vastly strengthened. Lately Russian men and women of literary and technical training have been rallying in great numbers to the support of the Soviet government. Representatives of the former Constituent Assembly, representing the Social Revolutionary Party and other groups, recently met representatives of the government at Moscow and came out in support of the republic against foreign intervention. They begin fully to realize that the overthrow of the Soviets would lead to the re-establishment of the old regime of the old czarist autocracy so bitterly hated throughout Russia. The peasants, who from the outset in large majority gave support to the Soviet power, have steadily become more consciously attached to the Soviet government, which they realize is the only guarantee for their remaining in control of the land which for centuries the Russian autocracy kept in the hands of their former oppressors.

"In so far as opposition has ceased in the form of violent counter-revolutionary attempt against the Soviet government, it has been possible to lighten such extraordinary temporary measures as censorship, martial law, etc.

BRAND CHARGES AS LIES.

"Much prejudice has been created against the Soviet government by the circulation of false and often absurdly silly reports as to the nature of the institutions and the measures taken by the Soviet government. One of the most frequent allegations is that the rule of the Soviets is one of violence and murder. Of course, such an accusation is altogether unwarranted. It has been necessary to adopt stern measures against people who continuously and openly plot for a re-enslaving of the Russian workers and who resort to methods of violence in their fight. Such measures, however, have been immeasurably less oppressive than those usually resorted to by governments against their opponents who are found using violence against established society. Intervention in Russia obviously has had very much to do with the so-called terror. Mr. Litvinoff, the representative of the Soviet government, in this connection said the following in a note to President Wilson:

* * * "The chief aim if the Soviets is to secure for the toiling majority of Russian people economic liberty, without which political liberty is of no avail to them. For eight months the Soviets endeavored to realize their aims by peaceful methods, without resorting to violence, adhering to the abolition of capital punishment, which abolition had been part of their program. It was only when their adversaries, the minority of the Russian people, took to terroristic acts against popular members of the government and invoked the help of foreign troops, that the laboring masses were driven to acts of exasperation and gave vent to their wrath and bitter feelings against their former oppressors. * * * 'I wish to emphasize that the so-called red terror, which is so grossly exaggerated and misrepresented abroad, was not the cause but the direct outcome and result of allied intervention. * * *

* * * 'The best means for the termination of violence in Russia would be to reach a settlement which would include the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Russia and the cessation of direct or indirect assistance to such groups in Russia as still indulge in futile hopes of an armed revolt against the workers' government, but who themselves alone would not think of such a possibility if they could not reckon on assistance from abroad.'

GREAT CONSTRUCTIVE WORK DONE.

"In spite of all handicaps, the Russian workers through their Soviet government have made remarkable constructive progress and laid firm the foundations for a well-ordered development of their society. I am confident that any fair student of the accomplishments of the Soviets in the various branches of economic and intellectual life would confirm this view.

"During the past year the Soviet government has managed to complete the building of some 2000 versts of new railroads. It has planned large-scale work in the way of road building, canal building, etc. Tens of thousands of new primary schools, vocational schools, workers' universities and lecture courses, especially courses offering agricultural instruction, have been established and maintained at great expense, and educational activities have been extended to include the making of the treasures of the arts and sciences as easily accessible to the people as possible. An army of over a million men has been trained, equipped and kept supplied with munitions.

"In spite of the great handicaps due to the heritage of disorganization from the old regime, the lack of raw materials and machinery, the obstructionist methods of opponents of the government, and to the natural confusion of a transition period of revolution, much has thus already been accomplished and the foundations laid for a high development of economic life.

"I believe it is high time for the world outside of Russia to dispense with its passionate and partisan dealing with the Russian situation, and in the place of indiscriminate abuse of the Russian working people to undertake to approach the situation in the sense of a serious understanding of the actual conditions and opportunities."

THE HOPE OF THE WORLD

When the world is particularly charitable toward its unfortunates who swarm the planet, it designates them as "misfits". This is about as charitable as society has grown toward the lives is has wrecked, the bodies and minds it has debauched, the brave spirits is has broken.

However, in this becoming charitableness, is society damned for its hypocrisy, its destruction of life and for the human wreckage that clutters the earth. It is an old saying that society cares nothing for the individual until he breaks its laws. Millions of times over has this been proven.

The world is just beginning to learn that its greatest assets are the individuals who compose it. "Misfit" implies a mal-adjustment of talents and powers to ones work, an unfitness for the job. In a world of sanity where the people are in control of their destiny where the condition of life of the masses are not determined by a class of profit mongers, where human life is above the Almighty Dollar, the vast energy, ambitions and potential powers inherent in man, could and would create in one generation a new world and a new race. Then would all science and resources of the earth and of man's powers be used by and for the development of the masses who are under the capitalist system of industry, mere pawns in the game of profits.

But while the world's resources are witheld from the people by their exploiters, while the vast treasures of earth remain the articles of trade of an exploiting class, no great change for the better can occur.

Only a seizure of the earth and its fulness by the proletariat can guarantee life and opportunity to the masses. When the proletariat does this—and it soon will, then the most stupendous reconstruction program ever inaugurated will become our supreme duty, a reconstruction of human lives, the teaching and training of children; the building of schools; the appliance of every art and science toward developing the powers of the individual.

This program will be a part of the new world's advent. It is a vital part of the new order in Russia and the worker's and peasants' Soviets are solving the problem in an heroic manner.

This is what Lunacharski, the commissioner of education said:

"What ever other budgets are put down, the budget for public education must stay, because it is the honor and glory of the people."

And over the doors of the thousands of schools the Soviets have established, runs this motto: "The children are the hope of the world."

Russia is creating a new race as well as a new Russia.

WHAT'S A PROGRAM?

"We shouldn't spend our time quarrelling among ourselves about right and left wing programes, but fight the common enemy." Thus writes a Comrade. And immediately we ask "What's a programe?" and our answer is: that a programe is a weapon, a weapon in the class war against capitalism.

Presumably, the comrade isn't particular about the weapon he uses so long as he's in action. He can't bear to "waste time" deciding upon a choice of weapons, but would seize the first to hand, whether it was an effective one or not—whether it melted in his hand or could be sent ripping into the citadel of the enemy.

Then the thought comes that it's thru the wise choice of weapons and their efficient use we will win. Time spent in carefully, even quarrellingly selecting our weapons at each stage of the development of the class war will be well spent. Weapons must be chosen. Let us choose them well. And remember "the autocrats of industry do not run business at the ballot box." Neither do they rob the worker there.

Everybody Wants One

Wants one what, you ask? Industrial Freedom Certificates, of course. Industrial Freedom Certificates are selling fast. Many comrades from out of sate have sent their dollar to the State Office for one. Beatrice Sedgwick, State Secretary of Delaware, ordered twenty to sell to members. Some locals are selling out entirely and ordering more. Many comrades report fine sales to non-party members. This is what makes us say EVERYBODY WANTE ONE.

Every fair-minded man and woman believes that the political prisoners should be restored to their families. Everyone knows that a crime is being perpetrated against Tom Mooney by keeping him in prison. Everybody knows that Free Speech and Free Press should be restored to the people. Everybody knows that as long as these crimes are allowed to continue we are not free. Everyone feels the pressure of the iron heel as long as these intolerable conditions exist.

To carry on the fight for freedom for political prisoners, for freedom for Tom Mooney, for the restoration of our constitutional rights, to supply our political prisoners and their families with some of the comforts and necessities of life—to do these things requires money. Every comrade who buys an Industrial Freedom Certificate helps to pay these expenses. Every comrade who buys one of these certificates will want to keep it as a memento of this memorable fight for Industrial and Political Democracy. Ask your local secretary for an Industrial Freedom Certificate. Hand him a dollar.

RESOLUTION BY LOCAL WARREN

Motion by Ed. S. Smith.

That Local Warren, Ohio, of the Socialist Party, having 31 members in good standing, seconds the resolutions by the Central Branch of Local Boston, Mass., for the purpose of initiating a national referendum, as published in Revolutionary Age, of March 8, 1919, and expressed in the following language:

1. That the Socialist Party international delegates now being elected, stand instructed to participate only in an international congress or conference called or participated in by the Communist Party of Russia (Bolsheviki), and the Communist Labor Party (Spartacans) of Germany.

2. That the National Executive Committee shall call immediately upon the adoption of this referendum an emergency national convention of the Socialist Party to be convened in Chicago, Minneapolis or some adjacent city.

Motion duly seconded and carried March 16, 1919.

Another Week's Work of the Red Army Gets Great Results!

Another week of work, another week of effort spent for socialism! Another great stride nearer the goal of a twice-a-week Ohio Socialist. Five hundred and seventy-four new subscriptions is the harvest of last week's work on the part of the Red Army of Ohio Socialist Boosters. Not so great as last week, but still a record which shows the spirit of the comrades and the determination they feel to make socialism hum in this and other states.

For Ohio comrades are not alone in this drive to make the Ohio Socialist a greater power for the emancipation of the toilers and the gaining of the industrial Commonwealth of Workers. Many, many comrades from all parts of the country are giving most loyal support to the Ohio Socialist. From all parts of the nation letters reach the State Office pledging support to ur campaign for 20,000 subscribers and a twice-a-week Ohio Socialist. Comrades realize as never before the power of the press as a weapon in the worker's battle against the despotism of present day social and industrial conditions. They are proving their wisdom by their co-operation in helping to establish the first twice-a-week English socialist paper in America.

New conditions demand new and better weapons. The integrity, the progress and development of the Socialist movement in this country demands the establishment of powerful party controlled papers. The Socialist movement can no longer rely upon privately controlled propaganda to reach its goal. These new and necessary weapons must be forged by the comrades themselves who make up the rank and file of the movement. This is their work—the most important that confronts a willing and wide awake membership. This is their work—a work to which every comrade can contribute a part.

Every comrade can get subscriptions.

Every comrade SHOULD get subscriptions.

Every comrade should lend a hand to the building the chariot of progress; to its completion and perfection. Let every comrade put a few spokes in the wheel of progress during the coming days and weeks that is to determine the possibility of establishing a twice-a-week Ohio Socialist. Every comrade to the job.

MILLION
COMRADES AND FRIENDS OF DEBS

The most gigantic post card campaign ever undertaken will be launched by the Socialist Party on May 1, in connection with the 5,000 meetings to be held throughout the country upon that date. Every local and branch of the party, every member of the party, every sympathizer, every friend of Eugene V. Debs, Kate Richards O'Hare and other convicted and imprisoned comrades will, upon International Labor Day, begin showering the nation with PROTESTS in post card form.

Advance copies of post card, as well as other publicity matter will be sent all local and branch secretaries. Upon receipt of same, orders should be placed AT ONCE. Address—Department of Organization and Propaganda, Socialist Party, 803 West Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

RESOLUTION BY LOCAL HAMILTON

Resolved, That no literature shall be sold, or distributed, by any division of the Socialist Party, that has not been endorsed by the National or State Executive Committee."

The reason for this resolution is the fact that there has been so much literature sold in the past that only represented the individual idea of some Socialist or would-be Socialist, that many times did not in any way conform to the fundamental principles of socialism and in the main were only reformist ideas, and has given rise to the statement that there were 57 different varieties of socialism, much of this literature has been sold by Socialist locals, and consequently the party has been criticized, it being the natural inference that the party endorsed the literature. Local Hamilton has no thought of denying anyone the right to read what they please, but we do not believe the party should be sponsors for some individual ideas unless they are investigated and endorsed by the National or State Executive Committee. Local Hamilton asks the endorsement of the resolution, and requests all locals that may endorse it to notify us.

Yours for socialism,
JOHN M. CAHALANE.

Virginia Comrades: Now that spring it near we should get ready for a lively spring drive. Never in our history has conditions been more propitious for effective work. "The great fear—NO WORK" is already getting this nation in its grim and bony clutch. The wolf of hunger will soon be howling about hundreds of thousands of homes. And it is the wolf that makes revolutions, not the agitator. Human society is desperately inert and is stirred only by desperate and unusual forces, usually it requires widespread and appealing hunger or ferocious and destructive despotism. Combine the two and the red spectre of revolution is sure to arise.

Although it is the wolf that makes revolutions, it requires the agitator to prepare the forces needful to guide the wild and turbulent forces aroused by the wolf into constructive rather than destructive channels. Capitalism in its heedlessness, intolerance, ruthlessness, greed and desperation, has sprung a crisis that threatens its extermination. When the storm they are drawing down breaks in its fury, were there no constructive idealism to guide and soften it, it would wreak only purposeless destruction and leave in its wake devastation without betterment.

The Socialist Party, alone, is engaged in preparing in the minds of men that constructive idealism that shall save the world from another of those catastrophic lapses back to savagery that have so often overtaken human civilizations in the past. The present civilization, resting as it does and ever has, upon the back of slaves, has reached its climax and is now tottering to its fall. Ever devoid of humanity and justice, it has now become senile and is hastening its own destruction.

The Socialists, foreseeing that capitalism, imperialism and autocracy were doomed to pass by reason of containing the elements of their own destruction, have endeavored by unparalleled sacrifice and devotion, to save humanity from the horrors of a transition period of violence and bloodshed, by methodically and peacefully substituting the elements of the new order as the old and crumbling structure rotted away.

But in their heedlessness and ruthlessness, capitalism, imperialism and autocracy have hindered and endeavored to thwart our work. In their senility and blindness they have mistaken us for the executioners of their doomed system when we were only its undertakers and grave diggers. They, themselves, are its executioners, and now when the doom they have hastened seems upon them they become demented and strike down the very hand that would soften the rigors of the storm they have invited.

They have sown to the whirlwind, now let them reap to the storm. Our hands are clean. But our mission must be accomplished, and our duty fulfilled. We are to be the custodians of the new order, and it behooves us to get ready for the role. Comrades who thought never to see the big change in their day, and were therefore apathetic, must now arouse. Unless they die pretty soon they will SEE THINGS. So get ready by building up your local or organizing a new one. THIS WORK IS GOING TO BE DONE. ARE YOU GOING TO HELP?

Our showing for February is much better than that of January, but it is not yet what it should be, by far. The Old Dominion, "The Mother of Presidents," and better still, the mother of red revolutionists in the past, should not be content to lag behind.

Local Norfolk has been to the bat twice this month; once with a liberal donation on our mimeograph fund, and once with a nice order for dues stamps. Local Norfolk has adopted the innovation of holding debate meetings, at which the epochal questions of the day are being debated. This is a fine plan. Besides being highly educational it is calculated to catch and hold the interest of visitors, and finally land them, unerringly, into the fold. Rrom the looks of thinks down there, I suspect there is some of the leaven of the East Side at work. According to one Simons, a D. D. who testified before the senate committee investigating the "Bolsheviki." The East Side overturned the benevolent regime of the late (unlamented) Czar Nicholas of Russia. LONG LIVE THE EAST SIDE.

Local Newport News is now getting dug in. When they get their guns trained they will limber up on the plunderers with a barage that will make them take notice. Newport News contains the elements needful to a large and immensely active local. There is no place in all America where the materials for a great local are better or more abundant. Just keep your eye on Newport News and see things get lively there.

Local Dante is again on the warpath. Soon it will have its belt full of scalps. There are some great old warriors inhabiting these rugged regions. They think liberty and democracy should be something more than a joks. Watch their tribe increase.

Roanoke (The Magic City) is preparing for a grand spring offensive. When they go over the top something is going to happen. No other sector in Virginia has kept their gas masks in such good condition as have the Roanoke warriors. Neither the Wilsonian mustard or the Girard produce have penetrated.

If you know of any unfortunate comrade who has been terribly gassed just send him the Ohio Socialist for a year. This is the finest remedy yet discovered for gassing. Be sure to prescribe it to your unfortunate comrades.

Comrade Lowe of Riverside is engaged in a terrible plot to start one of those frightful Socialist locals in his neighborhood. He should be promptly interned. If this sort of thing continues the result will be that our better classes will be compelled to go to work along side common rough-neck persons—like they do in Russia. Isn't it frightful?

Look out for the Gomperian gas offensive—staged to open in April. Have your gas masks handy and see that they do not leak.

We are going to award a pot of red paint to the local getting in the largest number of members during the month of April. Bet you can't guess who is going to win.

Comrade George C. Lewis of Rosslyn, Va., is hatching one of those terrible plots to destroy religion and break up the home. His braves are even now mixing their war paint and grinding their scalp knives. Watch the outbreak.

Missing in action—that brave old warrior, F. A. Dertinger of Meherrin, Va. Let us hope for the best.

No, comrades, do not send flowers yet. I know there are many, many missing in action, and many casualties reported, but modern surgery does wonders, and "the day that opens with a cloudy dawn, in golden glory at last may wane, and prison doors at last may yawn, and yield their dead into life again."

With our Organizers and Speakers

M. J. Beery Meetings.

Comrade M. J. Beery will speak at Columbus, April 13, 50 1-2 W. Gay St.

Lilith Martin Tour.

April, 1, at New Bremen; April 2, and 3 she speaks at Piqua; Troy, 4; Dayton, 5; Hamilton, 6; Portsmouth, 7 and 8; Columbus, 9; Mt. Vernon, 10.

• • •

Charles Baker Tour.

After April 1 Comrade Baker will work in the southern part of the state among the miners. In this district we have a large number of one-time locals. Comrade Baker's work will be to reorganize them. From reports in this district we judge that the time is ripe for organization work on a large scale.

• • •

Thurber Lewis Tour.

Comrade Lewis is hoeing a tough row these past two weeks, but as the weather opens up his chances for effective work becomes more promising. He will fill the following dates: Columbus, March 27; Montpelier, April 1st.

• • •

Eugene V. Debs Meetings.

Comrade Debs will fill the following dates: Youngstown, March 26; April, 27; Cleveland, Acme Hall 28; Warren, 29; Toledo, 30.

• • •

H. L. A. Holman Meetings.

Cleveland, March 30; Lorain, 31; Cuyahoga Falls, April 1; Barberton, 2; Canton, 3; Dover, 4; Urichsville or Dennison, 5; Midvale, 6; E. Liverpool, 7; Leetonia, 8; Youngstown, 9; Hubbard, 10; Girard, 11; Warren 12; Niles, 13.

G. R. Kirkpatrick Meetings.

Comrade Kirkpatrick speaks at Bellaire March 26, Toledo, 27.

Tom Lewis Meetings.

Comrade Lewis will speak at Lorain on the 30th of March. Sandusky, April 2; Detroit, Mich., 13. He will speak at Piqua on April 13. This will be the occasion of the opening of the city park. After this date the comrades of Piqua will hold big meetings each and every Sunday throughout the summer.

• • •

Tom Clifford Meetings.

Comrade Clifford speaks at Kenmore March 30.

• • •

"Enclosed find $6 for 12 subscriptions. Had no hard time getting them. The working class are opening their eyes, it is high time for us to do something. Send another sub blank, will work hard to get the 20,000 subscribers."—Joe Menkhaus, Hamilton, Ohio.

Bundle Boosters.

Local Pontiac, Mich., orders a bundle of 100 each week.

Local Mt. Vernon orders the same quantity for a meeting that was held by Comrade M. J. Beery on the 16th.

"Enclosed find one dollar for which send me 100 copies. I consider it a dollar well spent."—B. F. Hollenbaugh, Bucyrus, O.

Comrades will please remember that Ohio Socialists in bundle orders are 50c per hundred. Order a bundle for distribution and sub getting. Organize a distribution squad in your local, and get in action. Make socialism grow in your town.

RAYMOND ROBBINS ON RUSSIA

Despite the barrage of untruth, misrepresentations and lies concerning the Soviet government of Russia and the Bolsheviki, erected by the capitalist press, the truth about the workers' government of that country is beginning to appear.

One of the men who is contributing a great deal to the work of getting the facts about Russia to the American people is Colonel Raymond Robbins of the American Red Cross, who was in Russia from June of 1917 to May of 1918.

Colonel Robbins spoke before an audience at the City Club of Cleveland last week. It was a typical middle class audience that he addressed. Doctors, lawyers, preachers, salaried business executives, newspaper editors and a sprinkling of local politicians, composed the audience that crowded the ball room of the Hollenden Hotel. For two and a half hours Colonel Robbins talked to this audience about Russia and his interpretation of Russian events and although most of the audience had come for the usual luncheon hour address, hardly a person stirred during the two and a half hours and many remained for another two hours of questions that followed.

Colonel Robbins is not a partisan of the Bolsheviki; he is bitterly opposed to bolshevism. But he evidently believes that the American people are entitled to know the truth and he presented the truth as he saw it develop in Petrograd and Moscow and elsewhere in Russia.

One thing that stands out in Colonel Robbins' statement is the utter repudiation of the charges made and constantly reiterated by the kept press, that Lenin and Trotzky were agents of German imperialism, bent upon wrecking Russia for the benefit of their imperial masters. He did not do this through a direct denial of the charge, but through a presentation of the story of his negotiations with Lenin and Trotzky, which furnished a more conclusive answer than any denial could be.

Opening his discussion of the subject with the statement: "I don't believe it is necessary to libel or slander courageous men with whose ideas I do not agree," he told the story of his relations with the Soviet government after Lenin and Trotzky came into power.

The first incident had to do with the movement of thirty-two cars of Red Cross supplies from Petrograd to Jassy in Roumania. The German armies were getting dangerously near to Petrograd when Robbins made his request to move these stupplies. At Jassy the supplies would be delivered to one of the allies and used in the struggle against Germany. Yet upon the request of Robbins, Trotzky not only permitted these supplies to be sent out of Petrograd, where they were badly needed, but furnished an armed guard to accompany the train, and they were delivered at Jassy without the loss of a single pound of the goods.

Robbins did not ask the question, why a German agent should help save supplies from the German army, but it arose in the minds of his audience without any suggestion from him.

His second point was to the effect that Trotzky had agreed, in December of 1917, after the armistice had been signed between Germany and Russia, to permit the allies to station officers of the American, French or British armies at the Russian frontier to prevent any raw materials from leaving Russia for Germany. He pointed out that a number of cars of copper, and other materials badly needed by Germany were discovered in Petrograd, which under cover of false billing were to reach Germany by the way of Finland and Sweden, and that Trotzky promptly ordered the cars confiscated when the matter was brought to his attention.

But the strongest argument made by Colonel Robbins was his presentation of the facts in regard to the attitude of Lenin and Trotzky toward the signing of the Brest treaty of peace.

Senator Johnson, of California, some months ago, asked upon the floor of the senate:

> Is it true that the administration knew, at the time of the Brest-Litovsk negotiations, that the Soviet government, represented by Lenin and Trotzky, was opposed to the projected treaty, and looked forward to signing it only because of the physical impossibility of resisting German demands unless the allies, or some of them, came to its aid?
> Is it true that Lenin and Trotzky, a week or more previous to the signing of the treaty, handed to Raymond Robbins, at that time a representative in Russia of the American Red Cress, a communication to President Wilson declaring their opposition to the treaty, and stating that they would refuse to sign it if the United States would assure them of its moral support in breaking off the negotiations and would send to Russia food and arms?

Robbins did not only affirm that it was true, but, dramatically, he took from his portfolio and held before the audience a photographic reproduction of the written offer made by Trotzky and approved by Lenin, which was cabled to the American State Department. He showed photographic copies of the cable sent by Bruce Lockhardt, the British High Commissioner, urging his government to accept the offer. He offered in evidence photographic reproduction of cables sent by others in authority vouching of the genuineness of the offer of the Soviet government and urging its acceptance. He told how, when the day for the meeting of the All-Russian Soviet, which was to act upon the treaty arrived, at Lenin's personal request the meeting was delayed for two days in order to give more time for the allied government to reply. He told how, after the All-Russian Soviet had begun its session and before the treaty had been ratified, Lenin called him to the platform and asked:

"Have you heard anything from America?"

The only answer Robbins could make was that he had received no answer. And Lenin added:

"The allies would rather see Germany triumph than help the social revolution."

* * * *

What shall we say about the Wilson administration that knew these facts and still permitted the lies about the attitude of Lenin and Trotzky to circulate in this country undenied? What shall we say about an administration, which, in spite of knowledge of these facts, permitted an official government bureau to poison the minds of the American people with those damnable forgeries the Sisson documents? What other conclusion is possible than Lenin's "The allies would rather see Germany triumph than help the social revolution?"

* * * *

Robbins indirectly answered another charge against the Soviet government when he told how a letter from Lenin to the local Soviets was sufficient guarantee to give him free passage across six thousand miles of Russian territory and that in those six thousand miles of travel he did not hear a single shot fired.

* * * *

The inspiring part of Robbins' address to the Socialists was his picture of how, what he called, "the new revolutionary culture" swept over all of Russia. It was not through force that the Bolsheviki conquered, but through ideas. The revolutionary ideals took hold of the people and as they swept across the country the power of the autocracy, the power of bourgeois government that succeeded, the power of Kerensky, vanished into thin air. These governments became corpses because the masses had accepted a new idea and moved from under them. It was inspiring because he proved so conclusively that after all real power lies in the masses of the people and when the hypnotic spell which holds the people in subjection is broken, the most powerful government of exploiters becomes merely a shadow.

* * * *

Robbins is opposed to bolshevism, but he says neither England, France and Italy can stop it. "The government of Lloyd George rests upon a narrow ledge of social sanction; though Clemenceau lives in spite of the assassin's bullet, his government is already dead; the Italian government rests upon a volcano, which may burst at any moment."

"Bolshevism is the most fundamental menace of the time," Colonel Robbins said in closing. "But it will have no power in America unless by ristricting freedom of speech and the freedom of the press and other acts of oppression, we create bitterness that will not be satisfied with less than the overthrow of our democratic institutions."

* * * *

And if Colonel Robbins were to consider the fact about conditions in this country he would find that the very conditions which he said would lead to the triumph of bolshevism here have already been created. Debs is under ten years' sentence, Haywood has begun his twenty years in prison, thousands of others are in prison or awaiting sentence; at Seattle the federal troops are called when the workers use their industrial power to secure better things for themselves; hundreds of thousands are out of work and the government and the industrial masters coolly wait until industry adjusts itself, while the workers starve. Colonel Robbins may hope and wish but the facts are against the ruling class here as they were against the ruling class in Russia. The day is coming when the "revolutionary, Marxian culture" will sweep away the power of the industrial autocracy and its political expression here and prepare the way for a Soviet republic.

Soviet Representative Publishes Record of Achievement

Memorandum Submitted to State Department Tells of Wonderful Work New Government Has Accomplished

Through the Bureau of Information on Soviet Russia we are in receipt of a copy of the memorandum submitted to the state department together with the credentials of L. A. Martens, the representative of the Soviet Republic of Russia. This memorandum describes what has been achieved in Russia since the Soviet government has been in power and the present situation in that country.

The facts presented tell a story of wonderful achievements made in the face of counter-revolution within and the attack by allied bayonets from the outside. The memorandum is a complete answer to the kept press and its misrepresentations and lies about Russia.

Following we print the complete text of the memorandum as presented to the state department:

The Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic was established on the 6th of November, 1917, by a spontaneous uprising of the toiling masses of Russia. Its government, the Council of the People's Commissars, is a government controlled by and responsible to all such members of the population of Russia are willing to perform useful work, physical or mental. Those who, while not being unable to work, deliberately refuse to exercise their productive abilities, choosing to live on the fruits of the labor of other people, are eliminated from participation in the control of my government.

Under present conditions those who are willing to work for the common good, number at least 90 per cent. of the adult population in the area controlled by the Soviets. All such people have full political and civic rights.

More People Participate in Government Than Anywhere in World.

The basis for citizenship in Russia being industrial and economic rather than political, and the social system being of such a nature that every person engaged in useful social labor is bound to participate in public affairs, the percentage of people directly participating in the management of society in Soviet Russia is higher than has been the case anywhere in the world hitherto. The Russian Soviet Republic affords thereby the widest possible field for a real expression of a conscious popular will. While the Soviet government is a government of the working class, the abolition of exploitation of labor and the elemination thereby of class division creates a productive community in which all able inhabitants are bound to become useful workers who have full political rights. My government thus becomes the expression of fully one hundred per cent. of the people. It should also be noted that political rights are granted in Russia to every inhabitant engaged in useful work, though he be not a citizen of Russia, but only temporarily working there.

The Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic was rapidly acclaimed by the vast majority of the laboring people throughout the former empire of Russia. It has maintained itself in the face of manifold plots and opposition on the part of small groups of the former ruling classes who in many cases enlisted foreign help and who employed the most unscrupulous methods in their fight against the Soviet institutions. Yet, nowhere in Russia could such elements of their own accord organize any noticeable resistance to the popular will, as expressed by the Soviet government. Only in sparsely populated outlying districts and in such of those districts

Debs Case Again Before Court

Washington.—Eugene V. Debs, March 17, filed in the Supreme Court a petition for a rehearing. The court recently affirmed Debs' conviction, under the Espionage law, under which he was sentenced to the federal penitentiary.

"The opinion of this country, as expressed upon the sentence of Debs clearly amounts to the trial of a person for an undisclosed state of mind," said Debs' petition. "The court erroneously bases its judgement upon the motive of the defendant. In the trial court we were denied the privilege of showing a good motive that would argue for acquittal. If it is good law to use motive for the purpose of sustaining a conviction, then it should have been equally good law, upon which the defendant was entitled to reply for the purpose of an acquittal."

Debs declared that "opposition to war stated as a conclusion does not constitute an admission of obstructing recruiting. If this court decides that opposition to war is an element of crime, then opposition to peace, opposition to a tariff, opposition to an impost tax, opposition to an inheritance tax, and opposition to prohibition can equally be interpreted as elements of criminality. Opposition to war is a motive, it is not an intent. Motive and intent are clearly distinguishable."

(A later press dispatch from Washington announces that the court has refused the rehearing and that the mandate for imprisonment of Debs will be issued in about ten days).

Toledo Crowd Compels Release of Socialist Speakers

Audience Aroused Because Denied Freedom of Speech Disarm Policeman and Marches on Police Station

Toledo, O.—City authorities here learned Sunday that the workers will no longer submit to arbitrary interference with the right of freedom of speech and freedom of assemblage. In a crisis they were obliged to ask the assistance of the workers' representative to prevent a great mass of working people taking matters in their own hands and not only holding meetings as they pleased, but opening the prison doors for release of those who had been arrested.

The situation grew out of a meeting at which Toledo Socialists intended to pay their tribute to Eugene V. Debs. When they endeavored to secure Memorial hall for this meeting they found it had been rented to the Metal Workers' Council. They went to the Metal Workers' Council and stated the case to them and the latter agreed to give up the hall in favor of the Socialists. When this was explained to the city authorities who control the hall they refused to permit the transfer, stating that if the metal workers gave up the hall it would be turned over to some patriotic organization.

In order to meet this situation the Metal Workers' Council agreed to have Debs speak under their auspices.

Arrangements had been made to meet Debs at the station when he arrived. A crowd of some five hundred people assembled there, whom the police tried in vain to disperse. When the train arrived it was found that Debs had been taken ill in Cleveland and was unable to speak and that Charles Baker, state organizer of the Socialist Party, had come in his place.

Baker entered a waiting automobile and the crowd at the station formed in line behind, to march to the hall. In order to break up the demonstration police arrested the driver of the automobile, but another man quickly took his place and the procession proceeded.

When the procession arrived at Memorial hall it was found that the city authorities had locked the doors and refused the metal workers, to whom the hall had been rented, the use of the hall for a Debs' meeting. A crowd of ten thousand people was assembled in the streets in the neighborhood of the building.

M. H. Toohey, secretary of the Toledo Socialist local, mounted the top of an automobile and began to speak and was immediately arrested. Seventeen other Socialists followed him, each being arrested as soon as he began to talk.

By this time the crowd was beginning to get beyond the control of the police, although the whole Toledo force was present. One policeman was stripped of his badge, club and revolver and chased out of the neighborhood. While this was going on an appeal to members of the Socialist Party was made to immediately adjourn to the party headquarters, while the audience was asked to remain where they were.

At the headquarters two hundred party members were organized to follow each other as speakers and they then returned to the scene of the meeting. In a half hour's time another fifty, who attempted to speak were arrested, one after the other, among them Organizer Baker, and were taken to the police station.

Meanwhile the attitude of the crowd toward the police grew more threatening and it looked as if they were in for a rough time.

Evidently the city authorities realized that things were beyond their control, for no sooner had the last batch of prisoners arrived at the station, when the police chief appeared to beg M. H. Toohey, Thomas Devine, Charles Baker and others to go back to the scene of the meeting and try to disperse the crowd.

After some negotiations, during which it was agreed that every man arrested should be freed at once and it was impressed upon the police chief that never again must he interfere with a Socialist meeting, it was agreed that the Socialists would endeavor to restore order.

Hardly had they left the station when they met the vast crowd coming toward the station. Filling the street from building to building, the mass of people swept everything before them and advanced toward the station intent upon freeing the arrested men.

An automobile was hastily placed in position from which Toohey and Baker addressed the crowd, explaining that all the arrested men and women had been freed and the agreement that had been reached.

After a half hour of speech making the crowd was calmed and after a number of other brief speeches the audience was dispersed.

Socialists believe that the city authorities have learned what a mass movement means from their experience Sunday and that they will hesitate a long time before they again expose themselves to the wrath of a mass of working men, as they did Sunday.

Manifesto of Hungarian Socialists Charge Entente With Strangling Liberties

Appeal To Workers Of World Made Before Soviet Government Was Established Explain Conditions That Led To Workers Revolt

The resignation of the cabinet of the Hungarian People's government and the assumption of power by the Revolutionary Socialist government gives added interest to the appeal to the workers of the world recently issued by the Socialists and workers of Hungary, urging them to exert pressure on the governments of the allies to bring to an end the open alliance between the entente troops of occupation in Hungary and the counter-revolutionary elements bent on overthrowing the people's government and restoring the old regime of the monarchists and capitalist and landowners.

The manifesto throws a great deal of light upon the conditions in Hungary since the overthrow of the monarchy and the establishment of the Hungarian People's government, and is especially interesting in its portrayal of the activities of the entente troops of occupation in opposition to the fundamental liberties of the Hungarian peoples. The text follows:

AN APPEAL FROM THE WORKERS OF HUNGARY TO THE WORKERS OF THE WORLD.

The workers' congress has taken a grave decision. The Hungarian workers address themselves to the workers of the world and urge them not to permit the rights of liberty now acquired by the conquests of the Hungarian People's Republic to be destroyed under the pretext of occupation.

BIRTH OF HUNGARIAN PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC.

Our delegates are going to all parts of the world. We shall utilize every method and all mediums in order that the proletariat of Europe especially may understand the situation which menaces democratic Hungary, Hungarian socialism, and the Hungarian labor movement, and to secure their effective assistance in this crisis.

What is happening in Hungary now?

The revolution, almost without the shedding of blood, overthrew the rotten system of tyranny. The Hungarian People's Republic was born. The people's republic, which is rapidly wiping out the last vestiges of feudalism, which is creating in Hungary the most complete democracy and laying the foundations for the development of socialism.

ENTENTE TROOPS AGAINST HUNGARIAN LIBERTIES.

The territory of the vanished monarchy is now inundated by the troops of occupation.

The liberty of the small nations and the safety of democracy were written upon the banners of the entente as long as actual fighting continued and before the war was terminated victoriously for them. Victorious, the entente floods Hungary with the troops of occupation. But the troops of occupation cannot carry liberty. The Hungarian People's Republic alone effectively created liberty here. But the entente, which promised to liberate the world from the yoke of German absolutism, has subjected Hungary to the greedy clutch of Roumania, Siberian and Czecho-Slovak imuerialisms.

Debs Gets Great Ovation at Youngstown

While the cry leaped from a thousand throats of the disciples of Eugene V. Debs last night, March 26, in Diamond hall: "If you go to jail, we go with you!" two thousand more stormed the door trying to get into the hall.

The expression came following the reading of a resolution in which it was unanimously voted "that not a wheel shall be turned in this valley by us on or after July 4, unless the constitutional rights, as guaranteed Debs in our American constitution, are respected, without any penalty whatsoever for exercising his rights."

It was 8 o'clock when the resolution was presented and Debs had not arrived. Those not standing jumped to their feet and a deafening din of endorsement was given the resolution. Diamond hall is snugly filled by 500, but a thousand managed to crowd in and the overflow of 2,000 had to be addressed in Public Square.

Cheers Debs Five Minutes.

When Debs came into the hall, some thirty minutes later, a demonstration broke out anew. It lasted for fully five minutes and during that time a spray of red carnations was presented him as he mounted the stage. There was a small spray that bore the words, "From a Russian peasant who is a bolshevik," also for Debs. A tiny miss, six years of age threw her arms about Debs' neck and said: "I love you, Comrade Debs." Debs was visibly affected. He hung his head, while tears sprang to his eyes and when he raised his head to speak, for a moment, he could not find words. Tears glistened in his eyes and then began:

What Capitalists Hate Worst Is What Workers Need Mos

AMERICANISM AND THE SOVIET"

By EVANS CLARK in The Nation.

Little attempt has been made to describe what we know of the present structure of government in Russia in language Americans can understand and in the perspective of American history. A great deal has been told of the revolution in the language of the revolutionists. But "Bolshevik" and "Menshevik," "proletariat" and "bourgeoisie" are not words to clarify the situation for Republicans and Democrats. They merely aggravate the irritation against the revolution set up by chronic journalistic and congressional mis-statement.

No one can deny that the American ideal is the democratic ideal. Born of revolt against autocracy, our Declaration of Independence itself proclaimed to the world that "governments are instituted among men deriving their powers from the consent of the governed," and that "whenever any government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to abolish it." The constitution of the United States begins with the words: "We, the people * * * do ordain and establish." Chief Justice Marshall, in the famous case of McCulloch vs. Maryland, made more specific this ideal of democracy:

The government proceeds directly from the people; it is ordained and established in the name of the people. * * * The government of the Union * * * is emphatically and truly a government of the people. In form and substance it emanates from them. Its powers are granted by them and are to be exercised directly on them and for their benefit. * * * It is the government of all; its powers are delegated by all; it represents all and acts for all.

The public declaration of eminent Americans from that time to the present day agree in their praise of democracy. No slogan of the war aroused more genuine response from the American public than Mr. Wilson's appeal to "make the world safe for democracy." These words strike deep into the roots of American tradition. Opponents of Russian revolution have gained their best effect in this country by the charge that the new Russia is undemocratic. That is an argument that appeals to the American public. American political life has naturally found expression in such phrases as "the will of the people," "majority rule," and the "sovereignty of public opinion." Lincoln's "government of the people, by the people and for the people," is more than a hackneyed phrase; it is the "Summum Bonum" of American political ethics.

The words "dictatorship of the proletariat" cut across these sentiments with a ruthlessness that stirs to its depths the antagonism of the average American. No better illustration could be found of the ill effects of a foreign and Socialist terminology. Soviet Russia, in purpose and form, at least, does not appear upon examination to be "a dictatorship," nor is it, strictly speaking, "of the proletariat." And yet this phrase, for the average American, is both a description and a damnation of the present regime in Russia. The term "dictatorship" connotes a government uncontrolled by the governed—an exercise of supreme authority without responsibility. A careful examination of the evidence at hand, however, discloses the fact that not only the form of government itself, but the officials of the Soviets are responsible at every turn to those that elected them.

One of the most characteristic features of American culture is the unusual divergence between our political ideals and our political reality. Nowhere is this more marked than in the form and structure of our national government. Students of American politics of as divergent views as Burgess and Beard have emphasized this particularly glaring inconsistency. There is a fundamental antagonism between our democratic pretensions and the rigidity of our constitution. The American nation is a youth, lusty and growing, but clothed in a straitjacket. The change and expansion of our national life must in the end either bend our constitution or break it. If the Supreme Court had not by the main force of constructive analogies stretched the constitution far beyond the intentions of its makers, the break would long since have occurred. Constrained by a constitution written by men dead a century ago, and under the domination of courts pledged to maintain its integrity, not even the representatives of the people in congress assembled can recast the American machinery of state. As Professor Beard has pointed out, "the extraordinary majorities required for the initiation and ratification of amendments have resulted in making it practically impossible to amend the constitution under ordinary circumstances."

No such restrictions now bind the people of Russia. As in England, the national legislature itself is the designer and repairer of the government machine. The hand of the past does not rest, an autocracy of death, upon the institutions of the Soviet state. The All-Russian Soviet fashions the instruments of government and can re-fashion them at will to fit the circumstance of change. The Russian state, thus formed, may well be described as a pyramid of responsibility. At its base are the voters of the cities, towns, villages, and rural sections. Elected by them, and forming the next tier in the structure, are the local Soviets; representatives of the people in whose hands are centered all legislative and executive authority over the territory from which they were returned. Elected by the local Soviets are the provincial congresses of Soviets, similar bodies with jurisdiction over wider areas. At the top of the pyramid stands the All-Russian Congress of Soviets, a body composed of delegates elected by the local and provincial Soviets, which is, in the words of the constitution, "the supreme power of the Russian Socialists Federated Soviet Republic." Each Soviet from the lowest to the highest acts as a general legislative and policy-determining body; but it delegates administrative and even legislative authority between sessions to an executive committee, which, in turn, assigns routine administrative matters to councils composed of the heads of the several executive departments. Each executive committee and council is at all times under the control of the body that elected it. Thus is the pyramid built. The mortar that binds the whole structure from peak to base is the power of popular control.

One of the many divergences between American democratic ideals and American political practice lies in our electoral machinery. We talk of the will of the people, but we know it is more often the will of the boss and the boss of the boss that controls our political life. The manner of election of our legislatures is in large measure responsible for this anomaly. There is no intimacy between a representative and his constituency. In his nomination, his election, and his service as a law maker, the American legislator has closer touch with the professional politician than with those he is supposed to represent. For years forward-looking American political scientists have realized this and have talked of the value of economic over geographical representation as the only reasonable remedy. Men's interests, they have said, are essentially economic. People are bound together more closely by their occupation than by the neighborhood in which they happen to live. It might well be that legislative bodies representing different economic interests, instead of districts arbitrarily assigned on a map, would give more adequate expression of public opinion and would bring the legislator into more constant and intimate relations with those he represents. No definite program has ever been worked out in America to put such a plan into effect. It has remained for Russia to take the lead in its concrete political application.

Elections in Russia are, so to speak, by the shop, and not by the map. Each factory, each economic organization, in proportion to the numerical strength of the croup, elects its own delegates to the Soviet. The assembly is made up of representatives, not of districts, but of economic interests. Every member of the Soviet works in the same factory or organization with those who elected him. He is known to them personally; he is in constant contact with them, and is under their continuous instructions; his sympathies are their sympathies, his loyalty is their loyalty.

Elections alone, however, even such elections as these, would leave an essential weakness in the pyramid of responsibility. Pioneers of democracy in the United States have realized this for years. Merely to elect a candidate to office, they have pointed out, does not insure his responsibility. The threat of the next election is oftentimes far less powerful than immediate political advantage. Without a continuing control a representative is, for the time being, irresponsible. For the past 20 years there has been a campaign in the United States for the recall of elected officials. From its inclusion in the Los Angeles charter of 1903 to the present day, the recall has made its way into the constitutions of two or three states, into the general laws of several more, and into the charters of almost two hundred municipalities. In one sweep the principle of the recall was, in 1917, put into effect in every governing body of Russia, from Petrograd to Vladivostok. The law of the Soviet organization (addendum to paragraph 2) prescribes that "if a member of the Soviet deviates from the instructions of his constituents, then the constituents have the right to recall him and elect another in his place." This applies to every Soviet and every committee of every Soviet under the jurisdiction of the present government of Russia. Leon Trotzky, for instance, as Commissar of the Army, is responsible by election and recall to the executive committee of the all-Russian Soviet, which is responsible to this Soviet, which, in turn, is responsible to the local Soviets, which are responsible to the voters that elected them. Besides this, Mr. Trotzky carries a double responsibility as a member of the all-Russian Soviet and of the local Soviet of his own district. Whatever else Mr. Trotzky may be, he cannot be called a dictator. Whatever else the Soviet may be, it cannot be classed as an autocracy.

The Soviet is not a dictatorship. Neither can it accurately be called "of the proletariat." The term has ben torn from the lexion of Socialist vernacular and has been used to describe what it was never meant to describe. The phrase connotes class rule, the control by one caste of the destinies of another, the tyranny of labor over capital. While it may well apply to a period of transition in the Russian revolution, it cannot correctly be used to describe the ultimate composition of the Soviet state. The accomplished society of the Soviets is a casteless and a classless affair. The great object of the revolution has been to eliminate entirely the present antagonism between labor and capital in the only way which to the Russian is possible—by the elimination of the party of the second part. It is of the greatest importance to note, however, that there are two ways in which this can be accomplished. The property owner can be eliminated by the elimination either of the property or of the owner himself. Newspaper reports would lead us to suspect that the latter method is the policy of the Soviets. Such is emphatically not the case. One need have no illusions about the by-products of a revolutionary upheaval when individuals and mobs run riot, and may yet be convinced by the evidence at hand that the policy of the present Russian government is to eliminate the property owner only by nationalizing his property.

The present Russian government has taken over, one by one, the ownership of the great resources of the nation. Capital, in the sense of property, remains, but in the hands of the people through the state. In this way the private owner of capital who exploits it for his personal advantage is rapidly being eliminated from Russian society. If the Czar should not own and operate the government for his personal benefit, why should the capitalist own and operate the factory to the same end? The nobility already has been expropriated; the capitalist soon will be. When the change has been accomplished, the nobles and the capitalist will still live, but they will be workers, and not owners, for a living. There will remain neither "bourgeoisie" nor "proletariat"; there will be only workers in Russia. Such is the logic of the Rusian revolutionist. In the phraseology of the Russian Constitution (Section 9): "The fundamental problem of the Constitution of the Russian Federated Soviet republic involves, in view of the present transition period (black mine), the establishment of a dictatorship of the proletariat . . . for the purpose of abolishing the exploitation of men by men" and of insuring that there shall be "neither a division into classes nor a state of autocracy."

To accomplish this purpose the owners of capital have been excluded from the franchise. Every inhabitant of Soviet Russia, male or female, of 18 years or over, who has "acquired the means of living through labor, that is productive and useful to society," or "who has lost the capacity to work," and also "persons engaged in housekeeping," are entitled to vote and to be elected to the Soviets. "Persons who employ hired labor in order to obtain from it an increase in profits," and those "who have an income without doing any work," are definitely excluded from voting or holding office. Temporarily, this means a class domination. There can be no dispute as to that. Even so, however, it is the majority that has willed it.

Were the figures available, they probably would show that, even with the property owners excluded, the franchise is more democratic in Russia than in England or the United States. It is probable that a larger portion of the population is entitled to vote today in Russia than in any other country of the world. In the first place, only a small proportion of the Russian population ever has been included in the property-owning class. Russia is and always has been an agrarian land. Its population has been composed overwhelmingly of peasants and workers. In the second place, so-called democracies, like England and the United States, have limitations of the franchise that Russia has not. England still frankly retains property as the basic qualification for suffrage, excludes women under 30, men under 21 and aliens. About one-half of the American states exclude women from the franchise, several require educational tests, and many also demand a poll tax; Southern states in practice exclude the Negro, and most states allow only citizens of the United States to vote, while every one disfranchises all men under 21 and those who have not lived a certain time in the district from which they vote. Only 9,000,000 out of 45,000,000 persons in England voted in 1918, and only 18,000,000 out of over 100,000,000 in the United States. In Soviet Rusia there are no residence requirements, while all men and women over 18, including aliens, can vote. The lack of other limitations in Russia probably will outbalance the exclusion of the property owners in a comparison of the proportion of the population even now entitled to vote.

Ultimately, however, age will be the only limitation upon the suffrage of Soviet Russia. Like the physician whose highest function it is to make himself unnecessary, the temporary domination of the majority continually works to eliminate itself. The property-owner is excluded, but with an ever-increasing nationalization of capital each month sees fewer and fewer in the property-owning class. The property-owners become workers and entitled to the franchise; the disfranchised rapidly approach complete absorption as the limit they will ultimately reach. Each month makes the electorate more nearly all-inclusive more completely democratic. What has been called the "dictatorship of the proletariat" proves upon analysis to be ultimately a democracy of the unclassed.

Soviet Russia thus throws our American institutions into a novel perspective. It proves anew our ideals of self-government. The Soviet, unified, responsible, controlled by the masses at every point, and amenable to change with the times, is a penetrating commentary on our congealed constitution, our sovereign courts our President, our Senate, and our House, only intermittently responsible and frankly designed to check and to balance the popular will, and our restricted and rather futile electorate.

More Self-Determination

By SCOTT NEARING.

Matabelaland, comprising some 48 million acres in Rhodesia, is to remain under the British crown by decision of the Privy Council. There were four claimants to the land: The Imperial Government, the Legislative Council, the British South Africa Co. and the natives. The decision of the Privy Council settles the issue so far as the British empire is concerned.

Southern Rhodesia has a native population of 700,000 souls. Just how many of these persons live in Matabelaland is not clear. One thing, however, is certain—that the 500,000 or so of men and women whose fate was decided by this action of the Privy Council are the victims of the usual variety of British imperial determination.

FRANZ MEHRING

By JOHN BRAHTIN.

Edits Marx and Engel's Writings.

The second great work that Mehring undertook to accomplish, was the editing and publishing of the unpublished manuscripts of Marx and Engels. This task Mehring fulfilled in a masterful way. The Socialist Internationale has before it all that Marx wrote. Under the general title, "Aus Dem Literarischen Nachlass," Mehring gathered and published all those writings, which Marx and Engels did not live long enough to see in print. The first volume contains an introduction of about 80 pages, in which Mehring, in concise form, gives the biography of Marx and how Marx developed his philosophy. All separate articles and treaties of Marx are accompanied with introductions and explanatory notes by Mehring, which makes them clear to present day students of socialism. Without these notes and comments, "Aus Dem Literarischen Nachlass" would remain a sealed book to many of us. It took the broad knowledge of Mehring, who studied philosophy from the same sources and as deeply as Marx himself, to explain the trend of thought of the father of modern socialism.

Takes Active Part in Movement.

[illegible], the unpublished writings [illegible] and Engels did not prevent [illegible] taking an active part in the latter day development of the Marxian thought of the world. His sharp pen was busily at work against such pseudo Marxists as Ed Bernstein and Conrad Schmide of Germany and Ernest Unterman of the U. S. It was Mehring who knocked Mr. Unterman on the head when the latter endeavored to prove the superiority of Dietzgen over Marx in the field of philosophy. Mehring pointed out to Mr. Unterman that his knowledge of the subject, about which he wrote and talked so much, was too shallow. Unterman did not discover the contradiction in Dietzgen's philosophy. Mehring did find it and therefore was able to prove that to comment upon and augment Marx with Dietzgen, is a folly.

Under Mehring's editorship the Leipziger Volkszeitung became the stronghold of the left wing of the German Socialists. All the polemics against the right wing and the center of the German Social-Democracy found space in that paper. The sharpness of Mehring's polemical articles, made many Socialists view them as personal attacks and not defenses of principles. All such accusations Mehring bitterly denied and the present developments prove so emphatically the correctness of Mehring's position that there is not the slightest doubt left. He pointed out the danger, toward which the German workers were heading; he did it without pity, without mercy, but the workers as a class, did not heed that warning but fell into the hands of their enemies and misleaders.

Mehring's Attitude During War.

Mehring was the first one to express his indignation when the Socialists went over to the government in support of the war. To see the way that Mehring fought against the betrayers of the proletariat, it suffices to read the "Crisis in the German Social Democracy," in the preparation of which Mehring collaborated, and which has sharp style and clearness and thoroughness in outline of the subject. All through the war Mehring was the bitterest enemy of the Prussian Junkerdom, bourgeoisie and the semi-Socialists of Germany.

Mehring was the first one to voice and glorify the success of the proletarian revolution in Russia. In his letter to the Bolshevik organ, Pravda, he viewed the Russian revolution as the hope of the German working class. Bitterly he condemns the lukewarmness of the Independent Socialists of Germany who view with a smile on their lips the things transpiring in Russia, but do nothing to arouse the revolutionary spirit in Germany. Mehring, very bitterly attacks Kautsky, as a man who knows every word that Marx wrote, but who lacks the revolutionary spirit of Marx. Mehring, truly, had that spirit and courage.

Mehring passed away, but his life's work remains with us and will live forever. Those who wish to study the outcome of modern socialism, can be referred to the inexhaustible sources of Mehring, where they will find the theory and tactics of the labor movement, outlined clearly, convincingly and forcefully.

When Liebknecht was sent to prison Mehring was elected to take his place in the reichstag; a respectable successor to that younger and fearless fighter of the working class. Mehring and Liebknecht have passed away, but also the old order, against which they fought, in Germany, is dead. They saw the dawning of the new day. They know it will not come easy. The example of the Russian revolution was before Mehring and his broad knowledge of history, convincing him what revolutions are, how they came about and how they are won.

The fruitful life of Mehring is before us like a guiding star. A man, who, to the last minute, did not lose his courage and remained faithful to his life's work and devotion. Franz Mehring is not among us any more, but the memory of him and the work of this untiring fighter for working class emancipation, will be among us forever.

RUSSIA

Years when my pain and anguish
Awakened answering sounds,
When o'er the Steppes, my kindred wept
[illegible] and muscle-bound;
When the trails to the snow-bound silence
Were marked with the blood of mine own,
And through the travail of that awful night
I traveled my way alone.

Now you sit in your smug contentment,
Heaping on me your scorn;
Twisting the strands that binds my hands
On this—my awakening morn.
To me you have sent your couriers—
Blind that they could not see—
Your pen-valets in my borning days
Fashioned a travesty.

Barren of all that is noble,
Wanting in all that is just,
All things are kind that you would grind
In the grip of your money-lust.
You with your vampire vision
Seeking to make me prey,
But I shall hold, for all my fold,
For a thousand years and a day.

Mine is the land unexploited;
Mine is the song of the dawn,
Of a world in birth that will shadow the earth,
Till the fetters of all are gone.
Of hate, I have none to render;
Of joy, I have world's to give,
And follow or fall, I shall share with you all
That MAN and not MAMMON shall live.

A VISION OF TO-MORROW

Labor unrest throughout the world has grown into a mammoth mountain of trouble for the capitalist class, and they are endeavoring to draft measures to suppress it. The capitalists can feel their realms crumbling, and now breath the dust of decay of the system that has long ruled the worker with a rod of iron.

Through their effort to suppress the exposure of extortion they but make visible the grey smoke, winding towards the heaven from a giant volcano, now ready to burst into action.

The toilers must be kept in the valley of ignorance. Their brains must be clouded with the shadow of doubt. They must not realize their true value lest they choose to be their own apraisers. They must surrender their liberties without the slighest emotion and succumb to the capitalistic element or they are branded as bolshevists.

But nevertheless socialism goes on triumphantly. It has emerged from the channel of suppression in Russia, and other European countries. One can see the day not far distant when the toilers of the world, the all important class will come to the realization that socialism furnishes the melting pot into which they can throw their support and mould their influence into power and cross the river of progress over the bridge of knowledge constructed by themselves and wreck the tower of autocratic force and declare themselves masters of masters and say to their comrades, "Go and sit under the shade of your own vine and fig tree and we will build a tower of brotherhood that will stand for all time to to come."

DEBS' OVATION AT YOUNGSTOWN

Debs Visibly Affected.

"If only words could speak my love for all of you. But, comrades, my heart is full and words are cold and purposeless. The warm greeting has touched every red drop of blood in my body. If it were not for you working people, you proletarians, I would be unknown. The little I have I grew from your hearts. The little I have belongs to you. Long I have listened to your proletarian heart beats. All that I have and can give, I lay on the altar of the revolution for you. It was my good fortune to have a good mother. At a tender age she was pushed into wage slavery and in wage slavery I was born. From her bosom, I grew to what I am. I know where bolshevikism sprang from and if you don't know I can tell you. I am not going to attempt to excite your passions tonight—but—possibly, possibly later.

Will Go Together.

"And when I do we'll go together, I shall not say to you, go, but come on, for I'll be at the head of you. I know what is wrong in Europe, in down trodden Europe. I know why the people of Russia have come into their own. Isn't it strange, that there is so much concern about Russia now that they, the peasants, have worked out a successful government, have thrown off the yoke of the czar, are able to realize a real democracy, are able to think and act with freedom without being thrown into jail to rot, without being sent to Siberia to die a slow and miserable death? There was no concern in Russia by England on other countries when atrocities worse than death were committed by the czar. No armies were sent into Russia then! Probably you think I am talking rather plain tonight? I am.

Doesn't Fear Courts.

"Do you think I fear the courts? They can go to hell with their courts."

A demonstration of several minutes followed the statement. And then Debs continued: "I'm not skidding along the edge tonight. I am speaking my heart. Some capitalist has said, I was worth $150,000. Comrades, if I wanted to sell out this cause for which I stand, I wouldn't fool with a paltry and detestable $150,000; I could get $150,000,000—I could sell out your cause for that amount easily.

Says Bolshevism Misrepresented.

"If bolshevism were what they tell you it is, I would be as much opposed to it as they are, and as you are, who do not understand it. But it is the uncompromising rise of the form and figure of the working man, who, battling for his rights through all the ages, has arisen upon the horizon of the world and said: 'I created this world and I propose to make it a fit place for human beings to live in. They say poor Russia is anarchistic, that her passions and greed are running away with her. I tell you, comrades, they're liars and hypocrites. When the czar lived it was a crime to whisper freedom. They rotted in jail, they died in Siberia when they thought against despotism. They're illiterate, yes. But they can think. The Soviet government is a government of, by and for the people. For sixteen months they have stood without a quiver. There is no prospect of their government falling. They have stood their ground.

Wants No Bloodshed.

"But in what I have to say, I do not want to excite or incite you. I am opposed to bloodshep in any form. A revolution is coming, but it must be peaceful. That is the reason I am opposed to war, to making men soldiers. A soldier is a human being trained to kill other human beings. I don't believe in killing, I am opposed to it. I met several soldiers at my home recently. They were hungry and hunting jobs. One said he was sorry he had been a soldier. He had awakened and seen the light. I can go to the gallows with a smile on my face, without a quiver, but I'll never have the stain of any man's blood upon my hands. I'm opposed to all forms of murder. We must do our work, comrades, peacefully. We are slowly but surely welding the iron ring about our exploiters. But, because they have treated us cruelly and like cattle that is not the spirit in which we must treat with them. We must be gentle and ask God to forgive them. They speak of Americanizing the foreigners—why? To make strike-breakers of them? Gor forgive them! When I am gone, the richest gift I ask, is that some child will lay a flower upon my grave and say: 'Gene did something for me.'

New Era Dawning.

"The sun is arising upon our cause. A new and beautiful world is approaching. The day is dawning when we shall take possession of the world that is ours. It may be your lot to carry on. This may be the last time I shall ever see you. But to touch your hands and know as I pass out, that your hearts are right and beat in this cause, no more precious gift or crown I ask. We are all for democracy and opposed to bloodshed. In Russia is a real democracy—the Bolsheviki. It is the rise of the common people laying the foundation of a real republic. Those who are dying on the streets of Hungary tonight are paving the way for a new country for your children and children yet to be born.

Debs Mentions Penitentiary.

"I'm about to go to the penitentiary for the rest of my days"—

Debs got no further. Cries of "No!" split the air for fully five minutes. The same thing happened when Debs later addressed a crowd that comfortably filled the square about the Soldiers monument. When finally the listeners were quieted, he went on: "There's not much left of this old shell of mine. My years and my days are numbered, would be God that I had another life to give. I ask from you no sympathy, no compassion, just your love and the realization of your hearts' desire. I would rather go to prison a thousand times for you, than once to the White House as a hypocrite and a betrayer."

Meeting in Square.

Margaret Prevey of Akron, who had been addressing the crowd in the square gave up her place to Debs as he came from the hall. He spoke briefly, emphasizing some of the points he had used in the hall. He was cheered to the echo repeatedly. Several officers found it impossible to keep traffic moving because the crowd grew to such proportions when he appeared. He spoke upon a box beside the municipal flag pole. When he had finished several hundred followed him into the lobby of the Tod house. Several speakers followed Debs, including Frank Midney.

Kissed Goodbye at Depot.

Talks were listened to until after 11 o'clock. At the B. & O. station, 200 gathered to give Debs a parting farewell as he boarded a train for Akron. They sang songs and men and women alike kissed him goodbye. It was a tearful farewell.

In the hall following the address, borry handed workmen crowded about him, and choking with tears kissed his cheeks. By it all he was overcome and could scarcely find words to express his appreciation and affection.

CHARGES ENTENTE WITH STRANGLING LIBERTIES

REVOLUTIONARY LIBERTIES STRANKLED BY ENTENTE TROOPS.

These imperialisms represent a degree of development inferiod to that of the Hungarian democracy. The people's republic established the most complete liberty of the press, of association and of assemblage. The troops of occupation suppress the right of association and of assemblage and impose a censorship of the press. The people's republic has a social policy—the liberty of association and freedom of labor. The troops of occupation destroy our social policy shackle our private associations and in the place of liberty of labor established a new serfdom.

INDUSTRIAL LIFE KILLED BY BLOCKADE.

But the occupation of Hungary signifies more than the suppression of the rights gained by the revolution, more than the strangling of the developed labor movement. The occupation signifies the suppression of the possibility of work itself.

Where there is no coal there is no work. It appears that the troops of occupation consider seriously the ironical remark of General Franchet d'Espery, who said: "If our mills cannot operate by steam power, operate them with wind mills." The lack of coal means the destruction of our large industries, the bankruptcy of our trade, our villages in rags, famine in our cities.

HUNGARIAN WORKERS OPPOSED THE WAR.

And all this takes place because the former monarchial rulers, today driven from the country, declared war against the entente in 1914—a war which the conscious proletariat of Hungary abominated from the very depths of its heart, a war which we opposed bitterly to the last moment, a war into which we were driven simply because the monarchial rulers menaced the Hungarians with other nationalities. In fact, the Czecho-Slovak, Roumanian and Siberian regiments did menace us. By this terrorism the chiefs of the monarchy drove the Hungarian workers to battle against those who now occupy Hungary as victors, and who now trample down the first fruits of the revolution.

ENTENTE OCCUPATION SUPPORTS COUNTER-REVOLUTION.

We ask the proletariat of the world this question: Will the workers of France consent, will the workers of England consent, will the workers of Italy consent, will the proletariat of the world consent that in Hungary the entente policy of occupation, undertaken under the pretext of establishing order, shall by its effect be equivalent to the counter-revolution?

SELF-DETERMINATION DEMANDED.

We are not pleading for integrity of territory. What we demand is the integrity of democracy. We do not say that we will refuse to cede a morsel of Hungarian territory; but we do say that they cannot cut Hungary up into pieces against the will of the people and without a referendum to secure an expression of the peoples' will.

We know very well that, in the interests of a state kept together in the past by violence, we cannot contend before the democracies of the world that in the future violence shall unite this state. We only demand that by the right of violence they shall not dismember this state. We demand the reign of right against all forms of violence, and not the reign of violence against the right of the peoples.

COUNTER-REVOLUTIONISTS OPPOSE PEOPLE'S GOVERNMENT

The counter-revolutionary elements in Hungary, who were stunned at first have regained consciousness. The reactionary press unanimously opposes the new regime. It attacks principally the national policy of the people's government. It condemns not only the right of self-determination, but exhibits extreme bitterness becouse the non-Hungarian nations living in Hungary receive autonomy.

What do these reactionaries mean? Is it possible that they imagine that vanquished Hungary shall maintain against the non-Hungarian nations the brutal domination which it has exercised in the past? The chiefs of the Hungarian reaction, the leaders of the Hungarian counter-revolutionaries, know very well that that is not possible. They well know that they demand an impossible thing. They well know that they are directly injuring the interests of Hungary because they give proof of Hungarian oppression and of its savage chauvinism. These men, who now oppose the national policy of the government, are conscious traitors of the country.

INTEND TO SMOTHER SOCIALIST MOVEMENT.

But what does this treason matter to them? They intend, in fact, by this method to save their dead domination. By their treasonable actions they wish to excite chauvinistic passions, and they believe that in resurrecting chauvinism they will be able to smother the Socialist movement, now strongly developed.

SACIALISTS ALONE ABLE TO ESTABLISH HARMONY IN HUNGARY.

But the Hungarian Socialist movement cannot be vanquished by such methods. Why? Because in Hungary now the Socialists alone represent the idea of social progress. Only through socialism, only through the mutual understanding of the peoples, only with the assistance of the proletariat of the world, is it possible to establish here a country of concord and of productive labor instead of a war of races and disputes of the peoples.

A WARNING TO EUROPE.

The Hungarian people should understand that it is necessary to live in peace with the nations whose home is in Hungary, unless they wish to prolong the world war.

And the people of Europe should understand that unless they wish that Hungary shall be a center of European conflagration, unless they wish that this corner of Europe shall start the clouds of the tempest which menaces the tranquility of Europe, then they should not protect the greedy nationalistic and usurping elements here which are manifesting themselves coincidently with the troops of occupation. They should, on the contrary, assure the reign of democracy in Hungary and the realization of the veritable rights of nations to dispose of themselves.

For the nations of Hungary can live in peace with one another. Not, however, under the empire of absolutism and oppression, but only in the most complete liberty and the most complete democracy.

NEWS AND VIEWS—A WEEKLY SURVEY

Edited by C. E. Ruthenberg

Class Justice

Socialists, in analysing the institutions of present day society, have contended that the administration of justice was not governed by any abstract principles of right and wrong, nor even by the provisions of existing laws, although most often they are class laws, but by the interest of the dominant economic class. For this materialistic and cynical attitude toward judges, courts and laws, they have been roundly condemned by those who make the apologies for the existing ruling class.

From France there has just come the clearest demonstration of the truth of the Socialist position that it is possible to make.

In August 1914, Raoul Villain assasinated Jean Jaures. Jaures was the leader of the French Socialists. He had fought against militarism in France. A few days before his death he had gone to Brussels and in mighty words had called upon the workers of Europe to prevent their rulers from sending them forth to kill each other; in the name of civilization and humanity he demanded that the crime about to be perpretated be prevented by organized workers.

Because of this,—because he at its very beginning raised his voice against the war in which more than seven million human beings were slaughtered, he was killed.

His slayer was not brought to trial until ten days ago. He admitted shooting Jaures. His attorney appealed in his behalf on the ground that the motive for his crime was "misguided, ardent, patriotism." He was freed.

A few weeks ago a French anarchist attempted to kill Clemenceau. He failed, succeeding only in inflicting a wound from which the French premier has already recovered.

He was tried immediately. He gave as a reason for his crime:

> I wanted to kill the man instigating a new war. I am an anarchist, a friend of the people, Germans not excluded, a friend of mankind and brotherhood. These words deeply penetrate into the heart of every man. Clemenceau is a tyrant, and a tyrant of the highest degree. Clemenceau is making the fighters for the popular cause rot in the prisons of France. Clemenceau is the greatest enemy of the great freethinking people. No wonder he is called "Tiger."

Cottin was found guilty and condemned to death.

Thus the record stands: It is right to kill a man who opposes the mass slaughter of human beings, for the slayer goes free. It is a crime, punished by death, to wound a prime minister whom the assasin believes a tyrant and an emeny of freedom.

The Slaves

During the progress of the war our capitalist newspapres foamed at the mouth when discusing the crime perpetrated by the German in compelling Belgians and French workmen to labor for them through the compulsion of the bayonet. The enslaving of the population of conquered territory was one of the crimes held before us for our execration.

Now, this country is in the position of the victor holding conquered territory.

And what do we do?

Last Sunday's papers carried a dispatch from one of the cities held by American soldiers telling with great gusto, how the army of occupation had arrested German workmen who had gone on strike, and compelled them, at the point of the bayonet, to do work necessary in handling the supplies for the armies.

Are we enslaving the German workmen even as the German Imperial Government enslaved the Belgians and French in the territory it conquered?

Or is it possible that with some glib, idealistic phrase President Wilson can make, compelling German workmen to labor for us at the point of the bayonet something different than compelling French and Belgians to labor for Germany at the point of the bayonet?

What Holds Them Back?

The jingo press is becoming impatient because the gentlemen who are meting in Paris do not take drastic action against the revolting workingmen who are sweeping everything before them in Eastern and Central Europe. They are urging these gentlemen to send their armies to crush bolshevism under the iron heel of the Allied armies, even as Germany was crushed. They urge the statesmen at Paris to end their dilatory tactics and act,—act before it is too late.

No doubt the representatives of capitalism at Paris would be only too glad to follow this advice,—if it were feasible to do so.

But they know it is not. They know that sending armies to crush Soviet Russia or Soviet Hungary is quite a different thing than using armies to crush Imperial Germany.

The difference exists in the fact that in every country of Europe, and to a lesser extent in this country, there are large sections of the workers who are in hearty sympathy with the workers in revolt and who themselves threaten to revolt if armies are sent against their brothers in other lands.

When the French regiments at Odessa sent word to their officers "We are ready to fight for France but we will not shoot down our brothers," they forcibly expressed the position of the masses in France, Italy and England.

It is no lack of desire to drown the proletarian revolt in the blood of the workers that deters the statesmen at Paris from acting. It is the fear of the result of such action in their own countries.

The Outlook Is Blue

Reports from Paris concerning the work of the Peace Conference grows more pessimistic daily. Conflicting claims and demands hold up the agreement between the five great powers and at the same time the new force of working class revolt grows more threatening.

The situation has grown so dark that one well-known newspaper writer, now in Paris, ventured the opinion in an article published here a few days ago, that the Peace Conference would not make peace.

While the war on all of the belligerent nations expressed their enthusiastic adherence to President Wilson's idealistic phrases in regard to what the war was being fought for, but in the peace making each is pushing forward its own selfish interests to the limit of its power.

The result is that one day we hear that the Japanese threaten to withdraw if they are not conceded certain islands in the Pacific and the next that the Italians will leave if they cannot have their own way about the eastern coast of the Adriatic. France, which posed before the world as a despoiled nation because the Germans held Alsace-Lorraine, demands the she be permitted to in turn despoil Germany by taking the Saar Valley.

At the same time there are presented bills for "reparation" amounting to so many billions that even the members of the Peace Conference recognize that it would be impossible for Germany to exist under such a burden. On the other hand the "victorious" nations realize that unless they can shift part of the great burden of debt they have accumulated the economic structure at home is in danger of collapse.

While the statesmen bicker and barter and endeavor to harmonize conflicting claims, the revolt against them and the system they represent grows stronger and sweeps wider. Soviet Russia advances on all fronts; Hungary takes its place under the new standard; Besserbia follows, and all the countries of Central Europe, Bulgaria, Serbia, Roumania, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, the storm is brewing and each and very one of these countries may any day follow Hungary in establishing a Soviet Republic.

Pity the poor statesmen. They are essaying the impossible task of harmonizing the conflicts and contradictions of capitalism. Peace will not come out of Paris; it cannot come out of the present conference. The real peace of the world will come when the workers of the world unite in the universal Soviet Republic.

Power

"The government has asked that nationalization of the mines be deferred until the parliamentary commission can conduct a further investigation."

The above sentence is from a dispatch in regard to the negotiations between the miners union and the British Government. Those brief lines tell more about the situation in England than many lengthly discussions of the details of the present negotiations.

"The government has asked;........", no. not the workers, but the government has asked. What a topsy-turvy world it must be for the former rulers of society to find the government asking the workers to please defer certain action in place of the workers begging the government to do something for them.

It is not the Lloyd George government that is ruling England today.

Evolution and Industrialism

The following quotation from an article in the "Nation" presents a picture of the evolution of capitalist society during the past fifty years, with which most Socialists will agree:

> The framers of our Federal Constitution could not foresee the development of modern industrialized society. They could not foresee the shifting of the actual seat of government from the executive chambers and legislative halls to banks, stock exchanges, schools, and newspaper offices. They could not foresee banker control of credits and industry, and hence of education and the news, and hence of public opinion, and hence of the political machinery of the government itself. They provided against political autocracy; but they could not foresee the gradual decay of the old forms of political power and the gradual rise of a new economic power; hence they could not provide against industrial autocracy. The decay of the old forms of political power is written in a tacit but binding surrender. The real rule of the modern world—the power which makes or breaks a nation, which directs the creative energies of a culture, which determines the development and destiny of a people—is vested in forms economic rather than political. These constitute the invisible government which lies behind the visible government of the old political forms; they rule the world for profit, without a social sense; they rule the world for a benefit of a special class of investors and stockholders, rather than in the interests of the whole community. The old political forms remain fundamentally unchanged. From time to time they have suffered modification, under the pressure of drastic events; but never have they failed to resist the trend of society, never have they disclosed a spirit of cooperation with human endeavor, never have they kept pace with the swift development of the new business system.
> Over against these new economic forms, exercising the real governmental functions of modern society, has grown in the industrial field a system of organized check and protest, the invisible opposition, as it were. This is the political significance of the organization of workers everywhere during the rapid rise of industrialism; they recognized the necessity of an economic opposition, the inadequacy of the old political forms to furnish a proper check upon the new governmental functions; and the action was a healthy sign of man's political sagacity. For the past fifty years these lines have been deepening. If the old political forms could have been flexible enough to encompass the new economic order, to ride the tidal wave of industrialism, all would have been well; the channels of political activities would have run smoothly, the workers would have been satisfied with adequate voice and representation in the new industrial functions of government, the community instead of a special class would have been profited, and the great economic war would not have descended upon our civilization. But those in control were too selfish or too blind to render the political machinery flexible, to make the invisible and responsible government, or to conduct the economic system with any degree of social sense; and thus they forced the workers to organize, and brought about a fatal division between our political activities and the life processes of our society.
> Then came the great war in Europe, as a direct result of this fatal division—as a direct result of the inability of a decadent system to control the predatory economic forces that actually ruled the world. And then, caught in the toils of its own blindness and irresponsibility, civilization was driven forward to the point of economic exhaustion—was driven far beyond that point, in fact, under the emphasis of war emotionalism—while the Governments that had brought on the holocaust were equally incapable of stopping it. The Russian revolution raised a flaming sign, but it was not heeded. The war went on; and the economic structure of society has been ruined past any redemption in terms of the old order. The bills are too staggering to be paid. The whole world is trembling on the brink of revolution. America is not immune.

The new organization of city editors which proposed to smash bolshevism forever in this country, is reported to have actually collected $700.00 for that purpose. They have still a long road to travel.

The New York legislature has appropriated $50,000 to investigate bolshevism. While the bill was under consideration one of the Socialist members rose to suggest that the legislators better save the money of the state, for he was a bolshevist and would gladly give them all the information they desired.

According to the press dispatches, President Wilson is threatening an expose of the Peace Conference if his fellow statesmen do not hurry up and agree. We hope he will have the opportunity of doing it, for then he will have made good on one point at least,—the abolition of secret diplomacy.

Swedish Workers Oppose Intervention

The capitalist government of Sweden is reported to have definitely abandoned its project to send a volunteer army to the assistance of the labor exploiters of Esthonia, hard pressed by the Bolsheviki forces. The abandonment of intervention was caused largely by the vigorous campaign against it put up by the Socialists of Sweden.

According to information which has just reached the United States, a mass meeting was held in Stockholm on January 12 by the Workers' and Soldiers' Association to protest against the recruiting of volunteers in Sweden for the benefit of the capitalists and landlords of Esthonia.

A committee of the Swedish Socialist Party interviewed the president of the council, M. Eden, relative to the proposed intervention on January 14. The committee demanded the immediate cessation of the recruiting of the volunteers; otherwise it would organize on its own account a campaign to recruit soldiers determined to support and defend the armies of Socialist workers fighting for their rights and their liberty.

President Eden received the committee "coldly." The committee responded by organizing the protest meeting the following day. The mass meeting instructed the "committee of action to arrange street demonstrations and organize protest meetings throughout Sweden. Another committee was mandated to study the possibilities of recruiting a Red Guard for use in the Baltic provinces. The street manifestation took place on January 18, and was a remarkable success.

Shortly after these protests the government, which had denied having any official connection with preparations for the volunteer expedition into Esthonia, frowned upon the eagerness of the interventionists, and upon a report made by a military mission of Swedish army officers to Esthonia the government closed the recruiting stations. (Paris Populaire is authority for the facts given in the above article).

NORWAY FOLLOWS EXAMPLE OF SOCIALIST WORKERS.

The prompt and radical action of the Socialists of Sweden to check the plans of the Swedish capitalists to raise a volunteer army to go to the assistance of the bourgeoisie of the Baltic provinces, menaced by the Bolsheviki forces, was speedily duplicated by the Socialist Party of Norway. The executive committee of the party passed the following resolution:

"The organization at Stockholm of volunteer troops (to intervene in Esthonia) constitutes, in the judgment of the executive committee, a menace to peace. It is quite possible that these volunteers will meet with defeat, which would compel the Swedish government, under the pressure of public opinion, to intervene. The national council believes the matter to be so grave that it demands immediate and speedy action throughout Scandinavia to convene a conference of all the Social Labor parties."

Soviet Representative Publishes Record of Achievements

where our opponents had access to foreign military help, has it been possible for them to maintain any organized opposition and to wrest from the control of Soviet Russia any territory. Today, after sixteen months of existence the Russian Soviet Republic finds itself more securely established than at any previous time.

Retake Vast Territory.

During the current year the Soviet government has been particularly successful in retaking vast territories wrested from its control during the preceding months. By February, 1919, the Soviet troops on the northern front had retaken the city of Shenkursk and adjoining territory. On the eastern front they have lost Perm, but they have regained Pereufa, Ufa Sterlitamak, Bellbey, Orenburg and Uralsk. The railroad connection with Central Asia is at present in the hands of the Soviet government. On the southern front they have taken the railroad stations of Pavorino, Alexikovo, Polovaya, Kalstsk and Begutchar, which have assured them of a control over the railroads of that region, while on the southeastern front the Ukrainian Soviet troops threaten the army of Krasnov from Ugansk in the rear. In the Ukraine the Soviet troops have acquired Kharkov, Yekaterinoslav, Poltava, Krementchug, Tchernikov and Obrutch. In the Baltic provinces and in Lithuania the Soviet power has been extended over a great part of the territory formerly occupied by Germans, with the large cities of Minsk, Vilna, Riga, Mitau, Dvinsk, Windau and others in the control of adherents of the Soviet.

These last mentioned successes are largely due to the fact that after the evacuation by the German armies of the territories wrested from Russia during the war and by the peace treaty of Brest Litovsk, which the Soviet republic was forced to sign under duress, the workers in such territories everywherre are rising to support the ideals and the social order represented by the Soviet republic.

Workers Rally to Government.

The resentment against the former ruling classes, who did not hesitate to invite foreign military help against their own people has evinced itself in an ever increasing popular support of the Soviet government, even among such people as at first were either hostile or indifferent to the Soviet rule. Men and women of literary or technical training and of intellectual accomplishments are now in great numbers rallying to the support of the Soviet government and co-operate with it in all administrative branches. The peasantry of Russia, the great majority of which from the very outset was in support of the workers' revolution, has become more consciously attached to our social system, realizing that in the support of the workers' republic lies the only guarantee for their remaining in control of the land which they have wrested from their former oppressors. The economic isolation of Russia which so far has prevented the Soviet government from adequately supplying the peasants with implements that they so badly need, is of course causing hardship among the peasantry, yet the peasants generally do not place the blame for this privation at the door of the Soviet government, well realizing that it is due to the deliberate interference in the affairs of the Russian people by hostile groups and that a remedy for this privation is not a weakening but a strengthening of the Soviet power. They fully realized—and their experience in such instances where counter-revolutionary forces temporarily succeed in overthrowing Soviet institutions clearly demonstrated the correctness of this realization—that an overthrow of the Soviet rule, if possible at all, would lead to the establishment of a tyrannical, reactionary, bloody autocracy.

All Parties Oppose Intervention.

The remarkable improvement in the internal situation of Soviet Russia appears from the negotiations which the members of the former constituent assembly have begun with the Soviet government. Representatives of the former constituent assembly, at Chernov, Rakitnikov, Svatizki, Volski, Bourevoy, Chernenkov, Antonov, all of whom are also members of the Central Committee of the Sorial Revolutionary Party, recently arrived in Moscow to participate in a conference with the Soviet government with the view of giving support to our republic. This conference has led to an understanding whereby these well known Social Revolutionists and former bitter opponents have ceased their opposition and declared themselves with great emphasis against the entente intervention in Russia.

An improvement of the Soviet government's relations with the elements formerly hostile to it in Russian society is also indicated by the change of the attitude of the Mensheviki, whose conference has likewise protested against the entente intervention.

The army of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic has been successfully organized and numbers today over a million men. A system of universal military training has been inaugurated which steadily supplies the army with accessions with the view of creating a force, numbering, by the end of the current year, three million men. The forces of the government are led partly by officers of the former Russian armies who have proved their allegiance to the Soviet government, and partly by officers developed from the rank and file by the military educational institutions established by my government. The Commissariat of War has been successful in establishing and maintaining a strict discipline within the ranks of the army, a discipline not based on fear of punishment or on docile submission, but on the ardent conviction of the workers from whose ranks the army is recruited, that it is their privilege as well as their duty to defend [illegible] achievements against encroachments from any sources. This same conviction of the necessity of the defence of our revolutionary achievements has made it possible for us, in spite of all economic obstacles, efficiently to organize the prouction of military supplies.

Inherited Disruption.

The Soviet government inherited a legacy of utter financial disruption created by four years of war and a year of revolution. This state of affairs, and also the necessity of co-ordinating the financial system of Russia with the new industrial and economic system represented by my government, necessitated a complete reorganization of the financial institutions on the basis of common property rights. This reorganization, which aims at exchanging the money system for a system representing labor value is still in the state of formation. Regardless thereof of Soviet government, in as far as financial relations with and obligations to other countries are concerned, is prepared to offer modes of financial transactions adapted to the financial system of other countries.

The period preceding the establishment of the Soviet government also badly disrupted the machinery for producing and distributing. The Soviet government inaugurated a system of public control and ownership of industries. It has actually taken over many important branches of industry, and has established the control of the Supreme Council of National Economy over all industries. Great handicaps have been faced because of the obstructionist methods of our opponents, lack of raw material and machinery, and because of the general confusion unavoidably coincident with the gigantic reorganization of the industrial life. In spite of these handicaps, various branches of industry have been re-established, even with an increase of productive efficiency. Many branches of industry, however, have not so far been able to recuperate, because of lack of raw material and lack of machinery. The needs of such industries offer a wide field for business transactions with Russia by other countries.

Build New Railroads.

The state of railroad communications at the outset of the Soviet regime was very unsatisfactory. The demands first of the demobilization of the old army and later of military operations against counter-revolutionary attacks taxed the capacity of our railroads and left little opportunity for reconstruction work in this field. The Soviet government during the past year nevertheless has managed to build and to complete the building of about 2,000 versts of new railroads. It has also paid great attention to the construction of other means of communication, such as canals, roads, etc., and is at the present time planning work along these lines on a large scale, which will also offer great opportunities for foreign trade.

The people of Russia, kept for hundreds of years away from sources of popular education, have made it one of the main tasks of my government to reorganize the school system with [illegible] view of the [illegible] popular education. In this respect extensive work has been carried on throughout Russia during the past year. Tens of thousands of new primary schools, vocational schools, workers' universities and lecture courses, especially courses offering agricultural institution, have been established and maintained at great expense on the part of the Soviet government and the field of the educational activities has been extended to include the making of the treasures of the arts and sciences as easily accessible to the people as possible.

All these efforts, incomplete as they still are, have nevertheless given the Russian people sufficient evidence of the earnestness of the desire and of the ability of the Soviet government to fill the needs of the population and they have greatly contributed to the abatement of opposition. Inasmuch as opposition has ceased in the form of active resistance to the Soviet government it has become possible to lighten such extraordinary measures as censorship, martial law, etc.

False Reports Circulated.

Much prejudice has been created against the Soviet government by the circulation of false reports about the nature of the institutions of and the measures undertaken by Soviet Russia. One of the most frequent allegations has been that the rule of the Soviets is one of violence and murder. In this connection I want to call your attention to the following passages in the note sent to the president of the United States on the 24th of December, 1918, by Maxim Litvinoff, on behalf of the Soviet government of Russia.

— — — "The chief aim of the Soviets is to secure for the toiling majority of Russian people economic liberty without which political liberty is of no avail to them. For eight months the Soviets endeavored to realize their aims by peaceful methods without resorting to violence, adhering to the abolition of capital punishment which abolition had been part of their program. It was only when their adversaries, the minority of the Russian people, took to terroristic acts against popular members of the government and invoked the help of foreign troops, that the laboring masses were driven to acts of exasperation and gave vent to their wrath and bitter feelings against their former oppressors. For allied invasion of Russian territory not only compelled the Soviets against their own will to militarize the country anew and to divert their energies and resources, so necessary to the economic reconstruction of Russia, exhausted by four years of war, to the defense of the country, but also cut off the vital sources of foodstuffs and raw material, exposing the population to the most terrible privation bordering on starvation."

— — — "I wish to emphasibe that the so-called red terror, which is so grossly exaggerated and misrepresented abroad, was not the cause but the direct outcome and result of allied intervention. The Russian workers and peasants fail to understand how foreign countries, which never dreamed of interfering with [illegible] tified in intervening in Russia now when the working people themselves, after decades of strenuous struggling and countless sacrifices, succeeded in taking the power and destiny of their country into their own hands, aiming at nothing but their own happiness and international brotherhood, constituting no menace to other nations."

In another passage . the same note Mr. Litvinoff states as follows:

— — — "The best means for the termination of violence in Russia would be to reach a settlement which would include the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Russia and the cessation of direct or indirect assistance to such groups in Russia as still indulge in futile hopes of an armed revolt against the workers' government but who by themselves alone would not think of such a possibility if they could not reckon on assistance from abroad."

Intervention Halted Work of Reconstruction.

The great work of social reconstruction inaugurated by the Soviet government as the executors of the people's will has been hampered by the necessity of military defense against the opponents of our republic, and by the economic isolation of Soviet Russia which has been one of the weapons of their attacks, together with deliberate disruption of our means of communications with important food centers, as well as destruction of food stores—and all this has greatly increased the suffering of our people. By tremendous efforts and by efficient consolidation of all economic means at its disposal, my government has been able to stave off the worst features of this situation. The fact that economic disruption together with starvation and lack even the bare necessities of life prevails so poignantly, and all the more in such parts of the former Russian empire as have been for some time in the hands of the opponents of our republic and which have had contact with the outside world, clearly testifies that the Soviet rule is much more capable of insuring means of existence to the people than any pretenders to the power in Russia.

In view of all that is stated above, I venture to say that the Soviet government has been given all such proofs of stability, permanence, popular support and constructive ability as ever have been required from any government in the world as a basis for political recognition and commercial intercourse. I am confident that the people outside of Russia are becoming as convinced as the Russian people themselves of the futility of efforts to overthrow the Soviet government. Such efforts lead only to unnecessary bloodshed and if successful in any part of Russia, lead to temporary establishment of a bloody, monarchical autocracy, which cannot maintain itself and even the temporary existence of which will lead to bloodshed and misery.

Desire to Establish Commercial Relations.

Fully realizing that the economic prosperity of the world at large, including [illegible] tablish commercial relations with other countries, and especially with the United States. The Soviet government is prepared at once to buy from the United States vast amounts of finished products, on terms of payment fully satisfectory to the parties concerned. My government also desires to reach an agreement in respect to exports from Russia of raw material needed by other countries and of which considerable surplusses exist in Russia. In order to re-establish the economic integrity of Russia and to insure uninterrupted commercial relations, the Russian workers and peasants, as Mr. Litvinoff stated in the above quoted note, "Are prepared to go any length of concessions as far as the real interests of other countries are concerned, of course with the understanding that no agreements entered into should impair the sovereignty of the Russian people, as expressed by the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic.

On the part of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic there thus exists no obstacles to the establishment of proper relations with other countries, especially with the United States. The Soviet government of Russia is willing to open its doors to citizens of other countries for peaceful pursuit of opportunity, and it invites any scrutiny and investigation of its conditions, which I feel sure will prove that peace and prosperity in Russia—and elsewhere, in as far as the prosperity of Russia affects other countries—may be attained by the cessation of the present policy of non-intercourse with Soviet Russia, and by the establishment of material and intellectual intercourse.

Russia is now prepared to purchase in the American market great quantities of the following commodities commensurate with the needs of 150,000,000 people: Railroad supplies, agricultural implements and machinery, factory machinery, tools, mining machinery and supplies, electrical supplies, printing machinery, textile manufactures, shoes and clothing, fats and canned meats, rubber goods, typewriters and office supplies, automobiles and trucks, chemicals, medical supplies, etc.

Russia is prepared to sell the following commodities: Flax, hemp, hides, bristles, furs, lumber, grain, platinum, metals and minerals.

The Russian government, in the event of trade being opened with the United States, is prepared to place at once in banks in Europe and America, gold to the amount of two hundred million dollars ($200,000,000) to cover the price of initial purchases.

To insure a basis for credits for additional Russian purchases in the United States, I suggest that detailed negotiations with my government will evolve propositions fully acceptable for this purpose.

I am empowered by my government to negotiate for the speedy opening of commercial relations for the mutual benefit of Russia and America, and I shall be [illegible] at the earli[illegible]

QUICKSANDS AND PEACE CONFERENCE

It is not generally conceded in thoughtful circles that the Peace Conference will propagate any plans that will effect radically the future of the world, nor that the so-called League of Nations, which Lenin characterizes as a "League to Strangle the Nations," will ever prove a powerful instrument for world peace or betterment.

Basing all their plans upon an unchanging economic system, it is not conceivable by the light of recent events in Europe that their deliberations can bring forth anything of value to a world that has come into being since the conference assembled at Paris.

It is boldly claimed by some outspoken lookers on at the conference that the handful of idealists sitting around the peace table are totally out of touch with new-world movements nor have they a conception of the needs and potentialities of this new world. They are dealing in terms of a dead era, and attempting to solve present and future problems by the methods that belong to a dead order.

Capitalism, it seems, is to be bereft in the hour of its decline of the support of even a strong hand to uphold its reign and toppling powers. Of all the minds at the Peace Conference, that of President Wilson is probably most keenly alive to the needs of capitalism, and is certainly most resourceful and agile in its support. But he falls far short of the demands that capitalism is making upon its adherents.

Nothing could prove more conclusively how out of touch, how deeply imbedded in the mire of the past is the Peace Conference, as the recent revolutionary uprisings in Hungary and the strengthening of the proletarian revolution in all parts of the world. While our precious diplomats are attempting to adjust the world's affairs according to the dim lights of a dying order, the peoples of the world are lighting world fires of revolution and laying new foundations of economic and political life in the light of their flames.

While the diplomats of the greatest capitalist nations are seeking to establish their sovereignty over all the world and to extend their powers thereby, in other words, dividing the loot of conquest, the peoples of the world are setting about the establishment of their own world, completely ignoring the sedate, philanthropic and presumptious apostles of capitalism.

The quicksands of revolution are beneath the feet of the agents of capitalism in Paris. They and all their specious plans for capitalist rule will be sumberged completely in its enveloping folds, without leaving so much as a trace behind of their weighty deliberations in the interest of a decaying system. The new world is being molded by the hands of the world proletariat, not by the hands of the dead.

TACTICS AND THE REVOLUTION

The question as to whether the Socialist Party can best effect the realizations of Industrial Democracy and hasten its coming by the tactics of reform or of revolution is engaging the attention of every party member at this time, as well as of many others who look upon the Socialist movement as the means by which the social revolution must be accomplished.

The present agitation along this line has been accentuated by the revolutions engulfing capitalism in Europe and its results upon the economic and political life of America. Many units of the Socialist party, among them some with a reputation for staidness and reformistic tactics in the past have proclaimed their attitude upon this question of tactics and openly taken a stand for more revolutionary policies in the future.

It is a serious question and to our minds is one upon which the well being of the future of the movement depends. The solving of this question is to prove the crucial test of the integrity of the American Socialist Movement to lead the proletarian movement in this country. This question demands the serious thought and consideration of every party member.

In our opinion, the effect of reforms under capitalism can have little effect upon the proletariat except to shift the center of gravity of capitalism, so to speak, leaving the proletariat still under the iron heel. The pressure of capitalism upon the workers may be lessened in some particular spot, but by and large his condition remains unchanged. The iron heel is on his neck.

Aside from this, the capitalist class itself through its political parties is going in strongly for reforms. They are outdoing each other in promises of reform to the workers. Why should we seek our emancipation by the very tactics outlined by our masters? Does the master free the slave? Does the exploiter turn benefactor?

The shell of capitalism is bursting asunder the world over, throwing the debris to the four winds. Rent asunder by the very forces inherent in it shall the proletariat attempt to bind these cracking parts together? To do so is folly. It would be well for the reformers in the Socialist Party to look well to their safety that a fragment of the bursting shell does not bing them on the bean and put them to sleep forever and a day. We can't think of anything more dead than a dead reformer.

HURRAH—THE CZAR LIVES!!

Within the last week the former Czar of all the Russians has been reported alive two times. One report had him living contentedly and happily in some small Siberian village. The latest report has him residing in San Francisco.

However, we are glad to find him alive twice more. Kaiser Bill needs company, now that he is about to be granted an unconditional pardon by those who feel for him. Kaiser Bill and Czar Nick, brothers in misery, will make as good a pair as ever decorated a parlor on Fifth avenue, New York. We say this because we look forward to the day when they will be "lionized" as no other celebrities ever have, by our best society.

"Tag Day" for the relief of discharged sailors and soldiers was an event in Seattle. Having won the war for democracy they may now wear the rags purchased with charity tags.

A recent letter from Comrade Albert G. Storck, secretary of Local Lorain, states that the local has been fully reorganized and all officers elected. They are now negotiating for a hall for regular meetings.

COMRADESHIP AT ASHTABULA.

March 24, 1919.

Dear Editor: Local Ashtabula held an entertainment and luncheon at the home of F. J. Hewit on March 21, in the evening. All the comrades and many friends were present. We had special music and speaking by the local comrades. Everyone enjoyed themselves and the east were great. The proceeds went to help the local's work in getting new members and subscriptions to the Ohio Socialist.

Yours in comradeship.

GOOD NEWS FROM CAMBRIDGE

I feel positive that Local Cambridge will continue with its work of organization and education, 1,250 copies of "The Great and Growing Fear—No Work," have been received from the National Office, and under the direction of the newly elected local literature agent, Comrade Martin Yedica, a systematic distribution of these pamphlets will be made next week. There is one feature about my own personal work which greatly pleases me and that is: I can now call my wife also Comrade. A new member this month.

Yours for socialism,
KERBERT KNECHT.

WORDS OF APPRECIATION.

At our last meeting seven new applications were received and our membership is enjoying a sturdy growth. Our secretary, Herbert Knecht, has resigned his position, having secured employment in another city. During his sojourn here we have found Comrade Knecht and his estimable wife, both ardent workers in freedom's cause, and we shall miss them very much.

You will receive many new subscriptions for the Ohio Socialist from this section at an early date. All comrades think it the best propaganda that we can get at the present time.

Yours in the cause,
L. B. SKINNER.

ORGANIZE GENERAL STRIKE

Socialist Party, Local Philadelphia,
1330 Arch St.

At a regular meeting of the county committee of Local Philadelphia, a resolution has been unanimously adopted calling upon the organized and unorganized workers of the United States to express their protest against the sentence of ten years imprisonment imposed upon Eugene V. Debs, the veteran and revered labor leader of America, by going on a One-Day General Strike on the day he begins serving his sentence.

In order to assure the success of this move, it is imperative that you notify, at once, all locals affiliated with your state organization to take the necessary steps in this direction.

Our representatives are now organizing this One-Day General Strike in New York city. We have the co-operation of all the unions in the city of Philadelphia thus far visited. A conference has been called to unify all the forces of labor. Philadelphia and New York are preparing to act on that day.

WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO?

It would be advisable that the children of the strikers shall stay away from the schools on that day in order to emphasize that the children of the working class whom Debs has loved so well, acknowledge his service and reciprocate his affection.

Kindly notify us immediately of your action in this matter.

Fraternally yours,
SAMUEL SKLAROFF,
General Secretary.

COLUMBUS NOTES

NOTICE OF MEETING

Local Columbus had Comrade Thurber Lewis for a meeting Thursday evening, March 27th and had a fairly good crowd.

The boy gave us as fine a lecture as we have heard for a long time, and we are of the opinion that the local that fails or neglects to have him for a date is missing a treat. After the lecture was over a committee reported that Local Columbus would hold a convention on Thursday, April 10th, at 8 P. M. for the purpose of nominating candidates as follows:

One for Mayor, four for Council, one for clerk of the city court and three for members of school board. The committee requests all members in the city of Columbus and vicinity to be present and participate in the nomination and assist in starting a fall campaign.

Four Ways To Make Socialism Grow In Your Town

An open letter to every Comrade and Local Secretary:

We are going to outline in this issue of the Ohio Socialist four separate ways in which every local in Ohio and the United States as well can make socialism a greater power in every city and town where a socialist local exists.

We want every comrade and especially every local secretary to read carefully these FOUR WAYS TO MAKE SOCIALISM GROW and to bring them up before his local at the next business meeting. This is a letter to every Ohio local from the State Secretary and is official. It should be brought before your local just as tho it came to you under postage.

Method Number One

But before we tell you the method, let us explain WHY this method.

The success of the socialist movement depends upon the education of the working class. When the working class realizes what socialism is they will want it. As long as they remain in ignorance of the meaning of socialism they will naturally be against it. The capitalist press is the greatest misinformation bureau that any ruling class has ever been able to establish for the purpose of keeping the masses enslaved. The capitalist press is what we have to combat every minute from now on. We have got to counter their lies with truth. We have to prove them the liars they are and we have to show the workers why it is to the interest of capital that lies are told to them. In short we must create a bigger machine for carrying the truth to the workers. That's our job.

The municipal campaigns will be on soon. There are dozens of towns and cities in Ohio that can be carried for socialism this fall if the campaign is started now and carried on vigorously until election. Never before in this state was socialist sentiment so strong and virile as at this moment. Never before had we such opportunites for telling our message to such willing ears. The workers are ready for socialism. The question is; are you ready to do your part in carrying the message? You can prove you are ready to help by putting this method into instant operation in your city.

The method!

1. Organize an Ohio Socialist Distribution Squad in each working class ward and precinct of your city, with a captain in charge. Elect a comrade who will work and will encourage others to do so. Ohio Socialists in bundle lots 50c per hundred.
2. Ask for volunteers to distribute Ohio Socialists each week.
3. Lay out the boundries of each district. Ascertain the quantity of papers needed to cover each territory and order them sent to some central point. After one trial the needed number can be ascertained exactly. Impress upon the mind of each disribtutor the necessity of being on hand at the appointed hour of distribution.
4. Each distributor should keep tab on his district. Keep a list of names of prospects for future reference and use in securing names for nomination petitions etc.
5. Set aside at least one day a month for the purpose of securing subscriptions. Carry a receipt book with you. Be courteous. Keep the good will of your people.
6. Captains and distributors should have a meting once a month for the purpose of comparing notes, taking stock of progress, etc. Copies of all names and valuable information should be given in care of captains for use when needed.

The above is merely an outline. Each local must modify it according to local needs. The main thing is to get busy teaching socialism to the workers of your city IMMEDIATELY. This is no time to sit around and dream. Action is what counts from now on. Organize that Distribution Squad right away.

Method Number Two

Every reader of socialist papers is a prospective Party member. Often the reason he is not a full fledged member is because he has not been asked to join. We are now going to show you how to get more members into your local.

The method:

The Ohio Socialist has many, many names of readers on its lists who are not part members. Many of them may be unacquainted with the Socialists of the city and community in which they live. They may be unable to attend meetings. But they MAY be willing, even anxious to become party members.

Every local should AT ONCE elect an Advance Guard. The business of the Advance Guard is to take the names of Ohio Socialist readers in each town. Verify it with the membership books. Those not on the books are to be asked to join the party. That's the business of the Advance Guard. We talk about reorganizing society. Let's first learn to re-organize our locals for real work. Get busy. Elect that Advance Guard right away and write for a list of Ohio Socialist readers in your city or county. We will gladly send it.

Method Number Three.

(Plan of local Norwood, Ohio)

Here is the method that is being followed by local Norwood. At all propaganda meetings which pay a surplus into the local treasury the profit on the meeting is immediately turned into Ohio Socialist subscriptions. Local members furnish the names of acquaintances. An indexer is elected to do this and to keep count of expirations. At their expiration the names are turned over to the organizer who visits the reader and secures a renewal, possibly an applicant for membership.

This method is a good one providing the comrades keep their propaganda meeting humming and make them pay. The main thing is to keep adding to the list of readers in every city. Results will follow. It's a good plan, and we compliment the Norwood comrades upon their inative in swinging it into line.

Method Number Four

(Plan of local Ashtabula, Ohio)

Another plan that is being executed in great shape is that of local Ashtabula. Results are coming fast as this plan develops. It's a sure winner. The method is this. Two captains are elected. Each chooses a crew from the membership. Each side contests for new members and Ohio Socialist subscriptions. Each applicant joins the side which secured his application. This method certainly creates some keen competition as the warfare waxes hotter. Added zest may be given the battle by agreeing upon a banquet for the winners to be furnished by the losers.

So comrades, here are four methods that will make your city hum with socialist sentiment in a very short while if you will put one or all of them into instant practice. And when we say that there is no time to lose we mean it. The workers are ready for socialism. Let's be ready to be real socialists. Now, is the time!

TIFFIN NEWS NOTES

Local Tiffin is soon to start upon an intensive campaign for O. S. subs and new members. A series of lectures and speeches throughout Seneca county will be presented to the public by our most able comrade, Charles Baker.

Comrade Baker will be with us from May 5 to May 18, inclusive, alternating between Tiffin, Fostoria and surrounding Seneca county locals.

If any of our traveling lecturer comrades can arouse the workers to the true state of affairs we are sure Comrade Baker will and be a great aid in our compaign.

• • •

Friday evening the members of Local Tiffin were banqueted by the losing side in a recent membership campaign, the local was divided into two campaign divisions, the winning side being the guests of the ones receiving the least rubs and members.

After a few talks on the good of socialism, the hall was cleared and the ladies of the local placed a four-course luncheon before the highly-elated winners.

On Wednesday, March 13, a debate between Comrades W. C. McClurey and Nellie Loescher on "Bolshevism, a Menace to the Farmers," was staged, ending in the judges deciding the contest a draw, and suggesting the contestants to exchange sides and redebate the question March 26.

• • •

After the regular business meeting Wednesday evening County Organizer [illegible] short talk before the local, his subject being "Cossack Government and Federal Court."

Comrade McClurey showed the way this government and Federal court were established and maintained and their procedure compared with that of the People's Counsel of the Russian Soviet.

Corresponding Sec'y.

LOCAL ROBINS IN CLASS 1.

From Comrade Alex Allison of Local Robins, comes good news. Comrade Allison gives a glowing account of Comrade H. L. A. Holman's meeting on the first week in March. Although the meeting was not well advertised, it proved a huge success in every way. A large amount of literature was sold and 43 new members taken into the organization. Local Robins had but 13 members Feb. 1, now it has 71, and is still growing. Comrade Allison gives the credit for this large measure of success to Comrades Holman, Martin and Organizer Chas. C. Rogers. The local is considering organizing a series of Holman meetings.

Bolshevik Flyer Visits Mansfield

Did a Bolshevik flyer hit about Mansfield, O., recently in the small hours of the night and scatter upon the door steps of every worker's home a copy of a little booklet entitled, "Bolsheviks and Soviets?"

That's the question the local Chamber of Commerce (and robbery) is putting to its members—and not getting a satisfactory answer. It's a live question in Mansfield and as the Ohio Socialist deals with live issues, we feel called upon to deal with it accordingly and to help solve a mystery that but deepens as time passes.

Recently the city of Mansfield and other cities of Ohio were flooded with a pamphlet which dealt in the most misinforming manner possible with all radical labor movements and expressions of solidarity of the workers. According to this pamphlet, every radical is a traitor, Tom Mooney is a scoundrel, Debs should be in prison, hanging is too good for every worker who would substitute democracy in industry for plutocratic control. The whole labor movement was discredited in the foulest manner. No one had any doubts as to the source of this pamphlet. When the workers in Mansfield smell a skunk, they know one is near.

Ten days (or nights rather) an answer appeared to this denunciation of Mooney, Debs, socialism and bolshevism. Strange as it may seem came a morning when 3,000 workers found upon their door step a copy of Rhys Williams' "Bolsheviks and Soviets." Hundreds of workers wonderingly thrust them into their pockets and carried them to work for perusal during the noon hour. There they found that every shopmate also had a copy. At noon groups of workers could be seen discussing and reading this little messenger from where, no one knew.

Many conjectures were offered as to how the books came to be scattered so promiscuously over the city. Two probabilities were settled upon as most likely. It is with these two that we must deal and render our opinion as to which is the true one.

One theory is that the anti-working class pamphlet distributed by the Chamber of Commerce (and robbery) aroused the organized workers of Mansfield to such a pitch of wrath that they at once decided to do some propaganda upon their own hook and proceeded to raise a fund of nearly $200 to put it across.

That's one theory, but honestly, folks, we haven't much faith in that theory. We've done some detective work in our past and we think we are efficient in that line. Here's our theory. You've all heard of the feats of the Bolsheviki in spreading propaganda among those it wishes to convert. Millions and millions of leaflets they have printed and distributed over Europe. So, why not in Mansfield. Since they have done such wonders in the past, why not now? Yes, folks its our conviction that immediately the C. of C. and robbery pamphlet appeared, an agent of Lenine and Trotzky got busy on a wireless and sent a message into Bolsheviki headquarters at Moscow. Result—in just ten days 3,000 little pamphlets appear as if by magic upon the front door of all the working class homes of Mansfield!

Now, that's our theory. But we shall not quarrel with those who doubt our deductions. The fact is, that every worker in Mansfield has a "Bolsheviki and Soviets" in their home and many of them are wearing them out learning more than they ever knew before and eagerly awaiting another visit from "headquarters."

By the way, have YOU read that little booklet? If not you need not wait for a visit of a flyer from Moscow, but can order a copy from the State Office for 10c. Address this paper.

Comrade H. L. A. Holman delivered a series of five lectures in Columbus and the comrades were especially pleased with them, writes Comrade E. Gerlac.

Who Are The Bolsheviki?

Inquiries are being received from subscribers regarding the meaning of the terms "Bolsheviki," "Spartacans," "Soviet." To satisfy these inquiries we here give brief definitions.

Bolsheviki—This word means "majority." The Bolsheviki party in Russia is therefore the majority party, and the majority party in Russia, the party which now controls Russia is the communist or Socialist Party, the radical Socialist party—which believes in absolute workers control and refuses to make alliances with the capitalists. The Bolsheviki of Russia are being slandered by the capitalist press of this country because the Bolsheviki are dividing the landed estates of the former Russian royalty among the poor farmers, the peasants; and also, because the Bolsheviki are putting all industries into the hands of the workers.

Spartacans—This is the name of the radical Socialist party of Germany and the German Spartacans desire to bring about the same kind of workers and peasants control as the Bolsheviki established in Russia. The Spartacans of Germany are opposed by what are known as the majority Socialists, the Socialists now in control of the German government. These majority Socialists believe in compromising with the German capitalists and giving them a certain power in industrial and state affairs. If the Spartacans, who believe in absolute workers' control, overthrow the majority Socialists of Germany, then the Spartacans will become the Bolsheviki or majority party of Germany.

Soviet—This word means "council." The Soviets of Russia are the people's councils, in which matters of local and national importance are decided.

Radical—The term "radical" as applied to political parties or factions within political parties is used to differentiate between moderate actions and program and such actions and program which demands immediate and total changes. A radical Socialist is one who does not place much emphasis upon reforms but wants an immediate and complete change from our present industrial system.

Resolution Supports Left Wing

Whereas, from long experience we have learned that only by a revolutionary economic organization will it be possible to gain for the working class the final phase of the class struggle.

And inasmuch as the manifesto and program of the Left Wing of the Socialist movement appealed to us, as the proper course to pursue; therefore,

Be it Resolved, That Local Galion shall go on record as being in full sympathy with, and pledge our uniform support to the program and immediate demands of the Left Wing of the Socialist movement of America.

Why Your Wife Should Join the Party

By FANNY JORDAN TREASTER.

THE WOMAN WAGE WORKER

Article 1.

I read in a current issue of one of the leading periodicals an article entitled, "Is a Woman's War Coming?" It dealt mostly with interviews and statistics and little with logic. The interviews were with women who have been employed with war work in munition factories, and received a high war wage. The interviewer usually asked each woman what she would do if love and an offer of marriage came into her high-waged existence, and the spontaneous answer came, "Why, marry, of course." "What if this man were poor?" The answer, "Keep on working." What of babies?'" There could be none." Then the article went on to explain the deteriorating effect on the child of the pregnant mother who is forced to work to the sixth or seventh month. The article ended with a weak remedy for this condition, that of maternity insurance, for only soldiers wives, mind you, for a period of three months, to be divided before and after confinement.

I might also note here that this same article contained statistics showing that women on the same jobs with men at the same rating, made more money. Of course, the real reason for this is the novelty of the job to the women, hence, the interest and speed. Now the question that we want solved is how can these women, who have had a taste of power and independence during the war, go back to home, child-rearing and poverty, with their ever attendant struggle?

Well, we might say, "Let the women keep their jobs if they are more proficient and we might reverse the state of affairs and allow the men to become the housekeepers." Would this remedy matters? There would still be two living on one job. Though, too, the husbands would soon feel their bird-cage existence and revolt as had their wives.

Of course, we understand the usual and natural reason for marriage, is mateing—the propagation of the race of mankind. We have not yet reached such a state of moral, spiritual and physical perfection that will allow to humanity eternal life. We are still striving for that perfection; but, until then, there must be "marriage and giving in marriage."

Nature has built woman for the function of child-bearing and rearing. She is the bearer because of her natural organization. The hip bones are larger than those of the male because that is the portion of her body that functions most. She is the child rearer because of a naturally developed mother instinct and that finer sensitiveness and intuitiveness that reads character keenly. She knows that each child as an individual must be governed by different tactics.

In no way can the workings of nature be changed.

The man is broad of shoulder and thick and muscular of chest and arms. Naturally, his duty is that which necessitates the use of strength and manual labor. He, like the male bird, is the provider of food and shelter for the female and the offspring. This brings into use that development of the above-waist part of his body. The savage, who lived almost wholly by instinct, was the breadwinner of his family. So, it follows that the man is the natural provider for the family, since instinct is wholly natural.

Therefore, we are getting away from nature when the woman abandons her erstwhile duties to become a wage worker.

But what are we to do about it? The man does not make a living wage—a wage sufficient to support a wife and family? We want to see to it that he does. We want to have a little play time, besides. We want to feel like we can go to a show, even though Johnny does need a pair of shoes. We want pleasant, picturesque homes, without threadbare carpets and window glass broken out. We want to feel that life is worth the living.

If, with government ownership or control, high wages can be paid in war time for the manufacture of means of destruction; why not government ownership in peace times, with still higher wages, for the purpose of production.

We, as women, have more power to decide this important question than we know. That's where our strength as a whole will count. One woman can do little. Her individual protest has little effect. But together, we are a power, a wonderful power—a power against which no male organization has a ghost of a show. That is the thing that I want to impress upon you in this article—the necessity for organization. "There is the suffrage movement," you say. How much chance have women in our station in life in that movement? It belongs to the wives of the bourgeoisie. They are working for the enfranchisement of women. We want more than this. We want education to make the best use of this vote when it is granted.

There is no way in which we can use this power of which I speak, to use this power as individuals, until it becomes that great force for which we are striving, than to join a unit which will admit us to their cause and our cause as equals, with equal voice and equal opportunities—the Socialist Party. This party is the champion of your class and my class. It has your interest at heart. It has the interest of the community at heart. It has the interest of tthe state, the nation, the world, not to make it a better place for the protection of big interest, but for the freedom of humanity. Its high reaching goal is a big brotherhood of mankind, where money need not be the incentive, but instead, greater happiness for each and all.

Socialists Progress

In To the Finish

Enclosed find P. O. order for $1 for Industrial Freedom Certificate. On with the good work, peaceably and legally, so long as the enemy will let you, though, like Comrade Bruce Rogers in the Alaska "bull pen," I am almost convinced that non-conformist propaganda, even of the mildest sort will not be allowed much longer. The plutes of dollar land and their legal and political watch dogs are certainly not going to allow us to quietly and peaceably erase them and their good, fat plunder game out of existence, via intellectual propaganda and political action at the ballot box. They will force us to strangle them with a proletarian dictatorship as surely as there is a class struggle in existence. Bolshevist workmen and Soldiers' Councils seems the next logical act in the great social drama of America. I have neither the means or ability to help our movement much, and shall never be one to advocate the use of force and violence in the conduct of the Socialist movement, as long as there is one honorable alternative left. But I long ago dedicated what little there was of me to the cause of international socialism and the struggle of the working class of the world, and whatever form of revolution may be forced to assume in defense of its own best interests I hereby pledge my undying loyalty—even unto the end. Greetings and regards to you, beloved comrades,

Ever yours in the revolution,

8,000 To Be Deported

The Department of Labor at Washington, D. C. announces that 7,000 to 8,000 more aliens are to be deported just as fast as they can be rounded up. 54 are now at Ellis Island, New York, waiting on the outcome of the fight that Caroline A. Lowe and others are making for their rights as human beings in "a world safe for a Wilson democrat."

In 1904, when another such an attempt to deport aliens was in full swing (and it failed as we believe this will fail), Judge Ernest Crosby said:

> Let us take down the beautiful statue of Liberty Enlighting the world, that brazen lie, which now casts its beams on Ellis Island and its prison, and let us put in its place an ogre of iron, grasping a gnarled and knotted club, and casting its baneful shadow upon the immigrant—an image no longer of Liberty Enlightening, but of Despotism Darkening, the world.

We are of the opinion, however, that world events are so shaping themselves that we will not have to comply with his "decision". Socialism is sweeping onward to all parts of the world, and, we feel sure that the Statue of Liberty will yet turn her face shoreward to America and give the sign if Industrial Democracy and freedom for all to speak and write and to assemble as freemen and equals.

Wisconsin Assembly Resolutions on Amnesty

JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 31 A.

February 6, 1919. Introduced by Mr. A. C. Ehlman. Referred to Committee on Judiciary.

JOINT RESOLUTION

Relating to Amnesty for Political Prisoners.

Whereas, There are now in prison in this country several hundred persons convicted according to law on various charges, most of which may be summarized as obstructing the United States in the conduct of war; and

Whereas, All are victims of an interpretation of the necessary means of securing the welfare and success of the nations in war, and some of them are suffering as the result of a devotion to an interpretation of such means differing from that of the majority, but presumably no less high-minded and unselfish; and

Whereas, The war is now over and this nation should follow the historic example offered by other governments in the past, and set free those prisoners for whose detention a national crisis no longer offers excuse; and

Whereas, These political prisoners fall into various classes according to legal definition, but particularly in the people's minds they form two groups—the victims of the selective service law and of the espionage act; and

Whereas, Persons were convicted in circumstances of popular excitement and it might be questioned whether those convicted had or could have had a fair and impartial trial; and

Whereas, The United States is entering the congress of nations with a program of justice and democracy and freedom for all nationalities for a better world for all mankind; and

Whereas, No better foundation for its work can be established than an act of amnesty to release those whose imprisonment is a scandal and rock of offense to democracy everywhere; therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly, the senate concurring, That we demand as a matter of essential justice to our citizens of faith in our historic democracy and of loyalty to our own cause of a better world, that our political prisoners be set free and the espionage act be immediately repealed. And be it further

Mud, Rain, Good Eats and Two New Locals

Read Comrade: I was successful in reaching Midvale for the meeting March 9. Left Mansfield Sunday morning at 4:35 a. m., going to Massillon by way of the Pennsylvania railroad, taking an interurban car from there to Midvale, at which place I arrived at about 10 a. m. Spoke in Midvale in the forenoon to fair-sized audience, which turned out to hear the message in spite of the raw, gloomy day, and drizzling rain. We secured 26 new members, several subs to the O. S., sold several industrial freedom certificates, took a big collection for the cause and sold a large amount of literature, and the comrades got so puffed up on themselves that they decided to discontinue meeting in the little barber shop, where they had been meeting and rent a large hall.

After lunch, Comrade Wolfe borrowed a Henry Ford and we started for the meeting at Roswell, four miles down the valley and over the hills, and such roads, my, there were times when I thought we were goners as the machine would seem completely submerged, then we would reappear amidst a cloud of mud, slush and dirty water and the faithful little Henry would right herself and set resolutely to the task of landing us at our destination. After encountering what seemed insurmountable difficulties we started to climb a precipice or mountain, commonly called a hill by the natives.

At this point our poor little Henry became completely exhausted and gave up the fight after a few last, desperate, plunging, swaying efforts and sank back on her haunches with a dying groan, buried in mud far above her hubs and running gears. [illegible] miles through a downpour of rain and in mud a foot deep. Arriving at the hall we proceeded to wipe the mud from our eyes and hair and after partaking of a cold bottle furnished by one of the comrades and drying out a bit over a roaring red hot stove, I proceeded to give the audience, which packed the hall, a piece of my mind on economics and socialism, which must have been appreciated, as they readily separated themselves from a large collection, bought all the literature I had and cried for more, and started to organize a local at once. All this in spite of the fact that the profiteers who own the mines are permitting the miners to work only two days per week for which they receive about $10 and living costs higher than in the cities. Can you beat that for patriotism?

Comrade Wolfe will take care of the new local at Roswell and assist them to get properly started. He is one fine, big hearted, earnest and loyal comrade, and his good wife is whole heartedly with him in his endeavors and treated us to two fine meals which I greatly enjoyed. At the close of the Roswell meeting, in company with several local comrades from Midvale I started back through mud, rain and snow for Midvale, searching along the way for our [illegible] little Henry, which we found just as we had left her. All laid hold on her and with Comrade Wolfe at the steering wheel, we were able to turn her around and after a great deal of coaxing, patting her and calling her a large variety of endearing names, we got her started for home, careening, skyrocketing, submerging and sometimes almost toppling over the side of the [illegible] at once proceed to collect and reattach all our anatomical pieces, after which we dug the mud from our persons as best we could, ate supper and started for the car bound for Massillon, arriving home at 1 p. m., well pleased with total results. Next Sunday I speak in Mt. Vernon for the carpenters' union. The comrades at Roswell want an Italian speaker as there are a large number of Italian Socialists there.

Yours in comradeship,

Undesirables

By Scott Nearing

Away with the undesirables! Deport them; jail them; persecute them; denounce them; silence them. The undesirables must go!

Undesirable? What is an undesirable?

Any man or woman who narrows the opportunity of a fellow human being for life, liberty and happiness is an undesirable. Every parasite; every despot; every tyrant; every monopolist; every man who lives at the expense of a fellow man is an undesirable.

No human being makes himself desirable by saying prayers or preaching patriotism, or waving a flag, or promising to save other men's souls. Men become desirable only when they help their fellow men to live larger, stronger, happier, nobler lives.

The chambers of commence, the boards of trade, the manufacturers' associations and the other business organizations are deciding who is undesirable and then insisting upon a campaign to deport them, jail them, persecute them, silence them, destroy them. The business interests are doing that now. They are establishing a rule of public policy. Undesirables do not belong in the United States. They must go!

Suppose the people apply that doctrine to American life and begin with the parasites. Every able-bodied adult human being who is not doing a fair share of the world's work, but is living on the product of other men's labor is an undesirable. He must cease to be a parasite by taking a job. The new world is a world of workers. No one else has a legitimate place here.

A few men, highly placed, own the jobs on which millions of their fellow men depend for a living; they own the products of these jobs; they own the surplus produced by the industrial machine. They are exercising a despotic, irresponsible power over the lives of their fellows. They are undesirables. The jobs, the product and the surplus must belong to the workers. The exploiters must go.

The forests and mines, oil wells and corner lots of America are in the hands of a few monopolists who take toll from society in the form of monopoly profits. These "bag barons" represent the spirit of the middle ages. They have no place in a free government of free people. They must go!

Away with the undesirables! America is no place for them. Away with the parasites—give them jobs! Away with the exploiters—the workers must own their tools! Away with the "bag barons"—surplus wealth belongs to those who produce it! The undesirables in America must go!

SOME LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

KEEP THE ROADS— WE'VE PAID FOR THEM

Let the Government own the railroads and pay for them, you say?

Not on your life, not another dollar to the railroad owners! Haven't the people paid enough and more than enough? Didn't one of the able United States Senators say in a speech in the senate several years ago that the people of the United States had paid for the railroads from seven to twenty-two times and surely ought to own them? Didn't Jay Gould, 30 years ago, lock up about sixty millions of dollars in New York as his roads brought it in and brought on a panic in New York city and sent business men to the wall in order to run down the railroad stocks so he could get a controlling interest in the Wabash railroad for nine cents on the dollar?

Didn't our Congress years ago give the railroads nearly two hundred million acres of land that belonged to our children and their children, enough to make an empire almost three times as large as Germany? Didn't the people over the United States in many towns and cities vote millions of bonds to the railroads to build feeders to their main lines and in one instance they never built the road but tried for years to collect the money on the bonds anyway?

Didn't Ernest Seyd of London, come here in 1872 with $500,000 to use in our Congress to get silver demonetized in the interest of foreign bond holders and accomplish his purpose and increased the value of the bonds ten per cent and then England was enabled to buy her silver for 1-2 the former price. Didn't Judge Kelley of Pennsylvania say he saw the first draft of the bill by which silver was demonetized in the hand writing of Ernest Seyd and by that criminal act Congress ruined thousands and almost destroyed some of the towns. Didn't we confiscate four billion dollars worth of chattel slaves that the slave holders had bought and paid for and they had to stand for it?

You say we did that in the interest of humanity. Sure it was. Now let us take the railroads in the interest of humanity also, as every man, woman and child is dependent on them. The shoe of private ownership is pinching the foor of the creators of wealth for more than fifty years until it has become unbearable. Let us change the shoe aud put it on the foot of the absorbers of wealth for awhile until we can even up again. Of course they will howl with pain. But let them howl—let them suffer until they are willing to come down on the earth again and say to Labor that you are as good as we and have as much right to Mother Earth and its great resources.

Let us keep the railroads while we have them in the interest of humanity. We have already paid the bill.

ALEX. VAN GUNDY

ON WHICH SIDE ARE YOU?

Our late world war has taken a rest and we hope that President Wilson and the Peace Conference will succeed in establishing at least a system of peace arbitration for all nations, to take the place of wars for conquest.

The producing classes are always called upon to do the dirty work in war, and also to pay the cost thereof. If any thing is gained in the way of land or wealth, it is generally taken over to increase the fortunes of the schemeing profiteers. Russia is among the first to throw off the yoke of profiteering bondage and to establish justice for the laboring classes. From inside reports we comprehend that they are making pretty fair headway, even with all the misrepresentations presented through the monopolized press.

We note that in the Russian language the word "Bolsheviki" means the same as "majority" does in the English vocabulary. Hence, the majority of the farmers, mechanics, laborers, soldiers and necessary business people of Russia are at present establishing a government intended to benefit the greatest number. This, of course, is something entirely new and virtually quite different from what history has writen in regard to any former great governments.

Just imagine for one moment, a country, where the producers of all wealth should undertake to control the productive industries, and also endeavor to formulate the laws of the country under which they expect to live, and where every man or woman over eighteen years of age can vote on public politics, provided they are soldiers, sailors, farmers, mechanics or in some way employed at some useful industry. Money lenders slave drivers, speculators anduseless go-betweens, are not allowed the right to elective franchise.

Even in "Free America, the land of Liberty," we could not stand for that kind of thing. Just think of a country being governed without the guiding hands of the great monopolists and their political wire-workers. Where will the workers get the money to build the factories and operate the industries, unless they issue bounds for the banking institutions to manipulate in a way that will make great fortunes for a class who think themselves too "Kultured" to do any part of the useful labor?

[illegible] us keep an eye on those Rus- [illegible] "bolsheviki" (the majority of the [illegible] workers) and see how they will [illegible] to live by labor and under an [illegible] government. The mensheviki (meaning the minority) will be required to do a share of the useful labor or abide by the consequence, which in Russia means, "He that will not work shall not eat."

The greatest trouble in Russia at the present time, is that the profiteers wish to live from the toil of the producers and are trying every plan they possibly can concoct to re-establish the old order of things as it was under the czar, or something similar to our government in the U. S. A., where the monopolies have grown more rapidly than in any other country on the earth.

Honest co-operative and productive enterprise with economic government in the interest of those who make human life in civilization possible, [illegible] the end prove successful, al- [illegible] it may take time to fully de- [illegible] the experiment so that honest [illegible] be considered respectable

THE SHORTER WAY

Too much time is spent in trying to convert unwilling and resistant minds to adopt the principles of Socialism by oral arguments when a few minutes only will suffice to get a subscription to a weekly Socialist paper that will be read at the fireside by a whole family, many of whom have plastic minds and will accept truths that may be rejected by the case hardened adult who cannot get away from early prejudices that have been fostered by reading the falsehoods of the capitalistic press. You may spend hours in trying to convince a positive man that Socialism is founded upon the solid rock of demonstrable truths and totally fail to make an impression but take the same subject in a negative or receptive mood and place a weekly paper in his hands and his violent objections to its doctrines will melt like snow in a summer sun.

Let me impress upon the minds of the comrades that nine out of ten Socialists have been made by printed arguments presented by our writers. Prison sentences have been another fruitful source of the spread of the doctrines. The heartless scoundrels who hate the laborer, who demands justice are constantly devising means of suppressing his plea for human rights, but to their dismay the cause of SOCIALISM GOES MARCHING ON. Today more than ever in the history of plutocracy are the tyrants trembling in fear that the shackles of wage slavery will be removed by a united vote of THE PRODUCING CLASS.

LEAVES PROBLEM UNSOLVED.

We hava been told by the press, which suports the present order, that the United States is a Democracy; that it is a government of, for, and by the people; and that its chief executive and law making bodies elected by the sovereign voters carry out the will of the people by conducting the government along democratic lines. And anyone who presumes to critisize the actions of either, or any of our institutions is a red eyed Socialist, I. W. W. or Bolshevist, (you see we have quit being pro-Germans), and should be sent to prison or deported as trouble makers.

But listen! Now comes Samuel G. Blythe with an extended article in the Saturday Evening Post of March the 1st entitled "The Muddled American." Mr. Blythe is a journalist of international reputation. I cannot vouch for the truth and correctness of his former articles, but we do know his dope finds a ready market in the capitalist press which defends our American Institutions, such as "Standard Oil," "United Steel" etc, and inasmuch as the capitalist press is ever ready to extole and magnify all the virtues of the present order and is so very sparing of its criticism of the same. It is safe to assume that what criticism or denunciation it does make is true and correct.

Mr. Blythe in his article above mentioned takes the viewpoint of the American citizen who pays the fiddler and criticises the chief executive, also the heads of the various departments of our government, and denounces our law making body as a bunch of political gangsters, hopelessly incompetent. In fact he denounces and criticises everything from "Dan to Bersheba." Says there is nothing to the Democratic Party, outside of Woodrow Wilson, says the Republican Party has no head. His entire article is a criticism of how the war was conducted of government control of industries and how the Peace Conference was conducted.

Gene Debs, Scott Nearing or any other Revolutionary socialist could not have put the criticism stronger than did Mr. Blythe, yet he doesn't suggest anyway out of the Muddle.

Mr. Blythe concludes his article with a three-fourth inch paragraph stating that it has begun to dawn on the American people that if they get out of this muddle they will have to get out themselves. The most amazing thing about it is, he leaves Mr. Wilson the soul, body, brains and innards of the Democratic Party out in the cold. The question is, will the Saturday Evening Post be barred from the mails? And will Mr. Blythe be sent to prison or deported as a trouble maker?

THE LAST, DESPERATE STRIKE!

Capitalism is making a last desperate stand, figuring on winning, as heretofore, by appeals to the ignorance and patriotism of the working classes, but they have played these strings so insistently for the last two years that now they are worn to a frazzle and the, before easily deluded people, are going to demand a change in tune and incidently a change in musicians.

Workers be true to your class, we are in the ninth inning of this age old game, Henry Dubb is umpire, a worker is on the mound, two men are out, ignorance and conservatism having just fanned; capitalism, the great slugger has just knocked a pop fly, ten million workers are under this fly, it can't possibly hit the ground, a few feeble, puny runts are yet rooting for the batter but the issue is certain.

The League of Nations is the last desperate master stroke of capitalism, the audacity of this covenant is incredible, it is a league to enslave the workers of all nations forever—the big five of capitalism and diplomats expect to gobble up the products of the toiling masses unhampered forever, afterwards,—The American exploiters expect, through the powers invested by this covenant to become and be made guardian of the long coveted Mexico and incidentally of the Mexican workers. This league as proposed is diametrically oposed to the interest of the workers and the self-determination of peoples.

This world tragedy can only be prevented by the workers and if you please, Bolshevism. Bolshevism, we do and must admit, is treason and unpatriotic to the present system, but it is just what the people want and the people will ultimately judge as to [illegible] patriotism and [illegible] venerated Geo.

were execrated and denounced as anarchist and traitors by the autocrats of Europe in that age and were persecuted even as we are persecuted today. But the patriots of 76 espoused just what the peoples wanted and they have survived the spleen of the autocrats of that age and have gone down in history as true patriots even as our persecuted comrades will in the age just dawning. Patriotism is a fluctuating thing and fluctuates even as Morgan's stocks and bonds in the marts of trade, being regulated solely by the demands of the peoples.

Learned, parasitic professors are poring over voluminous statistics and making equally voluminous disertations regarding the heretofore unparalleled unrest of the heretofore humble and submissive workers and are apalled giving as their authorative and learned findings, that one, age old and tried screech, "Socialism, Anarchy, Bolshevism, Free Love and that our Churches, Religeon and Ancient Institutions are Endangered,—in some part we heartily agred with them.

One of the fundamental causes—and one that the learned professor always dodges is the fact, "That with all our boasted civilization, with all our great labor saving inventions and at the greatest stage of production the world has ever known, the toiling masses receive barely an existence and our advanced civilization and production has not served to decrease the hours of labor or better our conditions, on the contrary we find our condition steadily growing worse." Yet if we complain, the autocrats, leagued with the professors froth at the mouth with aparent hydraphobia and snort all the isms in their vocabulary at us. But Henry Dubb through these years of ceaseless unmitigated toil has rounded out some ideas in his nut and made some deductions of his very own and will continue to do some individual thinking, unaided by the professors of autocracy.

HITS NAIL ON HEAD.

"The Ohio Socialist, as it stands today, is a very creditable paper. It is an achievement, and indeed an inspiration.

"I must voice the approval I feel as to the plans for a semi-weekly. It is the right way to progress toward the higher mark—the daily. The right principle is never to venture beyond the foundation laid. Then there are no recessions or collapses. It is the steady progress that counts, not the kite-flying sort. Again, our paper is published to support the movement, and not, as we have seen in conspicuous instances, the movement organized to support the paper! When we have built a substantial foundation for a weekly, and there is a justifiable margin of income to warrant the action, then a concerted effort to advance to the semi-weekly can be safely made. When we have built the foundation out beyond this then the tri-weekly. The next move will be the daily. We Socialists are still amenable to the laws of gravity.

"Your slogan, 'We Have Quit Trading With the Enemy,' rejoices the eye. I hope so, in fact. Why we should keep on giving our money to profiteers, shoving power continually into the hands of our enemies, is a thing hard to understand. I have surely preached co-operation steadfastly to our comrades for these many years—not because I believed that it alone, or just the mere idea itself, was able to make the shift needed. But because it was one of the three supports we have put under capitalism. We should withdraw our buying power—or trading power—and our voting power. Our labor power must go to those who can buy it, for a while at least. For that we have no present remedy. But there is no excuse that we keep on putting our spending power at the service of the enemy, where it undoes in one direction what we do in another."

Gleanings

From the Log of an Agitator.
By W. E. REYNOLDS.

Government officials are now talking about deporting all aliens who advocate socialism, or idealism, or bolshevism or any new-fangled ideas. England will deport Americans and America will deport Englishmen. Result, a new crop of agitators at government expense. Result again, UNCENSORED news for the labor movements of the various countries.

Six months ago the Seattle ship yard workers were praised by the bourgeoisie as the nation's finest. They were "the men behind the men behind the guns." Then they went out on strike. Now Anathema! No longer are they the lauded heroes, but the despised hoboes, the men in front of the men behind the guns. The curriculum of the school of experience is hard but it is thorough.

It used to be "Good morning! Have you used Pear's Soap?" but now it is, "Good Morning! Been jailed or deported yet?"

With wages for the unemployed, as advocated by the bourgeoisie in New York—what is to become of the wage-system? If one can get wages for not working, "what incentive will there be for activity" under capitalism?

According to the papers of the old gang we now need; bond issues—for the benefit of the working class; good roads for the benefit of the working class, soup houses—for the benefit of the working class; a big army—for the benefit of the working class; a big navy—for the benefit of the working class: a league of (capitalistic) nations—for the benefit of the working class; prison reform—for the benefit of the working class; lower wages—for the benefit of the working class; higher wages—for the benefit of the working class; deportations—for the benefit of the working class.

WALTER B. DILLON, State Secretary
Box 274, Albuquerque, N. M.
STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
W. P. Metcalf, S. Parks, W. P. Calkins, Andrew Eggum, Mrs. L. M. D. O'Neil.

Report of the State Secretary.

Albuquerque, March 17, 1919.

Comrades:

I have delayed making out my report for so long for many reasons, chief among them being that I have been patiently waiting for you to make nominations for state officials.

That won't do, comrades. The times ahead of us demand the very best attention to party tactics of every one of us, and I believe that every member of the official family of the party in this state will agree with me when I demand that you, YOU, give us your mandate at least by renominating us if you don't want to make any changes.

You MUST make these nominations, comrades, as none of us want to continue in office indefinitely. Five members of the State Executive committee, state organizer and state secretary must be nominated. I suggest that Comrade Tom Pendergrass, present state organizer, now being entertained lavishly by the federal government at Deming, be re-nominated by acclamation. We will have much for him to do when his host decides to give us some of his time.

And remember, comrades, Tom Pendergrass is in jail at Deming because he exercised his rights under the constitution of the United States, because he attempted to defend your right to free speech, free press and assemblage. He is allowed to write only two letters per week to the outside world, but he can read two hundred letters. You who are outside should write him a word of cheer and greeting, but do not sympathize with him or counsel him to abstain hereafter from fighting for socialism as propounded by the St. Louis platform, for Comrade Pendergrass belongs to the Left Wing of the party—not to the mollycoddles. He will greatly appreciate your letters, but if you receive no reply blame the authorities, as they will not allow him to write more than two letters per week. Address him: T. E. Pendergrass, Luna County Jail, Deming, N. Mex.

Since my last report to you several of our best and most loved members of the international have been murdered by the reactionaries. I have from time to time sent you copies of the Ohio Socialist and the Revolutionary Age containing accounts of the murder of Liebknecht, Luxemburg and Eisner. Let the guilt fall where it belongs, comrades; it is not capital in this case, but renegade Socialists of the type of Scheidemann and Spargo, of Kerensky and Benson, of Ebert and Russell that brought about the foul murder of these exponents of the working classes in the international.

Here in the United States, in spite of the fact that the war is over, the reactionaries have added five of our nations afficials to the list of convicts, and have upheld the convictions of Gene Debs and Kate Richards O'Hare.

Comrades, I may seem harsh to you, but it is you who refuse to do your share in the upbuilding of the party organization who are sending Debs and O'Hare to jail. No Bourbon class would dare to send our comrades to the pen if you stood straight and unafraid of bowing your heads to the blow.

It is Debs and O'Hare, Berger, Tucker, Kruse, Germer and Engdahl today. It will be every official in the party tomorrow, and it will be you next day. At Washington, D. C., they are attempting to pass a new law making it a crime to even form organizations of workers on economic lines to force concessions from the capitalist class. Farmers organizations are included in this drastic act. Will you wake up today and build the party organization to fighting strength, or will you wait like the little boy's kitten to have your brains dashed out against the wall of capitalism's iron heel, opening your eyes too late to do other than witness your own last gasp?

The rest of the U. S. A.—and the world—is fast reaching toward the Socialist goal. New Mexico is lagging behind. We are coming to life gradually, I admit, as indicated by the sale of dues stamps last month, but our speed must be increased if we are not to be left way behind in the triumphal march..

This will be the last copy of the Ohio Socialist you will receive unless you subscribe for it or pay your dues. You don't have to tell me that you are broke—I know it, but you better draw in your belt some more and put your shoulder to the party wheel if you expect to maintain what little liberty you still have in this free and glorious United States of America.

This is not soolding, comrades, but straight talk because of my knowledge of what is going on in the world. I am in a position to know what is going on behind the scenes both because of my official position and because of my close contact with business organizations. Get busy!

The report below shows a small deficit for three months, but everything considered, I am satisfied. Ten dollars of this deficit covers court costs in the Pendergrass case, so it is really my share in the defense.

A True Story

ANISE, in the Seattle Union Record.

He was just A BIG BOY,
Frank Travis,
When he blew into Sacramento
A year ago last October.
He had ONLY A NICKEL
Left in his pocket,
And he met a FRIENDLY man,
A WOBBLY, who said to him:
"Come along down to the hall
And bunk there for the night.
And we'll get you a JOB
Tomorrow." So he went down
To the I. W. W. hall,
And they gave him
A place on the floor TO SLEEP,
And they gave him comradeship
Of fellows who asked him
NO INSULTING QUESTIONS.
And next morning
Some one staked him to a dollar,
And they got him a JOB.
He went out and made a little stake,
And a month later he came back
And said, "A bunch like you
Is GOOD ENOUGH for me."
He joined
And took out a RED CARD.
He had a GOOD VOICE
And loved SINGING,
He went down nights to the HALL,
And where else could he have gone
For welcoming comradeship?
He was there just a month later,
When they RAIDED the place,
And they put him in JAIL
In Sacramento.
He lay on the CEMENT FLOOR
For sixty-four nights,
And then fell ill.
I don't know what
They thought he had done
To be arrested for.
And NOW I suppose
NOBODY EVER WILL KNOW,
For he DIED
After ELEVEN months in jail,
While he was still WAITING
For his trial,
And BEFORE he was considered
GUILTY of ANYTHING.
He was JUST ONE
Of millions of workers
All down the ages,
Born at the Cost of infinite anguish,
Reared at the cost
Of endless SACRIFICES,
And WASTED by a society that Never Planned any Place for him.
I wonder whether
There is ANYTHING ELSE
In the whole round world
That is PRODUCED at such COST
And THROWN away
So CHEAPLY?

It begins to look as if Marx was right when he said the bourgeoisie tried to make it appear that "the bourgeoisie is a bourgeoisie—for the benefit of the working class!"

The conservative Bourbon Burleson was appointed and still holds office by the consent of the liberal (?) Mr. Wilson. After all it is not a question of liberalism or conservatism. The real dividing line is the class line—bourgeoisie or proletaire? Viewed in this light Burleson and the president are on the same side of the line—and the working class on the other side!

We have trials and tribulations? Is there trouble anywhere? 'Tis because we do not use them. Use the brains beneath our hair!

Oh the joys we ofttimes forfeit,
Oh, the needless pain we bear,
All because we do not carry
Working brains beneath our hair.

"Don't ask f'r rights. Take thim. An' don't let anny wan give thim to ye. A right that is handed to ye f'r nawthin' has

Gompers—Friend of Capital

The man who essays the role of prophet in these days of evolution and transition does so at the risk of finding himself quickly discredited and repudiated. Nevertheless we all have our theories about what is likely to be the trend of developments, at least in the near future. Many of us have found it necessary to revise our forecasts almost every day. It is this that makes us all the more cautious.

I have long been undecided between two conflicting theories of how plutocracy would meet the fateful issue forced by the epochal upheaval in Europe. American capitalists now have their great chance owing to their erstwhile more powerful rivals in Europe being temporarily hors de combat, commercially, to become the commercial masters of the world. America's financial and commercial status, as evolved by the fortunes of war, make this not only possible, but from the viewpoint of the capitalists, logical and worthy as being THE DESTINY OF AMERICA.

The fruition of this DESTINY would necessitate reducing American Labor to a competitive basis with the lowest wage-paying capitalist nations of earth. To do this would almost surely precipitate a storm that would quickly take on all the ominous phases of the European upheaval and menace capitalism to its very foundation stones. Would capitalism in America be deterred by this spectre and forego the mighty realization, hanging so temptingly right within its grasp, or would it defy the fates and stalk ruthlessly on determined to trample down all obstacles or perish in the attempt?

The other theory held that American capitalism, fearing the might and magnitude of the impending storm and realizing their helplessness to prevent its precipitation and the certainty of their destruction should they defy it, would do the wise thing and begin clearing the decks and taking in sail ready to meet and if possible weather it. Instead of bearding the lion of organized labor in its den as they would be compelled to do should they grasp for the shadow of commercial supremacy, they would tighten their grasp upon the substance already in hand, by coddling the organized labor lion, and sadly and reluctantly forego their dreams of commercial empire.

I have long believed that the trades unions as manipulated by Mr. Gompers and his retainers were the best asset of capitalism, should a storm break that would menace its existence and in view of the fact that such a storm was sure to arise, I have marveled much that the capitalists were so stupid as to harrass and persecute their best friend. This, of course, assumed for capitalism a certain vestige of decency and gratitude, which I now clearly see it does not possess.

They have trampled organized labor ruthlessly when the "brotherhood" with it was not propicious to the interests of capitalism, and they have made truce with it when they could put a Hun bargain over with it, but in all cases the advantage had to be with the capitalists or there was a fight. Capitalism has never voluntarily yielded anything to its little brother. Just why the little brother has remained satisfied with this sort of brotherhood, and has followed its Judas-leaders meekly into the shambles of capitalism without taking a tumble to the game, has long remained a profound mystery to me.

And now that the dark and terrible storm of Red Revolution is sweeping Europe and will soon burst upon our shores, capitalism stands quaking in its iron heeled boots. In the hour of its terrible need it is turning to little brother—little brother, alone, can save it now, hence little brother has suddenly become quite a decent sort of a chap, and really has many virtues.

But, you ask, why have I apparently settled upon this theory? I answer, because I have what seems to me to be confirmation. Just one telltale page in McClures for March makes the whole thing plain. On that telltale page is printed a full page portrait of the greatest labor leader in the world, Samuel Gompers. Now you would at once ask why a representative plute sheet like McClures would publish a whole page portrait of a labor leader. Well, upon that page is written the natice which makes abundant answer. Listen:

SAMUEL GOMPERS' OWN STORY OF
LABOR VS. BOLSHEVISM

Gompers went to work when he was eleven years old. He knows labor and its problems better than any man in the world. He has learned how to walk and talk with rulers without losing the common touch. With the wolf at his own door, he went out to toil for the betterment of the masses. Yet capital found him a helpful friend. Those who spoke of him in the bitterest terms have seen in him a new light since his stupendous service to America and the allies in the hour of their need today and the American Federation of Labor stand staunchly as America's shield against Bolshevism and Anarchy. Read his remarkable story in —April McClures.

Then again in the same issue—for March—under an impressive picture of the bare-armed, becapped and overalled labor giant appears this notice:

"The one man in the United States who can write with supreme authority on the labor question is Samuel Gompers. And he is going to be the one man in the United States who is going to tell the readers of McClures through a series of powerful and smashing labor articles, beginning in April, just what labor is going to do—and why! Every laborer, every capitalist, every citizen will learn tremendous things from these articles, which are the result of a life of devotion to a great cause."

You notice that McClure's foreford says: "With the wolf at his own door, he went out to toil for the betterment of the masses. Yet capital found him a helpful friend." Without stopping to discuss why a man doing useful work in a world of plenty should find the "wolf" continually at his door I would like to inquire why the victim should have been a helpful friend to the system that puts the wolf there? Yes, Mr. Gompers has been fair to the capitalists, but have they been fair to him, and the movement he leads? Ask the Danbury Hatters; ask the Ludlow miners; ask in Holly Grove; ask in Goldfield, Nev., where federal troops were called into anticipate a strike that had not even been called.

Mr. Gompers and his Federation of Labor have expended millions of dollars fighting the fellows he has been fair to for a mere chance to exist. Then why has he been a helpful friend to them? Why did he join in with August Belmont, et al., and become vice president of the notorious Civic Federation, an institution having for its object the chloroforming of labor, labor he was paid to represent as president of the A. F. of L.? Why does he insist on crawling on his belly and begging as favors, those things that are basic human rights? And now, when labor at last has its epochal chance for emancipating from the galling yoke of wage slavery, why does Mr. Gompers enter the lists as the peerless champion of the forces that have kept labor in chains?

The truth is that Mr. Gompers has never stood for anything more advanced than well fed slavery, and has never succeeded in attaining even that. He has sold the birthright of his fellows for a mess of pottage, and they have had to fight, beg and compromise to get the pottage. Although his ideal has never risen above the full belly for his followers, they have never been able to attain it through his leadership, but perhaps he has for himself, he has thrust his gnees under the banquet boards of the masters at Civic Federation banquets, and there is no question of the feed there.

Looking over Mr. Gompers' career as a "labor leader" we cannot be surprised that he has taken a commission to fight the only thing that has ever held any promise to labor. Bolshevism divested of the foul smirch heaped upon it by imperialism, absolutism and capitalism, simply means Socialism—the emancipation of the toiling masses from the thrall of wage-slavery and exploitation. It means that the masses shall be the masters of their own lives through the instrumentality of a democratic state that is something more than a joke—something more than a bald instrument for repression and coercion—a really constructive co-ordinative instrument flexible and amenable to the majority will.

The spectacle of "the greatest labor leader in the world," a man getting five thousand dollars per year to lead labor, entering the lists to lead the charge against labor, is a sight to make the gods laugh. Gompers' leadership has ever been an insult to labor. His attitude has assumed labor incapable, and unfit for self-government, and fit only for the yoke of slavery under the mastery of their superiors. A labor leader assuming such an attitude toward labor, would be a joke if he were not a tragedy.

Folks who have seen nothing more sinister in the leadership of Samuel Gampers than the insane puttering of a dotard have been want to refer to him humorously as "Granny Gompers." But, Gompers is not a dotard and the characterization of Granny does not fit him.

With a modicum of intelligence, he has ability and supreme cunning. The role of reactionary that he now assumes openly he has long pursued deviously. His leadership has ever been miss-leadership. Now that he has been placed in the open it is to be hoped that his deluded followers will be able to see him in his true light. And although Mr. Gompers is not a Granny, there is a feminine that fits him—he is a Delilah.

You remember the Bible story of Sampson, whose wonderful strength lay in his hair. His enemies could not prevail against him so long as his strength remained, and as his strength lay in his hair, he must be shorn of it. Delilah, his own wife, whose duty it was to love and protect Sampson, fell under the influence of his enemies, and traitorously sheared off his hair, thus placing him at their mercy, and encompassing his ruin.

Now that the giant of labor is arousing and feeling his mighty strength, his enemies and traducers are panic-stricken. Something must be done to bind him and reduce his dangerous might. He must be shorn of his strength. Who will wield the shears? Forth steps Delilah Gompers brandishing his shears, sharpened by the misplaced confidence of his deluded followers. He will shear the giant. Labor—if labor will submit. WILL THE LABOR GIANT LET THIS MODERN DELILAH GET HIS TREACHEROUS SHEARS IN HIS HAIR? Let us hope not.

B. M. DUTTON.

THE RISING STATE

A new power, a new state is rising within the shell of the political one. Functioning within and beside the political machinery of the present political state is a new force that develops by leaps and bounds. This new state threatens and challenges political ideals and methods of the past. It has risen from the smoke and flame of proletarian revolution. Let us call it the Soviet form, the occupational form of representative government.

Rising as it has from proletarian needs, it necessarily reflects the interests of the worker. Grounded on the bedrock of occupation it is logical and understandable to the worker.

This new state rises to mock the traditional political ideals, ridicules the political sophistries of the day and points convincingly to better methods whereby he workers may escape the thralldom of wage slavery. This new class war weapon, forged at the fire of proletarian revolution, must be reckoned with by all elements of the proletarian movement which profess to lead; must be reckoned with by the Socialist Party on its merits as a class war weapon.

Economically, politically, religiously, the world is in a state of swift transition. Old methods and means are being discarded. New weapons are being forged for the conflict between the two classes of society. Indications that the political method alone cannot bring the workers control of government are not wanting. In fact the political method is taking secondary place in he program of working class emancipation.

Whether the capitalist political state established in this country a century and a half ago contains the means whereby the modern proletariat can gain emancipation is the center about which revolves the whole question. A growing demand for MASS ACTION of the proletariat upon the economic field indicates the new methods of labor in this new time for gaining a new world for the workers.

FRENCH SOCIALIST VIEW OF PEACE CONFAB

Paul Faure, editor-in-chief of Populaire, signed a statement expressing the following views of the Peace Conference:

"The error was to believe that the capitalist regime, after having demonstrated that its evolution had brought about a world war, was capable of restoring order out of the nameless chaos into which it had plunged Europe. The Wilsonian principles had no chance to root themselves firmly in this environment of violence between classes and nations. Rapine, imperialism, war in all its aspects are the inevitable course of bourgeois society. At its first contact pure gold is here changed into base lead. To forget or deny now that working class revolutions have broken out everywhere is contrary to the most elementary teachings of socialism. A British delegate to the International Socialist Conference told me yesterday, after having read the text of the constiution of the League of Nations that there is nothing to do but return to England and tell the working classes that the sole hope for order and peace is in socialism and the international union of the workers. This is also our view."

While American capitalists froth with fury at Russian Bolshevism, our ally, England, is establishing trade relations with Russia by "digging in" under American capitalists—no doubt with a sly John Bull wink.

We think it will be some time before the makeshift mayor of Toledo attempts to again swallow the Socialist whale.

Compulsory military training may be essential to the welfare of capitalism, but compulsory mental training is THE essential for workers.

"German gold" bought the Russian revolutionists, we have been told a few million times, and now we wonder just what will be the effect upon the minds of American capitalists of that deposit of $200,000,000 of Russian gold for American goods? Watch them grab it!

"Trade" covereth a multitude of sins.

Make Labor Day Labor's Day

Comrades:

May first is to be the most eventful day of the year. It is the day upon which thousands of meetings will be held for the purpose of demanding FREEDOM FOR POLITICAL PRISONERS! Upon May 1st, Socialist Party members and hundreds of thousands of sympathizers are to join in one mighty protest for freedom for Debs, for Mooney, for Haywood and for all political and industrial prisoners. Upon this historic day we will show our strength by united action.

On this eventful day there are four things which every local must do and which every comrade must help do. They are:

1. Hold a monster amnesty meeting.
2. Order a bundle of the amnesty edition of the Ohio Socialist of April 23, for free distribution.
3. Order a quantity of our special May Day subscription cards to sell at these meetings.
4. Order a supply of "The Slander of the Toilers," by George R. Kirkpatrick.

Get a speaker for a meeting whether large or small. If you can't get a speaker hold a meeting anyway and have a comrade read the speeches of Debs, Kate Richards O'Hare, Rose Pastor Stokes and others. These special amnesty speeches will reach you in a few days. Order Ohio Socialists at 50c per hundred. Subscription cards are 50c and $1.00 each. Order what you can use and return unsold ones. Locals may have them on credit. Individual comrades may also order cards on the same terms. We trust our RED ARMY.

HELP MAKE MAY DAY OUR DAY

Let's show we are militant Socialists by getting 5,000 subscriptions on May 1.

Comrades, we must go over the top on May 1. Then we will have the greatest opportunity of the year to secure subscriptions for our paper. Let's not let a single sub get away from us. Let every comrade be a sub getter on May 1. Can you think of a better way to celebrate International Labor Day than to help build the press of International Labor and International Socialism?

We have printed 5,000 special May Day sub cards for these amnesty meetings. We want you to help sell them. Comrades, we are making a drive for 20,000 subscribers and a twice-a-week Ohio Socialist. We have ten thousand now. Let's get 5,000 on May 1. We can do it. We want you to help.

GET THE SPIRIT OF FREEDOM IN YOUR SYSTEM AND PREPARE FOR ACTION ON MAY 1. ORDER YOUR MAY DAY SUPPLIES. DO IT NOW.

H. WAGENKNECHT,
State Secretary P. T.

PARTY PRESS IN FRANCE

Humanite, the official morning daily paper of the Socialist Party of France is raising a sustaining fund of $40,000 by the sale of 8,000 shares of stock at $5 per share. Humanite now has a circulation of 100,000 copies. It was founded by Jean Jaures, the French Socialist leader, who was assassinated at the outbreak of the war, in August, 1914. The paper is owned by the French Socialist Party, and the sale of stock was authorized by the last national convention of the party. Like most Socialist papers, Humanite suffered severely during the war, but with the signing of the armistice and the approach of peace its circulation began to increase by leaps and bounds. A parliamentary election will soon be held in France and the party desires to have its press fully prepared to spread the enlightening precepts of the social revolution among the French proletariat.

WATCH US GROW

Recently Tiffin was in the grip of the worst public scandal it has ever known, when a former member of "our" Chamber of Commerce and one of our principal business men made serious charges against the head of that body, and a number of our legal grafters, charging misappropriation of funds from Tiffin's war chest. Now we have the pleasure of seeing a member of that gang presented to the voters of this fair city for its next mayor.

If they would take money and pleasure from a soldier who was fighting for their dirty dollars, what would they take from the general public?

It looks good for Tiffin to put an entire Socialist ticket into office, for the next election in Tiffin will be a campaign and race of dollars and sense.

NO OTHERS NEED APPLY

Only red speakers need apply for dates at Lorain, writes Comrade Albert G. Storck of Local Lorain. This local is staging some of the most successful meetings in the state and getting many new members and many O. S. subs thereby. The recent Tom Lewis and Ruthenberg meetings were especially good and greatly appreciated by the audiences.

5,000 MEETINGS ON MAY 1st

Protesting Debs' Imprisonment

Demanding Release of all Political Prisoners

COMRADES:

Here's where we pull together for the BIGGEST single protest ever launched.

On International Labor Day—5,000 protest meetings—a meeting in every city, village and country community where a Socialist can be found.

On this day all comrades and friends of Eugene V. Debs, Kate Richards O'Hare and other convicted and imprisoned Socialists, will gather in halls from coast to coast in ONE MIGHTY PROTEST against their imprisonment.

YOU ARE TO ARRANGE ONE OF THESE 5,000 MEETINGS

Really, argument is hardly necessary, comrades. DEBS IS IN DANGER. In fact—HIS LIFE IS AT STAKE. You MUST come to the rescue. We feel confident that you WILL come to the rescue on International Labor Day, May 1st, by organizing a PROTEST MEETING in your city or community, so that the voices of all sympathizers in the nation may be heard in one DEAFENING DEMAND for Debs' freedom.

No matter how large or how small your organization may be. No matter if it has five members of five thousand. No matter if you are the only Socialist in the community—YOU CAN HAVE A MEETING MAY 1ST, and a very GOOD meeting, if you will arrange for it. Because—

DEBS WILL BE WITH YOU ON MAY 1ST.

No, not in person, but he will send you the speech he would make could he be with you in person. He will send you, printed in large, readable type, exactly what he would say could he mount the platform to address you.

And Kate Richards O'Hare, and other convicted and imprisoned Socialists will also have a message for you to read to your meeting.

Even if you can not secure a speaker, the speeches which Debs and other convicted Socialists will send you and the advertising we will furnish will give you an inspiring, enthusiastic meeting. All you need do is to select comrades who are good readers to read these speeches to the meeting and to follow the meeting program which we will send. Full instructions will be furnished by us. You get the meeting. We will attend to the program.

The larger locals should engage the largest hall in the city AT ONCE and write the state office for a speaker. The smaller locals and branches should rent a hall immediately. Locals in country communities should secure the school house, or where this is impossible, hold a "home" meeting, inviting all Socialists and sympathizers to the home of some comrade. Members at large should do the same where halls are not available.

BUT UNDER NO CONSIDERATION SHOULD YOU FAIL TO HOLD A MEETING, even if it is only a meeting of the members of the party. Get a hall if you can, and in most instances you can. But if you can not get a hall, then hold the meeting in the home of a comrade. HAVE A MEETING, no matter where it is held. HAVE A MEETING!

Copies of posters to advertise your meeting; "protest" postal cards to give away or sell at your meeting; a new kind of application for membership card; program and instructions for your meeting and other essential matter will reach you in an early mail. Locals and branches should elect a committee AT ONCE with POWER TO ACT so that no delay will occur in arrangements.

5,000 PROTEST MEETINGS ON MAY 1ST

WE CAN DO IT! WE MUST DO IT!—Or we are not worthy to be known as Socialists.

GET INTO ACTION AT ONCE!

Yours in Comradeship,
A. WAGENKNECHT.

TO BATTLE CREEK

Readers of Ohio Socialist.

Local Battle Creek desires to call the attention of the Battle Creek readers of the O. S. to the lectures which are held REGULARLY EVERY SUNDAY at 3 p. m., in Arcade hall, and earnestly urges you to attend them. There is more to Socialist activity than reading a Socialist paper. Read? Certainly. Study? Surely. (Study class conducted by Comrade W. E. Reynolds every THURSDAY evening, Room 211, McCamley block). Attend these meetings. Bolshevist Russia attributes its success in a large measure to "meeting-holding." A word to the wise is sufficient.

NO HATE FOR GERMANS

"Our men are not going to come back hating the Germans. No man who has been in the line facing the Germans will hear any malice toward them. I know that if any American infantryman met the Kaiser on the doad he would be willing to share his hard tack with him. This is not a false sentiment."—Lt. Colonel Chas. W. Whittlesel, U. S. A., commander of the "Lost Battalion" in the Argonne fight, in an address in New York City, December 15.

Mother of Humanity

PART IX.

Written Especially for the Ohio Socialist By LAURA JIM REYNOLDS.

Jailing women. Persecuting women. Why?

Who has the answer?

The great unseen one, the Mother of Humanity, who was so old that humanity had lived in her through all the ages; who was so young that she was a part of all the living, who would live on while humanity existed. It was she, the Mother of Humanity, who had the answer.

She held the master key, the history of the struggles and triumphs of the past. Her daughters of today could understand their own problems if only they held that key. The thought of the Mother of Humanity strayed far back into the dim and distant past when she was young and strangely different from her daughters of today, when unaided, and without tools humanity had begun its struggle with the contending forces of nature.

She saw her daughter of the Paleolithic age, swaying in the trees with her baby clasped to her breast, singing her primitive lullaby, traces of which have come down the centuries to us:

"Hush-a-bye-baby, upon the tree top,
When the wind blows the cradle will rock,
When the bough breaks the cradle
will fall,
Down comes rock-a-bye-baby and all."

The unseen one had been a part of that humanity which had learned to leave the arboraceous home-shelter to roam upon the land. Not of her own initiative had she left her former abode and method of living, but because great changes had taken place in her environment which compelled her to move in spite of all her aversion to any change in custom or manner of living. She remembered the days before the discovery of fire. She remembered the horror of the night, the fear of the dark, and even yet she shuddered at the memory of the death and destruction which always lurked just beyond the evening shadows. She remembered the comforts of the primitive bonfire and the joy of the protection from the ravages of the wild beasts afforded by that fire. She could still taste the first cooked food.

While the Mother of Humanity listened to the ideas expressed by the eloquent orators of today in the hall of the Law Givers, she smiled and wondered if they knew of the early struggles of humanity to express their sense perceptions in ideas by spoken words. She wondered if they comprehended the struggle their early ancestors had to find words to express their ideas.

Her reverie was a true reverie, an irregular train of thoughts. From the memory of the struggle to express ideas by spoken words, articulate speech, her reverie carried her to the exultance of humanity over the first catch of fish, the consequent ease with which humanity could migrate from stream to stream and up and down the coasts, free from the fear of famine. The invention of the bow and arrow, another improvement in the manner of living, a more plentiful supply of food, was another pleasant reverie. From the bow and arrow his reverie drifted to the first domestication of wild animals. The taming of the kitten, and the puppy of the wild wolf, the making of the first crude dishes out of carved wood, the planting of grains, the making of clothing from the skins of animals, the making of rafts to cross the streams, the use of bone fish-hooks, the first basket, the first dish made of baked clay, all had been epoch making times and all flitted through her reverie.

The Mother of Humanity smiled an indulgent smile, as she remembered that man had written most of the history written, but it was woman who had made the most of it, especially in the earlier periods. It was woman who learned to catch fish, to cook them, to plant grain, to grind it, and cook it, to skin animals and preserve the hide, to tame animals, to make gaskets to weave cloth, to rear and care for the young and impart to them the greater part of their education! Her countenance brightened as the thought of woman's part in history came to her. She knew that man had written the history and because man had written the history man's part was magnified and woman's part ignored, still she smiled indulgently because she knew of the days approaching when the struggle of the sexes would cease—as a sex struggle—and men and women take their places, co-equals, co-partners and comrades in their upward journey along the road of progress.

COLUMBUS MEETING.

Comrade Alex Schwanzenfalt of Toledo will speak at 50 1-2 W. Gay St., 2:30 p. m., April 13. Comrade Schwanzenfelt fills the date of Comrade M. J. Beery at this meeting.

DISTRIBUTION SQUAD

Local Lima has organized a literature distribution squad and are now actively engaged in sowing the seeds of socialism throughout the city. They have secured a hall large enough for all propaganda meetings and are busy as bees making socialism hum.

LOCAL NILES AT WORK

Local Niles is setting an example to some of our locals in selling Industrial Freedom Certificates. This live local has sold seventy of them thus far writes Comrade Edwin Petersch and is going to make it a hundred before the comrades stop. Comrade Marguerite Prevey speaks at Niles April 13. Her subject, "A Socialist Challenge to Capitalism."

RESULTS OF 'PAY AHEAD' CAMPAIGN

Local Niles opened a campaign some time ago for the purpose of getting its members paid up in dues for the full year of 1919. Of a total membership of 89 we are able to report 23 as paid up in full. Local Niles should be proud of its success in this work considering the prosperous (?) times we are enjoying. Here are the names of the fortunate 23.

Aldo Ford, Aug. Kehn, Burt. Johnson, Ed. Armstrong, Clyde E. White, Alfred Storm, Robert Sample, Mrs. E. Peterson, Edwin Peterson, Fred Holmstrom, Bernard Kehn, Wm. Brandt, Marcus Angeluca, David P. Hoefer, Mrs. Effie Ford, Alfred Holms, Harry Bradbury, Earnest Rounds, Herman Denny, Mrs. Evelyn Kehn, Christ Ries, Karl Lundborn, H. Jones.

LOCAL PORTSCOUTH TO RAISE 1,000 DOLLARS FOR ORGANIZATION WORK

To raise an organization fund of a thousand dollars; to increase the Socialist Party membership in the Sixth Congressional district to a thousand new members; to add another thousand or fifteen hundred subscriptions to the Ohio Socialist list are among the plans of the comrades of Portsmouth. To prove that they know their business and are ready to back up their plans with the cash to carry them through, they are raising the fund by personal subscription. Some comrades have pledged as much as a hundred dollars, others fifty, others twenty-five and smaller amounts have been pledged in monthly installments.

Comrade Wm. L. Mauntel, who sends us this cheering information, applies for an organizer to help put the music in the organ-ization. The comrades of Portsmouth are setting a pace that is certain to put the movement in the southern part of the state upon its feet in a most encouraging manner. The Portsmouth comrades have leased a hall and will hold meetings every Sunday and the first and third Wednesday of each week.

Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg will speak for them on the 13th. This meeting will be a Debs protest meeting. The State Office extends congratulations to the wide awake comrades and offers its services to the fullest extent.

With our Organizers

Lilith Martin Meetings.

Comrade Martin's meeting at New Bremen, April 1, was very well attended, over one hundred people being present. The collection was good and the comrades well pleased. Her meeting at Piqua was very good and the comrades speak highly of her and her message.

Comrade Martin's dates for the near future are: Mansfield, April 11; Tiffin, 12; Toledo, 13; Montpelier, 14; Napoleon, 15; Findlay, 16, Lima, 17; Marion, 18.

Thurber Lewis Meetings.

Comrade Lewis has been very busy lately investigating possibilities of reorganization work in different localities of the state. He is amassing a large amount of information that will be of great benefit to the party in the work of the future. Comrade Lewis' next few dates are as follows: New Philadelphia, April 10; Steubenville, 12-13, Irondale, 14; Salineville, 15; Canton, 17; Barberton, 18; Ravenna, 19; Kenmore, 20.

Chas. Baker Meetings.

Comrade Baker's organization work as outlined for the southern part of the state has been laid over for the present. More effective work it is thought can be done in other parts of the state just at present. His future work for a time will be along the lines as recorded in the minutes of the meeting of the State Executive Committee report on another page. As quickly as can be arranged Comrade Baker will be on the road again with a Ford to assist him.

Resolutions

Martins Ferry, O., March 27, 1919.

Whereas, James Ralston, mayor of the city of Martins Ferry, through his power of office has prohibited owners and managers of public halls and theaters from leasing or renting their halls or theaters to the Socialist Party (a world-wide recognized political party) in direct violation of the constitution of the United States, the constitution of the state of Ohio and the ordinances of the city of Martins Ferry, and,

Whereas, The said James Ralston, mayor of Martins Ferry, openly assumes a hostile position against organized labor and returned, unemployed soldiers in general, and the Socialist Party in particular, by unlawfully abridging their constitutional right of peaceable assemblage.

Therefore, Be it resolved that we, the Socialist Party of Martins Ferry, protest against this unwarranted, unsafe and un-American method of self-styled government as destructive to the liberties and peace of our people, and as a blot on the fair (white) name of our city.

SOCIALIST PARTY, LOCAL MARTINS FERRY, OHIO.

Bring your friends to hear Comrade Schwanzenfelt, whose experience on the platform and knowledge of his subject will make a lasting impression on the minds of his audiences.

TIFFIN NOTES

By EDGAR MYLER.

The proletariat of Tiffin and vicinity are on the verge of wakening to the most miserable conditions by which they are surrounded. Tiffin local, in its drive for new members and O. S. subs, have secured the services of three of the best known state tourists, Comrades Thurber Lewis, Lilith Martin and Charles Baker.

Comrade Lewis will start the ball rolling by a one-day factory and street meeting on April 3, then the workers of this locality will have a lapse of nine days to let the light start shining. On April 12, Comrade Lilith Martin will pronounce the cure for the conditions surrounding us and last, but not least, who will appear on our present program will be Comrade Charles Baker, who will be the guest of our local from May 5 to May 18, inclusive.

The new drive recently inaugurated here will continue until the emancipation of the workers, and the capitalists and their imitators learn the art of production as well as consumption.

Comrade Baker will need no introduction in Tiffin, as the last time he spoke here owing to the bad weather the hall engaged for him was empty, but resolute Ccharles soon found a way to keep up with his reputation and in some of our typical winter weather he held a street meeting and our treasurer made some new entries on the profit side of the ledger, besides Comrade Baker's fee and expenses.

At our regular weekly meeting Wednesday evening we received an appeal for funds to aid the Lawrence Textile strikers, and Tiffin responded by donating $5 to help release the Lawrence workers' chains and let their masters know that his rule is very limited.

The debate, "Is Bolshevism a Menace to the Farmer," was resumed by Comrade Wm. C. McClury, the affirmative, and Nellie Lesher, the negative. After the judges awarded their decision Comrade McClury pleaded ignorance of his subject, claiming he had only lived under capitalist's rule forty-five years and wasn't acquainted with their methods yet.

Chairman Press Committee.

Toledo Free Speech Fight

for which I recently voted in favor of a very substantial appropriation for repairs and fumigation—and when I asked Sunday for evidence of the expenditure of this money I was informed it was in the offices, not the jail—some few minor changes only having been made for prisoners.

In the jail the boys amused themselves singing the worker's songs and cheering as the door opened incessantly and clanked on another whose only offense was saying, "Ladies and gentlemen."

By this time Organizer Baker had gone to the Socialist headquarters with a number of comrades and there 150 pledged themselves to be calm but to insist upon their rights.

They marched to McKinley's monument and one after another arose—were arrested, and driven to jail, Comrade Baker among them.

The crowd at the square then divided. Comrade Swartzenfeld had climbed a tree, hoping to get in a few words before they got him—he did—they did—he was one of the vintage of 76.

Reports were now coming in of Negro cops being rushed to the scene and of rough treatment. Officer Pappenfuss (white) was taken to the hospital alleged to have been hit by a fellow officer, who missed him intended victim.

Another officer drew his gun and a soldier laughingly said: "Little Bertha, fade away," and slapped the policeman on the wrist. The crowd catching the spirit of the soldier's playfulness, pushed and pulled the cop until he ran up a nearby alley in fear of being himself arrested for indecent exposure. They say he looked like Theda Bara in one of her vampire acts a-la-deshabille.

Then came the beginning of the end—of a Perfect Day.

After one and one-half hours of voice culture in the municipal "Booby Hatch" and after having declined to discuss his release simply because he was a councilman, the writer was sent for by Chief of Police Herbert and with Secretary Toohey was taken thereto.

Arriving in the chief's office we found Comrade Solon Klotz, attorney; Brother Ebright, organizer of the Machinists of Toledo, and others who had been discussing the affair and now knew better than we the alarming situation at Courthouse Park.

The chief impressed upon Devine the fact that he, Devine, was a city official, stated that the police were unable to further handle the situation and asked if Devine would do him a favor—go to Courthouse Park, address the multitude who were becoming hostile and disperse them.

Toohey and Devine informed the chief that our men were orderly, that if there were any disorder it came from his department and not from our boys.

The chief was requested and consented to retire a moment and the comrades held a private conference, agreeing we had won a victory inasmuch as the police department which had arrested us for speaking, were now asking us to address the people and as we had nothing to gain by riot and bloodshed, which every moment was threatening greater proportions, we agreed that if all prisoners were released we would disperse the meeting.

We then went into the jail and Mark Anthony's oration over the body of Julius Caeser was baby's prattle compared to the flow or oratory in the prison before the 70 comrades already incarcerated.

Devine, Toohey and Baker addressed the prisoners and were then taken in the chief's own machine from the jail, but never reached the courthouse for the crowd of thousands were now but a block from the city jail coming to demand the release of the prisoners. We met them and talked to them for perhaps a half an hour and the police now were keeping order for us by directing traffic and we used the chief's automobile as our soap box.

As an evidence of how orderly that vast assemblage could be (and I never saw a larger crowd), we asked them to stand quiet at attention like trained soldiers until we were sure every prisoner was released and the way they stood was a credit to the Socialist movement and a lesson in diplomacy to the police department of Toledo, where what was termed a mob of fanatics stood fully ten minutes without a murmur and smiled, and later cheered as Comrade Soldier Serafin was released and lifted bodily upon the shoulders of the crowd and carried to the automobile where bowing to the cheering crowd and making a very brief talk, we thus "came to the end of a perfect day."

NO MORE ARRESTS SAYS MAYOR

As evidence of how completely the mayor and police department have backed up on their program of denial of free speech to Socialists the following letter of the mayor to Safety Director Mall, is illuminating:

The police, in making arrests last Sunday of persons in Courthouse Square, fearlessly performed what they considered to be their duty. Yet they acted mistakenly and in excess of their authority. In justification of that mistake, I realize that in the then impending crisis it was perhaps difficult for them to exercise the mature judgment simple enough on the morrow. The mistake, however, must not be repeated.

"I have already clearly stated my views on the subject of free speech. This right of free speech is a fundamental right, clearly guaranteed by the constitution of the United States, and one to be jealously guarded. It prevails everywhere, both in public and in private places.

"The order issued from the executive department closed Memorial hall to Eugene V. Debs, but that was the full extent of the order. This order was issued because Memorial hall is essentially of patriotic origin, and because Mr. Debs had been convicted of treasonable speech by a jury of his peers and the conviction, sustained by the highest court in the land. In Ohio conviction of a felony, by law, deprives the person convicted of the right to either vote or hold office.

"I write this letter at this time because future meetings will no doubt be held, and for that reason the police department should receive from you definite instructions to safeguard the right of each citizen to freely speak his mind.

"You will therefore kindly see to it that the injunctions herein set forth are conveyed to the department of police and by it fully observed."

NEWS AND VIEWS—A WEEKLY SURVEY

Edited by C. E. Ruthenberg

Theory Versus Fact

Commenting upon the fact that the Socialist Party of Cleveland endorsed a Left Wing Program, a writer in one of the local papers characterizes this action as a "break with American methods and American ideals." The whole trend of his comment gives the impression that in the United States there exists the machinery which permits the free expression of any movement through the medium of popular education and the ballot box, and that therefore such a program, which includes mass action as one of the weapons, is a break with American ideals and methods.

In theory it is true that this situation exists. In the can't phrases of writers such as the man in question and the usual run of editorial writers the United States permits the free expression of new ideals and the realization of these ideals through the ballot.

But what is the fact. The Socialists of the United States had a certain view in regard to war and endeavored to educate the voters to an understanding of this view through public meetings and to express that view at the ballot box, and the result was that they were sent to prison by the hundreds.

In the city of Cleveland the socialists succeeded in electing three men to public office, pledged to their view of war.

If the theory of American institutions which this writer upholds actually prevailed, then these men had a right to uphold their views by their votes on measures that came before them for action.

Two of these elected officials were city councilmen. Their came before them for action a measure pledging the support of the city government to a certain organization conducting war work. They voted against this measure. In theory, under American institutions and ideals they had a perfect right to do so. In fact, men had gone much further in countries which do not pretend to uphold such ideals of free expression. In Germany, Liebknecht, and later a score of other men voted against the budget, which meant a thousand times more to the conduct of the war than the vote of socialist councilmen on the measure pledging support to the Cleveland war service organization. Liebknecht and his comrades were unmolested. The Cleveland councilmen were openly and brutally expelled from the city council, on a trumped up charge of "disorderly conduct" in voting in as their conscience dictated!

Does this writer who so glibly talks about "American methods and American ideals" dare face the fact that in practice, as shown in the instances cited, these mean open and avowed class rule and the ruthless suppression of minority opinion?

If the socialists are seeking new weapons it is because the ruling class has taught them the need of new weapons.

"The United States is short 12,000,000 workers, due to the stoppage of emigration during the war," members of a business organization were told by a speaker the other day. Well, its a good thing for the capitalists they are not here for if twelve million were added to the millions already out of work the capitalist control of industry wouldn't last long.

Our Democracy

Samuel Schmalhausen, a former teacher in the employ of the city of New York, who was dismissed last year for making "disloyal" statements, was scheduled to make an address before the Teacher's Union of New York recently. Schmalhausen is a member of the union he was to address. A few days before the time set for his speech, officers of the Teachers' Union were informed that Schmalhausen would not be permitted to make his address in the public school building in which the meeting was to be held.

When the superintendent of schools, who barred Schmalhausen was asked whether he had the power to decide who should and who should not speak in public school buildings, he answered in the affirmative.

This incident, unimportant in itself, shows how the ruling class interests are protected. A Cleveland writer, commenting on the statement in Lenin's letter to American workingmen, that the Soviet Government did not pretend to adhere to the formal democracy to which the capitalist countries gave lip service, argued that this was admission that the Bolsheviki repudiated the idea of freedom of speech and freedom of press. As usual with men of his class, he found in the statement an opening for an attack on the Russian workers' government, but overlooked the stinging indictment of the existing capitalist governments.

What Lenine says is that the Bolsheviki are not hypocrites as are the supporters of so-called western democracies. He brought out the fact that in a society divided into classes struggling for mastery democracy could only exist formally. In practice the economically dominant class would use its power to prevent the exercise of those democratic rights which the weaker class formally possessed.

The New York incident cited above, which is only one of a hundred, is proof that our democracy is of that formal character which Lenine pointed out.

Repudiated

The various organizations of business men, who found in organizations such as the American Protective League, the opportunity to use high handed measures against groups and organizations which they felt threatened their position as exploiters, have been repudiated by the Department of Justice. The department, according to announcement made by A. Mitchell Palmer, Attorney-General of the United States will have no connection with such organizations. Mr. Palmer's statement goes on to say:

> "Espionage conducted by private individuals or organizations is entirely at variance with out theories of government and its operation in any community constitutes a grave menace to that feeling of public confidence, which is the chief force making for the maintenance of public order."

No doubt Mr. Palmer is speaking from experience. He knows that the American Protective League aroused bitterness and hatred by its methods and that no services it rendered the ruling class could offset the mischief it did. It and similar organizations are repudiated by Mr. Palmer because they constitute a greater menace than help to exploiting class of this country.

A Crime

Following the lead of the State of Oregon, various state legislatures are considering or have enacted a "criminal syndicalism" bill. The legislature of Massachusetts has such a bill ready for enactment and a similar measure is before the Ohio and Pennsylvania legislatures.

A copy of the Pennsylvania measure has just reached us and in the opening paragraphs we find these two clauses:

> Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met and it is hereby enacted by the authority of same that the word "sedition" as used in this act shall mean:
>
> Any writing, publication, printing, cut, cartoon, utterance or conduct, either individually or in connection or combination with any other person or persons which tends
> (A) To incite or arouse discontent against the Government of this state or of the United States.

In 1776 the representatives of the thirteen colonies met in the state of Pennsylvania and adopted a Declaration of Independence in which they recited their grievances against the English government. If after the enactment of the above bill a group of people were to assemble in the state of Pennsylvania and adopt a declaration reciting their grievances against the present government of that state or against the government of the United States, they would be put in jail for ten years and fined ten thousand dollars, for certainly to recite grievances against a government is to "arouse discontent."

Woodrow Wilson, while campaigning for the presidency in 1912 said that "The masters of the government of the United States are the combined manufacturers and bankers of the United States." For saying that in the State of Pennsylvania after the enactment of this bill, Woodrow Wilson might be locked up for ten years.

Under this statute,—it contains ten other clauses equally sweeping—the platform of any political party out of office, adopted during the last twenty years would be "seditious" and those responsible for it punishable by ten years imprisonment.

Fear has driven the petty politicians who sit in our state legislatures mad. They see the rising tide of working class revolt sweeping the world and they hope to stem it by enacting laws making any manifestation of discontent punishable by long years of imprisonment. Making discontent with the existing government a crime will not stop the manifestation of discontent. It will merely increase the discontent and prove and aid in sweeping such a government out of existence.

The United Press correspondent in Paris sent the following cable a few days ago:

> Nationalization of women by the Bolsheviki is a myth, according to William Bullitt and Lincoln Steffens, American investigators, who have just returned from Russia.
>
> "We asked Premier Lenine and others about the reported nationalization of women the first time we met them," Steffens told the United Press tonight.
> "All we got was blank stares of non-comprehension. We repeated the question the next day, whereupon we were informed they had understood the first time, but they had not supposed we meant the question seriously. They said they had heard the story themselves, ran it down, and found that an obscure anarchist organization in the interior had posted notices proclaiming nationalization of women, as a joke.
> "They said they were sorry that some one's freakish idea of humor had attracted more attention than any real accomplishments of the Soviets.
>
> "As a matter of fact, conditions in Russia approach the puritanical. Officers of the Soviets explain this by saying, 'We have got rid of the imperial upper class.'"
>
> Another story circulating in Paris peace circles is that the Hotel Europe in Petrograd is filled with the government's "white slaves," taken from the homes of former wealthy citizens.
>
> "The fact is the Hotel Europe is now a children's free hospital," said Steffens.

Why didn't the newspapers getting the United Press publish the story?

to make Odessa their port of commerce, and the 'patriotic' treaty of Admiral Koltchak with Japan, by which he ceded to that government control over the routes to the Orient, it becomes clear that the aggressive plans of the imperialists with regard to the Russian revolution have in view a new dismemberment and a new pillage of Russia and the renewed subjection of the Russian peoples to the domination of their most reactionary enemies, foreign and domestic.

"The laboring masses of Russia will defend themselves to the bitter end against this prospective dismemberment and against the forces of social reaction which only hope to secure power by the aid of the Polish, Finnish, Roumanian and Japanese reactionaries.

"The establishment of order by such means will only result in the shedding of new oceans of blood and will end in destroying a country already sufficiently tortured. But a new dismemberment of Russia and the restoration by foreign (word missing) of the police, the landlords, and the capitalists will never be accepted by the working masses of Russia, who by a series of new (word missing) will reconquer their liberty and their national unity. Such dismemberment, however, is the end which the European bourgeoisie is striving to attain. Do the French bourgeoisie desire that the strong sympathies which the Russian people have for them shall be destroyed? Yet that is what will happen the day the Russian people acquire the conviction that it is the French republic which directs the campaign of the landlords and capitalists of Poland, Finland and Roumania, whose desire is to restore in Russia the abhorrent ancient empire and to pillage its territory.

"Will the proletariat of western Europe consent that these reactionary governments created in the states ressussitated or reinforced by the warld war, after having crushed, thanks to the White Guard, their own workers, shall be commissioned as international gendarmes to strangle the working class of the entire world? Will the proletariat consent that the armies of Paderewiski, Bratania and Mannerheim shall become the armed police force of this hily alliance of capitalists who wish to make the League of Nations a League of Imperial Brigands?

"These are the questions that loyal democratic Russia presents to the public opinion of the entire world. It tells the world once more that in protesting with all its energy against foreign military intervention it speaks as the representative of that portion of the working class of Russia which proposes the basis of the Bolshevik regime as disastrous to Socialist policy. (Editor's Note—The French text reads: '* * * la partie de la classe ouvriere russe qui s'oppose aux bases du regime bolchevik funeste a la politique socialiste.')

"Its protest against foreign military intervention and against the endeavors of the reactionary Russian arises from its belief that such an intervention, and the refusal of the allied governments to come to an understanding with Soviet Russia, will only serve to prolong and intensify the crisis which is killing the people. This protest comes from the conviction that the counter-revolutionary mobilization cannot fail to accentuate the terrorist tendencies of the working masses. On the contrary, give to Russia the possibility of developing itself in peace, suppress the blockade which is smothering her—these are the measures which will inevitably result in arresting at their base the terrorist tendencies by giving to those elements of the working class not psychologized by Maximalist and anarchistic illusions the means to successfully fight for the purification of the political regime of Soviet Russia, for the re-establishment of politican liberty, and for the triumph of an economic policy corresponding to the social conditions of our country.

"The Menshevik Social Democratic Party makes an appeal to all Socialist parties and to all labor unions for an agreement by the entente governments with the Lenine government.

"The Social Democratic Party presents its most cordial felicitations for the decision reached by the Socialist parties (at Berne) to send a delegation to Russia to study the situation of the country, and it hopes that the arrival of the authorized representatives of the western Social Democracies will bring to the Russian proletariat a moral aid essential in its attempt to find an escape from its intolerable situation.

"The central committee of the Social Democratic Party firmly hopes that the active intervention of the international proletariat will protect the Russian revolution from the danger raised against it.

"Down with armed intervention!

"Hands off Revolutionary Russia!

"Long live the international struggle of the united proletariat!

Urge Workers to Support Soviet

"And during this time, behind our backs, in the rear, they made a coup d'etat and set up the Koltchak dictatorship, the representative of the bourgeoisie and of the landed proprietors.

BOURGEOIS DICTATORSHIP.

"The bourgeois dictatorship signifies the complete crushing of the proletariat and of the working peasants, and the complete triumph of those enemies of the workers, the proprietors and the capitalists. It signifies the suppression of all the conquests of the great Russian revolution and the overthrow of the democratic regime and the re-establishment of the old monarchical regime.

"The Siberian reactionaries have directed their attacks against democratic parties and institutions. They have arrested several members of the constituent assembly, as well as Comrade Sourgoutchef and other militants of the Socialist Revolutionary Party.

"But the most important changes have taken place recently in western Europe. Germany has met with military defeat, and the treaty of Brest-Litovsk, annulled by the Soviet government, has lost its authority.

"German imperialism no longer exists, and the Austro-Hungarian empire is a thing of the past. Under the pressure of the working class of Germany and Austria, the thrones of the monarchs of these countries have been overthrown. The authority has passed into the hands of the workers, who, under the red flag of the labor social revolution, enter, like their brothers in Russia, into the era of the world social revolution. That is what has recently happened.

"Through fear of a labor revolution at home the former allies of Russia—England, France, Japan and the United States—naturally took the part of the bourgeois dictatorship in Russia. The bourgeoisie of western Europe and of the United States declared war against the Russian and German revolutions. The allies would not recognize either the authority of the Soviet government or that of the constituent assembly. But they did recogsize Koltchak and Denikine.

"Under the pretext of fighting against Bolshevism, our former allies revealed their intention, on the one hand, or exploiting the situation of Russia, and, on the other hand, of establishing democracy entirely and consolidating the power of the bourgeois reaction.

"All of those fundamental changes which have taken place in the world situation and in Russia have compelled the members of the Socialist Revolutionary Party and those of the constituent assembly to revise their program. Under no circumstances can the Socialist Revolutionary Party support either bourgeois dictatorship or foreign bourgeois intervention; but, on the contrary, it must support the most resolute struggle against both national and international reaction in order that the Russian revolution and the world revolution may be victorious. This is not the time for a fractional war among the workers.

"STOP CIVIL WAR!"

"This is why the Executive Committee of the congress of the members of the constituent assembly asks all the soldiers of the popular army to stop the civil war against the Soviet government, which, at the present historic time, is the only revolutionary power of the exploited classes, and turn their armies against Koltchak, in order to crush the exploiters.

"On its part, the revolutionary committee guarantees to detachments of the popular army, as well as to isolated individuals, and groups who voluntarily end the civil war against the power of the Soviets and who voluntarily join with the Soviet troops, that they will be subject to no prosecution on the part of the Soviet government. The same agreement applies to the detachments which fight Koltchak.

"The members of the Socialist Revolutionary Party, who accept this agreement, will not be molested because of their membership in the party.

"Soldiers of the popular army, Siberian Cossacks and Czecho-Slovaks! In acquainting you with this agreement, the delegation of the Socialist Revolutionary Party invites all sincere democrats, all the peasants and all the workers to cease playing the role of blind instruments in the hands of the reactionary bourgeoisie, who, behind your backs, beat down your own brothers. We ask you to turn your arms against the bourgeois dictatorship of Koltchak and to act in agreement with the Soviet army.

"Long live the labor democracy of every country!

"Long live the world social revolution!

applicants: Napoleon, 8 applicants; Lorain, 10 applicants; Ukrainian branch, Girard, 6 applicants; Girard, 5 applicants; Coshocton, 10 applicants; Dover, 8 applicants; Troy, 5 applicants; South Slavic branch, Lorain, 7 applicants.

Motion carried that chater applications be granted.

Motion carried that names of applicants for membership-at-large now on hand be sent to the state executive committee for approval and that hereafter applications for membership-at-large be referred to the state executive committee monthly.

Communications.

Communication from Local Youngstown asking the state executive committee to give reasons for the discontinuation of the services of W. E. Reynolds as state lecturer. Motion carried that a committee of two be elected to draft a reply to Local Youngstown. Scott Wilkins and J. P. Baker named the committee.

Communication from Miami Valley Socialist, requesting privilege of routing H. L. A. Holman in the interest of that paper. Motion carried to postpone action until the Sunday morning session.

Communication from Local Cincinnati inviting the state executive committee to name Cincinnati as the city in which the next state convention be held. Motion carried that the next convention of the Socialist Party of Ohio be held in Cincinnati providing Local Cincinnati and other locals in southern Ohio co-operate in a state picnic, the net proceeds of which is to go into the state funds.

Motion carried that the next state convention be held on June 27, 28, and that the state picnic be held June 29.

Communication from John M. Work advising against a national convention this year. Filed.

Communication from Local Philadelphia calling a general strike for the day Debs is sent to prison. Motion carried that as the national office is organizing 5,000 protest meetings for May 1, it would be policy to make these protest meetings successful rather than lend assistance to sporadic attempts to protest Debs' imprisonment.

Draft of constitution for Local Richland County was approved by motion.

Communication from Local Lima suggesting changes in contents of the Ohio Socialist, which would tend to make it more of a propaganda paper than an organization paper. Motion carried that inasmuch as the Ohio Socialist has proven so successful in its present policy, that this policy be continued.

Motion carried to adjourn until 7:30 p. m.

Second Session.

Discussion of removal of headquarters to Galion. Comrade Wm. M. Brown of Galion, who had invited the state executive committee to move headquarters to Galion, made the following statement: "I now realize that it would be a mistake to move the state office to a small city. The place for the state office is where it can get the enthusiasm and inspiration of a movement as gigantic as ours. This change of mind on my part in this matter of location of state headquarters will not interfere with the assistance I have decided to render the Ohio Socialist Party."

The committee, after discussion, agreed with the above statement by Comrade Brown. No vote taken.

General discussion of pamphlet now being written by Comrade Wm. M. Brown, entitled "Socialism, a Natural Gospel for a Scientific Age." Generally agreed that its publication would greatly aid our party in its propaganda work, and that if the national office does not publish it, the state office do.

Verbal report by State Organizer Chas. Baker heard. Comrade Baker gave a synopsis of his work at all points touched since January 16th, which constituted a revelation to the committee. It proved the field ripe for the employment of more organizers. Comrade Baker went into his plan of organization work by automobile, namely, to make well organized cities headquarters for a number of organizers all supplied with autos, and that smaller localities be reached from the organized places, the well organized cities to support the work in the surrounding unorganized communities both financially and by lending co-operation in the work. Report received.

Motion carried that the wages of the state organizer be $5 a day and expenses.

Motion carried that M. J. Beery and Lotta Burke constitute the audititing committee.

Motion carried to adjourn until 9 a. m., Sunday, March 30.

Third Session.

Sunday, March 30, 1919. ....

Sunday morning session called to order by Tom Clifford.

Lotta Burke elected chairman for the day.

Unfinished Business.

Motion that inasmuch as the terms and method of routing applied for by H. L. A. Holman would seriously interfere with the organized methods of the state office, that therefore the request of the Miami Valley Socialist for a list of local secretaries be complied with. Motion lost.

Motion by Comrade Sharts that in the name of Local Dayton I apply for a list of local Secretaries. Lost.

Roll call vote on above motion. Voting yes, Sharts, Burke; voting no, Clifford, Wilkins, Baker.

Report of sub-committee on recall of W. E. Reynolds as state speaker:

In answer to the inquiry of Local Youngstown for reason for the action of the secretary in discontinuing routing and declining to re-employ Comrade W. E. Reynolds as state speaker, we herewith submit the following:

First, Local Toledo instructed Comrade Wm. Patterson to make the following complaint:

The Reynolds meeting was opened by the chairman who proceeded to sell the literature in stock of Local Toledo and announcing several speakers for future meetings, also urging those present to join the Rand School study class. Comrade Reynolds opened his lecture by holding up in his right hand copies of the literature sold and denouncing it as trash and piffle. He also denounced each of the speakers announced for future meetings and denounced the Rand School, while at the same time recommending a study school of his own.

Second—A communication from Local Cincinnati setting forth the same occurrences as took place in Toledo.

Third—That several members of S. E. C. submitted personal knowledge of other actions of Comrade Reynolds which would disqualify him as state speaker.

The S. E. C. action was based upon his persisting in making these criticisms of literature and speakers in open propaganda meetings instead of in business meetings where such criticisms rightfully belong.

The S. E. C. was unanimous in their action.

(Signed) SCOTT WILKINS,
J. P. BAKER,
For the S. E. C.

Motion carried that report be accepted.

New Business.

Report of Fred Neubauer, auditor, read. Motion it be accepted. Carried.

Motion that Vomrades Baker and Sharts be elected the auditing committee.

Motion carried bill of $57.50 for auditor's services be paid.

Report of State Secretary taken up.

Discussion held regarding organization of left wing movement by locals throughout nation.

Motion to adjourn to 2:30 p. m., carried.

Fourth Session.

Motion that we the S. E. C. of Ohio, recognizing the emphasis which European Socialist occurrences have given the efficiency of uncompromising and revolutionary Socialist tactics, advise all locals to study the left wing manifestation within the Socialist Party, with a view to understanding it and eventually taking an intelligent part in the decision of this momentous question of proper party tactics Motion that we encourage and work for the campaign to make the Ohio Socialist a semi-weekly and that final official action be taken at the next state convention. Carried.

Motion purchase of multigraph for $257 be approved.

Motion that division of state into organization districts as recommended in State Secretary and State Organizer's reports be endorsed and that as funds permit, organizers be placed in these districts and autos furnished them.

Motion State Secretary select either Thurber Lewis, Lilith Martin or M. A. Toohey as their services are required as district organizers, and that others be recommended as needed to the S. E. C. by the State Office.

After thorough discussion it was agreed both by Wm. M. Brown and the S. E. C. that it was inadvisable to remove state headquarters to Galion, and a motion to this effect was made and carried.

Motion State Office proceed as before in assisting the various locals in the coming municipal campaign and to urge all locals to put tickets in the field.

Motion State Secretary be authorized to secure all help needed to conduct State Office properly. Carried.

Good and Welfare.

General discussion of party policies and joint visit and discussion with Local Galion.

Auditing committee rendered following report:

Exploiters Tell About British Workers

ally the whole of British organized labor back of it. That program says:

"What the nation needs is undoubtedly a great bound onward in its productive activity. But this cannot be secured merely by pressing the manual workers to more strenuous toil, or even by encouraging the 'captains of industry' to a less wasteful organization of their several enterprises on a profit-making basis.

"What the Labor party looks to is a genuinely scientific reorganization of the nation's industry (no longer deflected by individual profiteering) on the basis of the common ownership of the means of production, the equitable sharing of the proceeds among all who participate in any capacity and only among these, and the adoption, in particular services and occupations, of those systems and methods of administration and control that may be found, in practice, best to promote, not profiteering, but the public interest.

"The Labor party stands not merely for the principle of common ownership of the nation's land, to be applied as suitable opportunities occur, but also, specifically, for the immediate nationalization of railways, mines, and the production of electric power."

Current reports from England indicate that the working people are using their combined political and economic power to realize the program outlined in the above extracts from the platform of the British Labor Party.

No wonder Secretary Wilson's committee of labor exploiters are worried at the prospect of having such large blocks of profit-producing industries as the transportation systems and the mines and electric power industries taken away from the capitalists and made the property of all the people for the common good. Should the process go far enough they might have to go to work for their living, which, of course, would be a social revolution undesired by the labor exploiters.

Statement of Ownership, Management etc.

Statement of the ownership, management, circulation, etc., required by the act of congress of Aug. 24, 1912.

THE END OF CAPITALISM

"The League of Nations is dead. All chances of a real settlement of European problems is at an end. A desperate effort is being made to get together a patched-up peace within the next ten days which shall at least put an end to unrest and economic paralysis in the world."

Thus writes a capitalist journalist and observer whose opinion carries great weight because of the distinction he has won in his particular field.

* * * *

In formulating his science of society Karl Marx showed that the inner contradictions of the capitalist system of production were of such a character that these conditions would lead to its eventual dissolution. "Capitalism carries within itself the seeds of its own decay" is a phrase which has often appeared in the writings and speeches of Socialists. But like the rest of the Marxian science it has been ignored or laughed to scorn by those who were profiting from the capitalist system and had an interest in defending it.

* * * *

The World War was not unexpected by the Socialists. The contradictions of capitalist production made such a war a logical sequence of capitalist production. In each capitalistically developed country of the world the workers were being exploited; in each such country the machinery of production was being perfected and in order to tmporarily solve the problem of increased production and a limited power of consumption by the exploited workers, the capitalists were compelled to seek expansion. Each national group of capitalists, driven by the necessity of securing control of new territory in order to develop markets and places to invest their surplus capital, entered the race for survival. In these struggles the interests of the national groups clashed and after several decades of conflict and threats of war their came—the World War.

Seven million men died. Nearly two hundred billions of wealth was destroyed. Misery and suffering stalked over a whole continent. And what is the result?

While the war was on we were told by President Wilson, whose chief service to capitalism has been that he has covered up the ugly facts with beautiful, idealistic words—that out of the bloodshed and destruction there was to be born a new world of righteousness and peace.

The president went to Europe to organize this new world, acclaimed by most of the people of the earth as their savior. For three months he has labored at the colossal task. And now we are told that the peace conference is about to collapse and that the League of Nations that was to save the world, is dead!

* * * *

What has happened at Paris that is threatening to bring the peace conference to an end without accomplishing its purpose? What is preventing President Wilson from bringing about the idealistic adjustment of the affairs of the world which he proclaimed in his fourteen points?

The people who put the blame for the World War upon some nation or some particular person in a certain nation, such as the kaiser, will now find some particular nation among the allies or some particular person in one of the nations, such as France and Clemenceau, to blame.

But it was neither a certain nation nor individual who was responsible for the coming of the Wrold War and it is not a certain nation nor individual that is responsible for the failure of the peace conference to work out the idealistic peace proclaimed by President Wilson.

President Wilson framed his fourteen points and idealistic peace in his study in Washington. No doubt the president made a sincere effort to frame a settlement which would bring into existence a nice, orderly capitalist world—from the point of view of the privacy of his study.

The allies gave lip service—and even that with some reservations—to the fourteen points, while the war was still being fought. But at Paris the fourteen points had to meet the withering, devastating breath of the facts of the capitalist will.

The fact of economic interests of national groups of exploiters were against the fourteen points.

The fourteen points declared against a punitive indemnity, but England and France faced the threat of national bankruptcy without an indemnity. Self-determination for peoples did not stand in the way of Italy providing for its economic future by demanding cities that that principle would give to Jugo-Slavia, nor France from attempting to further its economic future by insisting that it receive the coal mines of the Saar valley. All the little new nations set up in central Europe developed greedy appetites for this or that district belonging to its neighbors, because these districts mean economic advantage to them. Japan wanted a clear title to the islands it had gobbled and repudiated the idea of hiding the fact under the camouflage of becoming a "mandatory."

Clearly, what has happened at Paris is that the same inner forces of capitalism dominating national groups which precipitated the world war are now manifesting themselves in the struggle between those who fought the war as allies. It is the necessities enforced by the iron laws of capitalist production that set each national group against each other in a struggle to create the condition which will enable them to survive and not the unregenerate nature of certain individuals or nations.

* * * *

As we weigh and consider the words "The League of Nations is dead. All chance of a real settlement of European problems is at an end," and the other pessimistic dispatches which are reaching us from Paris, forecasting the break-up of the Peace Conference and the possible withdrawal of President Wilson, there is only one conclusion that we can reach; that is, that capitalist society has developed to a point which makes it impossible even to temporarily harmonize the conflicting capitalist interests and that if peace is to be restored to the world it must be done by wiping out the capitalist system of production.

Of all the countries of Europe only one country is not involved in the universal struggle waged about the Peace Conference for new territory to secure trade advantages and new economic resources. That is Russia. With the triumph of the Bolsheviki the Soviet government repudiated all forms of imperialistic aggression. It published the secret treaties; it repudiated the struggle for Constantinople; it nationalized its foreign trade. But more important than all, it abolished all forms of exploitation, thereby ending the one condition of capitalist production that is driving the other nations of Europe to destruction and ruin.

If Russia is still fighting it is not because it asks anything from the other nations, but because these nations are trying to destroy the new social order that is growing there.

* * * *

Surely no more striking confirmation of Marx's prediction that the time would come when the inner contradictions of capitalist production would bring about its dissolution, could be made than that which is being made by the Peace Conference. Capitalism is doomed. It must go at once or the world is condemned to decades of bloodshed and mass murder.

The new social order that is to succeed it is written in the aspirations of the workers of the world. Only through a new industrial order in which exploitation will be ended through making the means of production and the resources of the earth the common property of the workers can peace, order, happiness and well being be restored to the people of the earth.

The workers' hour has come; the workers of the world must unite and establish the new order if the world is to be saved from the destruction and ruin with which capitalism threatens it.

Exploiters Committee Tells About British Workers

Don't Like New Industrial Democracy and Ending of Autocracy

Washington.—Radical socialism is bolshevism. Bolshevism is radical socialism. No matter how the thing is spelled it brooks nothing but evil for the capitalists of high and low degree. In some portions of Europe the thing is a fact. In other portions of Europe the thing is well on the way to become a fact. The thing will become a fact in the United States if the class conscious and unscrupulous labor exploiters here persist in handling the working class with brass knuckles. Continue to wear the brass knuckles, of course, but upholster them a bit so that when the workers come up against the knuckles they will think they are being caressed rather than slugged.

This is the report and recommendation made to Secretary Wilson by the committee of labor exploiters sent abroad by the secretary some time ago to find out what is the matter with labor exploitation on the continent and in England, in the committee's final conclusions made public by the Department of Labor.

Stripped of all its verbiage the American labor exploiters report that in Great Britain the labor exploiters and their government are attempting to camouflage the British workers into becoming 100 per cent. efficient wealth producers by telling them that co-operation between the exploited workers and the exploiting capitalists is highly desirable for both; that conciliation in spirit and in fact is also desirable between the parasitic employers and their employes as a method of taking the sharp edges off the struggle over the division of the surplus wealth, the workers demanding all the new wealth they produce and the parasitic employers taking the greater part of it for themselves. Conciliation, the report says, will enable the labor exploiters to "stabilize" their profits and the workers to pay their union dues regularly. Finally, the report finds that collective bargaining will still further camouflage the workers into believing that they are enjoying a form of industrial democracy, while the employers can be relied upon to persuade the workers that it is an unsound policy for them to demand so much of the employers' profits that there is but little incentive left for the exploiters to continue in the business.

The committee found two classes of workers in Great Britain—"right minded" employes and "wrong minded" employes. The right minded employes have accepted, according to the report, the co-operative and conciliatory policy outlined above as the program for the stormy days of reconstruction. The conclusion, however, does not tally with the recently adopted program of the British Labor Party, with its sixty-odd members in the British parliament and practic-

The Worker's Share

The Traitors Beg

From Washington comes the news that President Wilson has been petitioned to grant a respite in the case of Eugene V. Debs and hold up execution of his sentence while the question of a pardon is being considered.

This petition is signed by Charles Edward Russell and Allan L. Benson, renegade Socialists, and Frank P. Walsh.

Of course the petition was not sent to the president by the authority or even the consent of Debs. Eugene V. Debs would rather serve twice ten years in prison than ask for a pardon.

It is more likely that the request was made at the suggestion of the president than at the suggestion of Debs.

But the fact that such a petition has been filed and the probable action thereon will deceive no one.

If the president pardons Debs it will not be because of any petition filed by Charles Edward Russell, Allan L. Benson or any one else.

If the pardon is granted it will be because the ruling class of this country fears the result of putting Eugene V. Debs in prison.

The last two or three weeks have shown that the rallying cry "Freedom for Debs" is one that will receive the support of thousands of workers. In New York, Chicago, Cleveland and many other places great mass meetings have been held at which the workers voiced their protest against Debs being sent to prison—and probably to death.

The ruling class of this country is watching for signs of an upheaval. The threatened imprisonment of Debs looked as if it might prove to be the center of a great mass movement of the workers, which, once under way, might not stop when it attained its object.

The agents of the ruling class no doubt observed what was happening. Hence the new movement to give Debs his freedom.

In this movement the traitor Socialists give their services to hide the real power that is making the fight for the freedom of Debs.

That power is the mass demand of the workers. If Debs goes free it will be because tens of thousands of workers demanded his freedom and were prepared to organize and go on strike until their object was attained.

If Debs goes free it will be the first victory for mass action—a victory won by the mere threat of mass action.

Refuse Passport To Pan-American Congress

Washington.—The state department today refused to issue a passport to Dan Hogan of Huntington, Ark., to attend the Pan-American Socialist conference, which convenes in Buenos Aires, Argentina, the latter part of April.

Hogan is a member of the Socialist national committee and was recently appointed by the committee to represent the Socialist Party at the Buenos Aires meeting. He is editor of the Huntington Herald, a Socialist and labor paper, and is a veteran writer and lecturer for the Socialist Party. He took an active part in the win-the-war activities in Arkansas, especially in the Liberty loan and war savings stamps campaigns, and his application for a passport was indorsed by many prominent citizens of Huntington. His application has been pending in the state department for several weeks, and Assistant Secretary of State Phillips finally made public today the information that the passport has been refused.

Capitalists Hostile.

It is understood that the American capitalists are hostile to any meeting of the Pan-American workers to organize for their own interests, and especially hostile to such meetings at present when the labor unrest seems to have reached a feverish temperature. While declining to give specific reasons for refusing to issue the passport, it is currently stated, in the Division of Passport Control, that the Pan-American capitalists regard Buenos Aires as the hotbed of labor conspiracies against the welfare of the labor exploiters, and that the state department, whose functions is to deflect the international interests of the exploiters, could not be expected to facilitate a Pan-American Socialist and labor conference whose professed object is to develop plans for a concert of action on the part of Pan-American labor against the Pan-American capitalists.

It was felt, moreover, that the labor concert of action agreed to at Buenos Aires would surely extend to Mexico, where the United States capitalists are already having trouble with the rebellious Mexican workers.

Therefore, the state department decided not to countenance in any way the Socialist conference at Buenos Aires.

Socialists Lose Although Vote Doubles

Milwaukee.—Supported by big business, the Republican and Democratic parties, the so-called Good Government League and numerous other leagues and legions representing capitalism, and after making unprecedented expenditures for advertising, the nonpartisan candidates carried the school and judicial election Tuesday.

Although the Socialist vote was practically double that of the party's contenders in the last election for the various offices, it fell short of being sufficient to cope with that rallied by the combination in an election that established a record for the number of votes cast.

The biggest vote, 57,804, was piled up in the contest for the Circuit Court bench, vacated by the recent death of Judge W. J. Turner, between John C. Kleist, Socialist, and Gustave G. Gehrz, nonpartison. With 27,701 votes, Kleist was only 2,402 behind his nonpartison opponent.

Kleist's vote was 13,383 greater than the one he received two years ago when he was defeated by Circuit Judge L. W. Halsey, by 4,353 votes.

Joseph A. Padway, seeking the District Circuit judgeship, came nearer to election than any other Socialist candidate. He polled 2,042 votes less than his nonpartisan opponent, Judge George E. Page, who received 28,076.

Padway was the favorite in the betting during the last few days of the campaign.

Padway registered 26,036 votes while in the last election for district judge, in April, 1913, the Socialist contender, Oscar Rademaker, received only 11,177. Page received 9,944 more votes than six years ago.

Former Opponents Support Bolshevik Government

Manifestos Urging People to Rally to Support of Present Russian Government

There has just been received in the United States a new document from Russia, the importance of which everyone will recognize. It is the official position of the Menshevik Social Democratic Party of Russia, relative to the counter-revolutionary movement there and in the neighboring states, the present condition in Russia, the necessity of speedy recognition of the Lenine overnment, the sufferings of Russia due to the entente blockade, the inevitable outbreak of renewed and intensified terrorism which will follow further allied military intervention, and an appeal to the proletariat of the world to urge their governments to reach an agreement with Soviet Russia.

The official doclument is made public to the world through the Paris Humanite, the semi-official publicity agency of the Soviet Republic. The text of the manifesto as published in Humanits follows:

The Menshevik Social Democratic Party, in spite of the declarations by which it has hitherto seemed to renounce its policy of opposition to the regime of the Soviet government still confronts the latter with an attitude of hopeful neutrality. This, however, does not prevent the central committee of the party from issuing the following manifesto against the policy of the allied in Russia:

"In spite of the fact that the Lenine government (word missing) consents to take part in the Princes Island conference and offers to the allied governments a peace based upon the payment of loans, the renunciation of revolutionary propaganda and the satisfaction of the economic interests of the allies by means of concessions and even territorial concessions, the allied governments still continue to hold over the head of revolutionary Russia the Damocles sword of military intervention, still continue to nourish the hopes of the Russian counter-revolutionists, and still continue to strangle the country with famine.

"Confronted with the refusal of the counter-revolutionary governments of Koltchak, of Krasnov, and the Socialist Tschaikovski, traitor to the revolution of (word missing), Russia demands, if the entente does not wish to play absolutely the role of a declared enemy of the Russian revolution, that is establish diplomatic and economic relations with the Soviet government and accept the proposition to settle peacefully litigious questions.

"Nevertheless, the preparations for a military campaign against Russia continue. French and English military missions are seen everywhere. The (word missing) organize counter-revolutionary Russian forces, occasioning by their presence all sorts of inhuman measures of repression, shootings, hangings and tortures.

"At the same time, with the direct approbation of the Clemenceau government, the Polish Republic, with Paderewski at its head, monopolized from the day of its birth by Polish clericals and nationalists, is preparing to furnish considerable military forces to strangle revolutionary Russia. After having concluded an armistice with the Czechs and the Ukrainians, after having obtained, thanks to the presence of the allies in Germany, the authority to pass its troops through territories occupied by the Germans, reactionary Poland is preparing to realize its plans to annex Lithuanian, White Russian and Ukrainian territories as a reward for the role it played as 'gendarme for the counter-revolutionary bourgeois of Europe.'

"The arrival of Varsovie and Noulens and the principal leaders of the counter-revolutionary policy of the allies in Russia shows sufficiently what the forces are which inspire the Polish nationalists. By means of a similar reward the reactionary government of Finland expects to obtain the conquest of Petrograd and all the territory bordering upon the Gulf of Finland.

"If we add to all these appetites the Roumanians, who for a long time have been consumed with the, desire

Urge All Workers To Support Soviet Government

The joint proclamation of the Socialist Revolutionary Party of Russia and the executive committee of the members of the constituent assembly, declaring their opposition to the Soviet government at an end and pledging their loyal support to the Bolshevik authorities has been received in the United States through the Russian Information Bureau at Paris, France.

The proclamation denounces the allied governments for having overthrown popular government in Siberia and set up dictatorships, and declares that the time has come for working class Russia, regardless of party affiliations, to join with the forces of the Soviet government and drive the last remnants of czarism, imperialism and capitalism from all Russia—from Petrograd and Vladivostok and from Archangel to the Black sea.

The proclamation follows:

"To the soldiers of the popular army to the Siberian Cossacks, to the Czecho-Slovak troops:

"Soldiers—mobilized and volunteers—you entered the army to defend the sovereignty of the people and to save democratic Russia from German imperialism, which reduced it to slavery by the treaty of Brest-Litovsk. In the name of the pan-Russian constituent assembly, in the name of free Russia, independent and united, you have fought against Soviet authority.

Integrity of Territory is More Important to Capitalism Than Integrity of Democracy

The Berne Conference as Seen by Swiss Socialist

The following critical review of the Berne conference called by the International Socialist Burchu was translated from the Zurich Volksrecht. The author, a professor who signs his account with the initials K. D. S., was a guest at the conference, and is a well known member of the Swiss Socialist Party.

However, the Italian and Swiss Socialist parties, who had steadfastly kept aloof and disapproved the policies of the official Socialist parties in those countries where civil peace had been accepted, refused to attend the conference. The Italian party, is seen by the review printed below, arrived at its decision not to participate in the conference only after its delegates had thoroughly familiarized themselves with the entire situation.

When the author speaks of "delegates appointed by government, who were attaches to bourgeois missions and embassies and did not represent any Socialist party or organization." American Socialists will remember that people like Frank Bohn, who had no mandate, found admission to the conference, if not as regulatly seated delegates, then at least as honored guests, while the Wilson administration denied passports to the regular delegates of the Socialist Party of America until it was too late for them to attend.

The review reads as follows:

PARLEY TERMED COMEDY.

"Viewed at close range, the so-called Socialist conference at Berne cannot be described otherwise than as a comedy, yet tragic in that its expenses are borne by the betrayed and defrauded proletariat. Every one with keen sight knew from the start what a spirit this conference would possess, improvised, as it was, with extraordinary haste by discredited and compromised organizations, not during, but at the close of the World War, to pacify and chloroform the masses now threatening the capitalist and middle class powers.

"Anyone who succeeded in passing the scrutiny of Grumbach, the French Socialist who ascended to the position of doorkeeper of the new Socialist diplomats, could obtain a clearer picture of the mentality and designs of the organizers than from all the speeches and resolutions that were disseminated by the bourgeois news agencies. Having succeeded in passing the Cerberds at the door, our observations inevitably raised these questions in one's mind:

"Why were not the credentials of the so-called delegates considered by the entire body before the election of officers? Why and with what justification were such delegates seated against whom objections had been raised, and of whom it was proved that they had for well known reasons been appointed by governments as Socialists or Socialist representatives on high missions and embassies, and who did not represent genuine Socialist parties or any organization of the Internationale? Why did the chair take no notice of those who called attention to the danger threatening socialism by the seating of such Socialist mission attaches? Why was it left entirely to the arbitrary ruling of the chair to seat anyone satisfactory to him and obedient to the bourgeois governments?

HUYSMANS CRITICISED.

"In whole name does Comrade Huysmans speak and act? Was it not his duty to follow the example of his colleague and minister, Vandervelde, and resign his office as secretary of the Internationale after his party in Belgium had refused to attend? Or was the presence of such a comrade deemed necessary to the interests of the organization, though his bearing seemed to fit him better to appear in court?

"Why was a motion carried to send a message of sympathy to Vandervelde for the injury he had sustained while executing his purely bourgeois functions of a royal minister, whereas no word of condolence was dispatched to the widow and family of the gruesomely murdered Liebknecht?

"Why was no actual vote taken? Why did the conference limit itself to the questionable method of a show of hands in order to declare resolutions manufactured in secret caucus, presented by certain privileged delegates, unanimously adopted? Why was the most unparalleled arbitrary dictatorship on the part of the chair concerning votes, appointments of committees, resolutions, order of speakers, etc., permitted by those who exalt democracy only when it is a question of fighting pure socialism or the great Russian revolution?

DISCUSSION POSTPONED.

"Why was the discussion of the question, 'Dictatorship of the Proletariat or Democracy' postponed to the last day, so that it was not possible for all the delegates fully to express themselves on this fundamental question, which is of greater interest to the Internationale than all the debates of compromise and bourgeois demands?

"Why was no vote taken on this subject, by orders of Branting and Huysmans, so that Loriot's assertion that this was a maneuver and a case of railroading must be fully conceded? Was this question evaded to avoid the formation of a clear-cut Internationale, and was the main object in evading the most important question of the 'Directorship of the Proletariat' to give the appearance of unity?

"It reminds us very much of the much lauded Union Sacre (civil peace).

AMNESTY NOT URGED.

"Why was no voice raised to demand a general call for a general amnesty on the part of all governments for those furthering an anti-war agitation during the war and all deserters? Is it possible that those instrumental in arranging the conference had a special interest in hindering the return of just such dangerous elements?

"Why did Branting, Huysmans and Grumbach protest only against those who applauded the speeches of the radical delegates? Why did Grumbach, who always proved himself so polite to ladies and gentlemen of high society, refuse admission to the last session on Monday afternoon to guests whose presence was perhaps more justified at the conference than some of the so-called delegates—because it was suspected that they would applaud the speeches of those defending the Russian revolution?

"These are the notes that many a visitor of the conference should have made. During the long pauses of the reading of the translations of the speeches there was opportunity to consider many things that could bring despair to the exploited and betrayed proletariat. One saw in the eyes and bearing of the delegates and speakers unbounded ambition, the truly bourgeois overbearing, the empty soul and spirit of the climber. The whole atmosphere was stuffy with hypocrisy, phrases and demagogy.

ENTHUSIASM LACKING.

"The fresh, healthy revolutionary breath, the fanaticism and enthusiasm of socialism and true freedom were lacking. One felt the contrast between the few genuine revolutionists and the overwhelming majority of opportunity to prove their ability to occupy a minister's seat and to proclaim their alleged Socialist spirit to the world with empty phrases and words. How many of these delegates will at the first chance soil their hands with the blood of the proletariat and, with the help of civil guards and officers' battalions as pillars of society, choke every revolutionary movement in blood!

"No! No! The conference was no Socialist conference. The atmosphere was anything but a clear Socialist and revolutionary air. Embittered by what was done and what they observed, and indignant over the betrayal, many visitors left the conference hall of the People's House and felt the desire, despite their helplessness, to cry out to the four winds:

"'Workers of the world, unite! Unmask the lackeys of the bourgeoisie!'

"Bury the old Internationale! Your most dangerous enemies are these alleged leaders and representatives!

"PROF. K. D. S."

These observations are confirmed by a letter of Morgari to the Volkswacht. He writes:

"You have lately published a telegram from Milan, dated Feb. 7, which contained the news that the Italian Socialist Party agreed to recall their delegates, Morgari and Casalini, from the congress in Berne because they disagreed with the manner in which the congress was called and with its proceedings. This news is somewhat inaccurate, for the following reasons:

"NOT DELEGATED."

"The Socialist Party of Italy did not delegate us to this conference.

"We did not participate in the conference.

"No such message as referred to in the Milan dispatch reached us.

"For the same reasons that the Socialist Party of Switzerland decided to boycott the international conference the executive committee of our party sent us to Berne, for the purpose of attending all sessions of the old second Internationale called by the official representatives of the Internationale, of which our party is still a member. We were instructed to further the principles laid down at the Zimmerwald and Kienthal conferences at these sessions, and to be at a sussion of the International Bureau at Brussels or at a conference called by the bureau or its secretary.

"At the same time our instructions were not to participate, if it was a question of continuing the conference of the Entente Socialist of last September in London. That was done because we did not know in Rome what we would find in Berne. The press of our country published very conflicting news. The telegrams of invitation were also hazy. Some were signed by Henderson, some by Huysmans, and others by the secretary of the Socialist Party of France. The censorship prevented us from getting explanations.

"So we went to Berne. But, as soon as we recognized the true character of the conference, we informed the bureau of this conference that we were not to be considered as delegates. Comrade Casalini, who saw his name listed as a delegate, informed the bureau by letter that this must be a misunderstanding. We remained at the congress in our capacity as journalists to inform our press and our party of the proceedings and the intentions of our hostile brothers."

Ohio State Executive Committee Meets

Business for First Quarter of 1919 Transacted; State Secretary Makes Encouraging Report of Progress

The quarterly meeting of the State Executive Committee, Socialist Party of Ohio, took place in Galion, Saturday and Sunday, March 29 and 30. The committee had voted to meet in Galion in response to an invitation by Comrade Wm. M. Brown, who desired to offer the state organization a state headquarters free of expense.

First Session.

The meeting was called to order by State Chairman Tom Clifford, at 8 p. m., March 29, at Brownella cottage.

Tom Clifford was elected chairman for the session.

Present—Lotta Burke, Joseph W. Sharts, Tom Clifford, M. J. Beery, Scott Wilkins, J. P. Baker of the committee. Absent—Wm. Patterson. Others present—State Secretary P. T. Hertense Wagenknecht; State Secretary A. Wagenknecht; Elmer T Allison, editor of the Ohio Socialist; Charles Baker, state organizer, and Comrades H. W. Myers, Elizabeth Bertram, Wm. M. Brown and many members of Local Galion as visitors.

Report of the state secretary was declared in order.

Report of State Secretary.

Comrades: Since your committee last met, the progress of the organized Socialist movement in Ohio has been phenomenal. Our comrades in Europe, in voicing their demands and establishing workers' governments, have been instrumental in gaining for us also, most salutory results. With the rise of the proletariat throughout the old world, American labor, hearing the call to action, is at last awakening. More than this, our comrades of the Socialist Party, taking lessons from the experiences of our European comrades, are learning that the only hope for the workers lies in uncompromising tactics and in proletarian control.

The majority of locals in Ohio have increased their activity two-fold since the first of the year. Reports from locals prove that the methods used by the ruling class to suppress our activities but whet the appetites of the workers for a knowledge of socialism. As a result, larger meetings have been held in Ohio since the first of the year than have ever been held. Halls have been crowded to the doors. In many instances two and three halls have had to be rented to hold the crowds which surged to our meetings to hear our speakers. This is not only true of the Debs' meetings held in this state. Charles Baker had an unprecedented overflow meeting in Akron, and other comrades who have toured the state have been met by enthusiastic and unusually large audiences.

Many locals that were inactive during the last year of the war have now reorganized or paid their arrearages in dues. Threats of persecution are always more effective in small towns. Our smaller locals suffered severely and in many instances, the only way out was to give up all activities, even meeting in business session. However, a wonderful change has taken place since the signing of the armistice in the entire Ohio movement. Local after local is coming back to life and the mails now bring orders for supplies, literature, leaflets and "Ohio Socialist" subscriptions in such quantities, that extra assistance has been necessary to keep up with the State Office work.

Calls for organizers come in from all sections of the state. We have received calls from locals that desire to give employment of from one week to two weeks to field workers, so that they may build their membership. Some locals have shown a willingness to stand the expense of such organization work. All this goes to show that the field is ripe for our party and that it is our duty to give service as efficiently as lies in our power. We say without hesitation, that at present we are not at all equipped to meet the demands made upon the State Office for service. We have realized this for some months but have hesitated to make improvements because we desired to conduct the State Office upon as economical a basis as possible. There comes a time, however, when economy in such matters becomes a crime against the workers; when economy restricts us in the performance of our full duty to the locals and party members. That time has been reached. We have been virtually forced to revolutionize our entire working program, so far as the State Office is concerned. The methods and equipment used a few months ago are now entirely inadequate.

For a year and a half two persons have, by working until near midnight every day in the week, managed to keep the "Ohio Socialist" and the State Office in fair running order. All that these two persons could accomplish in such a full day's work was the daily completion of the daily routine. No new plans could be laid or executed. No new work of any kind could be thought of.

There came a time, about the first of this year, when the need for initiative became so great that it could no longer be thrust aside. In our consultations we came to the conclusion that the field of influence of the "Ohio Socialist" and of the Socialist Party of Ohio could be greatly extended if we could get the time for several circularizations and calls to action. We, therefore, employed extra assistance and we now let our financial report, our membership report and the increase in "Ohio Socialist" subscriptions speak for themselves.

Financial Report.

The total receipts for January were $2,500.34. Of this amount $1,211.20 was for "Ohio Socialist" subscriptions. The expenses for January were $1,601.51. The balance on hand on Feb. 1, was $3,029.41. This, we think, sets the record for the party in this state as to money on hand.

The total receipts for February were $2,585.09, with expenditures amounting to $2,299.89. Balance on hand March 1, $3,314.61.

Ohio Socialist.

That our state paper is fast becoming one of the best liked papers in the United States is amply proven by the growth in its circulation during the past three and four months. From a total of 150 new subscribers each week our circulation increased until at the beginning of March we placed more than 500 new names upon our mailing list weekly, and for several weeks the number ran as high as 650 and 880. And the flood of subscriptions has not ceased. We firmly believe that this is only the beginning of our success in this field.

During the latter part of February we circularize the entire mailing list of 6,000 subscribers, asking every subscriber to assist in making the Ohio Socialist a semi-weekly by increasing our subscription list to 20,000. This circularization cost the State Office about $115. To induce locals to use our paper for free distribution we have reduced the bundle price to 50 cents a hundred copies. We believe that the loss incurred in bundle sales at this price will be offset by an increase in subscriptions.

Now that the paper is turning a profit into our treasury every month, we feel that every possible method should be used to increase its circulation. Promotion is as necessary in the business of making Socialists as in the business of making profits. And we intend to devise methods whereby we will bring our paper to the notice of even more Socialists and others who need the kind of brain food we issue.

"Make the Ohio Socialist a daily," is the message that comes to us from readers in many states. The sentiment against the capitalist press has crystalized lately and we feel safe in predicting that the time is not far distant when we will have to publish our paper twice a week and when we will be in a position to do so profitably. For the information of your committee we here publish a profit and loss statement of income and expense of the Ohio Socialist:

1918.	Rects.	Expenses.	Loss.
July	$ 73.28	$316.96	$243.65
August	120.27	299.57	179.30
September .	276.30	396.64	120.34
			Profit.
October	282.95	273.13	10.82
November ..	395.78	299.96	96.82
December ..	740.86	533.87	206.99
1919.
January ...	1,211.20	528.56	672.64
February ..	1,181.72	785.09	396.63

Since the paper has been published weekly it has cleared $840.61 above expenses, exclusive of wages. As Comrade E. T. Allison divided his time between the paper and other State Office work, we can safely say that the paper has turned into the party treasury a net profit. The profit for the month of February would have been much larger had we not decided it good policy to own our own mailing list, and we, therefore, expended $110.64 for the metal it contained.

Membership.

Our membership is growing fast. Initiations number more than 500 a month. Dues stamp sales for the past three months follow:

	Eng. Locals.	Memb. at Lge.	For. Br.	Initiations.
Dec., 1918..	3480	246	2578	345
Jan., 1919..	5277	163	3212	518
Feb., 1919..	4145	67	2779	581

The total dues stamp sales for December, 1918, were 6,549; January, 1919, 9,170; February, 7,572. This is an average membership for these three months of 7,764. According to the report of the National Office, Ohio stands third in number of party members. However, it is first place we should strive for. And in order that we might be in a position to assist locals in keeping their membership in good standing by supplying them with circular letters and other needs, we have purchased a multigraph at a cost of $257.00. With this machine we can print, with typewriter type, thousands of letters upon short notice, and we hope that we may soon be in a position to offer locals service in multigraph work, giving our weaker locals this service without charge.

Organizatin and Propaganda.

First as to literature. Using the Ohio Socialist as an advertising medium, we have been able to sell thousands of pamphlets and books within the last few months. Many times we were completely out of pamphlets called for, having orders for hundreds on hand, awaiting arrival of shipment. We intend to enlarge our literature sales and organize a literature department from which can be purchased any Socialist pamphlet or book in print.

We have arranged extended tours for Comrades Charles Baker, Thurber Lewis and Lilith Martin. Comrade Holman has been given speaking engagements whenever calls for his services have been made.

The Debs' tours have been very successful. Locals that have engaged him have built a treasury with which they will now be able to do much to build their membership. Comrade Debs has given his services in the cause to locals in northern Ohio without stint, many evenings addressing two or three meetings. This has nearly caused a physical breakdown, and we had to notify locals to cease overworking Comrade Debs; that his 63 years would not stand such strenuous campaignning. The good effect of Debs' meetings in northern Ohio upon our Ohio membership can not be overestimated. Courage, determination, loyalty and comradeship were direct results, and wherever he spoke the membership doubled its activity in the cause.

Comrade Charles Baker began his organization trip on January 16. He is now dated up to the middle of May. His tour to date has been most profitable to the state organization from many points of view. The new members he secured, the many subscribers to the Ohio Socialist which he solicited, the large collections taken at his meetings and the courage instilled into comrades of locals which had long been inactive—all these points contribute to the success of his field work. His first month's tour resulted in a profit to the state organization of $102.82. His second month's tour resulted in a deficit of $13.75. This deficit was caused by dating Comrade Baker two successive days in unorganized and disorganized territory, in the face of which the small deficit is a greater accomplishment than the large surplus. Many weak locals were revived by him and many were reorganized.

Comrade Thurber Lewis did organization work for the State Office for two weeks in February. The financial loss resultant amounted to about $40. The gain consisted of five locals reorganized, all of which are now more active than they ever were. We have given him another routing which gives him employment up to April 13. He is well liked wherever he goes, and is an untiring hustler.

Lilith Martin will enter the state for a tour on April 1. After a preliminary tour of the state we intend to assign organization duties to her. Comrade Martin agrees to this, and is highly interested in building the membership. In this work she has had experience and we may expect her services to redound to the success of our organization.

Too little time has been given to evolving plans which would strengthen our party organization. After all, there is no secret formula by which a powerful organization can be effected. The main attribute necessary to organize is to be capable of working hard along well-outlined plans and carrying these plans to a successful conclusion. It should be our aim to place in the field and ever increasing army of organizers, until we have one for every congressional district in the state, supported in part by the State Office and in part by the locals in the congressional districts. Our three or four organizers at present employed should be increased to five or six times that number. This can be gradually accomplished and toward this end we suggest to your committee that you consent to a division of the state into four districts, each to contain an equal number of active locals and members, and that an organizer be placed in each of these districts. These organizers can, by becoming acquainted with the villages, cities and country communities in the districts, do more effective organization work, and in co-operation with the Socialists in the districts, should be able to carry on a more thorough campaign of organization than is now possible by giving every organizer a state-wide tour.

To help pay the expenses, the probable deficit of such work, we could ask the locals in each of the four districts to contribute, from time to time, to the upkeep of the field work. If locals once see the concrete results of constant employment of an organizer, a comrade well versed in the details of organization and always ready to help in any emergency, then we are sure they would rally to his support.

The duties of these district organizers would be many and do not need mention here. For this work Comrade Charles Baker, Thurber Lewis, Lilith Martin probably M. A. Toohey and others are available.

Conclusion.

In closing we desire to call to the attention of the committee the "swing to the left" which the Socialist Party in this country seems to be taking. Numerous locals in this state have passed resolutions against sending delegates to the Berne conference, claiming that this conference was called and controlled by social patriots who had nothing in common with true socialism. An emergency national convention is also called for, the purpose of which is to be to establish more firmly the uncompromising position of the Socialist Party and to arrive at a more uniform declaration of principles for the party. In past years emphasis has, in most of our campaigns, been placed upon so-called immediate demands, and our revolutionary aims have been allowed to rest in the background. There is a general call for change of methods, for the establishment of party owned papers, educational institutions, literature and other activities. Our propaganda, in many instances, has been in the control of private individuals and companies, which in crisis, turned traitors to the party.

This new manifestation, or rather, old manifestation now revived and given new life by the recent experiences in Russia and Germany, must be met and dealt with by your committee. The time will come when the state office will be called upon to give information and advice in this controversy about tactics, and we desire to be in a position to give such advice officially. We append the manifesto and program of the left wing Socialists of New York. Similar left wing movements have been organized in Chicago, Boston, Portland and other large cities. What shall be the official attitude of the party in this state?

Other questions to come before the committee for consideration will be presented through correspondence had, and among these is the matter of moving state headquarters to Galion. In the regular order of business we will request the floor for Comrade Wm. M. Brown so that he may tell us of his plans.

We desire to assure the committee that the Socialist work in the state is getting on splendidly. We still have a goodly number of locals to revive, locals which the war put to sleep. But this work will be done as soon as we can get to it—is in fact being done every day by our organizers in the field. The progress made since the first of the year, since the end of the war, has heartened us, renewed our energy. The state membership was never more earnestly engaged in party duties than now, and what is more, never before approached questions of local and international importance with such intelligence as it is doing today. The war experiences have taught us all numerable things about capitalism and its methods and as a consequence we have learned the better how to use our knowledge of socialism for the final victory. Let us speed the day.

Open Forum for Discussion of Party Problems

The many important matters concerning policies, tactics and other internal affairs of the party, which are engrossing the attention of members at the present time, have induced us to open the columns of the Ohio Socialist to a discussion of them through the Open Forum. We trust that our comrades will use this column for such discussions of strictly party affairs. Make your articles short and to the point. Use light instead of heat to make your point clear and leave out personalities.

Upon What Foundation?

By JENNIE A. McGEHE State Secretary of Colorado.

"I pierce through the upper stratum of occasional and shifting circumstances to bottom and base on the rock below."—James Finton Lalor.

The surging torrents of the world' affairs have lately washed away the soil and turf of social systems and bared the rugged rocks which we call fundamentals.

Sixty years ago Karl Marx said that the very hour in which the workers gained control of society the political state as then known would perish and Engles remarked that the machinery of the political state would be thrown on the junk pile because a government of and for the workers could not function through it.

The revolution in Russia demonstrates the truth of this. The revolution in Hungary is another illustration of it. The Sinn Fein in Ireland recognize it by refusing to enter the English parliament.

The "rock below" is this fact: The political machinery of capitalism, of the capitalistic state, cannot under any circumstances whatsoever, function as the governmental machinery of the working class. It cannot ever favor the worker. It cannot effectively legislate in his interest, because if one of its branches should favor him, another branch would almost automatically cut him off from that favor. When we ask him to take part in it, when he say to him that he could thereby benefit himself, we but blind and betray him.

What attitude, then, should the Socialist Party here in America adopt toward the machinery of capitalistic government, in the light of present events? Should it not be one of "no compromise?" And the words "no compromise" are beginning to mean much more, too, than has been generally conveyed by that term. The idea generally expressed by the term is that there shall be no union or alliance with any other party or movement But the hour has come to go further! We must dig away the obscuring soil and lay our foundation on the solid rock. We should refuse to take any part in the capitalist government. Its machinery can no more serve our purpose than the housewife could do a washing on a threshing machine. Why spend the energy of the working class organization of a force to send a man or set of men to congress to pass some law, after years of effort, which a supreme court appointed by the ruling class to do the bidding of the ruling class, can set aside in an hour, when the same energy spent in organizing the workers into a congress of their own would succeed in building a machine, a power, that could dictate to the congress at Washington what laws to pass, and backed by their economic power on the job they could defy the supreme court and all the machinery of capitalistic government.

Instead of urging workers to go to the polls to try to elect workers to that machine which in any event the workers cannot manipulate, and which because of its very nature, cannot function in their interest, the leaders of radical thought should teach them to shun it as they would a pestilence.

The workers have already, to a great measure, lost confidence in Congress, and in the efficiency of the ballot, and have lost hope of ever being able to get anything thru the act of Congress. Our agitation would strengthen that feeling of distrust. And since the working class cannot gain its freedom thru this medium why not teach it to distrust and to refuse to participate. Since the struggle between the classes must come, why not precipitate it? What can be gained by covering up the truth from the masses? If the workers would pursue this course gradually the Congress of the masses would lose its power gradually, and rapidly at last, it would become more and more of a figure head, until finally in some crisis it would disappear entirely. This process can be seen going on now in Germany where the Ebert Government daily grows more and more of a figurehead as the Soviets one by one are formed in the industries. We are beginning to see the same tendancy in England, as the people stay away from the polls and the big unions dictate to the government. The mile stones along this new way are as plain as day, the other nations are traveling fearlessly down the newly made road. Why do we lag eternally behind—and worship at the shrine of the old and the discredited?

There are those in the Socialist ranks who lay stress on "the opportunity for propaganda" that taking part in capitalist elections gives us. But the very fact that we refuse to take part would give us ten thousand times more opportunity for propaganda. Being then, what is in America called "non-political" we could go to the workers in their Unions, and all their organizations, in every city and village and hamlet, to the A. F. of L. and to the I. W. W. and urge them to organize a government within a government, to organize what would virtually be a SOVIET whether it was called that or not, to organize a governmental machine of their own that would have power. POWER, that is what the workers need, what they are looking for, what they must and will have! The rank and file in organized labor are ready for it, the great body of farmers who rent, American peasants, are ready for it—why keep up this farce? Why take part in a worse than worthless parliamentary machine? It is only an instrument for administering an opiate to the working class and the great mass of our people in general.

The present parliamentary machine, the Congress and the courts and all their ramifications and departments, is the machinery for ruling the masses in the interests of the classes. It was organized by the rulers for the rulers. Why not organize a Labor Congress that will be a Labor Congress? Let it sit at the same time as the master's congress—and issue commands in the name of the people—backed by the power of the people in the mill and mine and factory, on the railroad and in the field.

This Congress could preserve the lives of the wrokers. It could rescue them from the vile clutches of the organized assassins of the masters. Dare the Congress at Washington and in the states to refuse to obey our command? The folded arms of the workers cannot be resisted! Do the workers of the nation lack solidarity? This will teach them solidarity.

But, some will contend, this thing is impractical. Is, then, a plan that never benefits us—a plan that never can benefit us, a plan that makes slaves and beggars of us, so practicable? Should we go on for years and years with our leaders being jailed, our organizers hung or mobbed, our literature destroyed by the Postal Department of a Robber class, our officers looted, our defenses rendered useless by capitalistic courts, and still court that vampire class by pretended respect for their parliamentary machinery, and participation in it, thus, in reality, making ourselves particeps criminus?

Suppose that now we had a machine such as I have described. Would we need to go crawling on our knees to Washington once more—begging like slaves for the life and liberty of an innocent brother, Tom Mooney? When we are in a position to dictate to their legislature we will also be in a position to dictate to their courts. It would not then be, "please gentlemen, free Tom Mooney because he is innocent." Rather would it be, "Our brother, Tom Mooney, we have found to be innocent of the crime with which you charged against him. FREE HIM OR—!"

The rank and file of organized labor is growing very radical. It is ready for a change. It is, indeed, seeking a change. But it does not seek the Socialist Party of America. Why? Simply because so long as the party adheres to its present policies and tactice it does not present anything that constitutes a fundamental change. The worker senses that. He feels it instinctively whether he voices it or not. So long as the party seeks to gain a place in the capitalistic government, just that long it is necessarily a part of that governmetn. Can we not, then, master up courage sufficient to break with capitalism? Let those who have ambitions to go to Congress at Washington, get into one of the old parties to go thede, for after all, a capitalist congress is a capitalist congress, just as a threshing machine is a threshing machine. It connot under any circumstances effectively disguise itself as a washing machine.

Let the party learn the lesson that Europe teaches. Let us apply our strength thru a medium that will transmit that strength. Let us consecrate ourselves anew and give up the vain dream of "capturing" something that isn't worth capturing and that we could not use to any advantage after we had "captured" it. We shall build a machine of our own. One that can function in an industrial democracy. And as did our fathers of old for their Declaration of Independance, so let us for this new living expression of our hopes and ideals, pledge our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor.

Side Lights on Toledo Free Speech Fight

Memorial Hall at Toledo was again closed to socialists after having been rented Sunday, March 30. Closed by orders of Mayor Schreiber because he himself became determined to select the speakers for Toledo, and among those barred from the Mayors' list is Eugene V. Debs—our own Gene. Barred by the Mayor although the entire population demanded a Debs meeting and ten thousand people turned out in the slush and snow of Sunday to prove it.

Lying ill at Akron, unable to fill the engagement, Gene knew nothing of the rumpus in Toledo where the socialists were staging the grandest act this Golden Rule and Rule of Gold Ctiy ever witnessed.

State organizer Baker had been sent to Toledo to fill the Debs engagement. The crowd gathered early and learning that the hall was closed gathered across the street in Court House Park.

Orders had been issued by Mayor Schreiber to allow no speaking and there were 200 police present to enforce the order.

At 2:30 P. M. Secretary Michael Toohey opened the meeting from McKinley's Monument and was immediately nabbed by the police. The crowd closed in. The police lost Mike who once more mounted the Monument steps and once more was embraced by two of "Toledo's finest" and escorted amid cheers to one of the city's own limousines (patrol wagons) and entertained until seven more brave and conjenial companions were singularly marched by uniformed liverymen to the yawning gasoline wagons and hence to the new temporary headquarters of the Socialist Party—The City's Bastile.

There was a goodly sprinkling of soldier boys among the ten thousand who had gathered, and one, an upright, clean, intelligent young man, Frank Serafin stepped to the monument and began to speak: Ladies and gehtlemen, Comrades all—When he said "Comrades," the police looked at one another. The soldier continued: I have just returned from across the seas where I went to fight for Democracy. The police looked fierce now and held a little confab—they seemed to think the word Democracy their cue to arrest anyone, but they hesitated as the voice of the boy in khaki rang out: and I will continue to fight for Democracy at home. The police here asked Serafin to stop, but again he turned to the multitude and said: I went over the top. Over again for you said a big burly and one more seat in limousine No. 2 was occupied.

The crowd stood awed and amazed as the blue coats brabbed and roughly hustled this khaki clad boy through the cordou of police. They could not understand. Some of them thought the socialists were being arrested for insulting the Soldiers as the Mayor and the newspapers claimed. And here they were roughly hustling a soldier boy off to jail, a soldier too who had bravely faced death for freedom, and now he could not even speak to them. Shouts of protest went up on all sides. The crowd was getting ugly. The police were getting excited and brutal. Women cried in sympathy for the boy in khaki. Quiet for just a moment reigned; then from a distance came a voice: Ladies and gentlemen, (This was as far as many of the speakers got as they were kanged off the monument as soon as the first word was spoken. But this voice did not come from the monument) Keep cool, fill the jail. The Declaration of Independance gives you the right of Free Speech. Your forefathers died for this right. Every head turned toward the sound of that voice and there a half a block away standing all alone ankle deep in the snow and slush stood the speaker where the overfed police must run to get him. Two police broke thru the crowd, accompanied by a brown clad motor cop. The speaker got in about three minutes, then got in the Black Mariar

This speaker was the writer of this article and right here—as I did there—I want to enter a protest against the Motor Cop whose gun was drawn on me as he approached running and excited.

We kept our heads to a man—they—many of them lost theirs. These same caps who on their knees suppliantly beseeched us councilmen to vote them another loaf of bread for their families—who complain to us that they are afraid to speak right out for their rights—use their billies and guns (we don't have clubs in Toledo) when we ask that right.

I was convict No. 57, one of the many varieties yet to come on a tour of inspection of one of the filthiest jail holes in the entire U. S. A jail

A CHALLENGE TO THE AMERICAN WORKERS

Debs' First Day In Prison

By DAVID KARSHNER.

Moundsville, W. Va., April 14.—Eugene Victor Debs will sleep tonight, not in a cage like a wild beast, as he slept last night, his first night in the West Virginia State Prison, but in a little room in the hospital of the prison, for "Our Gene" has been appointed a hospital attendant, and he has a separate room to himself, with a white iron bed, newly clothed, a table and a chair.

Shortly after 11 o'clock this morning Debs was taken from his cell, No. 51, in the second tier of the south wing, to the prison baths. He was examined by Dr. O. P. Wilson, the prison physician, and then donned prison underclothing and the prison uniform. But when I saw Debs late this afternoon the prison suit was not unbecoming to him. It was well fitting and contained the tiniest check. It is the kind of a suit that anybody might purchase at a cheap clothing store.

Warden Joseph Z. Terrill explained that he had at first thought of placing Debs in the prison library because of his knowledge of books and literature, but he did not do this because he thought that he might be too much subjected to curiosity. As hospital attendant Debs will have a room entirely to himself. The room is of a good size, larger than most rooms of the Bronx apartments. It is on the ground floor. There are two ample windows one facing the south, and one the east. There are no bars at his windows. The door will be open at all times, and Debs has full privilege to come and go as he pleases. He has full and complete access to the prison yard and the lawns.

When Engdahl, Wagenknecht and myself went to the prison today we were led by Warden Terrill through the turntable. He took us through long winding corridors to the hospital section. As we passed the prison druggist was making little pellets. He was a convict "in" for murder. He looked at us as we passed with a furtive look, then went on filling the capsules.

We walked up one flight of stairs. The warden opened the door of a freshly painted room, and there was "Our Gene" quietly sitting in a low rocking chair, smoking his pipe and reading a book. At first he did not look up.

"Mr. Debs, here are your friends back again to see you," said the warden. Gene put his book aside on the bed and disturbed the big gray cat that was sleeping by his side.

Greetings were over and the warden then told Debs that he had free access to the prison library. "We have a rule here, Mr. Debs, that prisoners must be checked up on the books they take from the library, but we will waive that rule for you. I know you appreciate the value of good books."

"Indeed I do," said Debs, thanking the warden.

We talked a few minutes and Debs told us that he slept "like a log last night," and now felt "as chipper as a young goat on a tin roof."

He laughed good naturedly as he looked at his prison garb and asked us how we liked his new suit. Debs had come to the penitentiary in a new blue serge. He was still wearing the vest of it. He wore his own collar and tie.

"I have met many fine men in here," said Gene to us. "In the cell right next to mine last night there was a man whom I met at McKees Rocks, Pa., many years ago. He was telling me his story." We walked down the hall with Debs, and Gene assured us that he had had three good meals, and "that everything was all right," his usual expression in cases of extreme adversity. The warden made it plain to us that he did not wish our visit to be of length. We tarried a moment while Debs said that he had received a number of telegrams from his comrades in all parts of the country.

Just before we entered the prison we met three messenger boys, and all of them owned up they had just delivered messages for Debs. The warden insisted that Engdahl, Wagenknecht and myself take dinner with him. We did so. The warden was interested to learn something of Debs' history.

Warden Terrill told us that twenty-five years ago he was a telegraph operator on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad when Debs was organizing the railroad men in the American Railway Union. "I remember when Debs went to prison at that time," he said. The warden admitted that he had never seen Debs, but added, "he has a wonderful mind, and a fine brain."

As we talked with the keeper of the great liberator in his private apartments on the top floor of the prison overlooking the Ohio valley and the river that flows at its feet Terrill's little girl romped and played on the floor. The name of Debs was mentioned frequently and finally the little brown-eyed baby looked up in her father's eyes and asked: "Daddy, who is Debs?" The prison warden blushed. "Ask these gentlemen here, my dear, they seem to know better than I." In turn the three visiting men explained to the little girl who Gene Debs is and told her that some day she could say she had lived in the same house with him.

"I don't know what you gentlemen may think," said the warden, at one paint, "but I want you all to know that I have had no instructions from any one, none from the governer, nor from Washington, to show Mr. Debs any special favors or consideration. What I am doing is purely my own affairs."

The warden seemed to want to impress us with that view of the matter. We had all hazarded the guess that in the case of Debs unusual consideration would be policy, and that this consideration very likely came from high authority. The warden denies it.

While we were all talking in Debs' room the warden spoke about Gene's new job as hospital attendant.

"I am going to do whatever you think is best," said Debs. "I want to earn my board here at any rate," he added, and the tall, classic frame of the great Socialist and humanist bent almost double with silvery laughter.

The book that Debs had been reading was John Reed's "Ten Days That Shook the World." I had presented Debs with my own copy of that book.

Before we left, the warden permitted us to leave with Debs a box of cigars, a cake of chocolate, and a bag of apples and oranges. In the corridor we passed several convicts painting the banisters. Debs patted each on the back. It was a spontaneous movement of his. He could not refrain. The warden smiled.

In spite of this kindness, in spite of this manifestation of official consideration for Our Gene, let our Socialists not relax one iota in their efforts to get Debs out of prison and all of the men and women out of prison who were convicted under the most atrocious law that ever disgraced this republic. The main point to keep in mind is that Debs is denied his liberty. He is a prisoner behind bars. He cannot come out of jail for ten years unless the organized power of the working class forces the capitalist class to swing the lever of that automatic turntable through which Debs passed Sunday night.

Debs knows this as much as any. It is liberty that Debs wants, and in getting liberty for himself he demands it for every breathing being. I am reminded of Debs' classic statement, printed and stated so many hundreds of times. Shall we write it again: "While there is a lower class I am in it. While there is a criminal class I am of it. While there is a soul in prison I am not

Federal Authorities Grab Debs And Hurry Him To Prison

Usual Formalities Not Observed To Prevent Final Speech In Cleveland

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

Moundsville, W. Va., Aprli 13.—'Gene Debs is in prison! He is caged in a steel cell, with a door of heavy metal bars.

It is Cell No. 51, in the south wing of the West Virginia state penitentiary here at Moundsville.

This thing happened tonight, at 10 o'clock, on the night of Palm Sunday, with Easter one week distant, and as an admirer of Debs said on his departure from Terre Haute, Ind., his home, last Saturday, "We are ready for another crucifixion."

"It will never happen. They will never do it. They won't put Debs in prison."

This is what the millions over the land have said for lo these many months since his indictment, and even since his conviction and sentence. But tonight we said "Good night" to him through the bars that constitute the door of his dark door in this human hive they call tiers of cells.

Debs tonight took his place—a convict—among a thousand other convicts, criminals of all grades, and shades and brands, and the words that he uttered in the court room at Cleveland, Ohio, during his trial, came back to us, who who were with him:

"As long as there is a criminal class I am of it, as long as there is a slave class I am for it, as long as there is a soul in prison I am not free."

Only a few moments before, as they first took him away from us, and conducted him through the turntable cage door, the latest prison ingenuity to bar the "inside" from the "outside," Arthur Baur, 'Gene's brother-in-law, a brother of Mrs. Debs, who had come with 'Gene all the way from Terre Haute, uttered the anguish of an outraged working class when he exclaimed:

"My God, how can they do it, why do they do it?"

Yet Debs' last message to the workers of the nation perhaps best answers why they did it. This message was:

"Tell my comrades that I entered the prison doors a flaming revolutionist, my head erect, my spirit untamed and my soul unconquerable."

It was on the trip here, at East Liverpool, O., that he remarked that today, was April 13, the anniversary of the Battle of Lexington, the beginning of the American Revolutionary War in 1776; that it is also the anniversary of the Ludlow Massacre during the great Colorado coal strike.

For half a century the world has known of 'Gene Debs, of Terre Haute, Ind. Now, if this world would reach him through the mails it must address him: 'Gene Debs, 1818 Jefferson Ave., Moundsville, W. Va., which is the address of the penitentiary of this state.

Workers of many nations have already protested the conviction of this man, who was the center of the little group that arrived on this Palm Sunday night at this bastile, that promises to take a prominent place in American working class history. There was Debs, his brother-in-law, Alfred Wagenknecht, director of organization and propaganda, National Office of the Socialist Party; David Karsner of the Call, the New York Socialist daily; the writer, and of course, United States Marshal Charles W. Lapp and U. S. Deputy Marshall Thomas E. Welch, in charge of Debs.

There are no high walls around this prison, but guards sit in turrets at intervals with loaded rifles in their hands ready to frustrate with a deadly bullet any attempt on the part of an inmate to win the open. The grass grows fresh and green and free upon the wide lawn, but the heavy gratings are upon every window.

"Don't think that I hold anything against you, for your part in bringing me here," Debs was explaining to the United States marshal as he ascended the steps and entered the place to which a federal judge has sentenced "Our 'Gene" to spend the next ten years of his life because he

DEBS ON WAY TO PRISON.

Ruling Class Throws Down Gage Of Battle By Imprisoning Debs

In putting Eugene V. Debs behind prison bars the capitalist class of the United States has thrown down the gage of battle to the workers. They have said, as clearly as if the words themselves had been uttered: The revolt of the workers elsewhere may be overturning thrones and hurling the exploiters of the workers from control of industry and power, but we are certain that you are so meek and tame and thoroughly hypnotized that even this outrageous act will not stir you.

The ruling class of this country knows that Eugene V. Debs is loved by the workers as no other man in the working class movement is loved. It knows that he has won the loyalty and devotion of hundreds of thousands of men and women who have heard him raise his matchless voice for the freedom of the workers. It knows that no act that it could commit would arouse such bitter resentment and opposition as sending Eugene V. Debs to prison.

During the weeks since the supreme court rendered its cowardly decision upholding the conviction of Debs without daring to affirm the constitutionality of the Espionage Law, workers by the tens of thousands have met in protest meetings against the imprisonment of Debs in all parts of the country. These protest meetings brought out greater numbers of the working class than have ever gathered for similar demonstrations. The workers showed in an unmistakable fashion that the threat against Debs touched them to the quick.

The war is over; the patched up peace treaty is about ready for ratification. Other countries, which have not posed as the highly developed democracies, are freeing the men and women incarcerated because of their opposition to the war. But in the United States the most loved leader of the workers is hurried to prison with a brutal callousness to the opinions of the workers that has never before been equalled.

Debs would be the last man to make an appeal because of what might happen to him because of the action of the ruling class. Those who know him, however, fear that his imprisonment will not leave him much of life. He is 63; only a year ago he was compelled to remain in a sanitarium for many months because of the breakdown of his health; recently he has been ill a number of times.

It will be easy to imagine the effect of the brutality of the prison regime upon a man of the temperament of Eugene V. Debs. Each day there are ugly acts committed in those dark and noisome places in which many are thrown because of their opinions by our beneficient democracy, which are outrages to the soul of every person who has not become callous through seeing these cruelties constantly repeated. In this atmosphere Debs, who has nothing but love in his heart for even his lowliest brother, is to live for ten years!

Will the workers of this country permit this thing to be?

Are they in fact so tame and meek and thoroughly hypnotized by the capitalists that this crime may be committed against them without rousing them to action?

The capitalists have issued their challenge. They have thrown down the gage of battle. They are leering sneeringly into the faces of the workers, sure of their power, sure that they can send Debs to prison—and possibly to death—without being hurled from their seats of power.

Debs is in prison by order of the capitalist class, but it is the workers who have the power to open the prison doors.

The workers do not need to resort to violence; they do not need to cause bloodshed.

Let millions of workers make the demand that the prison doors be opened, let millions voice their denunciation and protest at the dastardly crime committed against them, let the capitalist class feel that this act of theirs has caused the germination of that power which is sweeping the ruling classes of Europe aside like so much debris which incumbers the road to a better world, and the prison doors will open, and not only Debs, but all other champions of the working class will go free. The ruling class itself will open the prison doors to stem the rising tide.

The gage of battle is at our feet.

Shall we take it up?

We must take it up. We must answer the ruling class with great demonstrations of protest; we must gather by the tens of thousands in every city and town; we must arrange great demonstrations; we must agitate and propagate until the whole working class rises up and demands "freedom for Debs" and folds its arms and stops the machinery of capitalism until the prison doors open.

Lawrence Workers Stand Firm for Victory

Lawrence, Mass.—After eight weeks of determined struggle the mill workers here are continuing with unbroken ranks the strike to prevent a reduction of their wages because of the reduction of their hours from 54 to 48 per week

The present situation is set forth in the following bulletin issued by the strike committee as "Victory Bulletin No. 6:"

THE SITUATION TODAY.

The eighth week of our struggle is drawing to a close. Our spirit is unbroken. We stand together more firmly and enthusiastically than ever. Nothing can daunt us!

The hope of victory grows brighter as we prove our solidarity, courage and power to the masters. They can now see plainly that we meant what we said at the beginning of the strike—that we would stay out a year rather than give up 48-54!

Spring orders are coming to the mills. Soon they must begin work. They cannot operate without us.

Meanwhile more workers are coming out all the time. Last week the loomfixers of the American Woolen Co. came out. There will be more to follow.

Money for our struggle continues to arrive in increasing amounts. This week the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America have sent thousands of dollars. Our Lawrence fellow workers who have been speaking before amalgamated locals in New York report the greatest interest in our battle among the New York comrades. Likewise, the Socialists of the whole country continue to send support.

OUR ONE BIG UNION.

About eight thousand workers have already paid initiation fees into the union treasury.

Ten thousand union books containing our preamble are in the hands of the printer. Have you got your name down so that you may get one as soon as they arrive? We expect to have to order more immediately.

Martens Demands Russia Property

Serving notice on the former Russian Ambassador to the United States, Boris Bakhmetieff, and other agents of the Czarist regime to immediately abandon any pretense to authority in this country, L. C. Martens, representative of the Russian Soviet government, demanded that the Russian Embassy in Washington be delivered to his charge.

The demands, which will be followed by legal proceedings should the Czarists refuse to yield, also call for the surrender of all property in the United States belonging to the Russian government.

Legal steps will be taken to put a stop to the indiscriminate squandering of Russian property by discredited former Russian agents.

It was declared yesterday that Martens is prepared to prove the Russian government is being robbed methodically by unscrupulous ex-officials. A formal statement detailing specifically the bare-faced fraud will be issued immediately.

Fifteen Thousand Cleveland Workers in Great Demonstration for Debs

When word was received at Socialist headquarters in Cleveland on Saturday afternoon that Eugene V. Debs would arrive Sunday to surrender himself to the federal authorities, the entire party machinery was set in motion to arrange a great demonstration on the eve of his departure.

Comrade Carl Hacker, who was in charge in the absence of C. E. Ruthenberg on speaking tour, took charge of the arrangements. A circular was drafted and rushed to the printer, an automobile was requisitioned, and all Saturday night the presses were kept running turning out the circulars, which were rushed by automobile to the homes of the comrades in charge of the work of distribution in various parts of the city. By 8 o'clock Sunday morning 30,000 circulars announcing a mass meeting on Market Square had been destributed from house to house, to the Saturday night theater crowds and wherever people gathered.

The results were beyond all expectations. Many great audiences have gathered at Market Square during the period that the Socialists have been using that place for their mass meetings, but the crowd Sunday afternoon, gathered as the result of twenty-four hours' work, was the largest by all odds that has ever appeared upon the square.

Beginning as early as 1 o'clock, every street car which reached the junction of Lorain and W. 25th St. brought its load of workers eager to show their loyalty to Debs and to demand his freedom. When the meeting was opened, at 2:30, the square was one packed mass of humanity.

Tom Clifford presided at the meeting. Addresses were made by M. A. Toohey of Toledo, David R. Williams of North Congregational church, and James Corrigan. All the speakers were loudly cheered. The more radical their protest and demands the greater was the storm of applause and approval from the great audience.

The crowd was body and soul with Debs and ready for anything in order to rescue him from the clutches of those who were depriving him of his freedom. At the end of the speeches the crowd was called upon to form in line and march to the federal building and the Public Square. Headed by a band playing the Marsellaise the procession started and soon stretched out over almost the entire distance of two miles from Market Square to the Public Square. While the head of procession was leaving the eastern end of the high level bridge the rear guard was at Franklin Ave., on W. 25th St. A group of mounted policemen headed the procession and cleared the way.

The announcement that the crowd would march to the federal building caused the authorities to become frightened, expecting that the [illegible] which Debs had passed only a few hours before to prison. The doors of the building were locked and policemen, mounted and on foot, guarded every entrance when the procession arrived. The crowd, however, contented itself with marching by with shouts for "freedom for Debs," "Hurrah for the General Strike" and "Down with capitalism and its tools" and then going to the Public Square for a continuance of the meeting.

Soon the situation at Market Square was duplicated. The Public Square was filled with a great mass of people. They climbed on the Tom Johnson monument and perched on the arms and shoulders of the bronze figures and even had the temerity to use the roofs of the recruiting and Liberty Loan sheds as points of vantage, from which to watch the proceedings and listen to the speakers.

Although there was a grim determination about the crowd which would not permit of any interference, both the meetings and the demonstration was without any disorder and there was no excuse given for the authorities to bring into play the machine guns which have been installed about Market Square and the Public Square, according to current gossip.

(On Thursday night the Socialists held another great demonstration [illegible]

Tom Mooney Must Go Free

I visited Tom Mooney in the penitentiary at San Quentin yesterday.

As I sat waiting for him (he was working in the iron factory, a mile away) the high walls and watch tower, with its machine guns, the whispered conversation of a convict talking to a woman evedently dear to him, the atmosphere of repression, fear and melancholy made my heart sink.

I was overwhelmed with the conviction that Fickert, with his Oxman, is victorious and, so far, we are failures.

I couldn't help asking myself "will Tom Mooney ever be free?"

Tom Mooney finally walked in, passing the warden and guards near the door.

He looks well. His frank, open handsome brown eyes and friendly smile, though a trifle sad, gave me hope. There he was in the flesh. We saved him from the gallows: surely, we can free him from the prison.

During our hour's talk he did not complain. He is a brave warrior—I came near saying, but that is not the word for a man confined in the penitentiary. When he was in jail he worked constantly, writing pamphlets, addressing envelopes, etc., but now he can do nothing, nothing but slave in the iron foundry.

"What they do here is to silence a man. A man can do nothing, write nothing. Why I wrote Rena (his wife) 16 letters that never went out of the penitiary," he said

How I felt it. The penitiary is next to the tomb for a burial.

"Well, how about the Mooney convention?" I asked him.

"It was fine," he said, his face brightening. "The test is with the masses of the working people. This is an economic fight, and only the working people can save me. I leave my case with them."

"But they must look out that the Governor doesn't commute my sentence to 17 or 15 years, instead of giving me my freedom," he added.

As he talked I wished I could fly everywhere, speeding up the workers, how well he would perform the task, were he free and another in his place; but no he must mold iron in the prison, while his heart is with the toilers in New York, Chicago, in every corner of the country.

So we, who are free, must act, and act now.

We must make the general strike a success—so stupendous that even Governor Stephens may hear.

While waiting at the ferry to return home, I got into conversation with the ticket agent. He was enthusiastic about the penitentiary. He would lead you to seek it for a health resort. "You ought to see the fine beds and you just ought to see the steaks. I never saw such good ones," he said triumphantly

"But the death cell and the gallows," I replied.

He looked at me in astonishment. "Why, the dirty, low-down rascals, I see them taken there—Why, hanging is too good for them."

"Look at this," he said, holding up Mooney's picture. "Did you see Mooney over there? This is his picture. They circulated about 300,000 of them. His sentence was commuted to life imprisonment a little while ago by the Governor."

"What did he do that for?" I asked.

"Well, what do you think? There was an uproar all over the world about Mooney" (his tone indicated that he did not expect me to believe such an improbable story), "and the Governor thought he'd better."

Even he had learned that an uproar had saved Tom Mooney from the gallows.

But how much of an uproar will it take to save Tom Mooney from the penitiary?

On the way home I got to thinking of his warning about the commutation of sentence.

Undoubtedly, that will be the program. How like Governor Stephens!

Governor Stephens was determined to hang Tom Mooney.

The fear of a general strike "made him think he'd better commute his sentence," to quote our ticket agent.

But, if he is not informed in no uncertain terms that nothing short of complete freedom will satisfy the working people of this country, Governor Stephens will commute his sentence to 17 or 15 years

Tom Mooney says he would rather be dead.

Be on your guard! Do not be stampeded at the last minute!

Be assured that, when the general strike is organized, ready to be pulled aff at a certain moment, Governor Stephens will commute Tom Mooney's sentence!

Governor Stephens means to shatter our forces at the last moment.

He thinks that never again will we be able to reinforce them, and Tom Mooney will remain in the penitentiary nearly a quarter of a century.

Never! We must be prepared for that blow.

We must not let our forces be shattered by a cowardly commutation of sentence at the last moment.

Be prepared! The slogan is "Freedom for Tom Mooney or a general strike."

Reply to Ball

By JOHN M. WORK

I wish to reply to some of the statements made in the letter of Comrade John R. Ball, published in the Ohio Socialist for Marh 26.

The statement that we, the national executive committee, refrained from calling a special national convention of the party at a time when the party members were generally demanding such a convention, is a mistake.

Our meeting was held in January. Only a few locals had asked for a convention. Knowing the state of the party treasury, and knowing that there was no occasion for a special convention to be held so soon before the regular convention next spring, we would have been recreant to our duty if we had called such a convention upon the demand of a few locals. A minority has the power to call for a referendum vote on the question. This has now been done. If the widespread electioneering for a convention creates a general demand for it, the membership can make that demand effective by voting for it.

I hope, however, that the members will vote it down, for we should devote ourselves to propaganda and organization this year, instead of scrapping over party questions which can wait a few months, until the regular convention next spring, just as well as not.

Why does not Comrade Bell state the fact that the party does not pay the railroad fare and expenses of delegates to the amnesty convention, whereas a party convention would cost the party fifteen or twenty thousand dollars? Also, why does he not state the fact that those executive committeemen whom he admires voted for the amnesty convention, as well as those whom he does not admire? Likewise, why did not those locals and comrades who wanted a party convention provide, along with the convention referendum, that a special assessment should be levied to pay the expenses, instead of proposing to bankrupt the organization?

The charge that we are reactionary is pure moonshine. If anyone concerned is reactionary, it is Comrade Bell. He has a perfect right to vote for whomsoever he chooses in the party election, but he has no right to make false statements and create strife in the party by means of such reactionary practices.

As for Berne, the members of the executive committee whom Comrade Ball admires also voted to send delegates and they did not make a solitary suggestion to the contrary. We gave the delegates instructions which would have enabled them to bolt the congress and proceed to the organization of a new international if necessary. It was not known at that time that the Bolsheviki, the Spartacans, the Swiss and the Italian socialists would not be represented. Comrade Ball knows that fact, but he does not state it. I am sorry that we delegates from America were not in attendance at Berne. We might have been able to cause the congress to give better account of itself. I do not believe in surrendering in advance. I think the Bolsheviki, the Spartacans, and the Socialist parties of Switzerland and Italy should have sent delegates. By doing so, they could have swung the congress to the center and kept the international united, instead of allowing it to be split in two.

These are days when we need unity among the comrades in this country, as well as internationally. I would like to suggest to Comrade Ball and others that, in order that their work may count for socialism and not for capitalism, they should try to be fair and honest with their comrades in the movement. Falsehoods and malignance used against comrades are distinctly detrimental to the cause. Let us have a united movement, facing the foe, instead of stabbing comrades in the back.

In Starving Petrograd

By ANISE, in Seattle Union Record.

I read
In yesterday's paper
The tale of Frazier Hunt
Of STARVING Petrograd.
Nine-tenths of all the people
Are UNDERFED, he said,
For Russa is RINGED-IN by armies—
Shut off from her grain.
The government enforces
An IRON law of RATIONS,
That gives to every man,
According to the NEEDS
Of his DAILY TOIL.
All heavy workers
And CHILDREN
And MOTHERS of children
Are given HALF a POUND
Of BREAD each day,
While the indoor workers—
Office and professional folks—
Get a quarter of a pound;;
And a small number of people
(About one person in forty)
Who do no work at all,
But live on their money,
Get only an eighth of a pound
From the government
And have to get the rest
From high-priced speculators.
But the government gives,
Besides the general rations,
ONE MEAL A DAY
To ALL the population,
And tries to take
SPECIAL care of CHILDREN
With free school meals
And text-books free.
And all NECESSITIES—
Clothes, and shoes, and rubbers—
Are rationed much like food.
Each man must PROVE his need
To a committee,
"Because," they say,
"The whole of Russia
Is like a besieged city;
The little that we have
Must go as far as it can."
It was a pitiful
And most heroic picture—
A war-exhausted people
Pleading for PEACE,
Not once, but many times,
Attacked by its old friends,
Who give NO REASON,
No ANSWER even,
To its many cries,
Yet even in despair,
PATIENT and ORDERLY
Dividing its last CRUSTS
As a FAMILY divides—
By NEED, and still the BEST
To SAVE the CHILDREN!
And then I turned and saw
An editorial in that paper
That mocked at starving RUSSIA
Crying to crush her further,
Jeering: "She feeds her
CHIDREN
Only to corrupt their minds
And rear them up
For CANNON FODDER!"
And I shrank back SICK,
Thinking: Could any Bolshevik
In any kind of TERROR
Have so DISEASED a MIND
And LEPROUS heart as THAT?"

Open Forum for Discussion of Party Problems

WHAT SHALL WE DEMAND?

BY J. H. PALLO.

For the reason that the following article was written previous to the formulation of the Left Wing Program no mention is made herein of it.—Editor.

Now is the time for all revolutionary Socialists to prepare and organize for the next convention of the Socialist Party. Those who have learned something from the revolutionary struggles in Europe, and acclaim the uncompromising methods of Bolsheviks and Spartacans, must see that the spirit of Liebknecht and Lenine prevail.

If we cannot defeat the tactics of our compromising office seekers (demonstrated by Meyer London, Van Lear and others); if we cannot destroy the middle class reform movement within our party (into which Milwaukee Socialists, especially, have degenerated under the leadership of Mr. Berger); if we cannot stop the policy of compromise between the several reform parties (the Non-Partisan League and the Labor party), we must at least be able to show a strong and determined opposition.

The debate on all vital questions which may come before the convention should be opened in the Socialist press at once. The projects of various declarations and resolutions should be drawn and discussed in advance, so that the standing of candidates may be tested, and membership may have some means of finding out whom they shall send to the convention.

Now is the time to open the bitterest criticism against all divergencies from Marxism within the party, and also against the Gompers-lead unionism and the "down with the politics" slogan of I. W. W.

The sharp struggle between the capitalist and the proletarian classes of Europe, and the reactionary capitalist "reconstruction" at home, prove beyond any doubt that socialism in America and everywhere else cannot be inaugurated through the ballot box only. We dare not dream that we will ever be allowed to peacefully expropriate capitalists and establish Socialist society. We must prepare for a revolutionary situation, a situation in a class society when the oppressed masses are entirely dissatisfied with the existing social conditions, and are economically forced to change them.

Such a situation may take place during the coming economical crisis, which will be the severest American workmen have ever seen. No capitalist "reconstruction" of any kind can avoid it. As long as workmen are deprived of full value of their labor, sooner or later, according to success of imperialistic policies, all kinds of commodities are bound to accumulate to such an extent that it will be detrimental to the interests of capitalists to allow workmen to continue production. Mills, factories and foundries will be shut and millions will be starving and freezing, while storages and warehouses will be overstocked with food and clothing.

The starving masses will not listen to advices of fake Socialists, to wait till the next election day. As in Petrograd, Moscow, Berlin and Vienna, they will demand food and clothing at once. The bourgeois charity will not be able to satisfy the people. Then the millions of workmen, who are now ignoring our revolutionary teachings, will be forced to change their minds in regard to who is the rightful owner of the accumulated wealth, and who shall rule the country.

Only during such a situation the proletarian dictatorship may be established, provided there is a party which is uncompromisingly leading to that end. Only through proletarian dictatorship and after a complete breakdown of the strong and complicated capitalist political machinery, capitalism in America, as in any other country, may be abolished and Socialist society established.

The above conclusions do not correspond with those which are embodied in the Socialist Party platform (adopted by national referendum, July 24, 1917). Its references to the class struggle are very misleading. The preamble of the platform speaks of it as follows: "This terrible class warfare is world wide and a grave menace to civilization. Its abolition is the most important and vital issue confronting the human race." Any reactionary preacher and a capitalist politicians agree that the class war is a menace to civilization and therefore should be condemned and suppressed. Only revolutionary Socialists read with indignation such a condemnation. The class struggle is only a menace to capitalism, and a further existence of the latter is a menace to civilization. The class struggle is only a menace to capitalism, and a further existence of the latter is a menace to civilization. The class struggle is the only means by which capitalism may be abolished and therefore it should be encouraged, developed and carried on vigorously, and when necessary, fought in a most violent manner. To be exact, the revolutionary Socialists believe that the class war, no matter how terrible it may be, is only a menace to a menace of civilization.

In another section the preamble refers to class struggle as follows: "The Socialist Party aims to abolish this class war with all its evils and to substitute for capitalism a new order of co-operation."

Do Socialists really aim to abolish the class struggle first and then to substitute something for capitalism? If not, why not tell this thing in the proper order? Besides the abolition of the class struggle is not the aim of Socialists, it is only incidental to their aim—the abolition of capitalism.

The platform naively clings to the unscientific and reactionary "theory of a democratic government," a bourgeois theory which entirely contradicts the Marxian conception that in a class society a real democracy is impossible. In spite of the fact that the government is becoming more and more autocratic, and that, as a result of the growth of a strong class conscious labor movement, it will be continually shaped to fit as a more and more perfect tool of oppression and resistance for the capitalist class, our platform takes for granted that it is possible for the working class "to capture the government and all its powers and use them in its own interests."

On this misconception is based the whole "Immediate Program."

If the Socialist Party is to become a real representative of the class conscious proletarians, its "Immediate Program" must be considerably changed. In order to safeguard our program from stealing by such radicals as Mr. Roosevelt was, and from reformers as Spargo's new party type, or the Labor party, or the Non-Partisan League, we simply must get rid of all the non-socialistic planks. For instance, let the Democrats fight for government ownership. Why should we worry about who distributes the profits? Let the various reformers fight for "a complete adult suffrage." Why should we make such a demand in a country where there are about half a million adults who are living entirely from our sweat and blood, while performing no socially useful labor? Why should we ask for a "democratic control of the government," knowing that the latter is entirely unfit for our purposes, and only may be destroyed but never controlled by the working men.

We must formulate our demands in such a manner that each one is a direct blow against the capitalist dictatorship. Each demand must be "an impossible demand" for capitalism. Each one should prove to the reader that we want nothing less than a complete breakdown of the capitalist state. This is the only way to keep out of our party all kinds of reformers and compromisers of the treacherous Menshevik, Scheideman, Ebert, Thomas and, if you please, Berger type.

In order to direct the attention of the working men to the fact that the present government is neither democratic nor responsible to the people, we must demand not only abolition of the senate, but also abolition of the presidentship. The latter office is more dangerous to labor interests than that of a king or a kaiser.

We must demand that the executive power, consisting of various ministeries, be chosen by the House of Representatives, and be made directly responsible to that body and the people; that social parasites and exploiters of labor are not allowed to participate in elections and in government.

The demand (in our Immediate Program) for a legal minimum wage based on the ascertained costs of a decent standard of life, means nothing more than the reactionary slogan of the American Federation of Labor, which is, "a fair day's pay for a fair day's work." This is not what the class conscious working men want; they want the whole produce of their labor. Why not demand that the wages should equal the value of the products of the labor, and thereby teach the workmen to understand what they are entitled to.

The above mentioned are the most objectionable planks in our national platform. They must be stricken out immediately, otherwise our party may degenerate to the level of German, French and other traitorous "majority Socialists." Let the lesson of the revolutionary struggles in Russia and Germany be sufficient to make us re- [illegible] led by [illegible] state and campaign [illegible] is liable to become the worst enemy of the proletarians when the final struggle is going on, and no further compromise is possible!

Now, let us consider what kind of an educational work may be carried on with our national platform as a basis. None, that is of any value to the working class. This may be proven by the steady stream of the members coming into and leaving the party. Most of them become members because they find some agreeable planks in our program. When they find out that the Socialist Party is not strong enough to push the planks through, they simply leave the party because they never joined it in order to fight for socialism, and never believed that there is much difference between the Socialist Party and other political parties. Why? Because our national platform and most of the state platforms and the campaign speeches do not expound any definite principles, only a misty aim and an undetermined dissatisfaction with the present system. They are compromising and do not confine themselves entirely to the interests of the proletarians, the only class which is economically forced to fight for socialism and therefore the only class which will be true to socialism in the final struggle. Our national platform and a lot of other literature as it is proven above tends to prejudice against the class struggle. It ignores the fact that the capitalist class will not permit to abolish its dictatorship by peaceful means, such as elections and legislation, and that it is necessary for the working class to prepare now for revolutionary and severe methods of class struggle. It conceals the absolute necessity of the proletarian dictatorship, an entirely different institution from the present democratic government, in order to establish socialism.

Our duty at the present time is to prepare for the socialistic revolution. All our declarations, demands and activities must have a direct relation with our ultimate goal. Our immediate demands at the present time shall be nothing less than the following:

Political Demands

1. Unlimited suffrage for all men and women who are 18 years old and have acquired the means of living through labor that is productive and useful to society. Complete disfranchisement of all who have acquired the means of living by exploiting the laborer.

2. Abolition of the senate and the presidentship. Election of heads of the governmental departments by the House of Representatives, subject to recall at any time.

3. Direct election of all judges, and subjection of courts to the House of Representatives.

4. Initiative, referendum and recall.

5. Abolition of all federal and state laws and city ordinances enstrangling freedom of conscience, free press, free speech and free assemblage. Immediate release of all persons convicted, imprisoned or arrested on account of lack of aforesaid freedom.

6. Discontinuation of imperialistic policies and secret diplomacy. Immediate recall of armed forces from all foreign countries, and granting unmolested self-determination to all U. S. colonies. Demobilization of the army and navy, and armament of the people. Election of all officers of the created people's militia directly by the people.

7. Establishing of a regular and unrestricted social intercourse (mail, telegraph, travel, commerce, etc.) between the people of this and all other countries.

Economic Demands.

1. Immediate confiscation and social ownership of all land which is used for exploitation or speculative purposes, or which is owned by persons or associations of persons, who have not acquired the title to the land by means of socially productive and useful labor.

2. Gradual expropriation with recompensation of all small land (house, lot or farm) owners, who have acquired the title through productive and useful labor, until the private ownership of land is completely abolished.

3. Confiscation and social ownership of all railroads, telegraphs, telephones, steamship lines, warehouses, stores and all other means of communication, transportation, storage and distribution.

4. Confiscation and social ownership of all mines, mills, foundries, factories and all other social means of production.

5. Nationalization of banking and confiscation of all deposits of the exploiting class.

6. Determination of wages and the length of the work day by a duly elected national commission of labor representatives.

General Demands.

1. Free schools and all other educational facilities for the entire youth of the nation until their 18th birthday.

3. Free medical help, free hospitals.

3. Free administration of law and creation of public defenders.

4. Pensions for mothers, for invalidity and old age.

The Railroad Stockholders

The bourgeois reformists are using big headlines to enunciate the fact that 8,000 labor exploiters own more than half of the railroads in the United States—or, rather, more than half of the "shares."

It seems from researches made by the capitalist interstate commerce commission that the gross amount of plunder gathering in every year by the railroad owners is divided into 97,475,776 parts, each owner of a "share" of railroad stock having the legal right to own and possess one of these "parts." There are 627,930 parasites who divide this plunder up among themselves according to the number of "shares" of stock they own.

The interstate commerce commission dwells upon and the bourgeois reformers emphasize the fact that about 8,000 of these capitalist loafers own in the neighborhood of 50,000,000 "shares" of stock out of the 97,475,776. These gentlemen, all of whom abhor socialism, seem to be worried over the unequal division of the plunder among the stockholding plunderbund.

The worker and Socialist knocks the whole subject aside with the simple statement that it makes no difference to him how the surplus wealth which he creates is divided up among the plunderbund. The worker wants an industrial system under which he will be able to retain for his own use the social equivalent of the wealth he produces.

Socialism is that industrial system.

Lawrence Workers Firm

The union will open an office in a day or two.

The name—The Amalgamater Textile Workers of America.

Plans are being made to call at once a convention of textile workers from various centers, so as to make the Amalgamated Textile Workers at once a national organization. The Amalgamated Textile plus the Amalgamated Clothing Workers will be a power in the land.

RELIEF.

For milk and medicine apply, in case of real need, at 35 Jackson St.

The soup kitchens and coffee houses are open as usual.

Due to the fact that scabs and even people who have no connection whatever with the mills took advantage of us, we have to reorganize some of our relief work. This may cause slight delay and hardship. Let all be patient, and necessary help will be given. We do not want to take the hard-earned gifts of our fellow workers to feed scabs!

THE NEXT MOVE.

On Monday, March 31, at 2:30 p. m., the State Board of Arbitration and Conciliation will hold a hearing in the city hall. The mill owners and the grievance committee of the strikers have been summoned to appear.

Wait for your delegates to give you correct information about the result of the hearing. Do not listen to rumors or place too much confidence in newspaper reports. The strike committee will keep you informed.

FELLOW WORKERS OF ALL NATIONALITIES.

We are making a just demand—all we ask is that our wages shall not be reduced! Such a demand cannot, must not be denied. We press on to victory! 48-54—and

Our One Big Union—The Amalgamated Textile Workers of America!

Issued by Lawrence Strike Committee.

WHAT LIARS THESE NEWSPAPERS BE

(Apologies to Bill Shakespeare)
By WALTER B. DILLON.

This morning I picked up the paper and in great scare-headlines a gladsome sentence met my view, to wit:

"LENINE PLANS TO ESTABLISH SOVIET GOVERNMENT IN BOSTON!"

With wild joy coursing through my veins, I breathed a prayer of thankfulness for the saviour of American labor and proceeded to read on so as to be able to be in full readiness to take my place in the proud procession, and to fittingly commemorate the demise of capitalism in that good old blue law state of Massachusetts.

And then—GOOD-BYE, fair dreams of happiness! One glance at the subheadlines was sufficient to show me that it was only another Kept Press Lie. "Boston" was evidently the new way to spell "Berlin" in the favored imagination of the anti-Bolshevist who concocted the headlines. But perhaps he had been reading the Revolutionary Age, which I had circulated recently, published in Boston, and got so badly scared that he made Lenine jump the "big pond" and land right in our midst.

Any how, this raising my hopes so high only to dash them to earth again that naturally peeved me so bad that I am breaking right out into print. [illegible] bear with me, comrades, and I will demonstrate to you by several pretty little pictures from life the utter incapacity for knowledge or truth possessed by the average editor of a capitalist newspaper when writing of anything favorable to labor.

The headline above quoted appeared in the Albuquerque Morning Journal, of Sunday, March 30, and dealt solely with the purported scheme of the Bolshevists and Spartacans to call a general strike throughout Germany on April 18, while the Red Army of Russia struck at Germany's eastern frontier.

Innocent readers of this paper might believe that this was a typographical error, but those who are well informed know that is was and is a deliberate and contemptible attempt to prejudice the reader against what is proving to be the greatest danger to capitalism that ever gained headway—the rise of the workers to political and industrial power—bolshevism!

There are none of us who will blame the editors of the Journal for we know only too well who pays their salary, but the printer who set up that headline and the pressman who ran it ought to be fired bodily from their union for this base betrayal of labor. This, by the way, is what will happen to typos or pressmen in Phoenix, Arizona, if the resolutions adopted by the Central Labor body in support of the Council of Workers, Farmers and Soldiers, is carried out.

In Butte, Montana, and in Seattle and in Portland, the typos and pressmen would never have been guilty of this, either, for in these burgs they have learned that they belong to labor organizations and are NOT tools of capital. But Albuquerque union men have been whipped so bad by the Santa Fe with the able assistance of the Phelps-Dodges and coal barons, that they are not yet ready to stand erect like men and say: "I am a man!" But give us time, boys, give us time; we are fast learning.

Not satisfied with lying to me about Lenine coming to Boston, the Journal editorially adds insult to injury by attempting to make me believe that the Hungarian Bolshevists and the Russian Bolshevists are entirely different, absolutely, Mabel. If you don't believe it read this specimen of mental acrobatics crossed with capitalistic delirium—some offspring:

"The new Bolshevik government in Hungary has issued an order making work compulsory, taking the stand that only those working manually or mentally have a right to live in a Socialist state, except that those incapable of work, or for whom no work can be found, will be taken care of at the expense of the state.

"This is a different sort of program from that of the Bolsheviks of Russia, where everybody quit work and expected the government to supply them with the necessities and even the luxuries of life."

Now, comrades, I leave it to you; considering that I have painstakingly, issued copies of the Russian constitution issued by the Soviet government, which COMPELS all able-bodied men and women to work or deprives them of the right to eat, and further considering that others have brought this matter to the attention of the editors of the Journal, I ask you this question:

Is the editor of the Journal attempting to prove his incapacity for labor under the ruling of mental weakness to the end that he can be excused when the workers of Albuquerque take over the reins of political and industrial government, or was he so badly rattled at the news from Hungary that he told the truth about it inadvertently?

I will accept your collective judgment in this matter and will pass on to another specimen.

Some uncouth person or persons riled the editor of the Albuquerque Evening Herald, also, by scattering in the holy precincts of the Capitol building at Santa Fe, aye, in the very seats of the legislators, some literature in nature "preaching bolshevism of the most virulent and dangerous type" and the particular literature which scandalized the pure and undefiled natures of the legislators was "the most evil type of this character of propaganda."

The Herald mentioned no names, but the Weekly Democrat scribe editorialized at length, considerable length, and made free use of my name therein. Now, I am perfectly willing to advertise my wares, especially to let the workers of this city and state know that I am a full-fledged, fighting son-of-a-gun of a Socialist and Bolshevist, and Spartacan, and any other thing that bids fair to overthrow capitalism and institute socialism—democracy, pure and undefiled—but I certainly must resent having my name appear in any paper professing to champion democracy while stabbing democracy to its very vitals.

If there is anything I hate worse than a rattler, it's a hypocrite, and the attitude of the Democrats throughout this war brands them as even worse reactionaries than the Republicans. Kerensky was a Democrat and sold his countrymen to the allies; Scheidemann was a Democrat and sold his comrades to the kaiser, first, and later the German bourgeoisie; Clemenceau was a Democrat, now the worst reactionary in France; Lloyd-George, another Democrat, is hailed as the champion of the Tory element of Britain. The Democrats of the United States represent only the landed aristocracy and mill owners of the south, where child labor laws are over-ridden, black men are still burned at the stake and every labor hating device known to capital is employed mercilessly against the workers, both black and white, male and female.

All the beautiful rhetoric of President Wilson cannot hide the ugly history of the Democrats wherever they have had unlimited powers, politically and industrially. We have only to recall the massacre at Ludlow, Colo., in 1914, under a Democratic state administration, and a Democratic federal administration. Governor Ammons shook like a leaf when the demand was made on him at Denver that federal soldiers be asked for to prevent further civil war. It was common knowledge that the mine barons had threatened to wipe out the Democrats in Colorado if troops were called. It was not until every union man in Colorado was under arms and Rockefeller's [illegible] in danger of being wrecked, that action was taken.

Thank heaven! I was man enough to take up arms in defense of labor then, and whenever and wherever my voice, my pen or my physical strength is needed to help in the onward and upward push of the downtrodden working class, I promise you, fellow and sister workers, that I will not be found wanting.

I therefore welcome the attempt of the poor little Democrat to warn the workers against bolshevism and the socialism of myself and the other rantankerous ones who fired Mr. Russell, Mr. Spargo, Mr. Benson, et al., from the party when they failed to measure up as men, but I repeat that I certainly resent my perfectly good name being soiled and sullied by appearing in a capitalist sheet.

Light on the subject of bolshevism is what we want, and the most publicity given the question the quicker the workers will grasp the truth about it. The editors of the Democrat, the Herald and the Journal, buried in the dark and musty files of a past generation think that labor still sleeps with the narcotics applied to it through the columns supplied by the old Granny, Associated Press reports, and the assistance of fossilized editors, but the child is grinning through the bars of the cradle at the playmate it has found—socialism, bolshevism, spartacanism—and when it is ready it will gently but firmly tell Old Granny that it is old enough to know its own mind, and will hereafter walk on its own feet.

And so, I will bravely carry the burden of the blot on my fair name because of this insertion in the Democrat since thereby the workers have had their attention called to the question of bolshevism. Knowing that they are awakening, I am content to let them judge me and my activities in the eyes of their growing class consciousness.

Workers of the world! Not of the United States alone, nor of Russia, nor of Hungary, nor of any other nation; workers of the world! Rise to your feet, face the rising sun of industrial liberty and for the first time in your lives breath deep of the perfume of heaven!

Out of the east once more has come a star to lead you to freedom. The blazing dawn is invariably tinged with red, melting into the soft radiance of silver and gold, of love and happiness, of freedom and justice.

Slaves bend the back to the lash and the mind of the master; Freemen stretch their arms to the light and cower never. The Kept Press has lied to you, lied about you, is still lying to and about you. Rise, throw the shackles from your mind and build up your own press.

FREEDOM IS YOURS IF YOU DEMAND IT!

Showing The Way

By the disregard of the law when it suits their pleasure and when the oportunity to 'get by' with it presents itself, the capitalist class and their henchmen, often times government representatives, are showing the working class of this country how to stage a violent revolution where no consideration of legality may be tolerated.

Loudest to prate of law and order and the sacred priveliges of the ballot, these same representatives of exploiters of the workers seek every opportunity to disregard and set at naught the provisions of the law, when such do, by some peculiar circumstance, favor the workers or stand in the way of the attainment of the desires of the master class.

Innumberable instances may be cited in proof of this. There is a law against murder, but the tools of the lumber interests at Everett, Wash., turned a barrage of rifle bullets against a ship load of workers murdering and wounding half a hundred men. They were never apprehended and never will be unless by a tribunal of the workers. Twelve hundred miners were deported into the desert from Bisbee, Arizona. There is a law against deportation but it is not made for the copper interests. The cases against the perpetrator of these crimes were discharged by the court—the court of the capitalist class.

Yes, there is a law against deportation, but it does not prevent the capitalist class from kidnapping the spokesman of the workers and carrying them away at their pleasure. When outrages like this are perpetrated by the agents of the law, of the government, then and there is sown the seed of hatred for that government, for the laws it enacts, and for those who represent it in public office.

The idiocy, the ability for endless blundering on the part of those who uphold the present economic system is beyond comprehension. Capitalism, in its decline and desperation causes the very developments it seeks to prevent. Served by a visionless, ignorant and corrupt officialdom, capitalism gallops headlong to its final dissolution amidst the wreck of its own making.

These crimes against the working class can serve but one end—to shorten the life of capitalism, and its misrule. The millions of workers know the extent of these crimes. They will be the judges of it. Their verdict may be held in obeyance yet awhile, but it will be given. And when it is given the foundations of capitalism will crumble to dust.

The New Aristocracy

Already the changing economic order is developing its new social manifestations. Witness the opinions emanating from an ex-grand duke of Russia. Mr. Grand Duke is now private citizen of no country in particular, he, having terminated his citizenship at the same time as his graft upon the workers of Russin. Both by compulsion, tra-la-la.

Although the former aristocrat has at last given up hope of re-dedicating his existence to the work of riding softly on the back of the Russian worker, he states for the benefit of the world at large "that there must always be an aristocracy of brains, of gentlemen." Of course he is the first candidate for a place in this clique that is to retain its identity in the new world aborning. Great stuff!

Every revolution in history has left a bunch of these precious birds stranden high and dry on the rocks from which no tide returns to float them again. Time was when capitalism was young, that the landed grafters of England held in scorn the rising class of traders. Even in new America we have passed an epoch wherein this same phenomena presented itself. After the black men and womn of th south were freed, southern gentlemen and gentlewomen were adicted to the morbid habit of attempting to retain some vestige of social standing be referring to their past as slave holders, whom an unfortunate war had bereft (very unjustly) of their means of making a better showing among the parastic element. Too bad.

An aristocracy of "has beens" will no doubt arise and flourish perhaps for half a generation after the shroud has been wrapped about this capitalist system and it is laid to final rest in the bosom of time. But we are unable to believe that men and women of either brains or gentle breeding will make themselves elegible for it. Never the less, this melancholy clique should be numerous enough—the present aristocracy which cumbers the earth is noted for the vacumn which occupies the inside of their individual headpieces. We are living in a great age. Watch it change.

The Peace Conference confers and confabs—while Bolshevism, Socialism—The Rule of the Workers, develops a monumental momentum setting at naught, like chaff before a hurricane, the mighty deliberations of the so-called wise men of the world. Pity the poor dippy-mats.

When Westenhaver sentenced Eugene V. Debs to ten years in prison, he pronounced the death sentence upon capitalism in these United States.

Gene Debs is in prison.
He is in there for us.
Are we out here for him?
WE ARE!

ANNOUNCEMENT

Special Story Next Week

Next week we'll tell the story in detail of Debs' hurried trip to prison under federal guards. How the authorities attempted to dodge Socialist Party officials, how they were followed in a high powered auto thru Cleveland streets and alleys; of the two hundred mile trip by eight trolley lines from Cleveland to Moundsville, W. Va.

We'll tell you how Debs met this sudden assault, what he said and how he acted. A vivid story in detail of the near—kidnapping of Eugene V. Debs the best loved man in America, by the officers of the government of the United States.

Every Local, Every Booster, Called Into Action!

May 1st is drawing near. Only a few days more and we shall have passed another historic landmark on the road to proletarian democracy. We have mailed to every Ohio Socialist booster and every Local in Ohio our plan for securing 5,000 subscriptions on this day. We are not overestimating the possibilities of this day. What, with the many meetings to be held on May 1 we should be able to secure even more than 5,000 subscriptions.

What will be your response, comrades? We want to hear from you immediately.. We want your order for a supply of special May Day subscription cards to sell at these meetings. We want your order quick.

Don't miss the best opportunity of the year to help make the Ohio Socialist a twice-a-week paper. Five thousand subscriptions secured on May 1 will be a mighty step toward that goal. Help us do it. Locals and comrades may order these cards on credit for this occasion.

WE WANT YOUR HELP TODAY

Socialists Win in Battle Of Wits"

April 6, 7 and 8 were days of the most successful events for our great cause of industrial democracy in Cambridge.

Comrade Thurber Lewis was scheduled to speak here April 6 and 7. An ordinance of this city requires permission from the mayor for a meeting on the street. The mayor was approached and we were requested to secure a hall for our meeting of Sunday. We were assured by the mayor that we could hold our meetings on the street at any other day or night of the week. We decided to comply with his request, and being granted permission for a street meeting on April 7, we proceeded with arrangements accordingly.

Our Sunday meeting, held in the labor hall was a decided success. The meeting for April 7 was advertised to be held on the street at 8 p. m. When the hour arrived a large crowd had gathered about the automobile from which Comrade Lewis spoke. Across the street from our meeting a number of politicians, corporation lawyers and a few industrial lords, stool pigeons and others had congregated. It soon became evident that it was their purpose to have the meeting broken up.

In opening the meeting I urged all to be calm, peaceful and quiet. Comrade Lewis then faced the huge crowd, while a few hecklers on the extreme edge of the audience, from shadows and automobils, hurled forth an occasional shout of "take him down," "stop him," etc. It was also noticed that the small crowd of politicians, across the street were disappearing, leaving their tools and pawns there to break up the meeting. Failing in this attempt, it is evident that they phoned to police headquarters and demanded that the police stop us.

Comrade Lewis had spoken about 20 minutes when the police ordered the meeting discontinued. The chief states he was acting under instructions of the mayor. We discontinued the meeting and in company with a number of comrades followed by a large crowd of sympathizers visited the mayor's office, demanding the protection of the police so that we might continue, without molestation. After a lengthy conference we were informed that a decision would be given the next day as to whether we would be allowed to hold street meetings for that night. The hour being too late for the continuation of the meeting at the time, we decided to adjourn to the labor hall and decide upon a plan of action for the maintainance of free speech in Cambridge.

Next morning Comrade Lewis and myself approached the mayor and thoroughly explained the situation, and insisted that the constitutional rights of free speech be upheld and that the police be ordered to protect our meeting and maintain order. However, we were given no assurance of protection and were advised not to hold a street meeting. In reply to the mayor's statement that his force of police was insufficient to cope with a serious disturbance, we assured him that we could secure a hundred men who were willing to be deputized to help maintain order, without any expense to the city. Our offer was, of course, not accepted. After a meeting of the comrades we decided that our constitutional rights of free speech were not to be trampled upon so easily by a few politicians, lawyers and industrial lords, whom it is plainly evident were the real instigators of the antagonism, the mayor and police officers being only the tools. We advertised a meeting for Tuesday, April 8, at 8 p. m., and long before that hour hundreds of workers gathered at the meeting place. A number of politicians, lawyers, would-be capitalists and others of their class began to assemble, but true to their cowardly spirit remained far in the back ground or hid themselves in the surrounding buildings, and automobiles, where they might urge willing tools to break up our meeting.

It was evident that a large majority of the crowd was in our favor. We then informed the mayor that we intended to hold a short meeting on the street, after which we would adjourn to the labor hall. At the appointed hour we proceeded to the street. We addressed the huge crowd for a short time and then adjourned. The crowd that followed filled the hall but we had a clever trick up our sleeves which out-generaled and gave the plutocrats of Cambridge the surprise of their lives and from which they will not recover soon. The hall, three stories high, faces the main street, six large windows facing the street were raised to the full height. Comrade Lewis stationed himself at the largest window, where his voice carried plainly to the crowd on the street.

Comrade Lewis' remarks brought forth tremendous and frequent applause from the crowd in the hall and often from the crowd on the street below. A few on the street insisted that the police arrest the speaker, but true to their cowardly nature, none had the courage to swear out a warrant.

In the street the audience rapidly increased until fully two thousand people had congregated, and aside from the applause, contrary to the newspaper reports, no other demonstrations were made; all listened intently.

Just one other demonstration against our meeting was made by someone on the roof of a building across the street from the hall, who hurled a cabbage head at Comrade Lewis, which struck the window sill. Comrade Lewis barely noticed it and continued with his speech.

A good collection was received and several applications for membership were made, while a score or more expressed their intention of attending our meetings and becoming members. After the meeting Comrade Lewis, in company with several comrades, coolly descended the stairs and made their way through the large crowd. We leisurely walked to the hotel while the crowd followed.

It is evident that the opposition to our meeting attempted to incite a demonstration against us, but they failed miserably in their efforts.

A large number of people followed us to the hotel after our meeting, but later many people assured us that their purpose in doing so was to offer protection if it was necessary, and that it appeared to them that the police intended to shirk their duty.

It is safe to say that our membership will now be largely increased. The courage and grit displayed by Comrade Lewis actually made the plutes wince, while the courage and determination of the comrades held the plutocratic supporters in awe.

Street meeings for Socialists have been prohibited in Cambridge for many years, even before the war. It is certain we have a fight on hand, but we are gaining power and the fight is now on in earnest. The lawyers, politicians and the various bourgeois fraternities are intent on preventing our meetings, they are well organized and are well trained in wielding the economic club over the workers' heads whenever they attempt resistance. To break this ring, which keeps the workers in subjection is our duty and purpose. The black ball and boycott have been operated effectively against the workers in this city for many years. I have felt the sting of the serpent but I haven't the slightest regrets to offer. I am familiar with the life of an agitator for a great and noble cause, and not until the clods rattle on my coffin lid will I cease my work for socialism and the spirit of the comrades here is the same.

Yours for industrial democracy,
HERBERT KNECHT.

CHAS. BAKER MEETINGS.

Comrade Baker was scheduled for a Debs' protest and amnesty meeting at Hamilton the 12th. This meeting was expected to be a monster though we have no report of the results at this time. Comrade Baker reports that socialism in Hamilton is humming and all activities are at their height. Comrade Baker was to speak at Xenia about the 15th.

LILITH MARTIN MEETINGS.

A splendid street meeting at Portsmouth on the 7th is reported by Comrade Martin. The comrades were overjoyed at the success of the first venture. A good collection ($13.08) proved the interest of the audience. Comrade Martin's dates are as follows: April 17, Lima; 18, Marion; 19, 20, Galion; 21, Ashland; 22, Creston; 23, Wadsworth; 24, Barberton; 25, Akron; 26, Massillon; 27, Canton; 28, Salem; May 1, Bellaire afternoon and evening.

THURBER LEWIS MEETINGS.

Comrade Lewis reports a very good meeting at Montpelier. At this meeting literature sales were good as was also the collection. Comrade B. L. Kizer speaks very highly of Comrade Lewis' ability as a Socialist lecturer. Comrade Kizer states that his house (in the center of town and next door to headquarters) is always open to every Real Red who comes to town and he adds that the headquarters will never be closed by any capitalist tools as he owns the whole proposition, and that, he says, is what we want to say about our national headquarters.

Comrade L. B. Skinner reports a fine hall and street meeting at Cambridge when Comrade Lewis delivered the goods to enthusiastic crowds.

On April 2, a record meeting was held on the street at Toledo, (and the mayor didn't object). Good literature sales and collection taken here. At Tiffin weather conditions were unfavorable for street meetings but a good hall meeting was held. Comrade Lewis visited a large manufacturing plant here and had a good meeting and disposed of some literature and Ohio Socialists.

At Mansfield on the 4th a good meeting was held at headquarters. Comrade Lewis dates are: April 17, Canton; 18, Barberton; 19, Ravenna; 20, Kenmore. This date concludes this tour. Comrade Lewis will speak at Neffs May Day in the afternoon.

RESOULTION BY U. M. W. of A.

Whereas, During the month of January, 1919, forty-three men of organized labor in Sacramento, Calif., were sentenced to terms ranging from one to ten years in prison, and our brothers from California tell us that these men were convicted on perjured evidence, given to prove them guilty of a crime that never existed, and

Whereas, These men were held incommunicado, and kept in a room so small that half had to stand up while the others lay down to sleep. They were denied sufficient food and clothing. Some became so weak from privation they could not walk. Money was sent for relief disappeared en route. Food was sent in by sympathizers was placed outside the bars in sight of the famished men and allowed to rot, and

Whereas, There is a bill before the legislature of California which strikes at the very heart of organized labor in that state, when reduced to plain English fixes a penalty of twenty years for the defenders of labor cases, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we the members of Local Union 2249, U. M. W. of A., of Pleasant City, O., request the president of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, to intervene in this case, and use his influence to get these men a fair and impartial trial, and punish the men that are guilty of such outrages against organized labor in the state of California, and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to President Wilson, and a copy to all the leading papers in the United States for publication.

FRANK BENDER,
JOHN HERRON,
HARRY WILLIAMS,
Committee on Resolutions.

A COMBINATION THAT WINS

The hall at Neffs was packed Friday night to see our play and hear Comrade Holman. Many had to stand. The audience was well pleased with the play and with Comrade Holman. Giving a play with propaganda meeting is certainly a good way to get out a crowd. We are thinking of putting on the play in many places in the county.

Comrade Holman is a very good speaker. This is not only my opinion, but of all the comrades. He is a very entertaining speaker also.

Yours for the revolution,
FRED WALCHLI.

FROM A SOLDIER—

Dear Comrade: Here is a list of fourteen subs as a protest against the imprisonment of our Comrade Debs, from a soldier that has seven months' service in France and has returned to fight for a better cause.

Please send some sub blanks in a hurry.

Yours in the good work,
GUY S. BUTTS.

MINERS DEMAND PRISONERS RELEASE

Byesville, O., April 1, 1919.

Be it Resolved: We the miners of Guernsey county assembled in our annual mass meeting hereby demand the release or a new trial for Tom Mooney and all political and religious prisoners now serving sentence and also under indictment.

Be it also Resolved, That we ask the International Executive Board to comply with the general strike the Fourth of July, if so requested by the committee elected for that purpose at the Mooney congress held in Chicago, Jan. 14.

DAVID WATKINS, Chairman.
G. W. EUBANKS, Sec'y.

PIQUA TRIES NEW PLAN

Word comes from Local Piqua of a new plan of organization work that is getting good results. The local has employed Comrade Wagner as organizer. His preliminary work consists of making a house-to-house canvas for the purpose of ascertaining the sentiment of the people toward socialism, and also the econmoic and political affiliations of the residents. Dues collecting is also a part of this work as well as securing applications for membership. Very encouraging results are forthcoming.

LILITH MARTIN AT AKRON

Comrade Lilith Martin speaks at Akron April 25, at 50 So. Howard St. Women comrades are especially invited to attend this meeting. Bring a friend or two with you and help sow the seeds of Socialist thought in the minds of your women associates. Comrade Martin will interest women in the Socialist movement.

READY TO ORGANIZE

A letter from Comrade P. R. Davis of Chesapeake states that a great deal of interest is being manifested in socialism in this locality. The comrades are ready to organize he says. Comrade Davis will do some preliminary work among the comrades until an organizer can be sent which will be soon.

PROGRESS IN BELMONT COUNTY

Comrade J. J. Hoge, who is doing organization work in Belmont Co., has organized a local at West Wheeling, with five members, and another at Dilles Bottom, with 20 members, so writes Comrade Fred Waolchli. Local Belmont Co. is alive to the possibilities and needs of organization and is "going after them" as these results show.

BALL STARTS ROLLING IN RICHLAND COUNTY

Locals Mt. Vernon and Mansfield have started more thorough organization work in Richland Co. At a meeting held April 6 plans were formulated to put an organizer in each school district, and in each township also. These organizers to co-operate with the county organizer in building up a strong movement in this county.

Local Hamilton enjoyed its monthly social March 29. It was a grand success both socially and financially, reports Comrade Cahalane. If all the locals, says he, are advancing as fast as Local Hamilton we are in for a big year in Ohio. This live local is campaigning for a building lot upon which it expects to erect a headquarters. Comrade Ruemmelle spoke there recently and had a good meeting.

The Debt Problem Solved

It seems that I unwittingly "April Fooled" you with the Debt Case Reported in our last bulletin. In reply to a letter to Comrade Firth concerning the matter, he writes me that we need pay no attention to the $107.40 debt to the National office, for the expenses of our delegates to the St. Louis convention; that he would have the charge against our State Organization stricken off the books of the National Office. Our delegates, Comrades G. W. Gillespie and M. S. Holt filed their accounts of expenses with the National Secretary, on the supposition that the funds were available to pay the delegates' expenses out of the National treasury. When it was found that such was not the case, Comrade Holt informed Comrade Firth, then State Secretary, that he would not ask the State Organization to reinburse him, and Comrade Gillespie's claim was satisfied by paying him out of the State Treasury, his hotel expenses less $5.00. So you see, Comrade, it was through the generosity of the delegates representing us at the St. Louis convention that we are released of this debt.

The Election of State Officers

Nomination for offices of the State Organization of the socialist party closed on February 14, whereupon all the nominees were notified and 10 days were given for acceptance. The following is a list of all Nominees who reported their acceptance:

For State Secretary

P. R. Garret, Harrisville; Jesse Bird, Barracksville; P. M. Camp, Charleston.

For State Committeemen-at-Large

J. H. Snyder, Fairmont; M. S. Holt, Weston.

For State Committeemen

First Dist.

H. L. Franklin, Fairmont; J. B. West, Mannington; J. L. Dawson, Fairmont.

Second Dist.

E. L. Smith.

Third Dist.

J. W. Wright, Weston

Fourth Dist.

G. W. Gillespie, Huntington; H. N. Carricoffe, Huntington; O. E. Tracy, Sistersville; C W. Kirkendall, Sistersville.

Sixth Dist.

W. R. Bennet, Fayetteville; G. W. Harper, Charleston; H. P. Williams, Charleston.

Perhaps at this point I should explain why my name does not appear on the ballot. I was forced to decline because the position, on which I depend for my living, takes too much of my time to do justice to the most important office of the socialist party, in the state.

I have managed to take care of the office during a lull in the activities of the party, but I forsee, as the Comrades are beginning to "come out of the woods" and renew their interest in the cause, that I would not be able to do the work that the head of the State Organization ought to do. I want to say that I only wish I could afford to devote my time to this work, for I never did anything that was more pleasure to me. I also want to thank the comrades of the locals and the members-at-large that placed my name in nomination—to say the least, I feel honored

I am notified by the National Secretary that he is sending to this office for distribution among the locals the ballots for Referendum "B", proposing a National Convention, also ballots for Referendum "C" for the election of the National Executive Committee, four International Delegates and the International Secretary. Of this election, Comrade Firth writes: "Try to get everybody to vote in the coming N. E. C. election for real Socialists. It is very important. There is a crisis in the party.

Brief Observations.

When it comes to paying dues and keeping up the organization against great odds, we have to hand it to the locals and branches of the Foreign speaking federations. And they send in carefully made reports every month and good ones, too.

Local Wellford sent in a report for February, and have just received one from Local Elkins for March. Perhaps by the end of this month I will have enough reports from which to make an interesting summary for my next bulletin.

The first ballot, in our state election comes from Comrade John H. Means, M. A. L., a soldier now in Gen. Hospital No. 16, U. S. A., West Haven, Conn.

Local Buckhannon takes the prize for largest purchase of Dues Stamps this month. Comrade E. Hager's letter, accompanying his order for Dues Stamps has the true ring.

There must be a lot of wives in West Virginia that have their socialism in their husband's name. This office has not sold any Dual Stamps for a "coon's age."

We note the change of address of Comrade Jesse Bird, Secretary of Fairmont Local, from Fairmont to Barrackville. We ventrue the guess that Comrade Bird found Fairmont unfavorable to the Soviet idea and he concluded Barrackville would be a better location.

Comrades, have you seen the names of any West Virginia Socialists in the Booster Column of the Ohio Socialist lately We did some very good work, for two or three months, getting "Subs" for the Ohio Socialist. I hope our zeal has not grown cold. I am sure it merits our support and it is getting better every week.

H. F. OBERHOLTZER, State Secy.

High St. Burial in Green Lawn.

GOING UP AT EAST LIVERPOOL

Socialist activities are on the jump in E. Liverpool. Recent meetings by Comrades Baker and Holman have proved winners. The comrades have a fine hall, where they meet weekly and plan more victories for the workers.

AMNESTY EDITIO[illegible] ORDER NOW [illegible]

NEWS AND VIEWS—A WEEKLY SURVEY

Edited by C. E. Ruthenberg

Hoist By Their Own Petard

The American Bankers Association is very much alarmed. Millions of aliens are leaving the country, and as is natural, they are taking with them whatever property they happen to possess. The fact that millions of these aliens are withdrawing their savings from the banks, small as they are, is creating a dangerous situation for the banking institutions of this country. Hence a cry of alarm from the American Bankers Association and an urgent call, which it has just issued, asking all banks to endeavor to stop the exodus.

The banking business is a case of pyramided credits. Every dollar of currency is loaned scores of times. The deposits to credit of depositors on the books of the bankers are many times as great as the currency in circulation in the United States. Therefore the withdrawal of the comparative small amount the aliens have in the banks is a danger to the banking system, for these aliens are turning whatever they have into cash and taking the cash with them.

As usual when something unpleasant occurs for the capitalists in these days, the American Bankers Association charges that Bolshevist propaganda is responsible for these aliens leaving and taking their money with them.

What interest supporters of bolshevism in this country have in getting people to leave the country is not clear. It would seem that their interest lies in the other direction.

The plain fact is the capitalists are reaping the results of their own actions—and don't like them. During the past two years the aliens in this country have been made to feel that they were not wanted. They have been discriminated against and abused. They have found that the freedom they sought here was a snare and a delusion. Many of them left their native land to escape conscription for military service only to find the same thing quickly established here.

While the war was on and their service was needed the aliens could at least get work, but since the signing of the armistice they have found themselves discriminated against in seeking jobs. Thousands of men have found that the fact that they were not American citizens meant that they could not get work. In their great fear of bolshevism the capitalists themselves created the conditions which aroused in the aliens the desire to return to their native country. Unable to get work and finding our boasted freedom non-existent the alien workers are leaving the country in which they have been made to feel they are not wanted. At home they know their fellow workers have overthrown the masters who oppress them here, or are at least strong enough to challenge their power.

The capitalists are being hoisted by their own petard—reaping what they sowed. Unexpected results have followed and these unexpected results of a condition of their own creation have brought the cry of alarm from the American Bankers Association.

Hopeless

The insidious propaganda against the Soviet government of Russia is evidently being directed toward making the workers of other countries believe that the ousting of the capitalists and workers control has brought about the utter collapse of industry in Russia.

This note is being sounded constantly in the dispatches, interviews and editorials discussing Russian conditions. The latest statement of this character comes from Herbert C. Hoover, under whose handling of the Food Administration the profiteers waxed fat. He is quoted as saying:

> The Lenine and Trotzky socialization of the processes of production has so wrecked both production and distribution as to create a state of famine in a country which formerly contributed so largely to the food supply of the world.

Mr. Hoover must have known what he said was a lie when he said it. He knew that the breakdown of industry took place under the czar. He knew that the reason the shortage of food exists in Russia is because through the Ukrainian propertied classes selling out to German imperialism, the Soviet government was cut off from the granaries of the Ukraine and that with the help of the allies the traitorous Czecho-Slovaks cut off the supplies from Siberia.

Mr. Hoover knows that these two sections are the two great food producing territories of Russia, and to these the Soviet government has not had access. Still he repeats the lie that it is due to the socialization of industry that famine exists in Russia.

The purpose of the capitalists is evidently to make the workers here believe that working men cannot conduct the industries successfully without them. It is their last hope to stave off the coming revolution which will force them to go to work. It will meet with as little success as their other lies.

Japan, one of the nations that fought for self-determination for nations, is giving an example of what that means by murdering the Koreans who are demanding independence for their country.

Undermined

Even the heads of the War Department seem to be impressed with the seriousness of the mutiny of Co. I of the 339th Infantry, which has been fighting against the Bolsheviki in the Archangel territory. Commenting on the incident General Marsh, chief of staff, is quoting as saying:

> This is a very striking thing. I have had long experience in the army and I do not recall ever having seen American soldiers who did not want to get into a fight. They always said: "Lead me to it" and they went to it.

Looked at from the outside the class government which upholds the capitalist system seems a very strong power. With the police, the army and navy, the judiciary at their command, the capitalists seem to be impregnably intrenched. It seems a herculean task to uproot a system so supported.

But after all the power of the capitalists, though real while it lasts, rests upon quicksand. It is only real so long as it can hypnotize the workers into acceptance of the point of view of the capitalists. Once a new culture, new ideas of justice grips the minds of the workers all the capitalists instruments of repression become harmless, for police forces, the army and navy, are made up largely of working men whose minds become imbued with the new culture as well as those of the workers generally.

The Archangel mutiny is the first example of this so far as the United States is concerned. Evidently the soldiers of Company I, have, through Bolshevik propaganda, that weapon more terrible to the capitalists than great armies, become imbued with the desire to help rather than fight the workers of Russia, who are trying to build a better world. No wonder General Marsh is compelled to exclaim, "This is very striking." It should be striking enough to teach the American capitalists not to go too far, that it is possible to shift the bases of their power from under them as it was removed from under the ruling class of Russia. For the revolutionary workers of the United States it should be a source of new courage, for it shows the American capitalist class is not invincible.

Homes or Palaces

Commenting upon the fact that the Soviet government of Hungary is taking over the residences of the rich a capitalist newspaper editorial tells us:

> To expropriate is to take away from the owners. In the case of a residence, it means that the owner and his wife and children are dispossessed, evicted, turned out on the street, while the property is taken for the present use and absolute ownership by those having force to do the expropriating.

Written in a way so as to give the impression that all home owners are being expropriated, this is, a clever attempt to array the small home owners against the Bolsheviki. Of course the writer of the editorial knows that it is not these that are being expropriated. He knows that it is the palaces and mansions containing a score or more rooms which are never used by their owners that are being taken over by the Soviet government, but that doesn't make any difference, the lie may stick.

It may be pleasant for the dwellers in Bratenahl, and Cleveland Heights, the fashionable suburbs of Cleveland, to contemplate having their mansions occupied by workers who are now festering in the squallor of some of the Cleveland slums, but such are the conceptions of justice of the workers of Russia and Hungary, that they are removing the workers from the slums of the city and compelling their former masters to give up part of the space they do not need in order to make room for them.

Frank Austey, one of the Australian delegates to the Berne Conference, expressed this interesting view of conditions as he found them, in an interview in London the other day:

> Western Europe goes into the melting pot, and there is, in my opinion, no power on earth that can save it. The war has gone on too long. Had it stopped at Brest-Litovsk in March, 1918, capitalism might have saved itself. Now capitalism suffers from over-indulgence. Jack London tells a story of two wolves that fought over a captured rabbit. They fought to exhaustion, and a mean, hungry, non-combatant wolf stepped in and grabbed the rabbit. Outside nations are gathering the spoils. Everybody can have them. Europe has fought to the point of economic exhaustion. It starves, and the nation not starving today will starve in a few months. The capitalists wish to preserve their perquisites. The workers want the promised paradise. At a time when the debt is heaviest, and the burden of crippled workers the greatest, the workers are asking for a larger share of the wealth they produce at the very time when the drain upon it for pensions, debts, interest and armies, is the heaviest.
> It cannot be done. Either the workers must go back to the pit, work harder, produce more, get less, and permit the surplus to meet the debts, or the bondholders must be sacrificed. The workers cannot get a better world, and the bondholders their pound of flesh, at one and the same time.

The war is over, the League of Nations is agreed upon, but the war department has asked for fifty thousand volunteers to go to Europe.

Dan Hogan, who become the delegate of the Socialist Party of the United States to the Pan-American Socialist and Labor Conference when James H. Maurer declined, in commenting upon the refusal of the State Department to grant him passports, proudly claimed that he had submitted with his application the recommendation of the chairman of the Red Cross of his home town and also that of the chairman of the State Council of Defense, and threatened to add to these the recommendation of the federal judge of his district. It really seems in view of this, that the State Department has done the Socialist Party a service in denying Hogan passports, for all of his recommendations are so many reasons why he should not represent the Socialist Party.

One of the horrible ways that the Bolsheviki have treated American soldiers captured on the Archangel front, by taking them to Moscow and Petrograd in private cars, showing them the sights of the city, including the new social institutions the soviet government has brought into existence, taking them to the theatre, operas and ballets, and then sending them back to their own lines to tell their comrades what the workers had achieved. We will have to admit that is a horrible way to treat prisoners of war.

While the Peace Conference deliberates upon how to make the "fourteen points" mean something different from what they say, Japan is calmly enforcing the letter of its "twenty-one points" upon China. The latter country has set up a howl that what Japan is doing is a violation of the constitution of the League of Nations, but who cares about the League of Nations? It is just as elastic as the fourteen points.

Republicans Plan Conscription of Workers to Raise Huge Army

(Special Correspondence)

Washington.—Jukius Kahn, chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, is in Europe inspecting the military states in operation there. In an official interview with the correspondent of the New York Times at Coblentz, Germany, Kahn announces that he will return to America to use all his influence and power as chairman of the House Military Committee to enact into law a compulsory military training bill

Kahn is a class conscious legislative representative of the labor exploiters of the United States. He knows that the workers, benefitting by the Socialist education they have received through Socialist propaganda, are fully aware of the fact that the workers produce all the wealth and are "allotted" as their "share" a mighty small portion of that wealth in the form of a "living wage"—or less. Kahn knows that the workers know that the capitalists "take" this surplus wealth over and above what it costs the worker to live for themselves in the form of interest and dividends and sinecure salaries. Kahn knows that the workers know that the capitalists "take" this surplus wealth by means of a species of economic terrorism and governmental terrorism expressing themselves in low wages, lock outs, policemen's clubs, militiamen's bayonets, court decisions, and all the other ramification of a thorough capitalist terrorism masquerading under the name of "dedocracy."

Kahn knows all this. And he knows too, that the workers are growing more and more rebellious as their understanding of the plundering to which they are subjected increases, and he predicts that the only way in which they can be kept meekly at their jobs is through military coercion. So he is prepared to impose peace-time conscription on the workers in order that his employers, the capitalists, may always have at their command an army to shoot down the rebellious proletarians.

It is generally understood that Kahn favors the peace-time conscription bill introduced during the last session of the sixty-fifth congress by Senator New of Indiana. New's bill imposes one year's compulsory military training and service upon every man in the United States who reaches the age of eighteen. In certain cases the training may be postponed from year to year until the age of twenty-six, when compulsion ceases, but it is expected that long before every man reaches that age he will have been run through the cannon-fodder-making machine. The bill fixes a penalty of five years in jail and $5,000 fine for young men hardy enough to refuse to go to the military training camps.

In the authorized interview Kahn said he is in favor of a volunteer standing army of 100,000, explaining that with his compulsory military training scheme an army of practically a million would be secured with the possibility of swelling it to almost any size to meet any emergency with which the labor exploiters find themselves confronted. Provided, of course, that the working people, who will make up the bulk of the potential military forces, consent to respond to the call of the capitalists to shoot up their brother workers either at home or abroad. The sailors and soldiers at Brest, France, patriotically and class consciously mutinied when the French government tried to force them to go to France to shoot up the Russian workers in the interest of the Russian bonds held by the French investors. Many of those who mutinied are still in jail at Brest. But the glorious fact is that they are in a French jail rather than in Russia under orders to shoot their brothers struggling for economic liberty.

Kahn incidentally revealed his nefarious plot against the liberties of the Amrican working class and the use he would make of the peace-time conscript army. He has read the constitution of the Federated Socialist Soviet government of Russia, especially those portions which abolish private property in the means of production and prohibit people from living in idleness on the labor of others. A capitalist loafer himself, he doesn't like the looks of that kind of a social system. He knows that system by the somewhat general term "bolshevism." And he fears it. And he says: 'I believe we should deal with an iron hand toward the Bolsheviki in America, be absolutely pitiless. Bolshevism is an ugly thing which should be stamped out."

Refuse Passports to Berne Conference Committe To Go To Russia

The following editorial by Paul Faure, editor in chief of Populaire, the Socialist evening daily of Paris, is interesting in the fact that it shows that the capitalist governments are even unwilling to permit representatives of the reactionary Berne Socialist conference to go to Russia and get the facts about conditions there. Evidently the capitalist governments are afraid of the truth about conditions in Russia, even as it might be presented by reactionary Socialists, who have too often shown themselves willing to side with these governments against the workers:

"We are not to go to Russia to perform our part of the mandate for information which the International Socialist conference at Berne confided to an international commission.

"Thus decides the French government in accord, without doubt, with the English government.

"So we shall not go to Russia—for the present. But in my opinion the delay will be short. It is impossible that the Socialist parties of France and England shall rest quietly under this humiliation and not begin at once the necessary campaign, with all their parliamentary power, with all their influence upon public opinion, to compel the reactionaries of Paris and London to recall the decision which is at once a disgrace and a confession.

"It is a disgrace because they have not the right when they pretend to administer a democratic regime to act like a kaiser or a czar.

"It is a confession because, after all the accusations made against the Russian Soviet Republic, to decide that the investigating commission of the labor international, some of whom are declared anti-Bolsheviks, shall not go to Russia to determine the truth and the falsehood in these accusations—this is to confess their fear of the results of the inquiry.

"The role played by the French republic relative to the Russian revolution is abominable. It is the ally of all of the debris of the czar's regime. It sends troops against the peoples who wish to abolish capitalism and who iterate and reiterate their offers of peace. M. Barres even announces to us today that he intends to use the Russian and Polish prisoners in Germany for these reactionary ends.

"The French republic is at the head of the world-wide coalition of frightened capitalism. Wherever it is a question of suppressing by sword and fire the attempts of the people to secure social enfranchisement, the French republic is there with the fire and the sword.

"It can only accomplish this foul task by augmenting the rigors of the state of siege, by smothering protests, by preventing public meetings—in short, by applying the most dictatorial measures.

"But the matter shall not end here. In spite of the censor, in spite of the governmental provocations, in spite of the police brutalities, we shall continue our propaganda and shall not cease to appeal to the opinion of the workers and to public opinion as a whole.
